Donations from alumni are always appreciated, but according to the Campaign for UMass-Amherst Web site, private philanthropic investments are best.

People like Pamela and Robert Jacobs, both UMass alumni, have endowed money to specific programs, in their case, The Center for Jewish Studies, according to the UMass-Amherst Foundation Newsletter.

Gifts to specific parts of the school are called "restricted gifts," and "gifts may be accepted on terms and conditions imposed by the donors limiting the use thereof to a specific objective or objectives within the general purposes of the corporation, or limiting the use of the income or the principal thereof," according to the Foundation by-laws available on the site.

Though some UMass investors choose their area of donation, many do not.

In the course of student fees, tuition and donations, how can students and donators know what goes where?

Two places where a lot of the donated money goes are the hard-to-miss New Dirt projects around campus, and a budget program called Amherst 250.

Amherst 250 is expanding the faculty by 250 professors within the next five years as per the state. As of 2005, the state provided one-third of UMass's operating budget.

According to an Amherst 250 budget update, state support for the campus has increased by $21.6 million for the 2007 fiscal year.

The main mission of Amherst 250, according to the budget Web site, is, "...initiative to restore faculty strength on the Amherst campus by increasing the number of tenure and tenure track faculty."

The New Dirt projects coincide with the Amherst 250 plan, as the plan provides $50 million for upgrades of both academic and research buildings.

"If we don't generate revenue outside the state budget, we will not maintain quality, and we have no chance of remaining nationally competitive," said Chancellor John V. Lombardi in a 2005 Boston Globe article.

Stephanie Luce, vice president of the Massachusetts Society of

See FUNDING on page 3

'Student Force' firefighters seek new recruits

The Student Force Firefighters, who serve the North district near the Sylvan dormitories, respond to all calls on campus as well as Amherst fire calls with Engine Co. 2, a permanent force engine made up of career firefighters also located in the North district.

By Michelle Osorio
Collegian Staff

Behind the lights and sirens of the North district Engine Co. 3 is a group of students called the Student Force. These volunteer firefighters wear the 50 pounds of heavy gear, go into the belly of the fire and provide emergency medical care on campus, like all other fire departments, since 1953.

These 30 University of Massachusetts students – 29 males and one female – are seeking more recruits to wear the uniform. However, these recruits don't become the average definition of "volunteer." They're required to go through four classroom sessions where they learn search and rescue, extrication and other basic firefighting skills.

At the end of the summer they go through what they call Wonder Week, an intensive, hands-on training experience. The training occurs in a smoke house at Amherst College and a burning building in Springfield.

Lt. Michael Hernon, senior, went through his training as a freshman in the Spring of 2004. He faced the common difficulties of recruits: the heavy gear and unfamiliar sensation of limited movement.

"It was hard to get used to having all this gear on and still be able to pull hose. That took a long time to get acclimated to. In essence the gear can be restricting since the tank is riding on your back. But you really have to learn to get used to it in order to able to perform up to par," Lt. Hernon said.

Others found the aspect of turning training into action the most challenging transition.

"Personally I found that

See FIRE on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 94

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Arhin
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellisveau
SPORTS EDITOR Dennis Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rue
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATIONS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED THROUGH ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUM LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN WAS REINCORPORATED ON JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

International 2-year program launched to study Earth's poles

DAILY COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

The program will continue until March 2009 so that two full years of Arctic and Antarctic seasons can pass, during which time more than 50,000 scientists will work together to spread information to students.

BY ARIEL LEV
DAILY KENT STATER (KENT STATE U.)

KENT, Ohio — Students and scientists from around the world gathered in Paris Wednesday to celebrate the beginning of the International Polar Year.

IPY is a program focused on spreading knowledge about the Arctic and Antarctic, and bringing scientists together to do research, demonstrate results and spread information to students.

The program will continue until March 2009 so that two full years of Arctic and Antarctic seasons can pass. During this time, more than 60,000 scientists from more than 60 countries will collaborate in person and over the Internet to increase awareness of the importance of the polar regions and the information they offer.

"The International Polar Year program is a big push for scientific research, public awareness and education for kids," said Jenny Baeseman, United States IPY youth program representative. "Students will learn about the poles, climate change, global warming, and they will participate in scientific activities. But the goal is to create a legacy that will last beyond the two-year push."

During IPY, scientists will perform hundreds of projects to determine the conditions in the polar regions, understand the events that have taken and will take place there and research the changes created by people and the impact those changes have on the world.

A major theme of IPY is the earth's ice and snow and how they change. Students and teachers all over the world will participate in an IPY launch activity called "Breaking the Ice." Students use clay, water and ice to see if melting icebergs and glaciers cause the earth's water level to rise.

Kent State University associate geology professor Joseph Ortiz said if polar ice continues to melt at its current rate, the world's sea level could rise as much as 30 centimeters by 2100.

"This loss of sea ice will cause a climate change," Ortiz said. "Nobody knows how much this will change the climate. It will change the way circulation between the Arctic and the Atlantic Ocean will function."

Ortiz explained that the climate change, along with the melting of permafrost (frozen soil) in the arctic will affect birds' migration as well as the global water budget, which is the constant global water level.

The IPY program also lets students in different countries interact with each other via the Internet. The IPY Web site lets students launch a virtual balloon on its map. The IPY map is powered by Google Earth, a satellite map program that shows detailed images of the entire world. Launching virtual balloons lets students see who else is participating in IPY-related activities around the globe.

"The Web site offers a way to bring students from around the world together," Baeseman said. "This way, teachers in classrooms around the globe can have their own IPY launch event and signify the launch of the International Polar Year."

International Polar Year is sponsored by the International Council for Science and the World Meteorological Organization and it will be the largest internationally coordinated scientific research effort in 50 years, according to the IPY Web site.

Bobby Brown freed after paying $19,000 in late child support

DAILY COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Bobby Brown was released from jail at 7:45 a.m. Wednesday after being incarcerated until his child support payments were made.

CANTON, Mass. — Bobby Brown was freed after spending three nights in the Norfolk County jail when a radio station paid the $19,150 the R&B singer owed in late child support and court fees, the station said Thursday.

Hot 99.5 FM, which broadcasts in the Washington D.C. area, intervened following on-air discussions and two days of negotiation with Brown's attorney, Kane, the host of the station's "The Kane Show," told The Associated Press.

"In exchange for the money, he agreed to be an employee of our radio station for one week," where he will discuss what he did wrong and how he could turn his life around, said Kane, who goes by one name. "We are going to have a very open and candid conversation."

Brown was released at 7:45 p.m. Wednesday. A judge had ordered Brown held in the county jail in Dedham until he paid after constables arrested the singer while he was watching his daughter's cheerleading competition at Attleboro High School.

Brown will travel to Washington D.C. and be on the air with Kane for the morning show beginning Monday. He also will make public appearances for the radio station.

"Once Friday rolls around, he's done and released – and he's on his own," Kane said.

Phaedra Parks, Brown's attorney in Atlanta where the singer lives, did not immediately return a phone call by The AP.

Parks had earlier said the singer has been struggling to meet monthly payments to Kim Ward, of Stoughton, the mother of his two teenage children. Brown and pop diva Whitney Houston are divorcing after 14 years.

"Although this agreement was put in place when he was Bobby Brown the star, this agreement is being enforced when he is not always able to find work," Parks said earlier this week. "He hasn't made an album in quite some years."

Brown, a Boston native best known for a solo hit "Don't Be Cruel," has a history of legal troubles. In June 2004, he was sentenced to 90 days in prison for missing three months of payments. That sentence was immediately suspended after Brown paid about $15,000.

—Associated Press

Turn left, right, left, left and you're here.

Your campus store. Even the most savvy online shoppers need to touch the merchandise every now and then. It's closer than you think. Your Apple Authorized Campus Store has everything you need, and we're right here on campus.

Plus, full and part-time students are eligible to receive special discounts on Apple hardware and software products. So your new Mac will cost LESS, and you can't get any more savvy than that.

Browse online and then shop here for all your Mac, iPod and accessory needs. We're always running specials you can't find anywhere else. And we're literally just steps away.

Authorized Campus Store

UMASS AMHERST
University Store
Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003-0000 413.545.2619
http://www.bkstore.com

Facebook network acts as outlet for friends of deceased students

BY RAQUEL CHRISTIE
THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Jessica Molitor last talked to her best friend, Sean Spendley, in October 2005, two weeks before he died.

He wanted to catch up, and before hanging up, he promised to call her again soon – a promise his sudden, still-unexplained death kept him from fulfilling.

Now it's Molitor, a senior communications major at the University of Maryland, who's doing the calling.

She'll vent to family, she'll vent to friends. But it's Spendley's Facebook wall that hears her out on things only she and Spendley would understand: How she feels when she hears Grateful Dead's "Touch of Grey," a song she first heard with him; or how she wishes they could drink boxed wine together again, like they did on her 21st birthday.

In this way, Facebook profiles, along with MySpace pages and online journals, have become 21st century grave sites of the wired generation – places where teens and twenty-something-year-olds ponder the early passing of their peers with bursts of online slang, pop song lyrics and personal memories.

"It's more physical and visual ... and that type of outlet is more satisfying," Molitor said. "I could keep a journal, but ... because it's something that was once his, it makes it more fulfilling."

Online grieving offers benefits traditional methods don't, said Linda Goldman, a grief therapist and author of "Life and Loss: A Guide to Help Grieving Children."

It's free, it's cathartic and it brings mourners together.

"It's a busy, hurried world, and people want you to go on with your grief," Goldman said. "The greatest grief resolution technique to give another person is to allow them to tell them their full story without judgment. And that's what the Internet does."

Most of the deaths are tragic: car accidents, brain hemorrhages, drug overdose, murder, war casualties.

When funerals are too far away, when friends are tired of listening, or when familiar songs pop up on iTunes at 3 a.m., people gather on these frozen stamps of short-lived lives to make sense of loss.

Spendley's profile, for one, is the way it was a year and a half ago.

Favorite music? Jam band Phish. Kurt Vonnegut's "Breakfast of Champions," a popular, spiky critique of American culture, is among his top reads.

His favorite movie, cult classic The Big Lebowski, is a favorite of more than 500 of his classmates on the popular networking site.

The Internet is merely the newest in a series of culturally defined grieving methods, said Jo Paoletti, an associate professor for American studies and a specialist in cyberculture.

"Think of grief as a river: It's a channel. And human beings have emotions and they always find some kind of channel," Paoletti said.

"People used to have picnics, take their lunches to graveyards. We don't do that anymore. A lot of people don't even get buried in the usual sense anymore. So where are you? Where do people visit you? There's this impulse that's human and it will find a way. And this is just another way and it makes a lot of sense."

Tim Kern, a senior American studies major who died in a jet-ski accident last summer, is another university student whose Facebook profile is up and still visited.

The profile of David Ellis, who died last year in a fire at his Knox Road apartment, though mostly empty, is still online.

Sophomore Nicole Schiffman, the victim of a murder-suicide last week, has her wall adorned with loving messages from her Phi Sigma Sigma sisters and classmates.

The profile of senior Wesley Hill, who died in early February after being struck by a car, is also up.

Sophomore English major Nakita Dolet worked with Hill in the Arts and Humanities department, but didn't know him long. She goes on Facebook, where people who knew Hill to varying degrees join her in venting what perhaps no one else will understand.

"There were just things I wish I would have told him before he'd passed and I didn't get a chance to, and it was just a way to get it out," Dolet said.

Online mourning poses tough questions to online networking systems, most of which are so new they haven't faced much death. MySpace, started in 2004, allows profiles of deceased users to stay up indefinitely, unless the family requests their removal.

"We often hear from families that a user's profile is a way for friends to celebrate the person's life, giving friends a positive outlet to connect with one another and find comfort during the grieving process," a MySpace statement reads.

Facebook, which started as a network for college students, deletes deceased users' profiles 30 days after it gains word of their death.

Goldman, the grief therapist, said Facebook's indiscriminate deletion policy is bothersome because it can cut short the grieving process.

"I think it would be really disappointing on my behalf if one day I wanted to say something and [Spendley's profile] was no longer there,"

Molitor said. "I'd be kind of surprised and disappointed that I couldn't relieve my feelings."

Goldman suggested Facebook and MySpace inform the public of user deaths to allow for mourning.

That's what San Francisco's Michael Patterson does with MyDeathSpace.

Not affiliated with MySpace, the site links to profiles of more than 1,200 dead users and allows submissions of death notices.

He keeps the site going not so much for grief, but to remind us that when we are young, we can forget our mortality.

"Most of these deaths are easily preventable," Patterson said. "I'd hope that people view the site and take something away from it.

Hopefully they'll learn something – that they're not invincible."

Lombardi's Amherst 250 plan not going as campus intended

FUNDING from page 1

Professors agreed in a recent Collegian article, "There is no doubt that UMass Amherst does not receive adequate funding from the state legislative, and I think we all need to keep the pressure on to make the state increase its investment in public higher education."

The Amherst 250 plan seemed like a good compensation to faculty for lack of funding from the state, but according to the Massachusetts Society of Professors Web site, it is not going as promised.

"We are disappointed that the University's budget calls for adding only 16 faculty, in place of the 50 per year that had been proposed last year."

The article also states that Lombardi had "increased the campus fundraising staff by 40 percent."

As Lombardi said in the 2006 state-of-the-campus address, "On one level we hear from our students... as they cycle through, bringing with them expectations and ideas that differ in each of their successive generations and they demand that we change instantly.

They demand that we respond quickly to everything that is on their mind and they are almost always partially right."

College-aged women 10 times more likely to get lupus than men

BY LAURIE ZINBERG
THE PITT NEWS (U. PITTSBURGH)

PITTSBURGH — When Gloria Marshall, 57, was diagnosed with lupus in 1986 in an Ohio hospital, she was told she had six months to live. The doctors gave her such potent medications that she went blind in her right eye.

With little to hold on to, Marshall's life changed when Susan Manzi, co-director of the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center's Lupus Center of Excellence, spoke at her hospital about lupus.

"Dr. Manzi didn't put a time-span on my life because of my lupus. She gave me hope," Marshall said.

The disease that enraptured the life of Gloria Marshall is a story shared by half a million to 1.5 million people. Ninety percent of those diagnosed are women, who are 10 times more likely to get lupus than men. Female minority groups are four times more prone to lupus than Caucasians.

Lupus is an autoimmune disease. The body's natural immune system essentially attacks itself in a particular area. The heart, for example, might be considered foreign to the body's immune system and the immune system will begin to wreak havoc and inflammation on the organ.

Symptoms of lupus begin to appear during a woman's "childbearing" age, from about 15 to 45 years old.

There are two main forms of lupus. One is systemic lupus. This form can affect one or multiple organs in the body. Each patient can be differently inflicted with the disease by the organs and symptoms involved. The most common organ to be involved is the kidney.

Marshall has systemic lupus.

"I was getting blood clots in my lungs every three months for two years. The doctors finally realized that something more serious was going on, that's when I was diagnosed with lupus," Marshall said.

Over time, Marshall's lupus expanded to joint pain and problems with her digestive system, two very common symptoms of lupus.

The other common form of lupus is discoid lupus, which is external and only affects the skin and hair on patients. This kind of lupus is easier to detect because of a noticeable "butterfly" rash that commonly appears on the person's cheeks and nose.

Doctors can take up to four years to properly diagnose a person with lupus because each patient shows symptoms differently. Left untreated or undiagnosed, lupus can be fatal if it targets any vital organ.

"Lupus patients are like snowflakes, each one is unique in its case. One patient could have it affect their brain and have seizures and Reynaud's syndrome [blue/white fingers when cold], while another could have chest pain when breathing deeply. Both would be systemic lupus," Manzi said.

In order to advance the process of diagnosis of lupus, Manzi and Joseph Ahearn established and are co-directors of the Lupus Center of Excellence, part of Magee-Womens Hospital.

The Lupus Center's goal is to conduct research to learn why people get lupus and new ways to treat the disease. Also, the center offers easy-access patient care by having specialist doctors from many medical areas working with patients, since lupus can affect different parts of the body.

Only a portion of lupus patients have it genetically. Other factors, such as prolonged sun exposure and hormones, can cause the autoimmune disease.

"Lupus is sprinkled in families. Having the genetics for it doesn't necessarily lead to lupus. It can also produce other autoimmune diseases such as muscular sclerosis. If one identical twin has lupus, there's only a 30 percent chance of the other twin having it as well," Manzi said.

Treatment for lupus includes giving the patient immune-suppressing drugs, similar to drugs administered to patients who just received an organ transplant.

Another form of treatment is anti-inflammatory drugs to reduce the inflammation that the immune system caused on the affected organs. Pain relievers, many with steroids, are given to suppress the common joint pain that afflicts lupus patients.

"The Lupus Center is the best thing that could have happened to lupus patients. I refer everyone here, because of the great doctors and wonderful treatment. This place gave me a second chance at life," Marshall said.

UMass students volunteer as firefighters

FIRE from page 1

the hardest aspect was thinking ahead. The physical aspect of firefighting is just a matter of physical conditioning and repetitive training exercises," Captain Adam Barowy said. "When in a training exercise or even an actual incident the hardest part was actually pulling myself together to use what I had been taught to solve the problem at hand as quickly and efficiently as possible.

"Learning to take the extra second to assess my task at hand and to choose the best course of action is what really propelled me into becoming an officer and made me love my service on Engine 3."

Training is never quite over for Engine Co. 3 however, as seen by their Thursday drills from 6-9:30 p.m.

Maintenance of basic training is essential to ascertain the safety of firefighters while on scene since their basic calls could turn out to be something much more serious.

"Often when I'm first on scene I feel very alert," Barowy said. "The adrenaline rush mostly occurs on the way to the call, where you don't really have the greatest idea of what the problem might be. We get a short-fire call and we need to be fully prepared," Lt. Hernon said.

Nine out of the 30 student firefighters essentially live at work, their current residence being the North station.

Others leave class whenever their pager lets them know there's been a fire.

And though living among people who are both friends and co-workers has heightened the experience for both Captain Barowy and Lt. Hernon, this kind of commitment is not expected or necessary from all members of Student Force.

"I know I have a solid core of friends I can count on in any situation, these are the best friends I have made in college. But there's also a lot of opportunity for personal growth," Barowy said. "As a recruit you can essentially put in as much or as little time as you want. I personally put in all the time I can afford and it has shaped my future."

Former recruits often go into the field such as Chief Keith Hoyle, the current chief of the Amherst Fire Department. Assistant Chiefs Michael Zlogar and Lindsay Stromgren were also recruits of Student Force.

"It launched me into deciding that I wanted to change from business management into firefighting. [Student force] made a profound difference in my career. I didn't know anything about this career. It wasn't even in my radar," Chief Hoyle said.

And others don't go straight into being career firefighters, but find their experiences beneficial in their chosen fields. Lt. Hernon is both an EMT and a firefighter at Engine Co. 3 and will pursue medical school.

Captain Barowy is planning to go to graduate school for fire protection engineering, but has also taken the state firefighter exam.

Engine Co. 3 is looking to recruit 20 to 25 people this coming semester and will be hosting an open house today from 5 to 7 p.m.

Requirements to be a part of Student Force include a 2.5 grade point average, student status at either UMass, Amherst College or Hampshire College and at least two years remaining in their college careers.

"The camaraderie that is obtained from [Engine Co. 3] allows you to have an impact on the community which is something that is so preached on this campus through the emails from the Vice Chancellor on getting involved in the community of UMass," Lt. Hernon said. "And overall the adrenaline you feel is very powerful. It's difficult to explain what you feel among the

Democrats may demand Iraq troop removal

BY ANNE FLAHERTY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sen. Steve Hobbs stands after testifying at the Capitol in Olympia, Wash., yesterday, in front of a photo taken of him when he was an active-duty solider in Iraq.

WASHINGTON — House Democratic leaders have coalesced around legislation that would require troops to come home from Iraq within six months if that country's leaders fail to meet promises to help reduce violence there, party officials said Thursday.

The plan would retain a Democratic proposal prohibiting the deployment to Iraq of troops with insufficient rest or training or who already have served there for more than a year. Under the plan, such troops could only be sent to Iraq if President Bush waives those standards and reports to Congress each time.

The proposal is the latest attempt by Democrats to resolve deep divisions within the party on how far to go to scale back U.S. involvement in Iraq. Rep. James Moran said the latest version has the support of party leadership and said he believes it is final and has the best chance at attracting broad support.

"We're going to report out" a war spending bill "that's responsive to the will of the voters last November and brings our troops home as soon and safely as possible," Moran, D-Va., said in an interview Thursday.

Moran, a member of the House committee that oversees military spending, said the plan was discussed in a closed-door meeting of committee Democrats on Thursday.

Brendan Daly, a spokesman for House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., declined to confirm the details and or say whether Pelosi backs the plan. But he said: "We have said we want to make sure our troops have all the training and equipment they need and that the Iraqi government must meet the benchmarks President Bush endorsed."

Bush said the Iraqis had promised to meet certain goals when he offered to send 21,500 more troops to Iraq. For example, the Iraqis pledged to spend more money on reconstruction and reach a political agreement to share the nation's oil resources.

If the Iraqis fail to live up to its promises, some troops could be left behind under the Democrats' plan to train Iraqi troops or conduct counterterrorism missions, Moran said.

Bush requested $93.4 billion for this year's military operations in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Moran said that as of Thursday, the proposal was on track to add an extra $1 billion to step up efforts in Afghanistan. Money also would be added to improve health care for veterans and help wounded active-duty troops, as well as provide relieve for hurricane victims.

The legislation also would require Bush to seek congressional approval for any military operations in Iran.

The Senate, meanwhile, could begin floor debate on Iraq as early as next week. Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., and Carl Levin, D-Mich., have proposed a resolution that would call for combat troops to come home by March 2008.

As Democrats finalized their spending plan for this year, White House chief of staff Joshua Bolten told Senate Republican leaders that the administration will need additional funding to pay for the influx of troops to Iraq.

The Pentagon initially estimated the 21,500 troops would cost $5.6 billion through Oct. 1. But 6,000 more personnel will be needed to provide support to the combat units, according to GOP aides.

The administration also might amend its funding request in order to provide more money for Afghanistan.

The White House is expected to offer to trim other parts of the 2007 war spending request such as the controversial V-22 tilt-rotor aircraft to offset the money needed. Bolten did not offer a specific figure for the support troops, the aides said.

Also on Thursday, an influential Senate Democrat floated the idea of cutting $20 billion from Bush's request for military operations next year in Iraq and Afghanistan, only to be swiftly overridden by his colleagues.

The trial balloon floated by Budget Committee Chairman Kent Conrad would have trimmed Bush's $142 billion war budget for 2008 by about one-seventh in keeping with cost estimates by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.

Conrad's idea would have applied to the next budget year beginning Oct. 1 a separate issue from the debate over Bush's $100 billion request for immediate supplemental war funding.

But it raised concerns among Democrats sensitive to any accusations of shorting funding for troops in battle.

"Our caucus feels strongly that we should go with the president's numbers" on 2008 war costs, Conrad said.

Stop & Shop keypad theft suspects charged federally

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Four men suspected of replacing checkout lane keypads at Stop & Shop supermarkets to steal more than 1,000 card numbers of customers were charged in federal court for the alleged scheme.

The four California men appeared Thursday afternoon before U.S. Magistrate David Martin on federal charges of aggravated identity theft and conspiracy to fraudulently traffic in access devices. Martin ordered all four men detained pending a court hearing Tuesday afternoon. They did not enter pleas.

Federal prosecutors filed a criminal complaint against the men on Wednesday.

They were charged earlier in the week in Kent County District Court with three felonies and a misdemeanor.

The men allegedly removed or tried to remove PIN pads from at least six stores in Rhode Island and Massachusetts, replacing them with alternate machines that would be used to record shoppers' debit or credit card information. Later, the men would come back and replace the original keypads.

The federal complaint accuses the defendants of stealing customer information from stores in Cranston, Coventry and Providence. It says approximately 1,100 credit and debit cards were compromised at the Cranston and Coventry locations alone.

"The effort to determine how much loss there has been to the cardholders is ongoing," Special Agent Craig Marech of the U.S. Secret Service wrote in an affidavit supporting the complaint.

He said authorities reviewed surveillance video from California showing people making ATM withdrawals from the accounts of customers at the Cranston and Coventry stores whose cards were compromised. Customers at those stores have so far reported $68,000 in fraudulent transactions, but that figure is likely to grow, according to the affidavit.

Authorities have video evidence of the defendants tampering with PIN pads at stores in Seekonk, Mass., and in Warwick, but don't believe customer information was compromised in those cases, the affidavit alleges.

At one of the Warwick stores, Marech wrote, the PIN pad that the defendants allegedly installed malfunctioned and was removed for service. A circuit board used to capture credit and debit card information was then found inside the PIN pad apparatus, and the machine was never taken back by the defendants, according to the affidavit.

Citizens Bank reported losses of $100,000, and two other credit unions said their customers lost a combined $15,000.

Charged in both federal and state courts are Arutyun Shatarevyan, 20, Arman Ter-Usayan, 22, Mikael Stepanian, 28, and Gevork Baltadjian, 20, all of the Los Angeles area. On Tuesday, they were ordered held on bail ranging from $150,000 to $200,000.

The men were arrested Monday night while allegedly attempting to switch keypads at a store in Coventry, police said.

Associated Press

Looking for business experience??

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking qualified applicants to fill the positions of:

Business Manager
Assistant Business Manager
Distribution Manager

Contact Daniel Conti at 413-545-3500 for more information or stop by The Collegian in the basement of the Campus Center.

Counting careless crossers

CROSSWALKS from page 1

Some UMass students were already aware of the problem from personal experience. "It's crazy how some people will just walk out into the street without looking," said senior Seth Quinn, who drives through the campus regularly.

"I've almost gotten hit a couple of times," said sophomore Southwest resident James Brown. "I've seen it happen to other people quite a few times too."

The UMass Police Department created a pilot pedestrian safety program designed to help manage the Mass Ave. crosswalk. The program's plan called for UMPD cadets to monitor the crosswalk on Mondays and Wednesdays between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. However, the UMPD ran into scheduling conflicts with the cadets.

"We were somewhat skeptical about how many hours we could get from the student cadets who do attend classes during the day," said Patrick Archibald, Deputy Chief of the UMPD. "As a result, we try to keep it down to two days where we try to keep two cadets out there, and we've had some success."

The program is funded by a $75,000 grant that was received in the Fall of 2005 from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to improve pedestrian safety.

Ron has seen a police officer at the crosswalk only once.

"I was thankful he was there because he told the people to stop crossing the street so cars could go by."

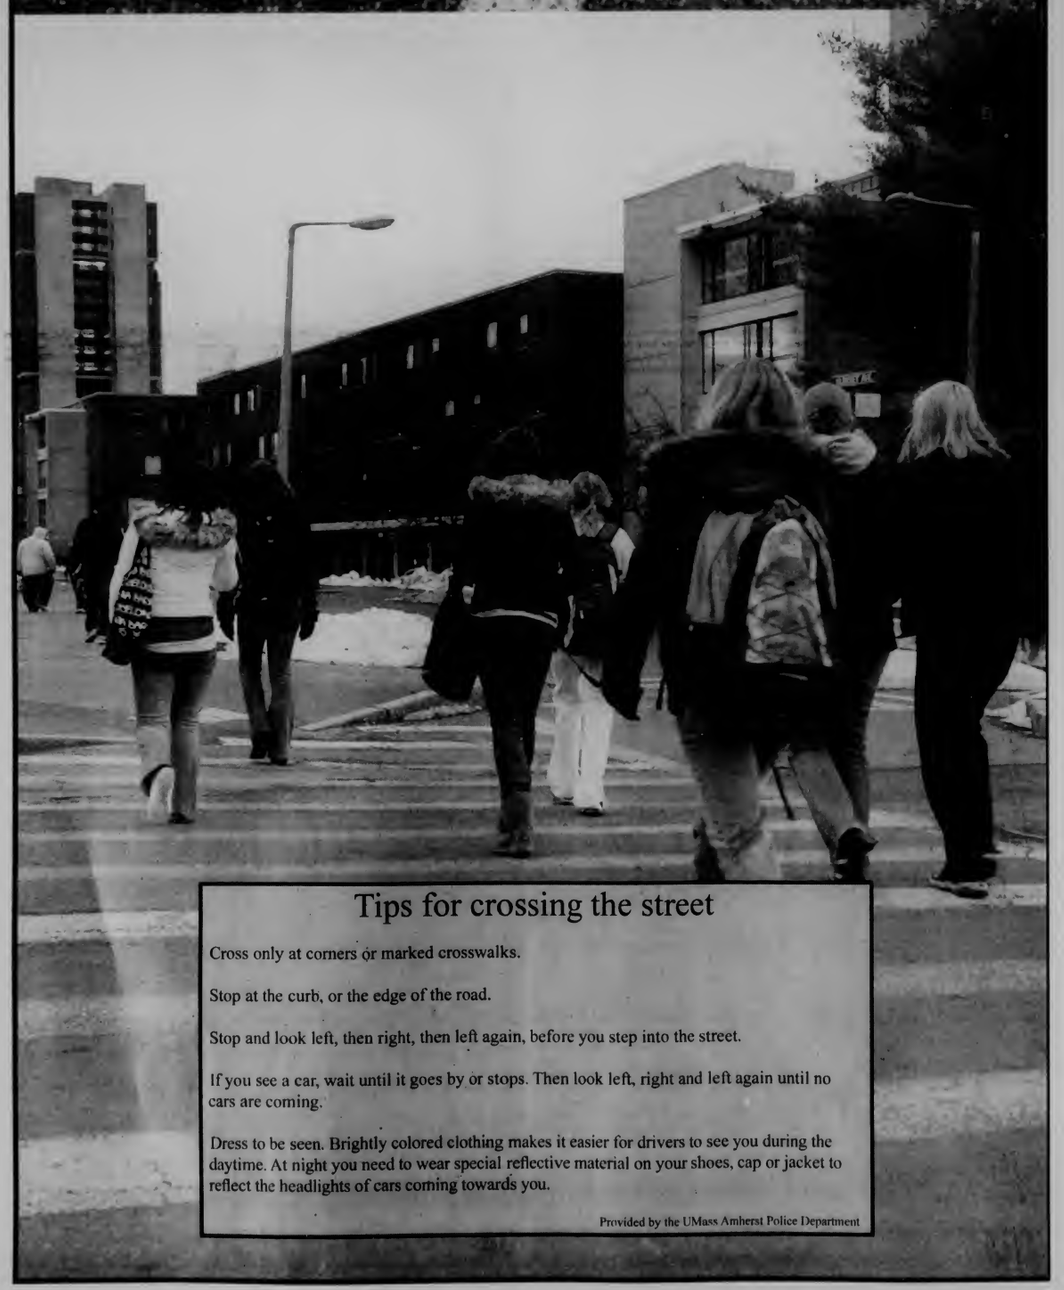
Brown sees police cadets monitoring the crosswalk once every couple of weeks, but still takes the necessary precautions when crossing the streets on campus. "I am very cautious because where I'm from nobody stops for you," Brown said of his hometown, Boise, Idaho.

"I think it's a problem [that pedestrians don't look for traffic]. People could get hit," Brown said. "I think they should have cops out there whenever class is going on."

In March, 2006 UMass sophomore Olivia Simpson got hit by a car on Eastman Lane near the Totman gymnasium. Simpson was one of six people hit by cars last semester.

"I haven't heard anything about this program at all," Simpson told the Daily Collegian in November. "The only thing I noticed after I returned to school from the accident was that there were bigger and brighter crosswalk signs on campus. Even with bigger signs, there's no guarantee the driver sees you. I did everything I was supposed to do before crossing, but it didn't help me."

Simpson isn't sure that the UMPD's plan to increase pedestrian safety, which includes passing out pamphlets about crosswalk awareness, will be effective. "If someone handed me a pamphlet about crossing the street, I wouldn't take it seriously. I think telling people what they're doing wrong isn't going to work. It's more about managing the way roads are set up on campus."



Tips for crossing the street

Cross only at corners or marked crosswalks.

Stop at the curb, or the edge of the road.

Stop and look left, then right, then left again, before you step into the street.

If you see a car, wait until it goes by or stops. Then look left, right and left again until no cars are coming.

Dress to be seen. Brightly colored clothing makes it easier for drivers to see you during the daytime. At night you need to wear special reflective material on your shoes, cap or jacket to reflect the headlights of cars coming towards you.

Provided by the UMass Amherst Police Department

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 2, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lowering the bar . . . again

Brendan Hall

"I'll tell you this, no eternal reward will save us now for wasting the dawn."
-Jim Morrison

Now and again, something comes along in the news that reminds us all again that, hey neighbor, the rapture is on the horizon. Judgment day is around the corner.

I'm talking about events so absurd, so dumbfounding, you're just left speechless. Like the time Bill Clinton asked a grand jury to define "is". Or the time a tiny town in western Kentucky almost changed its name to "PokerShare.com". Or when the state of California decided to impeach Governor Gray Davis – an honest, hard-working man – and replace him with...Detective John Kimball.

All insane, inane, inexplicably ill-advised.

Just pitiful.

But the idiot train never runs out of fuel, and is always picking up passengers and mowing down unearthed, untracked terrain. The newest passenger to step aboard is Brant Walker.

Walker is the founder of FakeYourSpace.com, a website which – as the name implies – offers members of social networks such as MySpace, Facebook and Friendster the provision of "friends" for a starting fee of 99 cents a month. These "friends", who are basically photos of attractive models, will even leave comments based on your preferences. The 99-cent fee leaves you two messages a week, but there are greater fees for those who want more than that. In other words, if you feel like a loser for not having enough friends on Facebook or MySpace, you can now buy fake ones.

Whoever's writing the description on this page ought to get some kind of award. The site poses questions and answers that suggest the possibilities are endless; gems like "Want to get make an ex-girlfriend or ex-boyfriend jealous? No problem," "Are you interested in being one of the most popular people on MySpace or Facebook? Then FakeYourSpace is just what you need," and "Why should you pay for something like this? Our answer to you is because it's dirt cheap."

According to New York Times staff writer Daniel E. Slotnik's article on the website from last Monday, the designers have been just taking photos off of the site iStockPhoto.com, which has since notified FakeMySpace of the misuse. FakeMySpace, which Slotnik reported was getting around 50,000 hits a day, is set to re-launch soon.

And you can bet that sadly, somebody will be paying for this service. Anyone else loathe this world going digital? It used to be if you wanted to pay for friends, you joined a fraternity or sorority. Now, you can just buy imaginary ones off the web – like iTunes, but with humans.

It really says something about our society when somebody feels the need to prop up their profile on a digital social network by plastering it with real pictures of fake friends. Life is not a video game, people. When you get in the real world you're going to have to talk to a few people in person, so get some practice. Socialize. But if you're too nervous to go out, read a book.

It also makes us question the existence of such things as MySpace and Facebook in the first place. What started out as just something fun turned serious when everybody and their mother logged into the network – including cops, employers and Vice Chancellors of Student Affairs and Campus Life – and it began affecting kids' lives. It's gone a step further south with a Web site like this.

It really says something about our society when somebody feels the need to prop up their profile on a digital social network with real pictures of fake friends.

What's even more bothersome is the way Slotnik presents this information, specifically the lead. He starts out by pointing to employers' use of Facebook to check out employees, and then poses the bend-or-break inquiry that usually determines whether one is fit for the task: "What if a job applicant's networking page lacks friends?"

While, yes, some companies now look at applicants' social networking pages, they're not interested in whether or not you're good mates with the coolest kid on campus. They're looking for anything incriminating, i.e. embarrassing pictures of you or something offensive written in your personal information.

No one cares if you're friends with Sully or Murph, unless you're shot gunning beers with them.

Here's a simple solution to this whole MySpace and Facebook dilemma that's giving everyone fits and withdrawals all at once: delete your profile. This might sting at first, but like a game of backyard tackle football, it's all fun until people start getting hurt – and there are lives getting ruined right now.

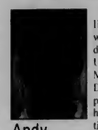
As for that 50,000 figure, that can't be true. Check it, you know how 50,000 people manage to get a hold of the site in one day?

This is the age of ADD, and we're bored.

And for good measure, I'll end on another Morrison gem: "No one here gets out alive."

Brendan Hall is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at editorial@dailycollegian.com.

57 down, many more to go



Andy Smith

Well, looks like they weren't kidding. When the University of Massachusetts Deputy Chief of police said, "We have no intention of stopping until we've identified every single rock thrower and every single person who is responsible for the damage," he was serious.

Last Wednesday, 34 more people were charged in connection with the Dec. 15 riot in Southwest. According to the recent press release regarding the various charges, five students have been expelled, 28 have been suspended, 22 received deferred suspensions, and eight have been removed from University housing. The grand total now stands at 57 people charged and there will likely be many more to come.

Every one of those charged students can thank those who put pictures of the riot up on Facebook.com and MySpace.com, and put videos of it on YouTube.com. Did you really think that law enforcement wouldn't have the brains to look on those relatively public Web sites to find evidence they can use? It's mind-boggling to think that students believed no one would think to look on three of the most popular Web sites on the internet besides them.

They aren't stupid. Believe it or not, adults do actually know some things.

My favorite thing that people did was "tag" their friends in the pictures of the riot they put up on Facebook. You are just begging to get in trouble. Now, not only does the UMass Police have your name, they have your face, and with just one look at your Facebook profile, they may even be able to find out what building you live in. Also, what people don't realize was there are cameras all around Southwest. When I first told a neighbor I would be attending UMass, I was told about the Red Sox riots from 2004, which resulted in the addition of cameras around the Southwest area. Those, alone, were probably the result of at least half the arrests made so far.

This further affirms the idiocy of that Dec. 15 night. I guess some people take pride in breaking other people's windows and hurting police officers.

In a comment to one of the riot videos on YouTube.com, one person wrote, "great video editing and song. who are we to squash these students self-expression?" Self expression?

Calling a riot an acceptable form of self-expression is stupid.

That makes everything alright? I thought self-expressionism had to do with writing a poem, painting a picture, or wearing a peace sign around your neck. Calling a riot an acceptable form of self-expression is just stupid. That's like saying I could go up to a random person on the street, kick them in the knee cap, and when they ask, "What did you do that for?" I can respond, "I was just expressing myself," and everything will be fine. It makes absolutely no sense.

It's sad that a lot of this was built off the past reputation of this school. Many will say it was just a lot of drunks acting out of control, and part of that is true. However, there were those who took part in order to brag that they took part in a UMass riot. It is a slap in the face to those who came here to learn and meet new people. I admit it, I watched the preceding football game, and I watched the riot, but I never had the urge to take part in it, especially not after I saw a full jug of water dropped from the 13th floor of John Quincy Adams residence hall and almost kill the Chief of Police.

The best part about this whole occurrence is that people thought they would get away with it. I remember on numerous occasions when friends would come to me in the days after the riot and say, "They took my picture at the riot. They can't expel me, can they?" Yes, actually, they can. All it takes is a few clicks of a mouse and you could find yourself taking classes elsewhere. When you signed up to live in housing, you made yourself liable for anything you do that happens to the residential areas. On Dec. 15, anyone who broke a window breached that contract. The University has every right to punish anyone who took part in the destruction that occurred. Also, when you threw rocks and other objects at police officers, you broke the law.

When you defaced public property, you broke the law. Now you have to go to court and face the punishment for what you did. You can thank everyone who put up a picture on MySpace or Facebook or put a video on YouTube, because UMass police are using their help to give you what you deserve.

Andy Smith can be reached at asmith@student.umass.edu

Thirty-four more students have been charged by the UMass Police in connection with last December's riot following a football game, bringing the total to 57.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

TEXTBOOKS FOR LESS BUCKS

Thank you for the eye-opening yet disturbing article about the unethical connection between universities and the banks proving loans ("US college students' loans investigated," 2/27). While student loans present a challenge to getting an affordable education, another hurdle is present: the high cost of textbooks. The average student spends $500 a semester on textbooks. Publishers drive up the cost of books by releasing unnecessary editions, and "bundling" books with extras such as CD-ROMs and workbooks. Revised editions and bundled books effectively kill the used book market.

Fortunately, the Affordable Textbooks Bill will be voted on in the Massachusetts State House this spring. The law would require textbook publishers to adopt better business standards, such as updating editions only when needed, allowing students to buy books unbundled, and disclose prices to professors. Similar laws have been passed in Connecticut, Washington, and Virginia. With support from their constituents, this bill will become a law.

Students interested in finding out more information can consult MassPIRG's Make Textbooks Affordable Campaign. Stop by the office in Student Union room 415 or go to masspirgstudents.org for more information.

Jake Rogers
UMass Student

NO WMD'S? NO WAY

Dear Editor:

It is an outright lie – yes, lie – to state that no weapons of mass destruction were found in Iraq. On the contrary, last year saw a firestorm as Congressman Curt Weldon of Pennsylvania released information showing that over 400 chemical shells had been discovered. In April of last year, another 500-plus shells were found. Biological weapons were found.

And the Duelfeur report clearly showed that Iraq retained the ability to make more. People who live in reality understand that significant decisions are made with incomplete evidence. Virtually every intelligence agency in the world believed Saddam had stockpiles of WMDs.

Does the Left believe Saddam would just leave them in shiny rows waiting to be discovered? Do they think he'd put up signs saying "Attention Americans, here they are?" Numerous documents have highlighted Saddam's association and cooperation with al Qaeda; through the 90's the Clintons used that as justification for their actions – those communications made the evening news multiple times. And, in Iraq, the documents discovered are proving out those beliefs.

But perhaps if we had not gone into Iraq and Afghanistan, 9-11 would not have happened. If only EEEVIL "BushHitler" had not been elected, we would not have had a string of attacks in the 1990's. Terrorists require state sponsorship to be significant. They require secure locations, money, and shelter. Iraq gave them all three. It's not for nothing that there is an Arabic saying "The enemy of my enemy is my friend."

David Hunt
Billerica, Mass.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A convenient truth

Katy Bruck

Ellen Degeneres is to blame for the some of the confusion surrounding this year's Oscars. I blame her casual, day-time television attitude for encouraging joking where joking really was not appropriate. Posing for pictures with Clint Eastwood, handing Martin Scorsese a script – all were mildly funny shenanigans. But when Al Gore decided to script himself onto the bandwagon with his faux presidential announcement, it stopped being funny.

Through the television, one could almost sense Democrats everywhere scooting to the edge of their seats – only to be thwarted by a cheap jab at the Academy's "wrap-it-up" music. Not funny, Al. Not funny.

Through all his I-have-no-intention rhetoric, how dare he get people's hopes up that way, not once, but twice! When "An Inconvenient Truth" won its predicted award, he had the nerve to start a sentence with "My fellow Americans", prompting another round of gasps and tentative applause from the audience and causing the blood to drain from the faces of Republican viewers. But what would it mean had Mr. Gore actually taken advantage of his Mr. Pop Culture status and waltzed his way into history by being the first man to announce his intention for the presidency during the Academy Awards?

David Geffen would have no qualms dropping his support for Obama if Gore ran, and many other Democratic contributors would likely follow suit.

All political viability aside, winning an Academy Award and being nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in the span of a few months is no small feat. There's certainly no one out there who will dispute that that's a whole lot of positive publicity. And since politics is a public popularity contest, logic would state that the former vice president would be a tough dog to mess with if he decided to announce any political ambition.

Almost two years before the election, presidential candidates, particularly on the democratic side of the aisle are already throwing themselves into the mix. For good or for bad, by the time the primaries roll around, we're probably going to be sick of hearing Hillary Clinton refuse to apologize, Barack Obama scramble to define himself and his demographic and see all the other Democratic candidates try and squeeze into the frame. The trend right now is shaping this campaign into a monotonous pattern of "he said this" and "what does it mean?" that's already grating on the last nerve of the electorate. If Gore decided to run, it would be like taking a base piece out of the Jenga game that's become the democratic primary, and the whole thing would have to be rebuilt from the bottom up.

Tom Vilsack has already pulled out, citing lack of funding as the reason. One can therefore imagine the kind of serious financial competition that Al Gore would throw into the mix. Clinton and Obama are arguing over the paltry contribution of a Hollywood big wig, but Gore has all of Hollywood behind him already. David Geffen would have no qualms dropping his support for Obama if Gore ran, and many other Democratic contributors would likely follow suit. Obama may be a fresh new face, with fresh new rhetoric, but the former vice president clearly outstrips him in the context of experience. And Clinton might have her name behind her, but so does Gore – and without all the nasty home-life complications.

There are some that say if Al Gore decided to run for president, his stance on global warming would polarize the right, as a recent National Journal poll states only 13 percent of Congressional Republicans buy into the "man-made global warming" theory. But with recent recants from major oil companies, like ExxonMobil, republicans with private sector supporters may be forced to change their tune in the near future. The practicality of addressing global climate change, whether it's a result of human activity or not, is even causing conservative thinkers like Bill O'Reilly to consider the issue a bit more closely, having stated that the "goop" you see in the air above Los Angeles can't possibly be good, so we might as well do something to change it.

Someone should write a letter to Ellen Degeneres. As if websites like draftgore.com weren't bad enough, the throw-away laugh attitude of the Oscars this year no doubt has Americans entertaining the thought "what if..?" And when it's broken down, it's easy to see that "what if?" is a tempting phrase to look into. If not for Gore's repeated pronouncements that he has no intention of running, all this hype would almost seem intentional. Allowing these rumors to propagate themselves, retaining the option of a run, would be quite the publicity play.

Too bad politicians never mislead the public to achieve their own ends.

Katy Bruck can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 2, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

John Brown's Body rocks Noho Saturday

Reggae band plays smooth Caribbean sound

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

Jah... Rastafari! Hold onto your caps because roots, rock and reggae are all storming towards Northampton like a hurricane; but don't worry, you're not going to want to get out of the way. That's right everybody, the waves of reggae are back and they're rushing down upon the Pioneer Valley for one very special night of live music.

It's going to be a soul shake-down party all night and you're invited. All of this is thanks to the refreshing and joyful sounds of the veteran reggae band John Brown's Body. Don't waste another weekend for this is truly going to be special. Saturday night is a night for fun and a night of freedom. If you're looking for something exciting to do this Saturday night swing by this concert at Pearl Street Theater in Northampton.

The show is scheduled for 8:30 p.m., but get there early and scope out a good spot on the dance floor. Expect the vibe to be laid back and friendly. Expect a packed crowd with lots of happy people looking to get down and have a good time.

John Brown's Body is a Boston/Ithaca, NY based reggae band with a smooth Caribbean-influenced sound that has been touring the world for the past 12 years.

They've performed on cruise ships, toured all over the United States and even made a trip to

JOHN BROWN'S BODY
PEARL STREET THEATRE
SATURDAY, 8:30 P.M.
ADV. $14
DOOR $17

plays some shows in Japan. They are extremely impressive in their ability to incorporate fresh reggae beats & rhythms, sultry melodic vocal harmonies, a powerful horn section, funky bass lines, and to mix it with soulful, socially conscious lyrics.

If you like music in general or reggae specifically, this is definitely a band worth checking out. They draw from a dense pool of influences including the likes of Bob Marley & the Wailers, the Toots & the Maytals, Johnny Cash, Motown, 311, Massive Attack, and Sam Cooke to name just a few. Ska, rock, Americana, and singer/songwriter folk music can all be heard in the band's sound, creating a very inclusive and open atmosphere, which all music lovers can enjoy.

They have also made many friends among the music community and influenced countless musicians themselves. They've performed all over the world with renowned artists such as the Dave Matthews Band, Jurassic 5, Lauryn Hill, Damian Marley, Michael Franti/Spearhead, Moe and the Toots & the Maytals. They've earned immense respect from fans and musicians alike.

JBB mostly plays a traditional type of reggae that is extremely difficult to come by these days. Their style is referred to as "roots" reggae, rather than "dancehall" reggae which was made popular in the 1980's. They often have as many as eight instrumentalists/vocalists in the tight group and they've become extremely precise in their ability to layer numerous different

See JBB on page 7

COURTESY BOTHSIDESMEDIA.COM

John Brown's Body is an eight-person band that plays "root" reggae despite originating in Conn. The band will be playing a full set Saturday night in Northampton.

Williams brings his big-sound solo act

Calvin Theatre welcomes looping technique in Sunday show

By Michael Trabert
Collegian Staff

Do you only consume organic funk and freshly picked grooves? Do you feel famished by the local music seen? If you answered yes, then get ready to feast your ears on Keller Williams who will be offering a nutritious dinner of ripe beats and homemade jams at the Calvin this Sunday at 8 p.m.

Williams is known for what is called looping. During his show he will use a pedal on every instrument that records what he has played and repeat it. He moves around to any instrument he feels like and keeps layering the music, basically making a one-man jam.

Looping adds an interesting dimension to a solo performance. Williams draws on all of the other flavors that the other instruments have to create a tasty groove that has been a staple of his performance.

His songs are warm and usually out of the ordinary. Mostly Williams makes no lyrical sense, but his amusing spaced out lyrics captivate and have a soft dream-like quality.

Occasionally Williams makes his mouth sound like a trumpet by vibrating his lips. While other artists do it as well, it is Williams who is known for using it to solo while he plays guitar.

The new album that Williams has put out is called "Dream" and features Michael Franti, Martin Sexton (Sledeski Martin & Wood), Bela Fleck, Victor Wooten, Bob Weir (Grateful Dead), Modernfolk, Jeff Sipe, and the String Cheese Incident. All of these different voices provide some upsets within the usual Williams sound. If you are familiar with any of these featured artists you will easily be able to guess which tracks they play on.

On a particular track called "Play This" Williams demonstrates

COURTESY KELLERWILLIAMS.NET

Keller Williams recorded his new album titled "Dream" with many guest musicians, but keeps his stage show a solo performance by using multiple instruments and a looping system.

the ability to play driving rock. The fun part about the tune is that the rock riffs are contrasted by an awesome acoustic guitar and bass funk line. Williams easy going vocals provide great textures.

The highlight of the album is the song "People Watchin." It features Fleck, Wooten, and Sipe. Fleck rips the song up with his banjo while Victor Wooten, the extremely technical bassist, surprisingly doesn't take the opportunity to show off.

The lyrics are what you would expect them to be about, "people watchin' at the bar, people watchin' from afar." Odd lyrics like these can be expected from Williams who has made a name for himself with that style.

Although there are so many collaborations on the album he is touring for, it is expected that Williams will be performing these songs on Sunday in his usual solo fashion.

Keller Williams has put out 12 tasty albums since his 1994 debut "Freak." He released an average of about one a year. On the Keller Williams Web site he says that his biggest influences are Michael Hedges, Leo Kottke, Victor Wooten, Ani DiFranco, Bobby McFerrin, Joe Craven, and Charlie Hunter. His sound can be described by mashing these great artists into one crock pot, adding some paprika, and letting it simmer.

Tickets are $22.50 advance purchase and will be $25.00 at the door for the 8 p.m. show.

Michael Trabert can be reached at mkt711@yahoo.com.

KELLER WILLIAMS
CALVIN THEATRE
SUNDAY, 8 P.M.
ADV. $22.50
DOOR $25

The Book Nook

By Matthew Robert Sherman
Collegian Columnist

Paul Auster describes his most recent metaphysical novel, "Travels in the Scriptorium," as "a small book ... maybe the strangest novel I have written." He is startlingly accurate on both accounts. Weighing in at just under 150 pages, it is incomparably small for a novel, bordering on being a novella. It is also the most labyrinthine of anything he has before written. With the turn of each page, we are lead deeper into the hidden recesses of Auster's brilliantly disturbed mind, as he spins a tale hinged upon the themes of redemption, justice, and identity.

The novel's protagonist, cryptically christened Mr. Blank, begins the novel sitting "on the edge of the narrow bed, palms spread out on his knees, head down, staring at the floor," completely oblivious to the fact that, once every second, a hidden camera in his sparsely furnished room snaps a photo of him, and an unseen audio recorder documents every minute sound.

He remembers nothing from the previous day, or any day before that, and is not even sure if he is a prisoner in this room. All we, as the readers, are told is that he has a mountain of charges brought against him, from sexual molestation and conspiracy to commit fraud to negligent homicide and first-degree murder.

Mr. Blank spends his day traveling about his room in a rolling desk chair, reading a fictionalized report of another imprisoned man being forced to write a report (which bears a striking resemblance to J.M. Coetzee's "Waiting for the Barbarians"), and occasionally soiling himself while trying to glide across the floor in nylon socks.

As "Travels" begins to unravel, protagonists (and the occasional antagonist) from previous Auster novels make cameo appearances as faces from Mr. Blank's past. He has wounded each in some terrible way that he cannot seem to remember. The only tie that these characters seem to share is the fact that, at some point in their life history, Mr. Blank has sent them on terrible missions that have somehow deeply altered their lives forever.

Mr. Blank keeps a list of these characters names as they come and go from his room, which they do quite frequently as though the room

See BOOK on page 7

Max Creek band jamming since '70s

By Lauren Modisette
Collegian Staff

Not sure what to do tonight? Do you like blues and western rock? Head on down to Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club and check out the band Max Creek.

While combining the genres of rock, jazz, reggae, folk, and bluegrass, Max Creek is said to provide its audience with an "electrifying and magical" jam band experience.

Jambase.com describes Max Creek as, "a regional phenomenon [that] is one of the most electrifying live acts on the Eastern seaboard today. Max Creek brings to the stage a wide variety of musical experience, from the blues to ballads to hard- edged rock n' roll, to early San Francisco era improv. This five man band has a unique style, and their blend of original songs and classic covers has gained them remarkable respect and a large following which continues to grow."

The five member band originates from Canton, Conn. Max Creek has been known to partake in many different festivals across the country. In fact, they are the source of the local

MAX CREEK
PEARL STREET NIGHT CLUB
FRIDAY, 8:30 P.M.
$15

New England festival Camp Creek. Camp Creek is an annual summer event that is held usually in mid-July in Mariaville, NY.

Max Creek has been at it for over 30 years. Their musical legacy began in the 1970s right along side popular jam bands like The Grateful Dead. They have been reluctant to delve into the musical world of popular culture

See CREEK on page 7

Mass. climbers raising cash to buy land

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

This weekend the climbers of the Five College area will gather together to raise money to buy a nine-acre piece of land at the base of Farley Ledge. The Western Massachusetts Climbers Coalition is looking to raise $75,000 this spring to buy the land.

The event will begin tonight at 7 p.m. with speakers Tommy Caldwell and Beth Rodden at the Johnson Chapel on the Amherst College campus. The duo will have a presentation entitled "Mission Possible: Free Climbing the Nose on Yosemite's El Capitan and Free Climbing Two El Cap routes in a Day!"

Caldwell and Rodden are international innovators in climbing. On June 26, 2000, they both completed the first free ascent of Tulking Fear in Yosemite. Rodden established a new route in 1999 on the Isaranoro Massif in Madagascar. Caldwell freed the El Cap's Salathe Wall in 1999.

The event will also sponsor such honored guests as Nick and Heath Sagar, who will conduct a climbing clinic which will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday at the Robert Crown Center at Hampshire College. Jay Jump will also attend and host a cycling seminar starting at 10 a.m. at the RCC.

The film festival "mountain-film" at telluride's series of films will be screened at Saturday night at 7 p.m. in Hampshire College's Franklin Patterson Hall. The presentation shows various outdoor and mountain adventures from across the globe and is currently on a tour of the United States.

Other events include, "Try a kayak," where participants can do just that with experts from Zoar Outdoor in the pool at Hampshire College. "Climbing Competition with a Mission" is another activity that will help raise money for the cause. This event starts at noon Saturday at the RCC.

This weekend was put together to raise money to buy the land off of Farley Ledge. Farley Ledge is located in Irving, Mass. and has been a frequent stop to climbers since at least the 1960's. The first recorded climber on the ledge was Alan Rubin in 1968.

The organization is looking to build a permanent parking lot and access trail for climbers. They also hope to preserve the "natural buffer between Farley and Rt. 2."

Climbers have recently had problems with the ledge because of concern from land-owners and neighbors. Northfield Mountain/Northeast Utilities owns a portion of the land and wasn't willing to carry the risk. While neighbors felt that the ledge would create too much traffic.

Farley Ledge is also home to nesting Peregrine Falcons and Ravens. The Peregrine Falcon is an endangered animal, which may require a partial closure of the ledge during nesting season.

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu

The Daily Collegian is starting an advice column Monday!

Please e-mail any questions you'd like help with to

Veronica Garrett,
Advice Columnist at
vgarrett@student.umass.edu

Looking for business experience??

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking qualified applicants to fill the positions of:

- Business Manager
- Assistant Business Manager
- Distribution Manager

Contact Daniel Curran at 413-545-1901 for more information or stop by the Collegian in the basement of the Campus Center

The Blow and Mirah storm Iron Horse

Khaela Maricich, Mirah bring solo song-writing skills to stage

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

This past Wednesday at the Iron Horse in Northampton, two very talented singer-songwriters took the stage in an impressive show. For two hours, Khaela Maricich of The Blow and Mirah held the audience in the palms of their hands and performed songs from throughout both of their musical careers.

Before doors opened at 8 p.m. there was a line of roughly 100 people stretching down Center St. This was the first time Mirah had played the area since late 2003 and many attendees arrived early to snag good seats or get as close to the stage as they could. Soon after the doors opened the Iron Horse was nearly full – no tables in the upper level remained empty and the dance floor in front of the stage was crammed with eager fans.

At 8:45, Maricich took the stage to enthusiastic applause. Dressed entirely in white, she began the set with an a cappella version of "How Naked Are We Going To Get?," the first track off her 2003 album, "The Concussive Caress." Tapping the microphone to provide the beat, the stripped-down version of the song segued directly into "The Big U" off her 2006 release "Paper Television." Since her band mate Jona Bechtolt was on tour with his own group Y.A.C.H.T., Maricich performed the vocals of the song along to pre-recorded beats.

This approach to performance with no live instrumentation may prove a hindrance to other artists, but Maricich's dance act on stage is so earnest and energetic that she carries the routine off splendidly on her own. After finishing the song by brushing her shoulders off, it was obvious the crowd was entranced and they burst into applause. "Love the Smith girls," Maricich commented, adding a few seconds later, "and the boys that share space with them."

She launched into "Hock It" next, a track off the 2004 EP "Poor Aim: Love Songs." "I find myself running in the night to the karaoke bar," Maricich commented after the song, beginning a commentary that ran though the rest of the performance on Maricich's karaoke habits and the very nature of what songs are really about.

She treated the audience to the opening verses of two karaoke classics, The Knack's "My Sharona" and Minnie Ripperton's "Lovin' You," before singing her own song, "Hey Boy." Maricich sang several more songs off all three of her last albums before ending the set with her latest single, "Parentheses," which received a warm response and found many audience members singing along to the chorus.

Soon after the end of her performance the audience was treated to a unique demonstration. A friend of Maricich's was along for the tour selling a device called the Pee Style which allows women to urinate standing up. After giving a brief endorsement of the product, she unzipped her fly, inserted the Pee Style into her pants, and demonstrated the product with the help of a well-placed garbage pail. The display was surprisingly tasteful and she left the stage to applause.

At around 9:45, Mirah took the stage. Playing a Gibson electric guitar that seemed to dwarf her body, she began with "Person, Person," a quiet track off her debut album "You Think It's Like This But Really It's Like This." She seemed happy to be playing and, with a smile on her face, sang perfectly. The crowd, similarly with smiles on their faces, sang along.

After the first song a drummer took the stage. "This is my friend Bryce," Mirah said, before launching into "We're Both So Sorry" off her most recent album "C'mon Miracle." Bryce's drumming was simple and unobtrusive, often utilizing mallets to soften the sound. Mirah's guitar playing was similarly effective, mostly quiet, but swelling with volume when needed to contrast her beatific voice.

Mirah performed with her shoes off, standing on a small pad of fabric. This was the second show of the tour and she commented that, the night before at Toad's Place in New Haven, Conn., her feet had stuck to spilled beer on the stage amongst cockroaches. "But there's a lot we can learn from cockroaches!," Mirah protested, seemingly not wanting to badmouth the place much.

Mirah performed two songs on her own in the middle of the set. "I have to concentrate for this one," she proclaimed before beginning "Monument" off her collaborative album, "To All We Stretch The Open Arm" with The Black Cat Orchestra. She looked fiercely at her guitar's neck while playing, as if worrying that if she stopped looking she'd make a mistake, all the while a charming smile on her face.

Bryce returned for "Don't Die In Me" off of her second album "Advisory Committee." Clearly a crowd pleaser, most in the Iron Horse sang along. The two then launched into "The Light," with Bryce beat boxing to Mirah's singing. "This is the remix version," Mirah proclaimed. "DJ Beyond did a great job on this one." The version of the song appeared on "Joyride," a remix album released on K Records at the end of 2006. It was a highlight of the night and the crowd embraced the almost hip-hop version of the song.

Mirah performed a few more songs including "Dogs of B.A." and "Mt. St. Helens," before ending the set with "Cold Cold Water," the debut track off "Advisory Committee." Though the live version wasn't quite as theatrical as the album cut, the two performers did an excellent job of energizing the crowd, many of whom sang along with every word.

Mirah came back for a solo two-song encore of "The Garden" and "Telephone Wires." "I haven't played this one in 10 years... well, that may be an exaggeration," she said of the second song, and while she made a few mistakes it only added to the charm of the performance.

Though Maricich and Mirah put on two very different shows it was an unforgettable night, held together by the strength of each artists' songwriting skills. Seeing as how infrequently Mirah tours it was a truly unique night and one not to be forgotten anytime soon by the show's attendees.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbec@student.umass.edu

Khaela Maricich, of The Blow, performed without her band mate Jona Bechtolt who is on tour with another band.

Band brings 'root' reggae sound to show

JBB from page 6

sounds and instruments over one another without creating clutter.

For example, in the song "Zionitific Dub" they start off by introducing a funky bass line accompanied by a smooth and mellow drum beat. After a few measures they interject a short but powerful spout of trumpet and begin to blend in an echoic guitar rhythm along with a spacey, psychedelic sound effect. The trumpet, bass, guitar, and sound effects take turns from this point on creating a continuous call and response until a horn enters and blows a solo. After the solo a short, but sweet vocal melody is introduced that continues on and off until the end of the tune.

One might forget listening to this band that these are not Jamaican-born musicians. Don't be surprised if they are able to replicate the "roots" reggae sound to perfection, creating waves of good vibes that caress their audience and sprinkle it with a positive energy.

The band has won numerous awards for its talent, including "Best World Music Act" at the 2001 Boston Music Awards and also "Best Live Act" at the same award ceremony the following year. The New York Daily News called JBB "more massive an attack than Marley" and "reverent and revolutionary at the same time." In this day and age it is a tribute even to be mentioned in the same sentence as reggae legend Bob Marley.

JBB is no cover band in that they play almost all original material and have a unique style that is definitely not simply a Marley knockoff. On occasion they will play a cover such as the Lynyrd Skynyrd tune "Traveling Man." Yet, this is a rare occurrence for the experienced group since they simply have so much of their own, original material, to play. They will be performing at 8:30 Saturday at the Pearl Street Theater in Northampton.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.

The band John Brown's Body's Saturday performance promises great sound accompanied by an easy vibe.

Creek avoided fame to stay a jam band

CREEK from page 6

and have kept themselves underground for their fans.

Many have even described Max Creek as a "Grateful Dead" band. Drummer Mark Mercier commented on this to Glide Magazine's reporter Shane Handler.

"We never truly went after that. It's a backhanded complement, for people who mean it well, but it's not the same as the Dead. What we do is a lot freer than what the Dead did. Believe it or not Scott Murawski and I went up and played with Phil Lesh and friends, and he is a lot more structured than you would think. Listening to the Dead's jams, there was some structure there you wouldn't think would be there, and whereas our jams, there is absolutely nothing preplanned, and most of the time we don't even know what song we are going to go into."

Mercier commenting on the band's original goals said, "When you are young the world lasts forever and you really don't think further on down the line. Our dream was not necessarily was to become rich and famous, but to become classic. I think we've succeeded in that. We've succeeded in not becoming rich and famous (laughs) but as far as becoming a classic group, the funny thing is that we can attract as many people now that there were 10 years ago. Which is very cool!"

Glide Magazine said, "The Max Creek sound is hard to describe, as it is a constant blend of everything honest, deep and respectable: woven within various genres of music. The success and sound of improvisational bands like Phish, moe., Blues Traveler and the Disco Biscuits are the trees in Max Creek's seeds of a thriving Northeast music scene that encourages live risk taking on stage and playing according to the feel of the present moment."

Concerts aren't the same as they used to be. Back in their heyday bands used to play their hearts out for hours on end until their fingers bled. These days, it's hard to find a band that will play for longer than two hours. Max Creek brings back the good old feeling of the original jam bands and is known for playing sets that can go for as long as three hours or more.

As Mercier said, there isn't a lot of structure to their music. They're passion is in improvisation and they never make a stage entrance with a predetermined set list. This type of music really tests the connection musicians have with one another, and Max Creek seems to have it down to a science.

"We are reactive people and sometimes that's to our detriment, but we react off the vibe of the room, on the vibe of the audience, on the vibe of the town and on the vibe of how each of us are feeling at any point in time. Sometimes that's bad, because sometimes it would be nice to control the vibe (laughs) or realize that you are, but we just feel like we are part of the fabric," commented Mercier followed by drummer Scott Allshouse, "I can't remember in 7 years ever having a set list."

Tickets are $15 and the show starts at 8:30pm. If you can't make it tonight and feel ambitious, head down to Rhode Island's Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel in Providence and get a second chance to see them. To find out more about the band, visit Jambase.com or MaxCreek.com.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu

Book confusing, offers no answers

BOOK from page 6

were a revolving door, bringing to mind Dorothy's exclamation that "My! People come and go so quickly here!" This room, though not nearly as aesthetically pleasing, is far more perplexing than Oz could ever be.

The narration of "Travels in the Scriptorium" is one of the most intriguing you will find in any modern novel, being unreliable third person limited omniscient. "Travels" is modeled as a report, based upon the photos and audio recordings taken from Mr. Blank's room, so the narrator is often unsure as to what a particular action means.

For instance, everything in the room is labeled with a strip of tape denoting the name of the item, such as LAMP or WALL. On page two, when Mr. Blank whispers wall, the narrator writes "What cannot be known at this point is whether he is reading the word on the strip of tape or simply referring to the wall itself."

However, at other, more crucial moments, the narrator seems intimately involved in Mr. Blank's critical thinking, as the old man desperately attempts to solve the mystery of his past and present, almost as though the narrator is Mr. Blank himself.

The lack of a true identity for Mr. Blank, and the unsolved mystery of the novel as a whole, makes one think of the writing of Samuel Beckett, most famous for his absurdist play "Waiting for Godot." The reader desperately seeks for answers to the seemingly endless pile of questions that Mr. Blank has, but we are never given a solid fact. Everything is hidden in half-truths.

Each time that Mr. Blank provides one the guests in his room with a query, they suggest that he try and find the answer buried in his own mind. Is this a not-so-subtle suggestion by Auster for us, as readers, to use our deductive reasoning, just like Mr. Blank, and figure everything out on our own? Just as Beckett refused to reveal the true identity of Godot, and left it open to interpretation, Auster demands that we solve the riddle of Mr. Blank without his assistance.

I hold steadfast to my description of "Travels in the Scriptorium" as labyrinthine, for it is truly the only word that can accurately describe what this reading experience is like. A labyrinth, unlike a maze, is one winding, unambiguous path that will eventually lead to a center. It is not meant to confuse or trick one outright, but slowly drive the navigator mad as they travel down near identical hallways again and again. Once you reach the heart of the labyrinth, you have no choice but to return to the outside world by the path which you got there. It is a journey of redundancy.

At the end of "Travels in the Scriptorium," you find yourself precisely where you began, without a definite answer as to who Mr. Blank is and why he is trapped in this barren room. Is he an ex-CIA agent being brought up on charges of war crimes? Perhaps he is simply an old man suffering from dementia who believes himself a prisoner in his own nursing home? Or, is Mr. Blank Auster himself, forever haunted by the characters he has brought to life and the horrible things he has made them do as their creator?

While this reviewer believes the latter to be the most likely interpretation, "Travels in the Scriptorium" is unwilling to verify my suggestion. While I have gained no greater knowledge from this novel, reading it has not been in vain. A journey is a journey, regardless of how unfruitful it may have been, and one is never the worse for experience gained in travel.

Matthew Robert Sherman can be reached at mrsherma@student.umass.edu.

After a seven-game slump, senior James Life has resurrected his outside shooting. The guard was 5-of-12 from 3-point range and totaled 17 points on Senior Night, defeating La Salle, 102-63. The Minutemen have one game left before the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass closes book on regular season

M. BASKETBALL from page 12

it's really who's doing the best as of late, and who can start making those runs. So if we can just keep things up going into the tournament, and really try to make a run, it could mean big things."

Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme are the two guys who get all the credit, and with good reason. But other aspects of the team are starting to come together just in time for the postseason.

Thomas, Dante Milligan, Luke Bonner, Tiki Mayben and Ricky Harris have given the Minutemen a bench presence that was nearly non-existent early on. And while Freeman and Lasme remain the go-to guys on the team, Gary Forbes seems to be making a case for that Atlantic 10 Newcomer of the Year award he was predicted to win.

In all of this late-season success, one man seems to have gotten lost in the shuffle. And that man is senior James Life.

Life is UMass' No. 1 option from 3-point range, and he couldn't have picked a better time to break out of a brutal seven-game slump in which he shot only 27 percent from the field (12-for-44) and 23 percent from behind the arc (8-for-35).

Down by one with 1:38 remaining in regulation against Saint Louis on Saturday, Life hit his only 3-pointer of the game, putting UMass back on top at 49-47. The Billikens came right back to tie it up, but Life hit two free throws that gave the Minutemen the final lead, ending in a 53-50 win.

He said after the game that he hoped it would lead to something bigger – and it has.

Life showed no signs of a prior cold streak in Wednesday's win by hitting five 3-pointers and finishing the game with 17 points.

"We need that from him," Thomas said. "James Life, he's a shooter, so when he starts knocking down shots we can do all kinds of things. When we have the inside working and the outside working, it just brings so many different options to our game."

The Minutemen have guaranteed themselves no lower than a No. 2 seed in the A-10 Tournament with the win over La Salle. They are tied for first place in the conference with Xavier, and if the season were to end today, the Musketeers would win the tie-breaker because of an 83-77 win over UMass back on Jan. 18.

UMass coach Travis Ford reassured that there is plenty of work to be done.

"We still have a lot of basketball left," Ford said after Wednesday night's win. "We can't sit back and rest, and think because we played well in the past it's automatically going to happen.

"This team likes to rise to that challenge. They need to be pushed. I'm proud of them, but we still have a game on Saturday, so we'll see what happens."

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

Lasme and Co. say farewell to Mullins

SENIORS from page 12

The 6-foot-7 walk-on got in the books a few of minutes in when a La Salle defender picked his pocket on the right wing, but Pennie – perhaps a little physically overmatched – notched a good stat when he reversed the ball to James Life who immediately buried a three.

Life, the junior college All-American transfer from a year ago, had himself a great shooting night after some recent struggles, tallying 17 points on 5-of-12 shooting from beyond the arc.

The garrulous, improvisational, quirky 3-point guy will leave UMass as one of the most prolific shooters in the program's history, even though his time in the Pioneer Valley was limited to two seasons.

Thomas had his way, with La Salle early in the game, and the fired-up New Yorker – one of the best guys around – took it to the house twice in the first five minutes, the second emphatic dunk off of a baseline drive over two defenders.

"It was very emotional," Thomas said. "It's your last game, you know. You grow up playing basketball all your life. You play in high school and then you come to college to play and it's basically your life at school. But to have the support of the fans cheering your name tonight, it was a great feeling."

The athletic department honored the six seniors (including team manager Paul Kavanaugh) before the game with their framed jerseys and flowers. They lined up at midcourt after the individual announcements, and teammates, coaches, family and friends hugged and kissed and congratulated the departing players.

Ford gave a big hug to both Lasme and Freeman, the two guys who carried his team to a 20-plus-win season this year.

"I'm very proud of our seniors, very proud," Ford said. "I'm very happy with the way we started the game. It's not easy to get a good start with so much emotion in the beginning and so many things going through their heads."

Years were flashing by, the memories of a stage in their lives that will never come back to them once they're gone. They will leave it all here, in the Mullins Center, in the Pioneer Valley, in Amherst, at UMass, with the students and coaches and peers they met along the way.

"Everything fell into place tonight and in this season," Freeman said. "It's a wonderful thing. I'll remember this night forever."

So will the other 6,205 fans.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at Senior Rashaun Freeman recorded a double-double in the win over La Salle Wednesday night, scoring a team-best 26 points and a game-high 12 rebounds. The center leads the Minutemen with 15.8 points per game in his final season.

Recent failures out of mind for UM

W. BASKETBALL from page 12

UMass and St. Bonaventure are neck-and-neck in several statistical categories. Remarkably, both teams averaged 62.9 points on the season.

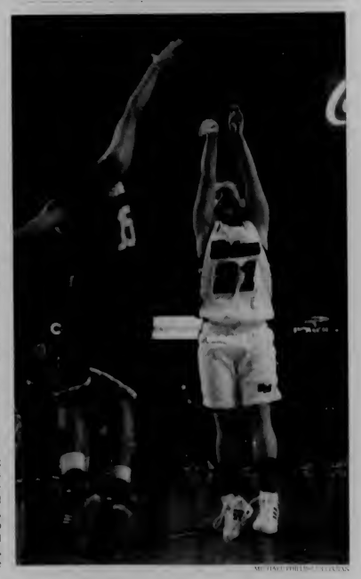
UMass tallying 1,824 points to SBU's 1,823. Both teams stand close in rebounding offense, rebounding defense, and assist-to-turnover ratio. The Minutewomen have an edge in points allowed, standing 3rd in the conference, giving up an average of 59.4 points per contest, while the Bonnies are 6th, allowing 62.4. One area the Bonnies have a significant edge is in free throw percentage, they sit atop the conference with a .751 mark from the line; while the Minutewomen are ninth, shooting just over 69 percent in that category.

Leading the way for St. Bonaventure is the forward tandem of senior Audrey Latendresse and freshman Dana Mitchell, averaging 13.4 and 12.3 points per game, respectively. Mitchell was recently named to the All-Conference Rookie Team, while Latendresse is coming off a career high 31-point performance in a home loss to Charlotte on senior day. Sophomore forward Ashley Edwards ranks fourth in the conference with 7.7 rebounds per game.

Including their win earlier this season, the Minutewomen are 29-16 all time against St. Bonaventure, winning three of the last four meetings. The last time these two teams met in A-10 conference tournament play was 1991, a 91-64 win for the Bonnies. Overall, the Minutewomen are 13-24 in the postseason tournament and have never won the championship.

The Maroon and White must feel a sense of accomplishment already, having posted 17 victories, the most since a 19 win season in 1997-1998. That season, the Minutewomen made a one-game appearance in the NCAA tournament. Getting back to the big dance will be particularly tough this year. If they get by St. Bonaventure on Friday, they will face a rested Temple team the following afternoon, while George Washington sits atop the conference, toting a No. 9 national ranking and a 14-0 conference record, one game better than second place Temple.

Josh Friedman can be reached at jmfriedm@student.umass.edu



Freshman Kim Benton is the Minutewomen's leading rookie scorer, averaging 6.2 points per game, heading into the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

CHEAPCOMPUTERS4U.COM
BRAND NAME ELECTRONICS FOR LESS
Apple, Mac, Sony, Dell, Gateway, Intel, Ipods, GPS, Bluetooth, Printers, & more!
PCS $69 and up
Laptops $139 and up
Apple G4s $199 and up
LCDS $59 and up
STUDENTS $3 OFF ADMISSION with AD
THE CLARION NORTHAMPTON SAT. MARCH 3RD COGAN FAIRS
EXIT 18
TAKE RIGHT OFF RAMP

Freshman Will Ortiz is the Minutemen's top rookie scorer. The right-winger is sixth on the team with 19 points seven goals and 12 assists. He notched his first career goal on Oct. 28 in the team's last meeting with Maine.

Injuries for both sides could prove costly this weekend

HOCKEY from page 12

full results of the MRI will not be available until today.

Bishop first sustained the injury in a game against UNH when he and Trevor Smith collided in the crease. He then reaggravated it during Maine's 5-1 win over Merrimack last Saturday night.

"Who's there, who's not there is of little interest to me," Cahoon said, when asked if Bishop's absence made a difference for his team. "I just know that we have to do the things that we're capable of doing to negate some of their strengths. They still have a whole cadre of people that can make a difference. One player is only one player."

After a stellar rookie season in Orono a year ago, Bishop struggled by comparison this season. But this weekend the Minutemen can expect to face Dave Wilson between the pipes. He went 2-2 with a 2.96 goals-against average in Bishops absence earlier this season. Wilson's two wins came during a weekend sweep of Vermont.

According to Cahoon, the key for UMass this weekend will be its defense, which just so happens to be the area where the Minutemen have sustained the most injuries as of late. Sophomre Topher Bevis' banged up shoulder continues to ail him an injury sustained on a hit-from-behind at Vermont two weeks ago.

Freshman Martin Nolet sat out Sunday's game against Northeastern, but is expected to play this weekend, as is goaltender Jon Quick.

"Defend," Cahoon replied when asked about the key for his team against Maine. "Defend the power play, defend the defensive zone, defend four-on-four and make sure we don't get ourselves running around. And then off of that defense, get our offense."

Saturday night's affair at Mullins Center will carry a little something extra as the Minutemen honor their four seniors – Anderson, Mark Matheson, Chris Capraro and Kevin Jarman.

"It's a dynamic group of seniors," Cahoon said. "You've got Chris Capraro and Matt Anderson in their fifth years, having gone through a redshirt year, each one of them. And having to overcome adversity to put it all together and really enjoy fine senior years – both are great kids.

"Then you have Mark Matheson and Kevin Jarman. They have both been here for the four-year stint. Jarman, ironically, is the only one that played in the Hockey East Championship Game four years ago, for various reasons the other three were out."

Both Anderson and Matheson said the thought of playing their final games in Amherst was in the back of their heads, but both plan on putting that off for another weekend.

"I'd like to go out with a bang, that's for sure, but I think that means playing here next week," Anderson said.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu

Home ice on the line against Maine

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

You couldn't have written this scenario any more perfectly. When the coaches in Hockey East put together the 2006-07 schedule, no one would have thought a three-way race would develop for the fourth and final home-ice spot in the playoffs.

And who could've predicted that the Massachusetts hockey team would be right in the middle of it all. Tied for that much-coveted fourth spot in the conference with Maine, the Minutemen are slated for the fifth seed in the tournament by way of a 4-1 loss to the Black Bears back in the second week of the season.

It might seem like that puts the Mass Attack in a bind, but the sports gods have worked their wonders once again, pitting the Black Bears and Minutemen against each other for a two-game set this weekend in Amherst.

The significance has not been lost on UMass coach Don Cahoon.

"You can't help but realize what's at stake. We're playing for home-ice advantage," Cahoon said. "It's not the end of the season, by any means, but there's a distinct advantage in [earning home ice]."

It would be just the second time in program history the Minutemen would host the opening-round of the Hockey East Tournament, something that Cahoon knows could bring a lot of attention to the school and the team.

"It's a real tribute to the program is we can work towards getting home ice in this league," Cahoon said. "Finishing as one of the top four teams in the regular season is a pretty good feather in your cap, and given where our program's been the last couple of years, it's a big step forward."

Whoever comes out on top in this one has likely earned another week at home. Vermont enters the final leg of the race in sixth, just a point behind UMass and Maine.

Until 7 p.m. tonight, the middle of the pack in Hockey East looks like this, starting with No. 2: Boston University (34 points), Boston College (33), Maine (29), UMass (29) and Vermont (28). Six points separate five teams in arguably the best league in collegiate hockey. But you can rest assured that it won't look anything like that on Sunday morning.

Of course, speculation is futile because no one knows what will happen, but it's just too fun to pass up an opportunity to look at all the possibilities. The Minutemen, coincidentally, have the most to gain and the most to lose this weekend.

The Maroon and White have an outside shot at third place – the same spot they finished in 2003-04 when they reached the Hockey East Championship. However, if things go sour for the Minutemen, they could find themselves in sixth by the beginning of next week, visiting the No. 3 team on their home sheet.

Here's how things could shake out for the Mass Attack:

THE LONG SHOT: THIRD

If absolutely everything goes right for the Minutemen, they will finish in third place, matching its highest finish ever since joining Hockey East over a decade ago.

Obviously, UMass will need to sweep Maine this weekend, earning four conference points. At the same time, BC will need to drop both its games to New Hampshire in a home-and-home series.

The reason this is so unlikely is that UNH has locked up the top spot in the conference, and it would be no surprise to see some of its stars taking a breather on the bench. At the same time, the Eagles can still move up to second and pass the Terriers, who finished their regular season on Wednesday with a loss to Northeastern.

Regardless, such a scenario would tie UMass with BC at 33 points, and because the Minutemen won the season series, 2-1, they would claim the third seed.

THE GOAL: FOURTH

A few, less miraculous things need to happen for UMass to take over sole possession of the fourth spot and earn home ice.

Two wins and the Mullins Center will be hosting hockey games next weekend. However, UMass can still earn the spot with a win and a tie (three points), but will need help from Vermont, who hosts UMass Lowell for two games in Burlington. The Catamounts would need to lose or tie one game with the River Hawks for the Minutemen to still finish in fourth.

THE DISAPPOINTMENT: FIFTH

If the Minutemen earn two or less points this weekend, they can kiss the Mullins Center goodbye until the fall. A win and a loss (or two ties) would leave them tied with Maine, whose 4-1 win earlier in the season gives them the series tiebreaker.

The Maroon and White are 10-3-3 under the green roof at Mullins, so anything less than two points would be very surprising.

WORST-CASE SCENARIO: SIXTH

UMass is in the Hockey East playoffs. It clinched that much of its future weeks ago (UML is the last team out right now, 14 points behind the Minutemen), but if they decide to rest on their laurels, the Minutemen will likely free-fall through the standings and find themselves looking up a lot more teams than they need to be.

In addition to staying behind Maine with two or less points earned this weekend, Vermont – just a point behind both teams would have a golden opportunity to move up as well.

And if the Catamounts find themselves tied with the Minutemen, they also hold the tiebreaker with UMass, winning the season series, 2-1.

SUMMING IT ALL UP

The Minutemen have a respectable conference record at 13-9-3, but they have just one win over the two teams sitting beside them. So unless UMass can climb up to eye-level with the Eagles, it wants no part of any tie situations.

However, even with so much conference mobility, the Minutemen might be in the best position of any team whose playoff seeding is still up in the air. UMass controls its own destiny. With two wins, the worst it can finish out is fourth. With just one loss, fifth becomes a hopeful gift.

Cahoon summed it up best after practice yesterday.

"The feeling is: win tonight," Cahoon said. "It's a regular season game, and everything's in the balance. But it's all moot if we don't take care of Friday night."

The sentiments resemble those of another sports icon – who resides on the West Coast – often known for saying, "Just win, baby."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Jon Quick and the Mass Attack could finish anywhere between third and sixth place in Hockey East after their two games against the Black Bears. The goaltender returns after missing Sunday's win with an ankle injury. He is fourth in the conference with a .925 save percentage.

One more shot at glory for lone senior

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team left Amherst yesterday at 8 a.m. for the Atlantic 10 Championship in Cincinnati, Ohio.

It is not the Minutewomen's first trip to the tournament, however. UMass has been there many times before, and they will likely get there many times in years to come. But for one Minutewoman in particular, this will be her very last playoff berth ever.

That person is UMass' lone senior, Tamara Tatham.

Tatham has spent her four years of collegiate basketball pioneering the UMass program and dominating opponents – as well as the stat sheet.

Throughout her career, the 6-foot-1 forward has amassed 747 total rebounds, 223 assists, 189 steals and 60 blocks.

In addition to these numbers, she has racked up 1,270 points, putting her eighth on the all-time UMass scoring list.

Tatham has donned the Maroon and White for the last four years and in each of her last three tournament trips, she has been sent packing in the early stages.

"Usually we made it there and we were usually out in the first round – most of the time," Tatham said. "We have the ability to make it past the first round, make it past the second round. It's just a matter of just going out there and doing it."

It's been a wild ride for the Brampton, Ontario, native, who was coach Marnie Dacko's first UMass recruit.

As a first-year player, Tatham immediately started turning heads. She was in the team's top-five in four essential categories: she was second on the team in points (250), third in scoring average (9.3), second in steals (41) and first in blocks (19).

With a 6-22 record that season, UMass battled its way into the A-10 Tournament, losing a 73-44 contest to Duquesne in the tourney's first game.

The next two seasons had a similarly frustrating outcome for Tatham – though, as a sophomore she was happy to welcome her younger sister, Alisha, to the squad.

In the 2005-06 season, the Minutewomen went 14-15 and earned another trip to A-10s.

They dug down deep and managed to give the Dukes a little payback for the shellacking they handed UMass the year before.

The Maroon and White machine failed to take out its next adversary, however, losing to Xavier by a score of 69-46.

Tamara's third season proved to be as generous as her first. Finishing 11-17, Tatham's team earned a third-straight playoff appearance, but took a step backward in terms of progress – losing 56-51 to Duquesne in the first game.

But this year is different. This year she is a senior and this is the last A-10 tournament she will ever play in.

Tatham is determined not to let the tradition she has witnessed the last three seasons affect the way she looks back on her final postseason.

"Basically, I'm just trying to play my heart out and do anything I can to help us win," she said. "I'm going to play with a lot of emotion because I don't want our season to end."

It might, at times, be difficult for some underclassmen to take a playoff berth seriously, seeing as how they have more chances for redemption down the road. But for Tatham, this is it – and she has made it abundantly clear to her teammates that she needs everyone to step up this weekend.

"I did talk to the team [to tell them] this is our only chance. We need everybody on the bench," Tatham said.

And Dacko, the woman who has been Tatham's American mom for the last four years, remains confident that her players will enter Cincinnati's Cintas Center prepared for St. Bonaventure's, whom they play today at 4 p.m., the fight of a lifetime.

"We're ready to go. The kids have been there before," Dacko said. "Certainly this is no surprise, no secret thing and we've got to be ready to be mentally prepared to come out and not overlook St. Bonnie's, since we beat them already. We've got to go out and be able to effectively execute on the floor."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
MARCH 17TH
From HBO's "Tourgasm" and NBC's "Last Comic Standing 2 & 3"
GARY GULMAN
MARCH 10TH JOHN VALBY a.k.a. "Dr. Dirty"
APRIL 7TH TOMMY DAVIDSON
APRIL 21ST ADELE GIVENS
MAY 26TH PABLO FRANCISCO

UMass finishes road trip against Harvard

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team goes for its third win in four games Saturday afternoon when it concludes a four-game road trip against the Harvard Crimson at Jordan Field. Game time is slated for 1 p.m. in Cambridge, Mass.

UMass did not pick up its third win of the 2006 campaign until Mar. 29 when it took care of the Vermont Catamounts, 16-9. The Maroon and White had to wait even longer to notch its third road game victory, which came Apr. 15 in a win over the La Salle Explorers, 16-10.

Harvard, which finished 5-11 overall and 3-4 in the Ivy League conference a season ago, opened its season on a high note Thursday night on the road with a 14-13 win over the Holy Cross Crusaders. The team was just 2-6 at home last year.

The Crimson enter the 2007 campaign returning nearly 80 percent of their offensive production from last year's team and return nine upperclassmen.

"[Harvard] has some skilled players at each position and they're a pretty solid team from top to bottom," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

"I think us playing a few more games and being a little more experienced in game situations will hopefully help us out," Venechanos added. "We've been down before, up before, and able to come back from a deficit. In-state rivalry games are always tough."

In last year's meeting vs. Harvard, UMass came away with a 12-8 win at home. The Minutewomen have gotten the best of the Crimson in recent years, winning three of the last five affairs between the two schools, but Harvard owns the all-time series 17-12. Harvard won 12 straight contests vs. UMass from Apr. 15, 1988 to March 10, 2001.

UMass has had its problems shutting the coffin on opponents this season. No one donning the Maroon and White needs to be reminded it had Holy Cross in a 5-0 hole entering the second half, only to squander its lead and allow the Crusaders to pick up the win, 7-6 in the opening tilt of the season. UMass held an 8-4 advantage over Vermont heading into the second half and allowed the Catamounts to record the first three goals of the second frame but hung on to the win.

"I think we just need to be more consistent," Venechanos said concerning the team's second half issues. "I think once we're up by one we should then want to be up by two and kind of keep it going. Basically, once when we have the lead and then the other team scores it stops our momentum so we just have to continue winning the draws and changing the pace of the game a little bit."

UMass has found its offensive mojo early on this season. In two of its first three games, the Minutewomen have scored 13 goals. Last year's squad scored 13 or more goals on just two occasions through 18 games.

A key component of the offensive attack is junior attacker Kathleen Typadis who can crack the Top 10 all-time UMass scoring list with one goal Saturday. Typadis has registered eight goals in her first three games, which leads the team in scoring.

"I've been impressed with our offensive attack ... being able to score double digits in the last two games has been really impressive," Venechanos said. "Having a balanced attack has definitely helped us out this year."

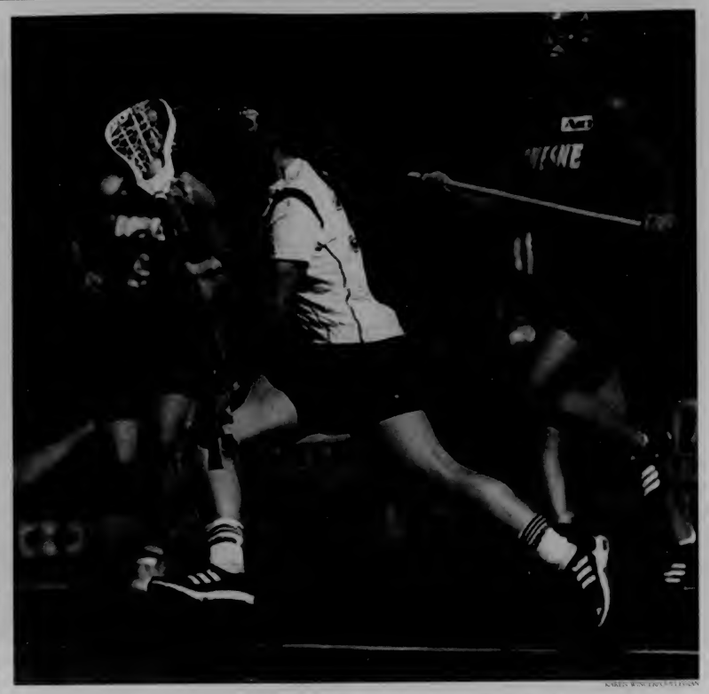
One of the more intriguing storylines Saturday will be the match up between Harvard's stud draw controller junior Natalie Curtis and sophomore midfielder Holly Drown, who recorded a stellar 10 draw controls in UMass' win over the Catamounts Wednesday. Curtis recorded 48 draw controls a season ago, which ranked first in the Ivy League and 15th in the nation.

"It's going to be a battle since those two are definitely going to get a majority of the draws," Venechanos said. "

Curtis was also a viable threat to land the ball back of the cage, leading the team in scoring with 37 goals and had five three-goal performances to her credit as well.

But there's a reason why the Crimson finished six games below .500 last year. Harvard allowed opponents to score nearly 13 goals a contest while scoring just over 10 goals itself. The Crimson was just 2-10 when allowing opponents to score 10 goals or more.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu



KAREN WINCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior Kathleen Typadis is one goal away from becoming UMass' 10th-leading scorer all-time, with 87 career goals currently on her collegiate resume. The attacker is tied with Holly Drown as the Minutewomen's top scorer with nine points on eight goals and an assist this year.

Hefty schedule for UMass

Minutewomen face tough out-of-conference opponents

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is facing stiff competition in its non-conference schedule. The Inside Lacrosse Women's Top-20 media poll came out on Monday with UMass receiving five votes. The Minutewomen are ranked outside the top 20 at No. 24.

After defeating Boston University (0-1), 13-11, it dropped BU from No.16 to No. 20. Holy Cross (1-1), who defeated UMass in their season opener, 7-6, received the last two votes. The tough non-conference schedule will end with the Minutewomen playing No. 3 defending NCAA National Champions Northwestern (1-1).

Taste of the Ivy League

Holy Cross gave the Minutewomen a small taste of the Ivy League but the road does not get any easier for them. They will face off against more Ivy League competition, Harvard (0-0), No. 8 Dartmouth (1-0) and Yale (2-0).

Last season they defeated Harvard 12-8 but lost to Dartmouth 16-7. The Minutewomen have not played Yale since 1998 and their last win came 19 years ago. Dartmouth was the runner up to Northwestern in the NCAA National Championship game last year.

Moving up in the record books

Senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy moved to No. 4 all-time on the career saves list. McCarthy started the season with 312 saves. In the Minutewomen's first game against Holy Cross, she recorded 10 saves, putting her ahead of Debbie Dejesus's 318 saves from 1982-1985. Through three games this season, McCarthy has recorded 25 saves to give her 337. Next on the list is Cyndi Doyle, who has 406 saves from 2000-2003. If McCarthy can repeat her 10R saves from a year ago she will have no problem passing Doyle for No. 3 all-time.

Junior attacker Kathleen Typadis is one goal shy of cracking the top 10 list for career goals, she has 87 goals. Last season, she had a record year placing fifth all-time with 43 goals in a season. To break the all-time career goals record she would have to average 47 goals in the next two seasons.

After three games Typadis has eight goals and one assist. She continued her scoring streak to 27 games with a hat trick against Vermont. She now has 28 multi-goal games and 15 hat tricks for her for her career.

Typadis has five draw controls this season moving her to fifth all time with 63. Last season, she posted the third best mark in UMass history for single season draw controls with 36. If Kathleen continues at this pace she will be the all-time draw controls leader. Rachel Ingraffea is No.1 in school history with 108 draw controls.

Season leaders

Typadis leads UMass with 8 goals on 20 shots. Sophomore midfielder Holly Drown and junior attacker Melynda Zwick have each scored six goals. Both players have been efficient scorers. Drown has 6 goals on 14 (.43%) shots and Zwick has 6 goals on 13 shots (.46%). Drown also leads the team with 17 draw controls and has a team high 3 assists.

On the defensive side, freshmen Ashley King is performing strong in her rookie year. Through three games, King leads the team with 8 grounds balls and has caused six turnovers.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames a student.umass edu

KAREN WINCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior Melinda Zwick is second on the team in goals and third in points scored. The attacker has netted six goals in three games and added a pair of assists for eight points on the season.

We Enjoy writing about sports as much as you enjoy watching them.
www.DailyCollegian.com

CINEMARK
The Best Movies Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 5
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 3/2/07 - Thurs 3/8/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Wild Hogs (PG-13) 1:05 4:40 7:10 9:45
Zodiac (R) 12:45 4:15 8:00
Reservoir Dogs (R) 4:00 8:40
Music and Lyrics (PG-13) 1:30 4:20 7:30 10:15
Norbit (PG-13) 1:35 4:15 7:20 9:50
Rano 911 Miami (R) 1:40 4:25 7:50 10:15
The Queen (PG-13) 12:55 7:15
The Astronaut Farmer (PG) 1:10 4:25 7:25 9:55
Breach (PG-13) 12:50 4:45 7:35 10:05
The Number 23 (R) 1:25 4:30 7:40 10:25
Bridge to Terabithia (PG) 1:30 4:30 6:55 9:30
no passes or supersavers
Ghost Rider (PG-13) 1:15 1:40 4:05 4:50 7:00 7:40 9:35 10:20
• NO PASSES • NO SUPERSAVERS
Prices & showtimes subject to change at cinemark.com

Senior James Godinho is one of 13 athletes competing this weekend in the IC4A Indoor Track and Field Championships for UMass.

Indoor season comes to a close

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

The final weekend of the 2007 Massachusetts indoor track and field team's season is reserved for the cream of the crop.

Only those who qualified in certain events will be competing this weekend, as the Minutemen make a return visit to Boston University to compete at the IC4A Indoor Track and Field Championships, while the Minutewomen travel to the Reggie Lewis Center in Roxbury, Mass. to take part in the I.C.A.C. Indoor Track and Field Championships.

The Minutemen will be represented by senior James Godinho in the 400-meter dash and Erik Hoagland in the long jump, 55-meter dash, and 200-meter dash. An additional 11 athletes will be on hand to compete in the 4x400, 4x800, and distance medley relays.

The UMass women's lone ambassador to the I.C.A.C. championships is junior Christian DeRosa, who earned a spot in the event after finishing with a time of 17.22.96 minutes in the 5000-meter last weekend at the New England Indoor Championships.

"At a meet where the 65 top Division I schools on the East coast of the U.S. get together at the same place at the same time, everyone on our team has to do well," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "Average-type performances will easily get lost in the wealth of talent."

Godinho qualified for the IC4A Championships after turning in a stellar time of 48.61 seconds in the 400-meter dash at the Valentine Invitational on Feb 9. The time also was the third fastest in UMass indoor track history.

Hoagland competes in the long jump event, where earlier this season he broke the school's 31-year standing record with a leap of 23 feet, 10.25 inches at the UNH Tri-Meet. In his first meet of the year on Jan. 17 at the Boston University Quad Meet, Hoagland set school records in the 55-meter dash and the 200-meter dash while qualifying for the IC4A Championships.

His time of 6.45 seconds in the 55-meter dash was the third fastest in school history while his time of 22.11 seconds in the 200-meter dash was the fourth fastest in school history.

All three of the relay teams qualified for the IC4A Championships last weekend at the New England Championships.

"Our goals are to be better than last week in all events," O'Brien said. "If we're able to do that this weekend, it will be our third consecutive week doing just that."

Both O'Brien and UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere have taken it easy on their athletes in the days leading up to their respective events, confident they are prepared for the final meet of the indoor season.

"At this time, I hope there are no surprises," O'Brien said. "Things should settle in by now. The last week of training is light. It's mostly timing and sharpening drills at this point, techniques, and getting some rest."

LaFreniere echoed O'Brien's pre-meet philosophy.

"This will be Christina [DeRosa's] third indoor 5K race in three weeks, so we backed off from her regular training," LaFreniere said. "This past week has been Christina's easiest week since she stepped on campus in September. She should feel fresh and energized on Saturday."

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu.

NOW SHOWING
MAR. 2 - MAR. 8
amherst cinema
LETTERS FROM IWO JIMA
FRI-SAT 1:15 4:00 7:00
SUN 1:00 MON-THURS 1:15 4:00
TENEH CRUZ ACADEMY AWARD NOMINEE BEST ACTRESS
VOLVER
FRI-WED: 2:00 4:30 7:30
THURS: 2:00 4:30
Pan's Labyrinth
FRI-SAT: 7:00, 10:00
SUN-THURS: 7:00
FOREST WHITAKER ACADEMY AWARD BEST ACTOR
THE LAST KING OF SCOTLAND
FRI-SAT: 2:45, 5:15, 7:45, 10:05
SUN-THURS: 2:45, 5:15, 7:45
JANUS FILMS New 35mm Prints!
VIRIDIANA TH 3/1 7p SUN 3/4 2p
Luis Buñuel
WILD STRAWBERRIES TH 3/8 7p SUNDAY 3/11 2p
Ingmar Bergman
28 AMITY STREET 413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

6	2	4	9	5
			2	4	7	9
		3		1
	9	5						3
1						7	2
				7		5
		6	5	2	9
				6	1	8	9	2

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Bronco prodder
5 Wound reminder
9 Put to shame
14 Johnnycake
15 Plus
16 "Fame" singer
17 Curving courses
18 Certain military officer
20 Ecdysiast's act
22 Jacob's twin
23 Assign to a feedlot
24 Fraction of a joule
26 Part of a pelvis
27 Tyke
28 Knack
29 Stablemate
31 Landed
33 Houston or Rayburn
35 Faces the day
39 Drama dialogue
41 Cut back
43 Haircare tool
44 French brandy
46 AEC's replacement
48 Mrs. Peel of "The Avengers"
49 Tap problem
51 The Greatest
53 Ryan or Foster
54 Actress Novak
57 JFK notice
58 Nextel Cup org.
60 Operatic song
62 Ran like blood
65 Antagonistic reactions
67 Incite anger
68 Tear open
69 Trifling
70 Ore deposit
71 Serengeti calls
72 Give gulf to 73 Ginger cookie

DOWN
1 Health resorts
2 Paper tote
3 Doing a mailroom job
4 Go back to committee
5 Preservers of a sort
6 Oil customers
7 On the Aegean
8 Stirred up
9 Horner's dad
10 Marrow container
11 Flooded
12 Biblical mount
13 Overly excited
19 __ firma
21 After-sch. grp.
25 Characteristic clothes
27 Body powder
30 Finish line
32 Watch over
34 Calendar abbr.
36 Concluding remarks
37 Alice Ghostley on "Bewitched"
38 Uneven hardo
40 Poet Teasdale
42 Springing horses
45 Approximately 47 Contract provisions
50 Spectrum makers
52 Small pc. of land
54 Capital of Afghanistan
55 Shvaz resident
56 Computer classification
59 Reiner and Jung
61 Related (to)
63 Ostrichlike bird
64 Profound
66 CDs' ancestors

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
JOHN BROWN'S BODY
SATURDAY, MARCH 3 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
ALL AGES ALWAYS
keller williams
performing live
www.kellerwilliams.net
SUNDAY, MARCH 4 • 8:00 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:00 PM
CALVIN
19 KING ST. NORTHAMPTON
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If I want to wear a dress, I'll wear a dress."
-Dennis Rodman

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

PAUL, WHY DO YOU NEED ALL THOSE CRAZY CLOTHES JUST TO GO RUNNING? ALL YOU NEED—OH, NEEEEERE WE GO!
"WHEN I WAS A BOY, WE ONLY NEEDED CARDBOARD SHOES, AND WE DIDN'T HAVE CRAZY-COLORED RUNNING SUITS BECAUSE EVERYTHING WAS IN BLACK AND WHITE! AND INSTEAD OF WATCHING TV, WE STARED AT A STICK ALL DAY!"
EVERYTHING WASN'T IN BLACK AND WHITE.
PLEASE, I'VE SEEN PHOTOS. THE CAMERA DOESN'T LIE.

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

Ghost of Lincoln! My resurrection dance worked after all
What do you want?
What do you mean?
People who resist the dead usually want a favor
Have you been awoken from eternal slumber before?
No, but my buddy Woodrow Wilson has!
Of all the presidents to bring back
He knows card tricks People like to be entertained

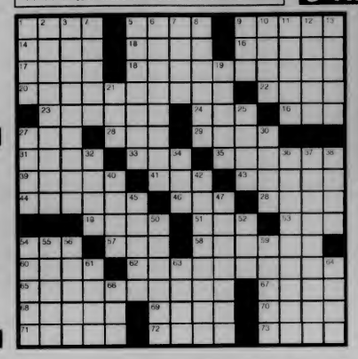
A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

SO GUESS WHO HAD LIKE TWELVE GUYS CALL HER LAST NIGHT.
OH, NO MONYA, ARE YOU SERIOUS?
THERE WAS RON FROM WHERE I GO TAN, JUSTIN WHO'S A CREDIT CARD REP, AND SHAWN . . . I THINK HE WORKS AT THE PHONE COMPANY.
I SHOULD GO A MONTH WITHOUT PAYING MY BILLS MORE OFTEN.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

There it is, Ernesto
Paradise
An oasis in the desert— just for us?
Let's Jo tell Pam and Melissa
You want to invite GIRLS with breasts?

Pioneer Valley Pizza
Free Delivery 253-1011
Pizza · Wings · Subs · Calzones · Entrees · Salads
Gourmet Pizzas from Small to PARTY SIZE!
Feed your party right!
Buy any Large Pizza, receive 1/2 price "Wings for One" OR another pizza of equal or lesser value for 1/2 price
Not to be combined with any other offers
We're up when you're up
Sun-Wed 11am-1am
Thurs 11am-2am
Fri-Sat 11am-3am
20 Belchertown Rd. Amherst, MA (across from Cumby's)



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
In the future, laser tag will decide all major international conflicts. So practice.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't cheat on your significant other with a vampire. They always leave mega hickies.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Lobster boy did more with two fingers than you can do with your whole dam hand.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Lick your roommate's food before they eat it. Then it will become your delicious treat.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Generally speaking, incoherent muttering is a great way to deter new friends.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Find a UMass meter maid and tackle them with gusto and vigor.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
If all else fails, fall back to explosive career in adult cinema.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Once you've broken bread with someone, it's hard to repair.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Life is one big camera trick. The Keebler Elves are actually six feet tall.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's definitely warm enough to wear a Speedo around. Be proud of your bulge.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It is better to be cool for a lifetime than hot for a little bit.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Pus has a bad reputation, but I say look for the good in all bodily fluids.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Global Express Tours Spring Break Montreal Party Weekends from $99 Complete bus, hotels, & clubs. Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

APARTMENT FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in ketchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus $2,900/mo www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable telephone Internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Retail Sales/ Mattresses- Energetic, communication skills required. Oppurtunity to grow with company. Flexible PT. Do not call – Stop by 328 College St. RT. 9 Amherst Discount Mattress

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

FOUND

Sneakers found in boyden lot next to tennis courts on wed. (2/22) To claim go to info desk in CC concourse

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton Cathedral ceiling, sky-lites, hardwood floors, 4-5 bdrms. 9/1 $1950. 413-730-6660

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

TRAVEL

Global Express Tours Spring Break Montreal Party Weekends from $99 Complete bus, hotels, & clubs. Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 2, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Senior Stephane Lasme will play his final regular season game for the Minutemen tomorrow when they take on Saint Joseph's in Philadelphia. The forward has blocked 150 shots on the season.

First place in reach

Minutemen close out regular season in finale at St. Joe's

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The tissues are gone and the framed jerseys have been hung on the walls, which means the Massachusetts men's basketball team is nearing the end of another regular season.

Now that Senior Night is over and done with, the Minutemen look to conclude the regular season on a six-game winning streak when they take on Saint Joseph's (17-12, 9-6 Atlantic 10) tomorrow night in Philadelphia. Tip-off is scheduled for 4 p.m.

UMass (22-7, 12-3 A-10) defeated La Salle, 102-63, Wednesday night in the last game of the season at the Mullins Center, barring an early-round NIT home game if the Minutemen fail to get a bid into the NCAA Tournament.

The Maroon and White is playing its best basketball of the season at the perfect time, and the expectations now are even higher than they were in the preseason.

"You always hear that to make runs in the tournament it takes a little bit of luck," senior Brandon Thomas said. "Going into the A-10 Tournament with one game left, and also trying to get into the NCAA Tournament,

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Seniors go out with a bang

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The seniors – be it the two-year players, the four-year players or the former manager – had a good run in Amherst.

On Wednesday night, they played their last game at the Mullins Center in front of 6,205 of the Minutemen faithful, who gave a resounding 'thank you' to their hardwood warriors with standing ovations and encores.

The three captains – Rashaun Freeman, Stephane Lasme, Brandon Thomas – all played their last game in the home uni's and took the Mullins Center stage one last time on Wednesday night against the La Salle Explorers.

A UMass win seemed inevitable, and the Minutemen cruised to a 102-63 thumping of the basement-bound Explorers.

Lasme, the shot-blocker extraordinaire, recorded the fourth triple-double of his career with a 17-point, 10-rebound, 10-block performance.

"I didn't know why everyone was chanting for me because the game was pretty much over," Lasme said. "But then Ford told me to go get one block and one rebound. It's a nice thing to have but I honestly wasn't trying to get it."

"Stephane [Lasme] is an amazing player," Freeman said. "To even be that close [to a triple double] is so amazing. He's come a long way as a player in his four years. He absolutely deserved it tonight."

Freeman was equally spectacular and dominated the interior with 20 points and 12 rebounds. But these performances are routine for the big man from Schenectady. Freeman has been gathering double-doubles since he suited up for Steve Lappas in the 2003-04 season.

Wednesday night tagged a fitting exclamation point onto Freeman and Lasme's decorated resumes.

Freeman went 10-for-14 from the floor and reeled off an 8-0 run of his own in the first half by splitting La Salle's double teams on consecutive possessions. He has dedicated his heart and mind to Massachusetts basketball for the last four seasons and treated the UMass fans to the best version of the national anthem heard in the building all year.

Fans were directed towards the video monitor and Freeman's mug beamed into the crowd, followed by his Boyz II Men-like falsetto that had fans itching to applaud the effort.

Freeman's American Idol tryout followed the playing of the Gabon national anthem and the raising of its flag in honor of Lasme, the Libreville, Gabon native.

Former team manager Matt Pennie joined the senior celebrations after he got a healthy surprise before game time, when UMass coach Travis Ford announced his intention to start Pennie.

"I wanted it to be a surprise," Ford said. "I didn't want him to know. I didn't want anybody to know. I didn't even tell my assistant coaches. I wanted it to be a surprise for Matt Pennie."

See SENIORS on page 8

Season comes down to final weekend

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After five months of hockey, it all comes down to this weekend's action. Although the Massachusetts hockey team has already secured a berth in the Hockey East playoffs, it is still in the midst of a battle for home-ice advantage in the first round.

The team tied with UMass in the standings, Maine (21-10-2, 14-10-1 HEA), comes to Amherst this weekend for a series that carries as much meaning as any in recent memory.

"It's probably as big a regular season game as we've ever had," UMass coach Don Cahoon said after practice yesterday. The last time the Minutemen secured home-ice advantage was four years ago, when they made a run to the Hockey East Championship Game before losing a three-overtime thriller to the Black Bears.

Cahoon and players alike commented that practice this week was very positive. For at least two weeks now the Minutemen (16-11-5, 13-9-3 HEA) have said they've taken a playoff mentality into each one of their games.

"It's been going well, there's been a lot of energy. Our guys are excited," said senior captain Matt Anderson.

The conference standings are as follows entering the weekend: UMass and Maine are tied for fourth (Maine currently holds the tiebreaker, 1-0) while Vermont sits one point behind them in sixth.

The Catamounts host UMass Lowell for two games at Gutterson Fieldhouse this weekend. UMass team needs at least three points (a win and a tie) to have a shot at playing at the Mullins Center next weekend.

Earlier this season, way back on Oct. 28, UMass traveled to Alfond Arena for these two teams' only meeting so far. The Minutemen pressured the Black Bears all game long, taking a 1-0 score into the third period. Then freshman Will Ortiz scored a power-play tally to even the score at one apiece 4:14 into the third. But then Maine reeled off three unanswered goals to down the Minutemen, 4-1.

The goalie that backstopped that win for the Black Bears, Ben Bishop, will not be traveling with the team this weekend. A report in the Portland Press-Herald yesterday said that following an MRI on Bishop's right groin, Maine coach Tim Whitehead announced the sophomore will be out for some time.

See HOCKEY on page 9

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior P.J. Fenton and the Mass Attack host the Black Bears Friday and Saturday night to decide the final home-ice spot in the Hockey East playoffs. The left-winger is one of five 20-point scorers for UMass, with nine goals and 11 assists.

MICHAEL PIRRI/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Tamara Tatham represents the Minutewomen's senior class by herself. This is her final Atlantic 10 Tournament. The forward is second on the team in scoring with 12.7 points per game and leads her teammates with 58 steals this year.

UM looks for more at this year's A-10s

BY J.M. FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After its first winning season since 1999, the Massachusetts women's basketball team (17-12, 7-7 Atlantic 10) grabbed the seventh seed in the conference and will face tenth seeded St. Bonaventure (15-14, 5-9 A-10) Friday, at 4 p.m. The tournament will be held at Xavier's Cintas Center in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Last season the Minutewomen lost to Duquesne in the opening round of the A-10 tournament, and have posted a 1-4 record in tournament play under UMass coach Marnie Dacko. If they are to advance past St. Bonaventure this weekend, they will need to shore up possession of the ball and cut-down on turnovers and mental errors, mistakes that almost cost them a win at the Reilly Center early last month.

St. Bonaventure only shot 29 percent in that February matchup, including a dismal 2-13 mark from behind the arc. But the Minutewomen had 22 turnovers, leading to 19 points for the Bonnies. UMass went 14-23 from the charity stripe, including four misses in the last 20 seconds, which accounted for the close score. Both teams were virtually deadlocked in rebounds and points in the paint. Junior forward Kate Mills led all scorers with 18 points, while freshman point guard Kim Benton sat out most of the game for disciplinary reasons. Senior center Tamara Tatham added 12 points and seven rebounds, despite starting the game on the bench while recovering from an ankle injury.

Since that meeting in Olean, the two squads have moved in opposite directions. The Minutewomen have won seven of nine, while the Bonnies have lost five of seven. Momentum aside, Sunday's matchup should be a close one.

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

MINUTEMEN EARN SHARE OF A-10 TITLE PAGE 10

BEST FOREIGN FILM BEGS TO BE SEEN PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SNOW SHOWERS : HI: 38 LO: 7 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MARCH 5, 2007

UHS to increase suicide prevention

New psychologist will train others to recognize and intervene with at-risk students

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts heightens its efforts for suicide prevention among students on campus with the hiring of a new psychologist to spread awareness and lead training programs, according to a press release from the UMass News Office.

Dr. Kerry M. Morrison is the new member of the mental health services division of University Health Services (UHS) at UMass who will coordinate a three-year, $225,000 grant from the U.S. Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration. Through the program, groups on campus will be trained to recognize at-risk students and provide intervention.

According to Mental Health Services of UHS, less than 20 percent of students throughout the country who've died by suicide were involved with their school's counseling center. UHS provides surveys that show more than 80 percent of those sought mental health care said services helped them stay in school and improve academic performance.

The American Federation for Suicide Prevention conducted a study showing that students don't know that suicide is the second leading cause of death among college students. College students face serious mental and behavioral health issues, including depression and binge drinking.

Freshman Dan Pogue said he wasn't surprised by the amount of suicides on college campuses. "Students may be under stress, and it may seem like death is the only way out," he said.

According to the American College Health Association, a major challenge for healthcare professionals is being able to identify students with emotional and behavioral problems and finding ways to help them. In 2004, the ACHA said nearly half of college students felt so depressed that they had trouble functioning and 15 percent of those students met the criteria for clinical depression, which when left untreated can lead to suicide.

UHS Mental Health Services

See PREVENTION on page 3

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

UMass Mental Health Services of UHS provides suicide prevention training to campus members who regularly interact with students.

UMass students more involved in politics

Youth voters rely on Internet to learn about presidential race

BY STELLA CERSAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

U.S. citizens between the ages of 18 and 29 have been indifferent and inactive in previous presidential elections, according to The Center for Information and Research on Civic Learning and Engagement (CIRCLE), a group that promotes research on the civic and political engagement of American youths. Heightened access to information and technology increased voter turnout in youths by 11 percent in the 2004 elections.

With the 2008 president race underway, some University of Massachusetts students are using technology to their advantage, abandoning their spot in the backseat for early involvement in the upcoming election.

One way students on campus have increased their involvement is through the popular networking Web site Facebook.com. The site, which is typically used socially to share pictures and messages among students, is now being utilized to mobilize student support for their favorite candidates. Other forms of participatory Internet use, such as YouTube.com and weblogs, have also provided students with easy access to information on 2008 presidential candidates.

James Breen, UMass student and vice president of the UMass Democrats, said he feels confident about the younger generation's participation this year.

"I do believe that our generation will be playing a much more important role," Breen said. "With the advent of things like YouTube, anybody with a camera can put helpful information online for the entire country to view. Even with Facebook last year, we saw students showing their support for candidates," he continued. "This year, nearly a year before the first primary, there are already Facebook groups for candidates."

Breen brings up an important issue with the presidential campaign that many students are not discussing — voting. UMass Political Science Professor Michael Hannahan agrees with the issue.

"I've been teaching and involved in politics, and every year they talk about the youth votes," Hannahan said. "I don't think this election will be different in the amount of youth voting. This election will not be as hot as the last one because there's no one to hate. Where young people make a difference is volunteering in campaigns and primaries."

See ELECTIONS on page 3

More students are using Facebook.com to learn about the 2008 presidential candidates. James Breen (fourth from left), vice president of the UMass Democrats, is confident about the increase in youth voter participation in the upcoming election.

Early season struggles for UM page 10

UMass senior attack Denis Whelan had one assist in Saturday's 7-6 loss to Yale. The Minutemen are now 0-2 this season. They travel to Harvard next Saturday in search of their first win.

Study: college students most at risk for identity theft

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A research group has concluded that college-aged individuals of today's tech-savvy generation don't use their talents to protect against identity theft.

In a recent study conducted by Javelin Strategy and Research – an organization that carries out research for financial institutions – those between the ages of 18 and 24 are most at risk to have their personal information stolen and financial status placed in limbo.

According to the study, 5.3 percent of young adults reported being victims compared to the national average of 3.7 percent. The report states, "victims in this age group are less likely to the utilize the most basic precautions, such as shredding documents, turning off paper bills and financial statements, or using antivirus, anti-spyware software or firewalls."

High technology tools are useless when dealing with the most primitive forms of thieveryn, according to the report. Failure to shred statements and properly deal with pre-approved credit card solicitations are among the easiest ways for a dumpster-diving ID thief to rip off a student.

"Using everyday items such as your driver's license or Social Security number to assume your identity, a skilled thief can open new bank accounts and write bad checks, get cash advances and obtain personal or car loans," VISA states on their Web site. The site also suggests protecting PIN and ATM receipts.

University of Massachusetts Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archbald says that he has an experienced staff of computer crime officers that are often called to help other local departments.

"I certainly agree that this generation is more tech-savvy than those that preceded them," Archbald said. "But the fact remains that at this age young people are more trusting of others, and they also can be more careless with their personal information.

Garbage cans and dumpsters on

See ID THEFT on page 3

COURTESY USA.GOV

VISA's Web site warns that using everyday items such as a driver's license can easily allow an ID thief to open and use bank accounts under the stolen name. They recommend ripping PIN and ATM receipts before discarding them.

White supremacists group expands

BY GILLIAN FLACCUS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUENA PARK, Calif. — The white supremacist gang Public Enemy No. 1 began two decades ago as a group of teenage punk-rock fans from upper-middle class bedroom communities in Southern California.

Now, the violent gang that deals in drugs, guns and identity theft is gaining clout across the West after forging an alliance with the notorious Aryan Brotherhood, authorities say.

Police say the gang has compiled a "hit list" targeting five officers and a gang prosecutor – a sign of just how brazen Public Enemy has become.

"They make police officers very, very nervous," said Cpl. Nate Booth, a gang detective with the Buena Park Police Department in Orange County. Law enforcement officials trace the gang's rise to shifts in the power structure inside prisons.

The Aryan Brotherhood has long been the dominant white supremacist gang behind bars, with the Nazi Low Riders acting as its foot soldiers on the outside for drug dealing and identity theft.

In 2000, officials reclassified the Low Riders as a prison-based gang and began sending its members to solitary confinement as soon as they were imprisoned.

The crackdown hurt the gang's ability to interact with the Aryan Brotherhood, which turned to Public Enemy, authorities say. The alliance was cemented in 2005 when Donald Reed "Popeye" Mazza, an alleged leader of Public Enemy, was inducted into the Aryan Brotherhood.

The pact has increased Public Enemy's wealth and recruiting power, said Steve Slaten, a special agent for the California Department of Corrections.

In the past three years, its ranks have doubled to at least 400, but authorities suspect there could be hundreds of other members operating under the radar. They said heavy recruiting is taking place throughout California and Arizona, and members have been picked up by police in Nevada and Idaho.

"They move around. We find them everywhere," said Lowell Smith of the Orange County Probation Department.

The gang traces its roots to the punk rock subculture in Long Beach in the 1980s. It soon shifted its base to nearby Orange County and in the 1990s began recruiting what police call "bored latchkey kids" – white teenagers from upper-middle class neighborhoods.

Public Enemy is now involved in identity theft. Booth said the gang has gone from swiping personal information from mailboxes and trash to stealing entire credit profiles with the help of girlfriends and wives who take jobs at banks, mortgage companies and even state motor vehicle departments.

Money from those operations is used to fuel its methamphetamine business, he said.

Two months ago, police agencies in Orange County arrested 67 suspected members after learning about the hit list against officers in

See GROUP on page 3

Photographs showing gang tattoos of the white supremacist group, Public Enemy No. 1, hang in the gang unit office at a California police station.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 93

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Copies Editor Adam Sinigin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Prentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt O'Rourke

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

State police turn to YouTube to catch suspects

By Eric Tucker
Associated Press

Patrolman Brian Johnson of the Franklin, Mass., Police Department studied a surveillance video showing two men using allegedly stolen credit cards at a Home Depot.

But when Johnson didn't recognize either man, he decided to involve people – a lot of them – to help crack the case. He posted a clip from a security camera on YouTube.com, Google Inc.'s video-sharing Web site, then e-mailed the clip's link to about 300 people and organizations saying the department was looking for the men.

"You don't have to be a technology wizard to figure out how to watch a video on YouTube," Johnson said of the decision to post on the site that hosts millions of amateur and commercial videos.

A handful of police departments have utilized YouTube as a law enforcement tool, putting up video of suspects and eliciting help from the Internet-using public in identifying them. Experts say the idea has promise, but it's too soon to tell whether it will have staying power amid constantly evolving technologies and the difficulty of making a video stand out among millions. Some also see a risk of fruitless tips, misidentifications or privacy problems.

In Johnson's case, the suspects were ultimately arrested. Though the video generated publicity and thousands of viewings online, Johnson is quick to credit the success to old-fashioned police work rather than the Web site.

"You've got to ask yourself, 'What's the penetration? How many people are going to watch it? What would make people watch it?'" said Eugene O'Donnell, a former police officer and prosecutor who teaches at John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York City.

Perhaps the most-publicized example was in Hamilton, Ontario, in Canada, where police in December posted a 72-second surveillance video on YouTube in hopes of locating a suspect in a fatal stabbing outside a hip-hop concert. Detective Sgt. Jorge Lasso said the video ultimately received more than 35,000 "hits," and police had enough information within two weeks for an arrest.

Lasso said it's hard to know exactly what role YouTube played since the clip generated so much media attention. While other departments that posted on YouTube simply relied on a press release to let the public know, Lasso went straight to the population that mattered and announced the clip on Web sites frequented by hip-hop fans.

"We hoped there would be enough buzz created that people on their own would go to YouTube," Lasso said.

While the key witness in the case told police he hadn't even seen the YouTube video, Lasso is skeptical of that claim.

"There's no way that I'm going to be convinced that a 20-something didn't view that YouTube posting," he said.

Police in Aventura, Fla., working on an open homicide case from 2001 posted video from a supermarket security camera showing the victim chatting with a younger man considered a person of interest in the case. Sgt. Michael Bentolila narrates the video, pointing out a tattoo or birthmark on the man's arm and telling viewers to note how the man walks.

Bentolila, who publicized the clip through a press release, said he had not yet received any solid leads.

"This is just something else – an extra added feature that we can now use to get our message out there on a countrywide or worldwide basis," he said.

More often, it's police who find themselves the subject of YouTube posts.

Groups that monitor police behavior use the site to post videos of arrests they believe involve excessive force or abuse. A clip of a Los Angeles officer repeatedly punching a suspect in the face surfaced on the site last year, triggering an FBI investigation.

But police are reversing that dynamic by displaying surveillance footage of suspects.

Experts say it's logical for departments to connect with the public via the web, especially younger Internet users more likely to visit YouTube and more likely, say, to have information about a stabbing outside a hip-hop concert.

"I kind of applaud the fact that police are using the latest tools," said Michael Brady, a retired police chief in Charlestown, R.I. who teaches criminal law and criminal procedure at Salve Regina University in Newport, R.I. "We tend to get stuck in technology deficits. We tend to want to stick with the old tried-and-true."

O'Donnell, the John Jay professor, said he liked that police were mining the public for information and said interest in real-life crime video speaks to the "natural inclination of people to want to play detective." But he worried that a department with limited resources could waste time responding to useless leads – or receive tips that are inconsistent.

A key question, he said, is "at what point do people just say 'another boring video'" and shut it off.

Robert Ellis Smith, a Providence-based privacy expert and publisher of the "Privacy Journal" newsletter, said video posted online should have the consent of by-standers or victims in order to protect their privacy. He also suggested the videos be dated and removed once any court proceedings are concluded.

"Victims of crimes are certainly entitled to be heard before that stuff is put on the Internet," Smith said.

Bentolila of Florida noted that in narrating the video, he specifically pointed out the suspect and focused viewers' attention on him. Lasso said he removed the clip within a day of the arrest being made.

"We're not asking anybody to say they are guilty or innocent," said Johnson, the Massachusetts officer. "The purpose of putting the video out is to identify them."

Marc Rotenberg, executive director of the Electronic Privacy Information Center in Washington, D.C. said, legally, police can post surveillance video online as long as it doesn't somehow falsely accuse or defame someone.

In the Massachusetts case, Johnson posted the video in December on YouTube's news and politics section after a man reported his truck had been broken into and his credit cards stolen.

The clip generated chatter from nearby police departments already investigating similar cases, and an officer in another town viewed the video and said he recognized the men, Johnson said.

But it wasn't until police in Middleborough, Mass., responded to a disturbance at a Holiday Inn that the suspects were arrested. Lt. David Mackiewicz, who was involved in the arrest, said he didn't recognize the men through YouTube and didn't even know their pictures were on the site.

"Technology," Johnson said, "will never replace the feet-on-the-street."

Franklin Police officer Brian Johnson poses in Franklin, Mass., with a computer showing the surveillance tape he uploaded to YouTube.com, in hopes of solving a crime of stolen credit cards.

Mass. health care plan progresses

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON — The average uninsured Massachusetts resident could obtain health care coverage for as little as $175 a month under the state's insurance law, less than half of earlier estimates, officials said Saturday.

The plans are a critical piece of the state's landmark insurance initiative, which requires all state residents to have health coverage by July 1 or face tax penalties. Some insurers had suggested earlier that the premium would be $380 a month.

"This is a big improvement from the first round of bids and a big step forward for health care reform," Gov. Deval Patrick said as he released the results of negotiations with health insurers in the state. "The health security that was the point of health care reform will be delivered at an affordable price."

The panel charged with overseeing the law is expected to give its seal of approval Wednesday to the seven health care plans that met the affordability goals. On Mar. 20, the board is scheduled to vote on whether the insurers will be able to offer lower cost versions without drug coverage.

The minimum plan detailed by Patrick would cover the average uninsured Massachusetts resident, who is typically around 37 years old. It includes prescription drug coverage and covers basic medical care, such as emergency room visits and outpatient medical care.

Lower cost plans would be available to young adults. Prices would also rise and fall depending on the age of the person seeking insurance and where they live.

The plans must include coverage for preventive doctor visits and an out-of-pocket limit, after which the plan would pay everything else, said the board's executive director, Jon Kingsdale. They must also include coverage for emergencies, mental health, substance abuse, rehabilitation, hospice and vision.

2008 presidential race already dominates TV

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Two months before the 1992 presidential election, an NBC reporter cornered a man to ask whether he preferred Bill Clinton or President Bush.

The man said he didn't care. He just wanted them off his TV screen.

Imagine how he'd feel today?

The 2008 campaign is already playing out so intensely that it dominates airtime at a point where only political junkies usually pay attention. Remember: it's 20 months before voters will make the ultimate decision.

This is uncharted territory for people in both politics and television, who wonder when campaign fatigue will set in. Many Americans may be sick of seeing their next president before he or she even takes the oath of office.

In one measure of news interest, campaign stories have consumed 95 minutes of attention this year through Feb. 27 on the ABC, CBS and NBC evening newscasts. That's more time than in the comparable periods for the previous four presidential election cycles combined, according to the Tyndall Report.

Presidential politics was so far off the radar in January and February 1991 that the three newscasts together spent less than a minute on the upcoming campaign.

The study doesn't even take into account time chewed up by the cable TV networks, with their gaping 24-hour news holes. CNN was around in 1991, but Fox News Channel and MSNBC didn't exist. Neither did "The Daily Show" with Jon Stewart.

"It used to be that campaigning was the interval between governing," said Bob Schieffer, host of CBS's "Face the Nation." "Now governing is the interval between campaigning."

Television is responding to the unusual early activity in this campaign and, to a certain degree, the public, said George Stephanopoulos, ABC's "This Week" host. Nearly two-thirds of people responding to an ABC-Washington Post poll this week said they were following the campaign closely.

"That is simply astonishing," Stephanopoulos said. "Those are the kind of numbers you see at convention time, not 20 months before the elections."

Many factors are at play: The Iraq war has deeply divided the public and, polls say, many Americans have already checked out on the Bush presidency; the 2008 election will be the first in 82 years with no involvement by an incumbent president or vice president; the biggest political stars of the day are involved, including John McCain (news, bio, voting record), Rudy Giuliani, Clinton and Obama.

A campaign where voters have nothing to say for another year exaggerates the media's importance.

"One of the risks of a protracted campaign that doesn't involve voters is you get a kind of creative reality," said Tom Rosenstiel, a former political reporter for the Los Angeles Times and now director of the Project for Excellence in Journalism.

The veteran Schieffer worries about the impact of a long campaign. The topic has been bandied about in several newsrooms.

"I find myself getting tired of it," he said. "I really do. I love politics, I'm a political reporter. But when they go on and on and on, they just wear you out."

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
Auto & Truck Rental
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

OUR TOP 10 GRADUATE MAJORS:
MBA
Physician Assistant
Interactive Communications
Teaching
Biomedical Sciences
Molecular/Cell Biology
Journalism
Nursing
Accounting
Computer Information Systems
MASTERING THE ART OF TEACHING
Extensive internship programs, real-world experience and dynamic faculty have made the Quinnipiac Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT) program among the most respected in the country. Now our MAT program is more affordable than ever, thanks to new incentives that, in exchange for participation in our internships, can waive tuition for most of the program.
QUINNIPIAC U:
RAVE REVIEWS FOR OUR MBA
The Quinnipiac University School of Business MBA program continues to prepare business professionals for the realities of management in global, technology-driven work environments in specializations such as:
• MBA WITH CONCENTRATIONS IN ACCOUNTING, CIS, FINANCE, INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS, MANAGEMENT, MARKETING
• MBA – CHARTERED FINANCIAL ANALYST® TRACK
• MBA IN HEALTHCARE MANAGEMENT
>> YOUR NEXT MOVE
Quinnipiac University offers graduate programs in 17 distinct disciplines. Whether you are interested in our AACSB nationally accredited business program, the master of arts in teaching (MAT) program or one of the Northeast's most highly regarded journalism and interactive communications programs, all have been designed to thoroughly prepare you for a professional career. For more information, call 1.800.462.1944 or visit www.quinnipiac.edu.
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
Hamden, Connecticut

Husband accused of dismemberment found under tree

Emmet County Sheriff Peter Wallin shows reporters in Petoskey, Mich., Sunday, where Stephen Grant was captured in the Wilderness State Park.

By David Eggert
Associated Press

HARBOR SPRINGS, Mich. — Wearing neither coat nor shoes, a fugitive suspected of killing and dismembering his wife was found hiding under a fallen tree Sunday in a snow-bound state park after a bitterly cold night on the run, authorities said.

Police tracked down Stephen Grant about 225 miles north of the suburban Detroit community where body parts believed to be those of his wife were discovered. He was in stable condition and was being treated for frostbite and hypothermia under police guard at a hospital.

Grant was wearing only slacks, a shirt and socks when he was captured nearly 10 hours after he abandoned a truck and set out on foot in Wilderness State Park near the tip of Michigan's Lower Peninsula, Emmet County Sheriff Pete Wallin said. He had no weapons and did not resist.

"I don't think he probably could have made it much longer in those kinds of conditions," Wallin said during a news conference. "I wouldn't want to be out there unless I was dressed for it."

Grant, 37, will be returned to Macomb County for arraignment in the death of Tara Lynn Grant, a 34-year-old businesswoman and mother of two who disappeared last month. A torso found in the family home and other body parts found in a park near their home were believed to be hers.

Tara Grant last was seen Feb. 9, and police said the couple had argued that day over her business travels abroad. Her husband reported her missing five days later; he has steadfastly maintained his innocence.

Macomb County Sheriff Mark Hackel said Stephen Grant fled in a friend's pickup Friday hours after police executed a search warrant on the home in Washington Township. Deputies traced calls from his cell phone and a withdrawal from an automatic teller machine, Wallin said.

After finding the truck just south of the isolated Lake Michigan Park, police with a tracking dog searched on foot and snowmobile, aided by a Coast Guard helicopter. They pounded on doors and warned occupants of nearby homes and the handful of cabins inside the park.

"We didn't know what we were up against," Wallin said. "We knew he was suicidal, we knew he could be armed and dangerous."

The helicopter crew, dispatched from the U.S. Coast Guard station in Traverse City, spotted fresh footprints in the snow and guided ground searchers in Grant's direction, Lt. Jeremy Loeb said.

"We could see where he'd lay down, get up, lay down again," Wallin said.

After an all-night search, he was found about 6:30 a.m. near Big Sucker Creek, which flows into Lake Michigan, about three miles from where he abandoned the truck, authorities said.

Grant said nothing as he was hoisted into the helicopter, Loeb said.

His former attorney had called Grant suicidal, but Hackel said it didn't appear he had tried to commit suicide.

It was unclear why Grant headed to the park, although the family had visited northern Michigan frequently, Hackel said. Temperatures were in the mid-teens and the swampy, heavily wooded park was covered in snow.

Dr. John Bednar, chief of staff at Northern Michigan Hospital in Petoskey, said Grant was in stable condition. He was being treated for hypothermia and frostbite but was alert and cooperative, Bednar said. The extent of his injuries was uncertain.

The Grants have a 6-year-old girl and a 4-year-old boy who were staying with relatives. In a statement released through the hospital, Grant said Sunday that he misses his children.

"He loves them and ... he looks forward to seeing them again as soon as possible," the statement said.

An arrest warrant charged Grant with murder, and disinterment and mutilation. An autopsy was being conducted Sunday, but Hackel said he was certain of the identity and he had "no doubt" Grant committed the murder.

David Griem, a lawyer who has acted as Grant's spokesman, said Sunday he would no longer represent Grant because of irreconcilable differences. He said Grant didn't yet have another attorney.

"If I can't give a client all of my blood, sweat and tears, it's time for that client to find a new attorney and time for me to move on down the road," Griem said.

Students careless with ID info

ID THEFT from page 1

campus, including some located near the ATMs in the Southwest Residential Area, are often packed with un-torn bank statements.

"Not a week goes by that we don't hear about someone who is calling students with some story about completing a 'survey' or 'inquiry' by phone or e-mail, and the student/victim has given up all their personal data over to a complete stranger that we can never identify," he said.

However, once the basic precautions are made, college students in particular have another threat to deal with. According to a Los Angeles Times article from Dec. 12, 2006, a major security breach at the University of California Los Angeles led to the compromising of more than 800,000 names, addresses, and social security numbers.

EDUCAUSE, a non-profit organization focused on promoting security in information technologies of higher education, issued a newsletter which explained that universities are constantly under attack by hackers trying to gain access to thousands of files containing the personal information of students and alumni. Chief Information Officer at George Mason University Joy R. Hughes and Jack Suess, Vice President of Information Technologies at the University of Maryland, reveal in a newsletter that the most frequently attacked and most vulnerable areas of campus cyber security are the meal plan, housing and campus police servers.

David J. Gray, Vice President for Information Technology, CIO and Chief Exeeutive Officer of UMassOnline states, "More remains to be done on the security and identity management fronts, but I think the University and its constituent campuses have paid appropriate attention and devoted appropriate resources to this important area.

"It is reasonable to point out that the information infrastructure of both the UMass campuses and the central systems operated by University Information Technology Services have not, to date, been the object of significant security breaches," Gray said. "We know that we may not rely upon good fortune as a security buffer or identity protector in the future and are taking measured and proactive steps to present our students, faculty and staff with a secure information environment in which to conduct their business with the University."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu.

Supremacist group gains clout

GROUP from page 1

Anaheim, Buena Park and Costa Mesa. Those arrested in the raid were charged with conspiracy to commit murder, possession of illegal weapons and identity theft, among other things. Police have not released their names or further details because the investigation is continuing.

Booth recalled another case in which a member of the gang fired dozens of rounds at police from a car driven by his girlfriend during a high-speed freeway pursuit. After being arrested, the man was taken to an emergency room, where he grabbed a scalpel and tried to slash a deputy before cutting himself, Booth said.

Authorities worry that Public Enemy is using stolen credit information to learn the home addresses of police and their families. Some officers have gone to court to have addresses removed from those records, Booth said.

Public Enemy No. 1 gains presence across the West after forging an alliance with the Aryan Brotherhood, whose gang tattoo is shown above.

U.S. projects 19 percent emission rise, increase risk of drought

By John Heilprin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — By 2020, the United States will emit almost one-fifth more gases that lead to global warming than it did in 2000, increasing the risks of drought and scarce water supplies.

That projection comes from an internal draft report from the Bush administration that is more than a year overdue at the United Nations. The Associated Press obtained a copy Saturday.

The United States already is responsible for roughly one-quarter of the world's carbon dioxide and other "greenhouse" gases that scientists blame for global warming.

The draft report, which is still being completed, projects that the current administration's climate policy would result in the emission of 9.2 billion tons of greenhouse gases in 2020, a 19 percent increase from 7.7 billion tons in 2000.

But an authoritative U.N. report last month from hundreds of scientists and government officials said global warming is "very likely" caused by mankind and that climate change will continue for centuries even if heat-trapping gases are reduced. That report was approved by 113 nations including the United States.

It was the strongest language ever used by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, whose last report came in 2001.

Despite the dire outlook, most scientists say huge sea level rises and the most catastrophic storms and droughts may be avoided if strong action is taken soon.

"We're on a path to exceeding levels of global warming that will cause catastrophic consequences, and we really need to be seriously reducing emissions, not just reducing the growth rate as the president is doing," Michael MacCracken, chief scientist at the nonpartisan Climate Institute in Washington, said Saturday. Until 2001, he coordinated the government's studies of the consequences of global warming.

Prince Albert II of Monaco speaks during the launch of the International Polar Year, a project of 63 nations in 228 studies to monitor the health of polar regions.

The White House Council on Environmental Quality has been coordinating the draft report. A spokeswoman, Kristen Hellmer, said it "will show that the president's portfolio of actions and his financial commitment to addressing climate change are working. And the president is always looking at ways to address our energy security and environmental needs."

Hellmer blamed the delay in completing the fourth U.S. Climate Action Report on the "extensive interagency review process" the draft must go through. The report, which was due no later than Jan. 1, 2006, is required under the U.N. framework Convention on Climate Change.

Among the consequences of a warming world anticipated in the report is "a distinct reduction in spring snowpack in the northwestern United States," which supplies much of the water in that region, the report says.

Warmer temperatures expected from more greenhouse gases would only "exacerbate present drought risks in the United States by increasing the rate of evaporation," it says.

The U.S. spends $3 billion a year to research technologies to cut global warming and $2 billion on climate research. Bush has formed a partnership with Australia, China, India, Japan and South Korea – producers of half the world's greenhouse gases – to attract private money for cleaner energy technologies. He envisions using more hydrogen-powered vehicles, electricity from renewable energy sources and clean coal technology.

Iqaluit, Nunavut Territory, Canada is home to 7,000 Inuit. They are the first on earth to experience the impact of global warming and claim the U.S. is violating their human rights by being the world's largest emitter of greenhouse gases.

Doctor to lead three-year suicide prevention project follows a model developed by Syracuse University, which provides suicide prevention training to housing staff members, campus faculty, coaches, fraternity and sorority leaders, police and others who regularly interact with students.

PREVENTION from page 1

The three-year program, which Dr. Morrison will lead, was granted to the UMass Mental Health Services in 2006. UMass Amherst is one of 46 recipients in the country to receive a grant for the project.

Dr. Morrison will join Harry Rockland-Miller, principle investigator and mental health services director, for the grant. Co-principle investigator and lead evaluator of the School of Public Health, Gloria DiLuzio, and evaluation manager of the School of Public Health, Janet Mazziotti, are also members of the project.

Morrison previously served as senior staff therapist with Monadnock Area Psychological and Spirituality Services in New Hampshire and has maintained a private practice in Greenfield since 2001. She received a doctorate's and master's degree from Antioch New England Graduate School in Keene, N.H.

"I think that this program is a good investment because there is so much stress, and students are trying to adjust to different life styles," said freshman Leah Tassinari. "They are on their own and have less people to help them out. Maybe with this program, students will have different people to turn too," she added.

Kerry Morrison heads the suicide prevention program, granted $225,000 by the U.S. Substance Abuse and Mental Health Service Administration in 2006.

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu.

UMass voices opinions on politics

ELECTIONS from page 1

Although the end result of student involvement may not lead everyone to the ballot box in 2008, some UMass students already feel strongly about certain issues, such as global warming, the war in Iraq and the cost of education.

Global warming is the cause célebre for Erin Casey, a sophomore, who wishes candidates were as involved with the matter as former presidential candidate Al Gore has been recently.

"I do like Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama as of right now, but I wish I could vote for Al Gore, even though he's not officially running," she said. "I just like the fact that a lot of people thought he was through when he lost the 2000 election, but I think it's very respectable that he's taken a break from mainstream politics and put his time and money into something he truly believes in – global warming."

Professor Hanrahan agrees that the war in Iraq will be a primary issue for candidates to address, along with the use of energy. Hanrahan does state however, that President Bush will not be an issue for candidates.

"I don't think George Bush will be an issue for candidates because he's gone," he said. "There's a clean slate for Republicans."

Yet some students, such as junior Katie Connelly, still seem to keep President Bush in mind when making decisions for 2008.

"I like Barack Obama because he's a moderate Democrat but leans a little more towards the middle. He's quite different than George Bush. He won't be an embarrassment in the public sphere," Connelly said.

In a survey of approximately 50 students, U.S. Sen. Barack Obama was the most popular candidate. However, UMass students support a variety of candidates ranging from former New York Mayor and Republican Rudolph Guilliani to Independent Party Ralph Nader.

Anna Lee Locke is one of the few who prefer to support a different candidate, rather than jumping on the Obama bandwagon.

"Obama's easier to jump on board for because of the way he speaks and the way he presents himself and the things he believes; he appeals more to the younger generation," Locke said. "Obama's got good qualities, but I like McCain who is a fairly moderate conservative. I have a soft spot for McCain because my grandfather was also a Prisoner of War."

Locke, however, points out the efforts of Obama to connect with younger voters through his use of Facebook.

"He has a Facebook page, does Hillary Clinton?" she said.

Stelki Cornak can be reached at cornak@student.umass.edu.

Guest Chef Series
Meet Betty Rosbottom
• Syndicated food columnist
• Cookbook author
• Cooking teacher
• Television personality
• Cooking school director
DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
Betty's recipes from
"Big Book of Backyard Cooking" will be featured at Berkshire DC
Monday, March 5th from 5 to 9 pm.
www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 5, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ambiguity is American

Katy Bruck

Ambiguity is a tough thing to get your mind around. In American culture, it's almost a sin to be or feel ambiguous. Some would argue that it's in vogue to be apathetic, but that's not really the same thing as being ambiguous.

The Oxford English Dictionary defines ambiguous as "having more than one meaning" or "not clear or decided." This definition seems innocuous enough, but when applied to a person or, God forbid, a political stance, one better get ready for some serious incredulity.

When presenting ourselves to the world, it's been drilled into our heads that we have to present something concrete and presumably steadfast. Nothing reflects this more than the American political landscape right now, especially in the red-state-vs.-blue-state mentality that politicians have accepted as being the inevitable theme of the upcoming political elections. The trouble with this, though, is that this isn't just a country of red states and blue states, right and left and the like. Americans are ambiguous, whether we want to admit it or not.

For some reason, the way in which this country has evolved has made its citizens unyielding when it comes to what they believe and why. This kind of stubbornness is part of what makes this country so great: we have a unique and definitive set of values that reflects the way we treat one another, and the way we expect to be treated by other people. Maybe I'm being naive, but I truly think that in general, Americans are a respectful people. We respect hard work, we respect honesty and most importantly, we respect those who stand up for what they believe in. How many Oscar-winning movies have we all seen regarding that same theme?

We have forgotten the ambiguity that goes along with the formation of political ideologies.

Every child in America grows up believing that we're capable of achieving anything we set our minds to. As long as we stick to our guns, we're set for life. The problem is it's not so easy to choose which guns to stand behind without experiencing a little bit of life first. I've seen plenty of people shuffle through all sorts of causes and values until they find the ones that fit. Sometimes the ones that do end up fitting, take a little bit of finessing and sometimes even a little rearranging. It's fair to assume that any American politician has grown up the same way we have.

It takes time and experience for an individual to figure out where they stand on the neat little spectrum of issues this country's political system has set out for us. And believe it or not, it may be possible to sit in many places at once on this neat little spectrum. It's possible that, in fact, things don't run right or left, up or down, north or south, however you want to put it. Could it be that these terms we have come to define and compare our ideologies by are simply linear constraints that make it easier to take surveys and make graphs? Could somebody be pro-choice and support less government taxation for social programs? Is it possible that someone who supports the troop surge could also support gay marriage? It just might be.

Relatedly, is it possible that our politicians who represent the American people when writing and passing legislation could also hold the same diversity of opinions as their constituents? I do believe that could happen.

Hence my utter frustration and considerable annoyance with this whole liberal vs. conservative squabbling. This concept of labeling ourselves as one thing in particular is becoming less a function of data collection and consensus, and more just an excuse for people to automatically disagree with each other. We have forgotten the ambiguity that goes along with the formation of political ideologies. The primary political parties in this country, Republican and Democratic, were intended first to provide a broad conception of the opinions generally held by their subscribers, not a strict doctrine of how you must think if you're one or the other. It seems that this whole concept is getting lost in the mix of animosity and political finger pointing that's dominated our system as of late.

Katy Bruck can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR. MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU. THE COLLEGIAN IS ALWAYS LOOKING TO IMPROVE ITS COVERAGE. PART OF THAT MISSION EMANATES FROM TAKING THE PULSE OF YOU, THE MEMBER OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY. TELL US WHAT YOU THINK. SPEAK YOUR MIND.

Send an e-mail to EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Not the right way, RIAA

John Gruenenfelder

The good people at the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) are redoubling their efforts against college students. As a recent article in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian described, the RIAA has launched a new lawsuit and awareness campaign aimed at stopping college students from illegally sharing copyrighted music files via campus networks.

It's no secret that file-sharing is widespread on campuses. A recent report released by the Associated Press even indicated that the University of Massachusetts has the 6th highest number of file sharers in the country. This sort of activity is, of course, illegal, and yet the means by which the RIAA attempts to combat this problem are nothing short of criminal themselves.

The RIAA's chief tactic is to search for file sharers on the Internet and, once identified, sue them for copyright infringement. "Identified" is used rather loosely here, however, most of these lawsuits are filed against John Does pending some actual form of personal identification. Relatively few of these cases actually go to trial because, once identified, many people choose to settle out of court. There are many reasons why an accused person might do this even when innocent, the primary one being that the RIAA's settlement amount is lower than what attorney fees might be.

The RIAA's latest college push has a new twist to it: pre-lawsuit settlement letters. That's right; the RIAA will now kindly inform you via letter that you may settle for a "discounted rate before a lawsuit is ever filed." Not only that, but thanks to the RIAA's new Web site, www.p2plawsuits.com, you can admit guilt and pay your settlement fee with a major credit card all from the comfort of home. Thirty-seven UMass Amherst students will be receiving these letters in the first wave of the new campaign.

Oh, happy day. I'm not sure what to call this other than extortion. The RIAA promises not to drag you through a lawsuit if you'll hand over a fee (typically on the order of $3,000-$5,000). No wonder the RIAA is often referred to on the Internet as the "Mafiaa."

As recent court proceedings have shown in UMG v. Lindor, one of the few cases which has gone to trial, the RIAA's evidence often borders on the laughable. Since these cases so rarely go to trial, one would assume that the RIAA would make every effort to win, yet the evidence presented from the third parties they contract to find file sharers (companies like MediaSentry) and even their own expert witness shows that very little time goes into tracking down the accused. It is often done automatically by software.

I'm not sure what to call this other than extortion.

Here at UMass, the Office of Information Technology receives a steady stream of copyright infringement notices which require a student's network connection be shutoff. They receive as many as 40 per day and almost all from the RIAA. The evidence provided to OIT is similar to that which the RIAA has presented in court, but as they receive so many complaints, OIT is unable to independently verify the claims. This new RIAA campaign would seem to indicate that some of these notices will be giving way to pre-lawsuit letters.

Defending the lawsuit or paying the fee, either one would be devastating to most college students. It's important, therefore, to have an idea of what to do if you are innocent and happen to fall into the RIAA's cross hairs. Regardless of how it ends, you'll be paying money to somebody, so get yourself a lawyer and hope the final resolution doesn't take too long. Being informed is important since the RIAA's detection methods can point the finger at the wrong person and have done so on numerous occasions. Once you've been sued you're only recourse is to prove your innocence and that's a very sad way to conduct justice. If you are engaged in illegally sharing copyrighted files, the best course of action is clearly to stop. But even if you're not, that's no guarantee that the RIAA won't come knocking.

Rather than put all this time and effort into suing potential customers, it sure would be nice if the music industry could offer a system that everybody liked. For starters, no more encumbering digital rights management (DRM) on music, so that you can use the files with any portable player. And lower prices. One dollar per song is not particularly high, yet it also seems reasonable that the cost of a downloaded CD's worth of music should cost substantially less than a physically manufactured CD, which it does not.

UMass students can get music from Ruckus for free, but even that system has substantial flaws. You can only use Ruckus if you're running Windows, and all music includes Microsoft's DRM so you can only use it on portable players which support it. Unfortunately, that list of players does not include iPods, which are by far the most prevalent.

Whichever route the new RIAA strategy takes, it's going to end up hurting a lot of students – some guilty, some innocent. And these tactics will continue to create ill feelings towards the music industry. If I was trying to build a new online market, that's the last thing I would want.

John Gruenenfelder can be reached at johng@as.arizona.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A TUSSLE WITH TABLOIDS

Dear Editor,

Having worked at a supermarket almost every day this past winter break, I was easily exposed to the celebrity magazines that one passes by at every single lane in the checkout. I have to say, witnessing at least five different magazine covers displaying pictures of various deathly-skinny actresses such as Nicole Ritchie and Kate Bosworth, and usually headlining something along the lines of "How Skinny is To Skinny," was both frightening and disturbing.

What was even more disturbing was opening one of these magazines to a page displaying someone as small as Tara Reid sitting down in a bathing suit, with a superimposed circle around her stomach, accusing her of being "flabby." I couldn't believe that a magazine that was pretending to be so concerned about some celebrities' extreme weight loss was also picking apart the body of a different healthy actress. Most readers know that Tara Reid is nowhere close to fat, and that the other actresses pictured look like they're dangerously close to major health issues because of their thin bodies. What messages are the photographers and writers of these magazines trying to convey?

Magazine articles have, for quite some time now, wrongly pinpointed celebrities' imperfections (even the nonexistent) but can they wonder why all of a sudden so many actresses are way too skinny? After all these years of judgments, no actress wants to be the one pictured in the "fat section" of a magazine or an E! True Hollywood Story. Besides that point, what are these article writers trying to tell their readers? So-and-so is obviously way too small, but so and so who is of an average body type is way too fat. How can one expect to keep readers if their magazine is full of inconsistencies? How can a magazine be taken seriously if its writers don't even know the definition of healthy?

More importantly, how will these articles affect readers' self images, especially young girls and women who look to celebrity spot lights more and more? Celebrities, magazines, TV, etc. have always created issues when it comes to young girls and how they perceive themselves, but how will they reflect on themselves when it's unclear what a healthy body image is? I know I can't completely blame the writers for these articles. They have bosses too and they need to provide what will bring home the bacon, but something somewhere has to change. In fear of how many more young adolescents will develop an eating disorder, as well as celebrities, the criticism needs to stop.

Surely there are more important things one can write about. Celebrities will always be in the spotlight and the center of the public's attention, but isn't observing their vacation spots, fashion sense, fame, movies or countless other lifestyle decisions enough? Have our society's values really sunk so low that we have to rip apart every little "imperfection" of these bodies for a good read? Surely, magazines can remain interesting to read without the body breakdown. I sure don't find myself feeling better the day I read "Tyra Banks is fat," even if it is a realization that celebrities are real people too. Real people have real feelings, and don't deserve to hear about how their lives are over because they've gained some weight.

I hope that in response to my letter, I will possibly receive some positive feedback and support, and that eventually one day people will stop writing about and picturing such insensitive nonsense.

Megan Tuggle
UMass student

The progress paradox

Chris Eckel

Despite spending more than $404.8 billion on an immoral and foolish war in Iraq, the United States remains both very rich and very smart. It is widely believed that the U.S. spent over $300 billion on research and development last year. Since they began handing them out in 1901, more Americans, including UMass professor Craig Mello, have been awarded the Nobel Prize than any other nationality.

According to aneki.com, the only country with more universities than the U.S. is India, and they have roughly four times as many people. Clearly, the U.S. is the most intellectual country on Earth. So how is it possible the rest of the world is laughing at us when it comes to science?

The answer, I fear, comes from something else the U.S. produces more of than any other country on earth – Christians. I happen to be Roman Catholic, and I know plenty of Christians; I'm pretty sure most everyone reading this article might know one or two, as well. This is certainly no anti-Christian diatribe; I am very proud of my faith, and I would never attack the tenets of another religion.

However, religion can become a problem when it stands in the way of advancement. I am not speaking of social progress; any consistent reader is familiar with my thoughts on gay marriage, stem cell research and other social matters. I am speaking, instead, of scientific advancement. Schools are teaching that evolution is, at best, an opinion, when in the eyes of scientists everywhere it is a proven theory and accepted as fact. The Chairman of the Texas State House Appropriations Committee, Warren Chisum, has proposed that the Earth is truly the center of the galaxy and the sun revolves around our planet; furthermore, he has suggested that the alternative view is propagated by anti-Christian forces.

Religion can become a problem when it stands in the way of advancement.

The problem with this reasoning is that science and faith are completely antithetical. Science is based upon facts and faith is based upon conviction in the unknown. When one considers that dichotomy, it is hardly surprising that scientists come from all faiths. An award winning professor from Brown University, Kenneth Miller, came to this campus last year to speak on the eminent ridiculousness of intelligent design. He also happens to say the Lord's Prayer every Sunday in church. He is hardly alone in his pro-evolution, pro-God beliefs: Pope John Paul II officially endorsed evolution.

How about that anti-Christian conspiracy about the sun? Texas may be a hotbed of uneducated, naïve politicians, but a little research goes a long way. Copernicus, the man widely credited with disseminating the theory that the sun is at the center of galaxy, not only attended Mass, he led them: he was a member of the Catholic clergy. So, despite a surplus of dissent within the religious ranks, according to author Sam Harris in his award-winning publication, "The End of Faith: Religion, Terror and the Future of Reason:" "120 million of us place the big bang 2,500 years after the Babylonians and Sumerians learned to brew beer." I may enjoy an occasional beverage at the Moan and Dove, but you could never get me drunk enough to believe in such nonsense.

So, why, exactly, do Christians refuse to accept evolution and the centricity of the sun? It would seem that one of the Seven Deadly Sins, pride, is to blame. Christian dogma teaches that Christians, and for that matter, humanity in general, are God's chosen creatures. Reconciling that belief with the idea that we crawled out of the mud on a planet far removed from the center of the galaxy in some sort of cosmic joke is rather difficult, indeed.

Nonetheless, it is clearly far from impossible. Miller, Copernicus and Pope John Paul II have all managed to balance their belief in God with an appreciation for scientific fact. Now, I would imagine that all three of those men are smarter than me, and for that matter, smarter than just about anybody on Earth right now.

However, that does not mean that we cannot follow in their footsteps. Historians, theologians and others hold many different beliefs about Jesus. However, one thing that everyone agrees upon is that Jesus was a teacher. As far as I am aware, Jesus never assigned a 500-word essay on why evolution is a myth. It is difficult to imagine that any teacher would appreciate his or her students wallowing in willful ignorance. Regardless of the depth of one's religious convictions, it is foolish and harmful to ignorantly cling to myths that have been disproved over and over.

One of the fundamental measures of civilization's progress is scientific accomplishment, and if the misunderstood lessons of Christianity continue to dominate in the U.S., it seems certain that the legacy of this country will be that of an uneducated bully.

Chris Eckel can be reached at ceckel@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY.COM

Are Christians such as Jerry Falwell (above) hedging the advancement of society?

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 5, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Film brings Orwell to mind

Academy Award winning foreign film deserves a viewing

The 79th Annual Academy Award winner for Best Foreign Language Film "The Lives of Others" brings the audience along on a suspense filled trip to an East Germany still dominated by the secret police.

By David Humphreys
Collegian Staff

As post-Oscar buzz starts to fade away, the entertainment industry returns to normalcy while the usual full of decent films commences. This lull gives the average person a chance to catch up on any Oscar-nominated or awarded film that they have not yet seen.

Although most Academy Award winning films have large turnouts and nationwide openings, many other films go unrecognized or underappreciated. While some winners, like The Departed, get almost all of the press's attention, many other recipients had only limited nationwide viewings and were not as warmly accepted by the press. For example, the Academy Award for Best Foreign Language Film of the Year went to a relatively unknown film, The Lives of Others.

Written and directed by Florian Henckel von Donnersmarck, Lives is a tour-de-force debut chronicling the relationship between an East German secret service agent and the possibly subversive playwright under his surveillance. At almost every bend in the film, a character must decide his or her fate. They react by doing what they believe to be the right action at the moment and are forced to bare the consequences of their choice. With fear, mistrust and deception running rampant, Lives forces the characters to push their limits and holds them there, creating a taut and suspenseful thriller.

Following a strict, almost Orwellian tradition, Lives can be seen as the 1984 of this generation. Containing strong political commentary which subtly shows the effects a socialist society can have on a person's mind and their thought process. The strong sense of paranoia in Lives makes the viewer wonder who is really in control.

The raw emotions of the characters are handed to the viewer without any regard or care, driving the film forward and never asking for forgiveness. The feelings conveyed in the film are

See LIVES on page 6

THE LIVES OF OTHERS

DIRECTED BY FLORIAN HENCKEL VON DONNERSMARCK

RATED R

A-

Tips to a better you

By Veronica Garreti
Collegian Columnist

It happens quicker every time, sometimes it seems progression or escalation is even lacking. You find yourself in a good relationship, your grades are up, you are getting along with your parents, making friends and you even find your skin is clear, yet in the space of one day your world can flip, and your role in life is no longer the inspiration it was. Nothing is what you thought, and you find yourself feeling inept and vain.

There are a few things, character traits, however, that can help you through these moments with grace and dignity. I speak from personal experience when I say that there is something to the "straight-edge" lifestyle. With a clear mind, some decisions may be harder to act on, but in the end it will lead you to a more fulfilling lifestyle when you go with the decision that truly suits you best.

Yet, as one grows up, you begin to see that you will never be old and wise if you're not young and at least a little wild now. Yes, I am implying that living must involve having some fun. The question becomes finding the right balance between fun and responsibilities.

I understand that the pursuit of emotional growth would be an utter challenge and nearly impossible if the person was not dedicated to making the change, especially in college. Therefore, I have selected a select few qualities that if examined just might lead you to a more proactive lifestyle.

Some attempt selflessness. They are noble, are both completely giving and forgiving and the "go to" person for almost everyone you meet. They give, they provide, they act together as shelter and comfort for everyone, never thinking of their own needs. This is a quality either possessed or not believed in.

It is my personal opinion that being selfless is an incredibly unrealistic character goal and could be looked back on as a flaw. One should not aim for selflessness. If you are never worried about yourself in the past or present, how will you ever be happy in the future?

One should forever be aware of others' feelings and thoughts, and as always, consideration and some pliability are key to any successful relationship, but as I just mentioned there are limitations and exceptions to every rule. Rational self-interest is a much better approach to life.

Once you have attained rational self-interest and you know what you desire out of life, you have to stick to that plan. A strong-will is one of the most stabilizing traits if you are able to achieve it. You find yourself rarely falling behind, and usually staying on course with schoolwork and other tasks you have to get done.

Your drive is your future, and the consequences of falling out of line are hard to swallow. When you find yourself with big dreams and plans for your life, the thought of failure because you went to a party does not taste very good. It becomes easier to justify spending the night in to reach future successes. I have always believed you have to work hard now, and party the rest of your life. In college, you sometimes have to rationalize and make

See ADVICE on page 6

John Brown's Body fulfills fans dreams

Reggae band brings soul not hunger for fame to live show

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Correspondent

Sitting in the small, decrepit room backstage at Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton, one really gets the feel that this band means business. The walls are covered with unattractive graffiti and there is nothing in the room but a few chairs; yet, the emptiness of the surroundings created a vibe of simplicity around the band which seemed pure and natural unlike many of the more mainstream, money hungry musicians of their generation.

This group is not in the business for fame and fortune. They do what they do for one reason - they love the music. It truly makes them happy to put on a show for their fans and to put smiles on their faces. This band is John Brown's Body, the Boston/Ithaca, N.Y. based reggae band. They play an authentic brand of "roots" reggae which is taking the underground music scene by storm; proving night after night that they are one of the top-touring American reggae bands of late.

They were able to draw a packed crowd Saturday night and it was an experience that was savored by all in attendance. The band had the crowd chanting and dancing with enthusiasm throughout the night. When JBB finally left the stage, the crowd took it to the next level; hooting, hollering, stomping and clapping until the band finally came back for a powerful two-song encore.

The energy level was extremely high throughout the night and the crowd was clearly appreciative of the gift given to them by these talented musicians. A sweet aroma filled the air for most of the evening and grins could be found all around.

Nothing could crush the good vibes of the calm and collected reggae lovers on this particular evening. There was too much happiness in the air, too much love spurting from the stage, spraying the fans with mystified dew. This is what reggae is all about; it just seems to create positive energy.

The drummer of JBB, Tommy, was kind enough to take some time off from his busy touring schedule to answer some questions and he had quite a bit of interesting information to relay about the band. He talked about his college career in Boston at the Berklee College of Music.

Tommy loved Boston and seems to miss the days when he could play drums for six hours a day. Unfortunately, the busy touring schedule he's now on doesn't allow for nearly as much practicing. Life on the road means far more commitments than college life demanded; so, in the end, there is less time for the actual music. When nightfall finally comes and the show begins, the music flows free like a mountain spring.

Tommy also talked about his former bands, which eventually morphed into JBB, and their highly influential trip to Jamaica. He said that the Jamaicans were very accepting of the group's musical aspirations and their determination to go against the grain. He talked about the laid back lifestyle in Jamaica and how that carries over into reggae music in general, and JBB specifically.

He also mentioned that the band has been disappointed that it hasn't been able to make any international trips as of yet, but

See JBB on page 6

LIZ KOTZ | DAILY COLLEGIAN

John Brown's Body drummer Tommy spoke at their recent Northampton concert about his college experiences in Boston.

Pulitzer winner to lecture at Rand Theater

Five College graduate speaks

By Nick Miriello
Collegian Correspondent

There are those moments, sometimes when one is walking across the wind-swept campus, that an idea, a concept or thought, occurs and it is organic and fresh. This doesn't happen often, and when it does, it is generally not enough to propel one to the top level of intellectual folklore.

Yet for those very few who can tap into the creative energy and ride it out, and those people, well, everyone knows their names. The ability to connect to the creative force is something mythic in the American culture. From Bob Dylan to Miles Davis to Toni Morrison, all these artists have been able to tap into their creative force, those fleeting moments of genius, and capitalize. These are the ways one changes the culture around them, through the creative outlets of music, literature, science and sports.

It is quite possible that there are certain ways one can distinguish those capable of accessing their genius. The Pulitzer Prize is one glaring way to separate the merely good from the impossibly great.

PULITZER PRIZE WINNER SUZAN-LORI PARKS

RAND THEATER

4:30 P.M

Today at 4:30 p.m. in The Rand, Theater Pulitzer Prize winning playwright Suzan-Lori Parks will be delivering this year's Rand Lecture. Parks has written numerous award-winning plays including "Top Dog/Underdog" for which she won her Pulitzer. She is an accomplished writer that has encompassed many forms of literature to

See PULITZER on page 6

Suzan-Lori Parks is a Mount Holyoke College alumna. She credits her experiences in the Five College system with her success as a writer.

'Psych' first season ends humorously

By Sherry Larnard
Collegian Correspondent

USA aired the season finale of their new hit comedy, "Psych" last Friday. The finale, filled with suspense, chills and a few belly-laughs, was a humorous counterpart to the average police drama unfolded.

The show is based around the wacky main character Shawn, played by James Roday, a psychic police consultant that is not really psychic at all. Shawn has such an uncanny eye for detail that he has all of the officers believing that he has an otherworldly ability and is actually seeing things in his mind's eye. His attention to detail was honed by his police officer father who trained his son to follow in his footsteps. Shawn, however, does no such thing as he prefers to just call in tips to the police rather than spend his time working.

This episode began with a back story of a local urban legend in the town Shawn lives in. The young Shawn and his best friend Gus are in the car and see a young woman jump from a window in a mental institution. "Scary Sherry" becomes a legend around town, and the subject much later in life of one of Shawn's cases. Since they were there the night that the original occurrence at the institution happened, Shawn and Gus are very afraid of the place and in investigating the incident, eventually make peace with their memories.

When a sorority sister supposedly jumps from the same window that "Scary Sherry" did years earlier, it does not add up to the police as a suicide. So they send in Juliet, a friend of Shawn's who goes undercover as a sorority sister and takes her role to the extreme.

When her sisters feel they are being haunted, Juliet enlists the help of Shawn and Gus to pretend they are psychics there to ward away the spirit of their late sister Maureen. At the first sign of paranormal activity, however, Sean and Gus are the first two running and screaming from the sorority house. They do stay on

See PSYCH on page 6

Try out easy steps for a happier self sacrifices to get to what you are ultimately looking for.

ADVICE from page 5

Sincerity, the final thought, is the one characteristic I choose to never let falter in myself. One could consider that if people were up-front with their friends and family, it would solve a great number of problems as the roots of those problems would be avoided completely. There is no worse feeling than finding out someone lied to you, factoring feelings or caring for the person who lied makes it even more of a tender subject.

Trust is something to be valued, and should not be played with. When you have someone's trust, whether they are an acquaintance or your fiancé, it is forever, and going back on that trust generally makes you question your morals. Unless you were intentionally trying to end that relationship, you feel terrible about yourself. Knowing you have initiated an altercation with any future bond you may have with the person in question is rarely an occasion to celebrate. Why would you ever put yourself through that if you could avoid it?

Even if everything appears to be as good as it can get, it doesn't hurt to give yourself a healthy dose of self-consideration. Try something my good friend Teale would call an "emotional health day." Think of your needs, pamper yourself, relax and take time to think about and do what you really want. Keep in mind that alleviating stress is an excellent way to keep your skin radiant. You must always make room in your life for you, and forget about superhero status. Try living proactively, instead of just getting by.

Veronica Garrett is the Collegian Advice Columnist and can be reached at vgarrett@student.umass.edu.

Please feel free to e-mail Veronica about any question or issue you'd like help with. Her column based on reader questions will appear each Monday.

Parks to share insight

PULITZER from page 5

deliver her unique perspective. She is not only a playwright, but also a screenwriter and novelist.

A graduate of Mount Holyoke College, Parks credits her time spent in the Five College system for further developing her skill. It was James Baldwin, another magnificent writer, who, as her professor, urged her to begin writing plays. Thus Parks is not simply a greatly heralded playwright extraordinaire but also a connection to both the influential professors of this area and the great education one can receive from the Five College system in Western Massachusetts.

Her lecture at the Rand Theater is one of many scheduled events at the Five Colleges. The New World Theater and Mount Holyoke College will be producing plays from the 365 Days/365 Plays engineered by Parks. The lecture is open to all students and community members. For the English and Theater majors on campus, attending this lecture seems to be essential.

Parks' success within the theater and literary world is monumental, success that any young aspiring student can only dream of. For this very reason, her lecture should offer great insight into her mind and work. It is a great privilege for students in this area to have the first hand exposure to world-respected talent, a lecture such as this is pivotal to growing as both an artist and a person.

As the wind slaps you in the face on the way to class Monday afternoon, allow that to serve as a reminder to those fleeting moments when you may have a brilliant thought. Take a U-turn from where ever you are, and find the cozy Rand Theater where a lecture and some concrete walls will guard you from the hideous weather. You will have an opportunity to exercise your right to learn beyond the classroom and witness a lecture that should add insight and excitement to your frozen skull.

Nick Miriello can be reached at nmiriell@student.umass.edu.

Characters drive show

PSYCH from page 5

the case and help Juliet crack it though.

In the end, the trio finds that their sorority sister had not committed suicide after all; she had fallen from the rotted window in a pledging activity turned nightmare. For an added twist her death was being avenged leading to another murdered sister and a final attempt on someone's life. After all their wacky adventures, the case is solved and the show leaves the viewer with a sense of too much conclusion, so much so that one may not feel the need to tune in next season.

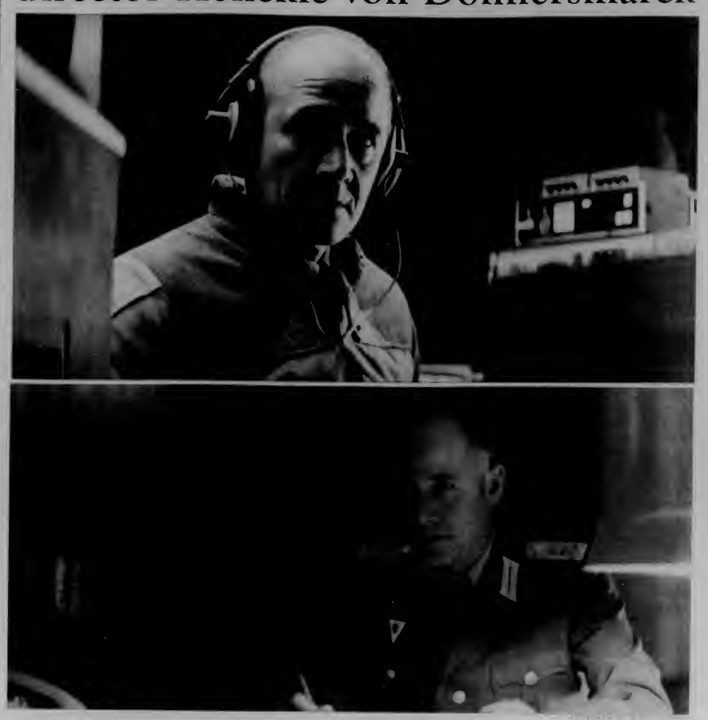
The laughs in this show mostly come from the outlandish personalities of some of the characters and the overacting that is done in some scenes. The highlight is found in the craziest cop on the force, an older woman that has so many medical ailments she should not be allowed to work. She adds humor to the show by managing to jump a convenience store clerk that was a victim of robbery.

There is a factor of goofiness in all of the characters that is much better than the actual writing of the script. Without the right actors, this show would be a bust. Luckily USA has found a winning cast and has made it a success.

While the finale was funny, it was not focused solely on the humor and some of the jokes were dry. However, the mix of humor, mystery and wacky suspense could leave a viewer glued to their television set. The "Psych" finale gets a B and a solid recommendation to catch up on the show before next season starts.

Sherry Larnard can be reached at slarnard@student.umass.edu

'The Lives of Others' debuts talents of director Henckle von Donnersmarck



This is the first film from director Florian Henckle von Donnersmarck. The German-language film was so well received that American producers are already attempting to option an English-language version.

LIVES from page 5

uniquely tangible and completely" accurate, making the film more interactive than an amusement park ride.

Exceptionally well written and directed, the script is utilitarian. There is no scene or line of dialogue that is unnecessary for the development of the characters or plot. Every scene shows exactly what the character is feeling and going through while still leaving just enough up to the viewer's mind.

In the fashion of a true socialist government, everything in Lives serves a function and is vital to the film as a whole. Everything fits perfectly together in a completely logical parable of society. The only thing unsure at the end of the film is where has Henckle von Donnersmarck been and why aren't there more filmmakers like him?

While every film has ups, it also must have downs. The downside to Lives is that it is only 137 minutes, Lives keeps up such intensity throughout the whole film that when the credits start to roll, the tenseness snaps and leaves nothing else behind. That final effect coincides perfectly with a central message in Lives: everything eventually changes, though not always for the best.

The Lives of Others, a German-language film, is currently being optioned by Bob and Harvey Weinstein, Anthony Minghella and Sydney Pollack to be remade in English, Daily Variety said Thursday.

Lives is a powerhouse film of extraordinary importance and will remain relevant to society for years to come. While some people might be drawn away from it due to subtitles, they are missing one of the most significant films recent years. Lives has become a defining film of this decade: emotional, unrelenting and smart. It deserves every vote it received for its Oscar.

David Humphrey can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu

JBB show results in a mellow evening

JBB from page 5

JBB is a band composed of members who reign from Boston and Ithaca, N.Y. and yet they manage to create authentic sounding reggae.

they look forward to going overseas in the future. He did mention the band's trip to Hawaii, which he said was an eye-opening experience. It sounded like they had a great time in the sun-soaked state, absorbing the traditional Hawaiian music and the Hawaiian reggae (apparently reggae is huge in Hawaii) as well as performing some live shows.

The two opening bands were also extremely talented, especially the Sam Kininger Band out of Boston. They consisted of a drummer, a bassist, a saxophonist and a keyboardist and they were very impressive for an opening act. Their bassist had some seriously intense energy and the saxophonist knew exactly how to insert short melodic solos at the perfect time. They played one song that sounded very similar to the Tribe Called Quest tune "Electric Relaxation" and also played something reminiscent of the old blues song "Going down."

JBB picked their openers very well on this occasion and they even opted to use a few of them in their own songs, pulling up a sax player and an emcee from each opening band at various points in the show.

Overall this is a great band made up of some really cool, determined and talented individuals and their efforts are strongly appreciated by the fans of the Amherst/Northampton area.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu

Freedom Sundae Spectacular
$1.00 off the Freedom Sundae Spectacular Offer expires 3/14/07
one time only!
A fudge-coated waffle cone bowl with two scoops of vanilla ice cream seated firmly to the Right, a Liberal amount of fluffy whipped cream to the Left, topped with crushed waffle cone pieces and caramel.
19 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002 413-259-2077
You want nuts with that. Not on this sundae. There's already plenty of NUTS both far left and right, besides this sundae is all about straight shooting.
BEN & JERRY'S

Renting 101:
How to Rent Your First Apartment
Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?
Learn how to "get it right" this important first time.
Learn how to make good decisions as you take the "next step" in your college life.
Learn the mistakes you want to avoid making.
Know your responsibilities. Know your rights!
Come to a crash course in renting!
Wednesday evening, March 7, 2007
7:00 to 8:00pm
Berkshire Dining Hall, Private Dining Room
RENTING 101
UMassAmherst
Presented by Student Legal Services Offices, in collaboration with Off Campus Housing and the Housing Assignment Office

UM earns share of A-10 Title in win

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

round of the A-10 Tournament on Wednesday.

The Minutemen will play the winner of No. 7 Saint Louis/No. 10 Duquesne on Thursday. They beat the Billikens 53-50 during the regular season.

"[Winning the regular season championship] was goal No. 1," Ford said. "Now we have to move to No. 2. I like our team a lot even though we made a lot of mistakes tonight.

"We have played a tough schedule all year especially on the road to help prepare us for these games down the stretch," he added. "I am elated and relieved to be the conference champion. It's great with the conference road games we have played to be co-champs. To be co-champs with Xavier says a lot. But we still have work to be done."

The Minutemen ended the season on a six-game winning streak, dating back to their 74-59 win over the Fordham Rams in the Bronx on ESPN2. After that it was on to Dayton and UMass dealt the Flyers their first home loss of the season. The Minutemen returned to the Mullins Center on Feb. 21 and reeled off three straight victories at home – St. Bonaventure, Saint Louis and La Salle – before heading to Saint Joseph's for the final game of the regular season.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu..

Senior forward Stephane Lasme had 11 points, nine rebounds and four blocks in Saturday's 71-67 win over Saint Joseph's.

Seniors get another shot to say goodbye

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It certainly was a long road, but it couldn't have been capped off any better. A midst a nearly packed crowd at the Mullins Center, the four seniors for the Massachusetts hockey team said a temporary farewell to the home fans.

Well it turns out the Minutemen will be back home next week for the opening round of the Hockey East playoffs. The significance of the moment was not lost, however, as captain Matt Anderson, assistant captain Mark Matheson, Chris Capraro and Kevin Jarman played their final regular season game inside Mullins Center Saturday night.

It was a back and forth game for nearly the full 60 minutes, and all four seniors had a hand in the victory. At the end of the night, it seemed like the men wearing maroon and white simply wanted the win more. But the four players honored before the game wanted it just a little bit more.

"Last week we were asked the question about what is the highlight of our UMass careers," Anderson said. "I think this is a great closure, but I think we all know – especially in the locker room – we're looking forward to the challenge up ahead."

The seniors combined for three points in a game that was close until an empty-net goal with two seconds remaining in regulation.

Matheson started things off late in the first with an impressive goal. Taking a feed up the ice from P.J. Fenton, the UMass swingman pushed past the Maine defender and rifled the puck over goalie Dave Wilson's left shoulder for the shorthanded goal. Capraro was the next senior to get on the scoreboard, assisting on a great-looking play. Capraro took a drop-pass from Cory Quirk, who chased and cleared the puck into the zone. Capraro then fed Alex Berry at the right post, and Berry stuffed it home past Wilson.

The score tied the game at two goals apiece, and closed the first two periods of play with nothing yet decided. That would set up Anderson for a bit of magic in his final regular season game.

Anderson intercepted the puck from Maine's Josh Soares, who tried to clear it out of the zone. The Minutemen's leading man made one move on Wilson and beat the goalie glove-side, putting UMass ahead for good.

Emotions were visibly running high on the ice, as the final seconds ticked down. The Minutemen all met goalie Jon Quick in front of the net at the end of the game to celebrate not just the victory and home-ice, but also the careers that their teammates left on the ice that night.

"It was a good feeling. It was a team effort. Everybody contributed and that's the best part," Matheson said. "Not one single person was down. Everybody played well, and it's just really nice to get a team win like that."

For their efforts, the seniors will get one more chance to say goodbye to the Mullins Center this weekend. UMass coach Don Cahoon spoke about his departing players after Saturday's win.

"I've said an awful lot about all of them," Cahoon said. "[Anderson and Matheson] are incredible students with terrific character, and they've really developed athletically and socially and emotionally while they've been here. They've endured a lot of struggles, both of them.

"When you throw Kevin Jarman and Chris Capraro into the equation, they've had their share of struggles, and their growth and their development," he continued. "I know we're appreciative as coaches of their efforts and their determination and I've heard them say many times that they're appreciative of the opportunity that they've had."

Before the puck dropped Saturday night, the seniors were introduced with the family led out to center ice on the red carpet. Cahoon shook each player's hand as they skated past to meet their parents.

For Cahoon, the moment represented what drives him to coach.

"It's a give and take relationship, and I think we've openly given to one another, which is a nice thing to feel and share," Cahoon said. "That's how lifelong friendships are created. That's one of the reasons I coach, probably more than any other is that these guys know that it's more than just the hockey."

Jeremy Rice can be reach at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Bulldogs defeat Minutemen

M. LAX from page 10

were whistled for being offsides and the ball went to the Bulldogs.

Again things didn't go the Minutemen's way with under 20 seconds left. They just came off a timeout and were looking to set up against a short-stick defender. But Brian Jacovina's pass to the top of the restraining box was picked off by James Rump and sealed the win for Yale.

"I think it's our inability to close out the game," said Cannella of his team's recent misfortunes, but couldn't put his finger on what made the difference against Yale. "We [tried to] clear the ball with [1:06] to go and we go offsides. The last play wasn't exactly what we wrote up in huddle either. I don't know what the difference is, to tell you the truth. If I did I would tell you.

"Brian was trying to get the ball out to one of the short sticks, Andrew Recchione, who was out there – and let him go to the cage," Cannella added about the final play of regulation. "We'd rather go against a short stick than a long stick in that situation."

Again the first half was a low-scoring affair for the Minutemen and their opponents as the teams went into the locker room tied at three apiece. UMass and Yale traded goals before Jim Connolly scored to tie the game with 22 seconds left in the second quarter.

UMass was in the midst of two-minute man advantage with Rump being the culprit of two slashing penalties on one play. Brett Garber sent a pass to Connolly in front of the Yale net. Bulldogs' goalie George Carafides had little chance of making the save on the high, hard shot.

Besides their defense, another bright spot for the Minutemen on the day was the play of freshman Bobby Hayes. After going just two of seven on faceoffs in the first half, he dramatically improved in the second. Hayes won all four draws in the third and two more in the fourth.

The rookie also notched his first two career goals.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly scored a goal in the 7-6 loss to Yale on Saturday. He is tied for the team-lead in points with three.

Mass Attack sweeps No. 9 Black Bears

HOCKEY from page 10

Minutemen on a night where he and the other three UMass seniors were honored. The play began as Josh Soares exited the box, putting his team on the man advantage – play had been four-on-four. P.J. Fenton controlled the puck at the blue line along the right boards looking for a passing lane. He spotted Matheson streaking up the middle of the ice and sent him the puck.

The forward/defenseman received the puck in the slot and quickly fired a wrist shot on goaltender Dave Wilson. It sailed by Wilson's left shoulder, giving Matheson his 13th of the season.

Special teams was a factor later in the period, but it was Maine on the scoring side this time. With Jordan Virtue already in the penalty box serving a too many men on the ice infraction, Mike Kostka was whistled for tripping. Goalie Jon Quick made a nifty glove save on a Michel Leveille slap shot early in the five-on-three, but couldn't make it two in a row.

Leveille received the puck at the right faceoff circle and cocked his stick back. Quick appeared to have little shot at the save as the puck whistled by his left side. The score gave all the momentum to the Black Bears.

Maine took all the momentum it gained in the first period into the second. The visitors broke the 1-1 tie at the 5:49 mark. Teddy Purcell slid the puck to defenseman Travis Ramsey at the right circle. Two Maine players were camped out in front of the crease, blocking Quick's vision.

Ramsey slapped the puck to the net and it beat the goaltender. Brent Shepheard was credited with the goal because he redirected the puck with a tip.

Nearly six minutes after Maine took the lead, it appeared the Black Bears dealt UMass a decisive blow. Quick sprawled on his side to make a beautiful save, but he left the rebound out front. Wes Clark crashed the net and one-timed the puck into the net to Quick's frustration. But referee Joe Andrews immediately waved the goal off, citing a Maine hand pass.

Play remained in the Black Bears' favor for the middle part of the period. It wasn't until the 14:15 mark that Alex Berry and the Minutemen brought the game back to a tie. Berry's fifth of the season came on a pretty play that was assisted by Chris Capraro and Cory Quirk.

Quirk gained control of the puck on the clear at the attacking blue line. He skated in and dropped the puck to Burto in the slot. Burto spotted Berry camped out at the right post and slid the puck to him behind the Maine defense. It didn't settle for Berry, forcing the sophomore to hesitate before he slapped it into the open net.

"I don't know if either one of us knew what to expect," said Cahoon, given the four months in between games for the Minutemen and Black Bears prior to Friday night. "The fact that we didn't line up against each other was fresh, that part of it, seeing new faces."

The score was tied 1-1 after the first and there were plenty of chances for each team during the game's second period, but it was UMass that capitalized. The Minutemen went on the power play when Maine's Bret Tyler was whistled for cross-checking at 9:33.

Capraro controlled the puck at the top of the left circle looking to make a pass. He spotted an opening in the Maine defense and sent the puck down to Kostka at the bottom of the opposite circle. Wilson slid to that side, forcing Kostka to forgo a shot and send the puck across the crease.

It found Quirk at the other side and the sophomore just got his stick on the puck to weakly redirect it towards the net. Maine goaltender Wilson remained frozen at the other end of the crease and couldn't stop the puck from trickling past the line.

"I thought he was going to put a little more on it," Quirk said of Kostka's pass. "But it was just enough and I just redirected it. It was a great play by Mike."

Going down a goal seemed to energize the Black Bears as they turned up the pressure with five minutes to go in the period. Kostka blocked two straight Soares shots, but Maine didn't give up and got the third one past the defense. It came from the stick of Leveille and hit the right post, leaving Quick on his back. From there he swept the puck aside and away from danger.

Maine was back at it shortly after. This time Tyler ripped a shot from the top of the left circle. It too hit the right post, allowing UMass to carry the 2-1 lead into the final period of play.

UMass padded its lead just four minutes in. Scott Crowder took a pass from Kostka and brought the puck into the offensive zone just inside the right circle. A Maine defenseman tried to push him off the puck, but Crowder muscled a shot off. The puck beat Wilson over his left shoulder and gave Crowder his first goal of the season.

"It was just [moving] across the ice and I think it took a bounce and their defenseman misplayed it," Crowder said. "I chipped it behind him to just put a shot on net and it went in, it's about time."

Both teams wasted little time getting things started in the first period. But it was Soares who broke a scoreless tie three minutes in.

With traffic in front of his crease, Quick made the initial save with his left leg pad on a Teddy Purcell shot. He couldn't gather in the rebound and the puck was left bouncing out front. Soares then crashed the net and stuffed it home for the early Black Bear lead.

UMass didn't stay down for very long. Continuing his improved play as of late, defenseman David Leaderer tied the score with his fourth goal of the season at the 7:39 mark. Chris Davis led a UMass three-on-two into the attacking zone. A Maine defenseman knocked him off the puck in the low slot, but Leaderer was there to scoop it up. The junior quickly fired a backhand shot that beat Wilson over his right shoulder.

The score gives him four points in his last two games – Leaderer assisted on three of UMass' five goals against Northeastern last Sunday.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu

Minutewomen knock off Hofstra, Army

By Mike Connors
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's tennis team earned victories against Hofstra and Army this weekend, improving its overall record to 6-3 (1-0 Atlantic 10) on the year.

UMass travels to Ithaca, N.Y. later this week to take on Binghamton on Friday and Cornell on Saturday.

The Minutewomen dominated Hofstra on Friday afternoon, winning all nine matches played. UMass coach Judy Dixon decided to alter the lineup, as she wanted to give some of the players who practice hard every day some game action against a weaker opponent.

Last year's doubles team of Michelle Spiess and Masha Pozar were reunited, and the latter did not play singles. This move bumped Ellen de Jong up to No. 2 and Maude Lecluyse to No. 3., Stephanie Gimenez moved up to No. 4 from her usual No. 6 position and Laura Murillo and Carly Ludmer got their first singles playing time at Nos. 5 and 6 respectively.

Spiess, who was named Atlantic 10 Most Outstanding Performer by the conference's head coaches last year, cruised to an easy 6-1, 6-2 victory at the No. 1 slot over Hofstra's Stacey Kent.

Lecluyse, Gimenez and Ludmer all defeated their opponents by scores of 6-0, 6-0, while Murillo won 6-1, 6-0.

Two-time Atlantic 10 women's tennis Rookie of the Week, Ellen de Jong dropped her first set, 4-6, but rallied to victory with 6-3 and 10-7 in the second and third sets respectively.

The doubles teams also took care of business against their opponents. Spiess and Pozar coasted to an 8-2 victory – Lecluyse and de Jong won 8-0 – while Murillo and Gimenez scored a shutout as well.

The matchup against the Army Black Knights proved a lot tougher for the Minutewomen. In the end, it was their singles players who provided the difference in a tough fought 4-3 victory.

Pozar and Spiess were defeated by Army's Niki Flach and Brooke Jones, 8-3, at the No. 1 doubles spot. Lecluyse and de Jong were able to pick up the only doubles victory for Army, winning its match 8-1. Gimenez and Dasa Stanimirovic went down 8-4.

Though losing her doubles match, Spiess came out and convincingly defeated Army's Niki Flach 6-2, 6-2 at the No. 1 slot. Pozar also won her match 6-4, 6-2 at the No. 2 and de Jong won at No. 3, 7-5, 6-0.

Dixon is impressed by her top three singles players.

"I take my hat off to my one, two and three players," Dixon said. "They win all the time."

Stanimirovic and Gimenez were defeated at the Nos. 4 and 6 respectively, while Lecluyse provided the Minutewomen's fourth singles victory of the day at the No. 5 spot, beating Army's Bridie Burke 6-3, 7-5. Dixon was impressed with Lecluyse's much needed victory under pressure that sealed the win for the Minutewomen.

Dixon was most pleased with the victory over Army.

"The Army win was a huge win for us," she said. "We had lost the last five years to Army. They're tough to beat because they fight hard. You have to go and beat them and not be intimidated because they're the Army. We competed well."

With her two victories over the weekend, Spiess now finds herself only five wins short of breaking Jackie Braustein's singles wins record of 59.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Looking for business experience??

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking qualified applicants to fill the positions of:

Business Manager
Assistant Business Manager
Distribution Manager

Contact Daniel Conti at 413-545-3500 for more information or stop by The Collegian in the basement of the Campus Center.

First-round exit for Minutewomen in Ohio

Bonnies battle back from 16-point deficit to stun UM

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The NCAA Tournament has yet to start, but that didn't stop the Massachusetts women's basketball team and the St. Bonaventure Bonnies from partaking in their own March Madness on Friday night in Cincinnati, Ohio.

St. Bonaventure (16-14) rallied from a 16-point deficit in the second half to stun the Minutewomen, 63-60, and end the Maroon and White's season in the first round of the Atlantic 10 conference tournament.

UMass	60
St. Bon	63

"I think our team gave it away," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "But at the same time St. Bonaventure did what they needed to do. They came right at us and we had no defensive presence whatsoever, and that's not the mark of a UMass team. So that's where my disappointment came from."

"To give up a game that we should have won easily is a huge disappointment for us," junior captain Kate Mills said. "We definitely gave that game away, and everyone on the team is very upset and in shock that we gave that game away to St. Bonaventure."

UMass (17-13) seemed to have a hammer-lock on the game early in the second half after a quick 15-0 run increased the lead to 45-29 with 15 minutes left to play. Before they knew it, the Minutewomen trailed the Bonnies just eight minutes later, 50-48, following a 21-3 St. Bonaventure surge.

The score remained close the rest of the game, as neither team held a lead larger than three points from there on out. Trailing in the final minute by just two points, the Minutewomen had three opportunities to tie or take the lead, but failed to capitalize on any of them.

Down by two with 57 seconds remaining, Mills went to the free-throw line for two shots. She hit the first attempt, but failed to connect on the second. Trailing by just a lone point, UMass had another chance following a missed shot by Mariper Mako with 31 seconds to go.

The jumper by Mills didn't fall with 17 seconds left on the clock, and the Minutewomen were forced to send the Bonnies to the line for a one-and-one. Mako missed the front end at the foul line, and junior Pam Rosanio grabbed the board – giving the Minutewomen one last chance at the victory, trailing by just one.

Rosanio had the chance to be the hero when she took a runner in the lane with just three ticks left in the game, but her shot rattled out and the Bonnies added two more free-throws to finish the comeback victory.

"I think in past games we've played to win, and then for some reason I think we played not to lose this game," senior Tamara Tatham said. "We were up big two different times in the game, and they came back and fought, and we didn't have an answer. I'm very disappointed."

"The team took this loss so hard, and I've never seen this team react like that," Dacko said. "In spite of them being very down, I was kind of happy to see that because no one was pointing a finger at any one person. They thought long and hard about their own performances, and I think they all felt they disappointed themselves, as well as the team and UMass."

The Minutewomen appeared to be in control early in the contest after rattling off 18 consecutive points to take a 20-6 lead. But after connecting on eight of its first nine shots, UMass closed the first half just 4-for-22 from the field. Despite the struggles on offense, the Minutewomen still led 29-23 at the break.

The Bonnies hit two quick triples in the second half to cut the lead to 30-29, but UMass once again seemingly pulled away after registering 15 consecutive points to increase the lead to 16. A consistent array of turnovers, missed shots and failed freebies at the line allowed St. Bonaventure to claw back into the game.

"We were turning the ball over and not getting what we wanted on offense, and they were coming down and scoring on us," Tatham said.

"We just weren't able to put the team away," Mills said. "We had two big leads, one in each half, so to not be able to put the team away was a huge mistake on our part."

UMass shot itself in the foot, shooting just 12-for-23 from the charity stripe, including pivotal misses late in the game. The Minutewomen also failed to capitalize on their 13 offensive rebounds, parlaying them into just nine second-chance points. UMass committed fewer turnovers than its opponents, but the Minutewomen aided St. Bonaventure's cause by turning the ball over in crucial spots in the second half.

That small opening was all that star senior Audrey Latendresse and the Bonnies needed. Latendresse came up scorching hot in the second half, scoring 17 points on 6-for-9 shooting – including 3-for-5 from the outside and a perfect 2-for-2 from the line.

In the final game of her collegiate career, Tatham led the Minutewomen in scoring with 16 points on 6-for-15 shooting. Mills was the only other player in double figures for UMass, registering a double-double with 14 points and 13 rebounds.

"My heart goes out to Tamara," Dacko said. "I'm certainly disappointed for her to end her career on that game."

Mills had the most dramatic moment of her career – in a very unusual fashion – when she joined Tatham and 14 other players in school history with 1,000 career points. Mills recorded the milestone on a rare 3-point shot – her first of the entire season, and just the third of her career – to tie the game with four minutes left to play.

"She's a really good player and I'm proud of her," Tatham said. "She's been our leader all year, and I'm happy she got her 1,000th point."

"I wasn't thinking about it during the game, but afterwards people came up to me and congratulated me," Mills said. "It was nice, but I would rather have had a win over the Bonnies."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu

KAREN WINDORSKI/COLLEGIAN

Junior Pam Rosanio had nine points in Friday night's 63-60 loss to St. Bonaventure. The Minutewomen blew a 16-point second-half lead and were eliminated in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament for the second consecutive year.

Sophomore midfielder Meghan Reddy had three goals and one assist in Saturday's 18-7 win over Harvard. Reddy ranks fourth on the Minutewomen in scoring with six points on five goals and one assist.

UMass rolls over Harvard

Drown, Typadis and Reddy lead way in win over Crimson

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If the team keeps up its torrid pace, this could be a special year for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (3-1). Saturday's 18-7 victory over Harvard (0-1) at Jordan Field in Cambridge gave the Maroon and White its third straight victory and wrapped up a four-game, season-opening road trip.

UMass	18
Harvard	7

The UMass victory brings the all-time series between the two schools to 17-13, in favor of the Crimson. But more importantly, the Minutewomen are off to their best start since the 2003 season.

They open their home schedule this Wednesday at 4 p.m. against Dartmouth (2-0). The game will be played at McGuirk Stadium, weather permitting.

In addition to the typical scoring effort from the team's top offensive players, eight different Minutewomen scored goals for the second consecutive game.

"It was a tremendous effort from everyone on the team," coach Alexis Venechanos said. "I'm excited that we had a lot of people on the scoreboard and we also had some new people step up and score some goals. When we got the shots we wanted, we were able to put them away."

Sophomore midfielder Holly Drown led all scorers with five goals – a new personal career high. Junior Kathleen Iypadis and sophomore midfielder Meghan Reddy each added three goals a piece.

Iypadis also notched three assists, establishing a new career best with six points in a game. But the hat trick allowed the junior to move into tenth place on the school's career scoring list and kept her 28-game scoring streak alive.

"I was really impressed with her play," Venechanos said. "She had a couple assists and she's creating a lot on and off the ball for us. She understands the game a lot better and [her teammates] definitely look up to her on the field."

UMass got off to a slow start, allowing Harvard to take a 2-1 lead during the eighth minute of play. But over the remainder of the period, UMass took the lead and never looked back. The team scored eight consecutive goals during one juncture and went into halftime with an 11 goal lead, 14-3.

In addition to the strong offensive effort, UMass played stifling defense in both halves. The team caused a total of 26 turnovers and allowed Harvard to take only 18 total shots. Senior Lauren McCarthy split time with sophomore Jamie Whiteway protecting the net.

"During the first half, we were really clicking defensively," Venechanos said. "It allowed us to control the first part of the game."

UMass also fared well with draw controls, winning 15-of-27. Reddy took most of the draws and finished with a game-high four controls. She managed to handle the highly regarded Caroline Simmons of Harvard, who holds a four-inch height advantage over Reddy.

The only players to score multiple times for the Crimson were Simmons and Kaitlin Martin. Freshman goalkeeper Katherine Martino struggled in net, as she was pummeled with 44 shots.

However, the Minutewomen have had difficulty this season with finishing games, especially with a large lead. Against Holy Cross (1-2) on Feb. 21, UMass surrendered a 5-0 first half lead and only managed one goal during the final 30 minutes.

But it appears that the team has learned its lesson. The Maroon and White scored the first four goals of the second half and held Harvard scoreless until past the midpoint of that period.

"In the past we would score in runs," Venechanos said. "We talked this week about being more consistent and being able to put a team away. We were able to do that in the first half and we got our lead, it was very hard for Harvard to come back once we had the momentum on our side."

Another area of evident improvement between the team's opening loss to Holy Cross is the reduction in the number of fouls. UMass committed 24 infractions against the Crusaders, slimming that number down to 13 on Saturday. In fact, Harvard was whistled for more than double the fouls the Maroon and White committed.

An improvement Venechanos attributes to her team gaining experience.

"I think it's just our team playing more games, getting used to the referees and cleaning up our game a little bit," Venechanos said.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SET YOURSELF COMICS
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

5	9	4	1		8
			5	6		9
	7				9
	1	3				4	8
				4
	5	7				6	9
			3				7
		6		8	7
			6		5	3	4	8

QUOTE OF THE DAY

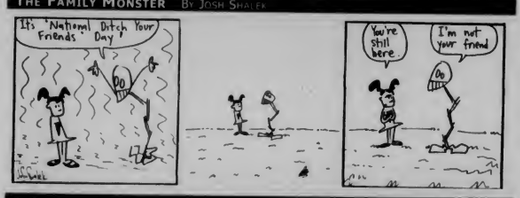
"It's practically impossible to look at a penguin and feel angry."

-Joe Moore

PAUL By Brian O'Keefe

BEWARE THE IDES OF MARCH!!
DO YOU EVEN KNOW WHAT THAT MEANS?
OH, LIKE YOU DO?
I DIDN'T BRING IT UP!!
PRETTY SURE YOU DID.
AAH, I COULD KILL YOU SOMETIMES!
UMOA, BEWARE THE CRANKY GIRLFRIEND. AH, I DIDN'T!
KIMBA GOT TROUBLING OF MY OUR RIGHT NOW!!

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek



A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

I DON'T REMEMBER ANY OF THESE QUESTIONS FROM MY NOTES.
BUT I CAN BLUFF MY WAY THROUGH IT AS LONG AS I FILL IN THE BLANKS WITH A BUNCH OF STUFF I MAKE UP.
PROBABLY WHY THEY CALL IT A "MAKE UP" TEST.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Jesse Steiger

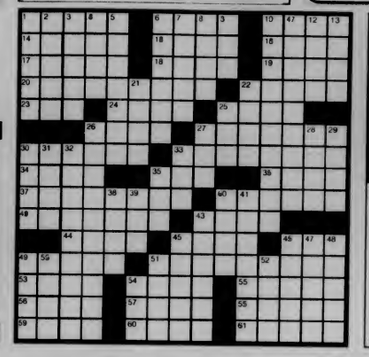
Of course we can't tell Pam and Melissa we've found Paradise on Earth.
Why should we share this glorious oasis?
Friendship?
Karma?
It's meant to be fought over to the death, it necessary
Hence the term, Paradise

ACROSS
1 Take down a peg
6 Piercing tools
10 Qualified
14 Actor Savalas
15 Bridle strap
16 Hard landing
17 Actor Davis
18 Chutzpah
19 Walk to and fro
20 Mockery for law students
22 Hiding place
23 The Razor's Edge
24 Colorado tribe
25 Visible impression
26 Makes up one's mind
27 Ms. Parker Bowles
30 Nevertheless
33 Ratification
34 Hamlet, e.g.
35 Shack
36 Well, ___ that special
37 Beings
40 $100 bills
42 Those in want
43 "Fargo" director
44 Uncommon
45 Makes a wager
46 Crone
49 Holy hymn
51 Water border
53 Island near Corsica
54 Young men
55 British peers
56 Act peeved
57 Macpherson of "Sirens"
58 TV movie critic
59 Shade source
60 Sandra and Ruby
61 Tender places

DOWN
1 Tiny particles
2 Stupefy with drink
3 FDR's biographer
4 Narrow cut
5 Optic-wash applicators
6 Debates
7 Has on
8 Light tune
9 NBC classic
10 Specter
11 Exclude
12 Scottish lake
13 Fencing sword
21 Italian eight
22 Steep outdoors
25 Chinese chairman
26 Body of water near Syracuse
27 Summer hrs. in Chicago
28 Solitary
29 Aardvark snack
30 Biblical garden
31 Wind indicator
32 Having a door?
33 Eur. nation
35 All of the guys
38 School period
39 Dander
40 Bivouac beds
41 Settles snugly
43 Discontinues
45 Founder of modern chemistry
46 Employer, initially
47 Writer Gide
48 Prose romances
49 Pain in the neck
50 Disparaging remark
51 "Mona Lisa" singer
52 Gray wolf
54 Place for the night

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DELANO'S
$5 PITCHERS
$2 VODKA WELL DRINKS
GET YOUR BUTT DOWNTOWN!
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"



Submit your comics!

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Grow a crazy Egyptian beard and refer to yourself as the son or daughter of Isis.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Is it possible to whine about how much pain you're in after throat surgery?

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Knowing Pig Latin does not mean you are bilingual. However, knowing Klingon does.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
To shower or not to shower, that is the question. Cologne...that is the answer.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
If you want to make a force field, wear waterproof clothing and jump in a pool.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Simply put, there are a lot of people on this earth who look like horses. Long face, etc.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are amazing at the long performance that is life. Even Tom Hanks is impressed.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
People in dress shoes are much harder to trust than people in sneakers. That's a fact.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Baby blue is quite possibly the best color ever, but the name is a little creepy.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Nicholas Cage knows many secrets, including the whereabouts of your TV remote.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
The spark of an old love will reignite. Bludgeon it to death with a fire blanket.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Sometimes B.O. can be fun, but not when it smells like Cool Ranch Doritos.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Global Express Tours Spring Break Montreal Party Weekends from $99 Complete bus, hotels, & clubs. Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

APARTMENT FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house-2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus $2,900/mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable telephone Internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/ office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housinf available plus salary. 508-228-3942

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

The UPS Store Part-time. 20-25 hours per week. Busy, multi-tasking, friendly atmosphere. Packing, sales, customer service experience a plus. Outgoing, detail oriented personality needed. Some lifting required. Apply in person at 6 University Drive (next to Gold's Gym).

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton Cathedral ceiling, skylites, hardwood floors, 4-5 bdrms. 9/1 $1950. 413-730-6660

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 5, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Title Town

MICHAEL PHILLIS / COLLEGIAN

Senior James Life had six points in Saturday's 71-67 win over Saint Joseph's in the final game of the regular season. Life ranks fourth on UMass in scoring with 11.2 points per game.

Minutemen share Atlantic 10 crown with Xavier after win

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a 71-67 victory over the Saint Joseph's Hawks on the road in Philadelphia Saturday, the Massachusetts men's basketball team tied Xavier atop the Atlantic 10 with identical 13-3 records and share the regular season A-10 Championship.

It is the first regular season conference championship since the 1996 season, John Calipari and Marcus Camby's final campaign in Amherst.

The Minutemen receive a first-round bye for the A-10 Tournament – which starts on Wednesday – and play the winner of No. 7 Saint Louis/ No. 10 Duquesne in the second round on Thursday night at 6:30 p.m.

UMass	71
SJU	67

"That was as wild as a place we have played all season," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "That was as good an old-fashioned end-of-the-season basketball game. They gave us their best shots and we had to fight to win as hard as we could. We got unusually tired as the game went on because of how hard the teams were playing. We made a few big plays."

Sophomore guard Chris Lowe came up with a timely steal at the 3:17 mark with his team down by three points. Lowe picked the pocket of St. Joe's guard D.J. Rivera at midcourt and went in for the basket and the foul.

Lowe knocked down the free throw to tie the game at 63, and the Minutemen finished the game on an 8-4 run.

"Chris Lowe's steal was huge," Ford said. "I thought we were starting to drag a little bit. We had to fight hard and he did. That play made all the difference. We made big stops at the end of the game. We struggled defensively for 35 minutes as they kept scoring, but in the end we came up big with defense."

Ford cited senior Brandon Thomas as a main catalyst for the victory. "Brandon Thomas was terrific," Ford said. "Defensively, he did a great job. Not to take anything away from Saint Joseph's, we are struggling on defense and from the foul line."

Junior Gary Forbes led the Minutemen in scoring with 13 points and scored a bucket just inside the 3:00 mark to give UMass a lead that it would hang onto for the rest of the game.

SJU's loss to the Minutemen marks its third straight loss to end the season, and plays in the opening

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

UMass earns home ice by beating Maine

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For just the second time in the building's history, the Mullins Center will host the first round of the Hockey East playoffs. Thanks to a sweep of Maine, 3-1 and 5-3, this weekend, the Massachusetts hockey team locked up the fourth and final home-ice spot in the postseason.

With Vermont's loss and tie to UMass Lowell this weekend, Maine finished the season tied with the Catamounts in fourth place. However, the Black Bears own the tiebreaker, thus earning them a trip back to Amherst this coming weekend for the best-of-three series.

UMass	3
Maine	1

UMass	5
Maine	3

The Minutemen took advantage of a miscue from an unlikely Maine player, Josh Soares, to break a 2-2 tie just shy of the 8-minute mark of the third. UMass was on the power play and Soares tried to clear the puck from behind his own net. But he didn't get much on it and slid the puck directly in front of his own goaltender. Matt Anderson recognized the mistake and broke for the net.

He gained control of the puck in the low slot and let go a wrist shot that beat Maine goalie Dave Wilson over his left shoulder. After the game, Anderson said he was prepared for that specific situation because UMass had practiced it during the week.

"I started creeping in," said Anderson, of when he saw the scrum behind the net. "I picked my head up for a quick second and just kind of drove it."

Nine minutes later it appeared Matt Burto sealed the win for the Minutemen with a rebound goal to make it 4-2, but the Black Bears never gave up and made the game interesting.

Billy Ryan scored with 1:16 remaining in regulation, quieting the Mullins Center crowd while breathing new life into his team. Whitehead pulled Wilson with less than a minute to go, opening the door for UMass freshman Brett Watson to score an empty-net goal with two ticks remaining in regulation.

There wasn't much action to speak of during Saturday night's first period – that is until just before the teams went to the locker room. Despite being on the short side of play, it was UMass that broke the scoreless tie. The goal was a first for the Minutemen this season because it was scored shorthanded.

Mark Matheson scored the first goal for the

See HOCKEY on page 7

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior forward Matt Burto scored the game-winning goal in Saturday night's 5-3 win over No. 9 Maine. The Mass Attack swept the Black Bears over the weekend and now has home-ice advantage in the first round of the Hockey East Tournament, which starts on Friday against Maine.

NADAV ADLER / COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Brian Jacovina had one assist in Saturday's 7-6 home opening loss to Yale. The Minutemen travel to Harvard next Saturday in search of their first win of the season.

Early season struggles for UM

Yale hands Maroon and White its second consecutive loss

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Offensive woes continue to plague the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team. The Minutemen scored just six goals for the second consecutive game, losing to Yale on Saturday, 7-6.

The loss drops UMass to 0-2 on the young season. Last Saturday the Minutemen dropped their season-opener to Hofstra, 8-6.

UMass	6
Yale	7

"We stunk," UMass coach Greg Cannella said, concerning his team's offense. "We need to score. We had opportunities, we have to finish them. We need to play a little bit more off the ball."

UMass goes back on the road this weekend to face Harvard. Game time in Cambridge is set for 1 p.m.

After playing back and forth for much of the game, Yale (2-0) seized the momentum for good midway through the fourth. The Bulldogs scored two goals in a span of 17 seconds to bring them within one, and then tie the score. Both goals were scored by Kyle Washabaugh.

His first score came with 7:37 remaining in regulation. Jonathan Koeing hit Washabaugh with a pass as he cut to the net. He cradled once and fired an underhand shot that beat UMass goalie Doc Schneider.

On his second tally, Washabaugh controlled the ball to Schneider's right. He cut to the net and fired a bounce shot that beat the goalie on the left side.

The Bulldogs then used their newfound momentum to put the game away with 3:20 remaining. Koeing scored the goal on an unassisted effort. He curled around the net while UMass' Sam Moody applied pressure. Moody pushed Koeing to the turf, but not before he got off a lunging shot that beat Schneider.

Then in the middle of his team's clear, with just over one minute remaining, Cannella tried calling a time out. But instead the Minutemen

See M. LAX on page 7

LASME GRABS HANDFUL OF AWARDS PAGE 10

THE REVELATIONS OF NEON BIBLE PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SNOW / WIND : HI: 16 LO: 3 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 2007

Assault and battery incident raises concern

Stonewall Center, Pride Alliance, LGBT respond to act

BY STELLA CERNAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A reported assault and battery on Feb. 28, in the Southwest Residential Area, which was allegedly coupled with numerous homophobic comments towards another student, has created concern on the University of Massachusetts campus, especially among the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender (LGBT) community.

To direct these concerns, the Stonewall Center of Crampton residence hall and the Pride Alliance at UMass are holding a forum tonight at 7 p.m. The event, as the Center's director Brett-Genny Janiczek Beemyn states, "is an open forum for people to express their feelings about the incident and its effects on them and the larger UMass community."

An announcement from the center states, the "horrific incident cannot be downplayed or dismissed as a random act of violence," and suggests that the forum enable students, staff and faculty to discover what should be done in response.

The Stonewall Center emerged in 1984 out of concerns following a series of homophobic incidents. The Center provides support, advocacy and programming for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender students.

Brett-Genny Janiczek Beemyn (left) joined the Stonewall Center staff in 2006. "Ze" (the gender-neutral pronoun for he/she) believes that regardless of the victim's sexual orientation, the incident should be a major deal on campus.

Tonight's forum will not only include students, but UMass staff and faculty as well. Representatives from local police, administration and leaders of the LGBT community will also be attending.

"The campus community and the UMass Police take this type of incident seriously, and we call in additional staff to investigate and address this case in a prompt fashion," said Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archibald.

Although the events have triggered concern among students, both the police and Brett-Genny Janiczek Beemyn, member of the Stonewall Center, emphasize the incident's importance among the UMass community as a whole.

Yet, in the wake of last week's incident some students have questioned the assault's classification of a hate crime. In an interview following the incident, friends of the victim have commented on the student's sexual orientation.

"I don't really understand why he got attacked for being gay," said Evan Swisher, former fellow member of the UMass men's swim team in a previous Collegian article. "I don't think this matters, but he's not gay."

However, for Beemyn, the Stonewall Center and members of the LGBT community, the fact that last week's victim was attacked as a result of assumed sexual preference – false or not – does matter.

"Hate crimes are based on perceived

See FORUM on page 3

New Hampshire man arrested for revealing firearm

Two men flee the scene after one man points gun at partygoers

BY KEVIN FOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two men were arrested at Alpine Commons after one of the men pointed a firearm at attendees of a party at the apartment complex.

Cavenack Bernadin, 22, of Ridge, N.H. is accused of waving a 9mm handgun at 200-250 partygoers inside an Alpine Commons apartment on Belchertown Road in Amherst, at 3:16 a.m. Sunday morning, according to the Amherst Police Department.

Bernadin and Christopher Williams, 21, of Peekskill N.Y. face charges of unlicensed possession of a firearm, breach of the peace while armed, and unlicensed possession of ammunition, according to the police.

Bernadin and Williams were stopped in a vehicle before exiting the parking lot of the complex while attempting to flee the scene. A witness reported that the gun was placed in the trunk of the vehicle, which police later found, states an Amherst Police Department press release.

Representatives of the Alpine Commons management office say it is yet to be determined if any disciplinary action will be taken as a result of the party. The management office didn't receive any complaints about excessive noise on Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

This was Bernadin's second brush with the law in the past six months. He was arrested by the UMass Police Department for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest after a disturbance at the Campus Center on Nov. 5, 2006.

Also arrested for the same November disturbance were Kevin M. Louis, 19, of Hyde Park, Mass., Rashaad R. Bryant, 20, of Randolph, Mass., Brian R. Pierre, 19, of Brooklyn, N.Y. and Woody Pierre Jr., 20, of Boston, Mass.

Neither Bernadin nor Williams are students at one of the areas five colleges. Police say they don't have any ties to the area.

Kevin Foley can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu

Snow doesn't stop UM Buildings and Grounds workers

Employees keep campus clean and safe for students and faculty

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the past few weeks, there have been several days where students at the University of Massachusetts woke up to a fresh blanket of snow on the ground. High hopes lead students to the University's Emergency Closing Web site to see whether the school was closed.

Instead, students were left with the message "Campus is open today" in bold print, while UMass grounds workers drove by dorm windows in their snow plows.

A possibility of a repeat snow day like on Valentine's Day is diminished, and students rush to finish the homework they stopped doing the previous night when it started snowing.

Although students may feel like the snow removal crew has partial blame for the lack of snow days, those employees of the Physical Plant are just doing their job – and doing it well.

According to UMass Physical Plant's Building and Grounds Services Assistant Director Pam Monn, a lot of work goes into snow removal on campus. When snow is predicted, even one inch of it, Monn's staff meets to decide how to respond.

"The typical process for us depends on many things," said Monn. "We need to know what events are going on around campus, what time to act if we do get snow, the time predicted for snowfall, and where the students are. If it's a Saturday or a day in January over winter break we will act accordingly."

Most of the time the grounds services workers will have about three to four hours to clean up the entire campus. This includes 94 acres of parking lots, 50 miles of sidewalks, 20 miles of roads, entrances of building and handicap ramps, according to Monn.

They are also responsible for UMass' satellite and radio towers in Hadley, Sunderland and Mount Lincoln. When it isn't snowing out, the department's responsibilities are landscaping, waste collection and recycling.

The decision to close, delay or open campus must be completed by 4 a.m., which leaves the workers little time to clean up the campus.

The number of staff workers on campus range from 10 to 50, depending on the size of the storm. But the previous storm on Feb. 14 required custodial staff, landscape servicing crew and a volunteer shovel team – a total of about 200 workers – to help clear campus.

Though in the past, the University hasn't closed campus more than three

See SNOW on page 3

Up to 50 ground service employees clear 94 acres of parking lots, 50 miles of sidewalks, and 20 miles of roads on campus when a snow storm hits.

And the A-10 Player of the Year Award goes to...

Senior forward Stephane Lasme earned four different honors from the Atlantic 10 Monday. In addition to being named the A-10 Player of the Year and Defensive Player of the Year, Lasme was named a member of the All-Conference Team and the All-Defensive Team.

Controversial surveillance programs approved

BY HOPE YEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – A White House privacy board is giving its stamp of approval to two of the Bush administration's controversial surveillance programs – electronic eavesdropping and financial tracking – and says they do not violate citizens' civil liberties.

Democrats newly in charge of Congress quickly criticized the findings, which they said were questionable given some of the board members' close ties with the Bush administration.

"Then current findings and any additional conclusions they reach will be taken with a grain of salt until they become fully independent," said Rep. Bennie Thompson (news, bio, voting record), D-Miss., who chairs the House Homeland Security Committee.

After operating mostly in secret for a year, the five-member Privacy and Civil Liberties Board is preparing to release its first report to Congress next week.

The report finds that both the National Security Agency's warrantless eavesdropping program and the Treasury Department's monitoring of international banking transactions have sufficient privacy protections, three board members told The Associated Press in telephone interviews.

Both programs have multiple layers of review before sensitive information is accessed, they said.

"We looked at the program, we visited NSA and met with the top people all the way down to those doing the hands-on work," said Carol Dinkins, a Houston lawyer and former Reagan administration assistant attorney general who chairs the board.

"The program is structured and

See SURVEILLANCE on page 3

House Committee on Homeland Security Chairman Rep. Bennie G. Thompson, D-Miss., criticizes eavesdropping and financial tracking programs.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 94

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherd Wolek
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamieson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Adam Staggs
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Penz
FINANCE MANAGER David Vallade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Fredericks
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolsanits
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonsakunkul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Roe
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Write for news!

news@dailycollegian.com

U.N. predicts rise in Afghan opium industry

By Jason Straziuso
Associated Press

An Afghan boy works at a poppy field in the Panjwayi district of Kandahar in 2006. Afghanistan's opium crop is likely to rise again this year after production of the drug saw a record 50 percent jump in 2006, the United Nations warned on Monday in a new blow to eradication efforts.

KABUL, Afghanistan — A "cancer of insurgency" in southern Afghanistan could drive the 2007 opium poppy harvest to record levels, the U.N. drug agency chief said Monday.

The U.N. Office on Drugs and Crime predicted that last year's harvest record would be broken by an increase in 15 provinces, including Helmand — the world's largest poppy-growing region and the scene of a growing number of attacks by Taliban fighters who use opium to fund their insurgency.

The office said in a new report that, while cultivation was expected to drop in central and northern Afghanistan, the drug trade is flourishing in the south.

"On balance, the increase in the south may be greater than the decline elsewhere, causing a possible further rise in Afghanistan's aggregate drug supply this year," the U.N. said. A strong eradication campaign could lower the year-end totals, it said.

Antonio Maria Costa, UNODC executive director, said the increase in the south was a result of security problems. Many southern regions have no government presence, and farmers act with impunity. Taliban fighters protect opium growers and transport and tax the crop, he said.

"It's clear that the insurgents are deriving an income, which they use to pay salaries for their foot soldiers (and) to buy weapons," he said. "All of this has created quite a cancer of insurgency and illicit drug cultivation that has to be cut through in the years to come."

Last year, opium cultivation rose an alarming 59 percent, deepening fears that Afghanistan is rapidly becoming a narco-state.

The U.N. said poppies were cultivated this year in each of 28 villages visited in Helmand province and in 27 of 29 villages visited in neighboring Kandahar, the Taliban's former stronghold.

It also predicted a sharp increase in cultivation in Nangarhar — touted in recent years as an example of the success of efforts to persuade farmers to grow licit crops — as well as in Kunar and Lurgan provinces.

The U.N. saw a decrease in cultivation in seven mostly northern provinces, and said there was an indication of a split in attitudes between the north and south.

President Hamid Karzai has vowed to rid Afghanistan of opium. International donors are directing hundreds of millions of dollars in development aid to rural areas to make it profitable for farmers to grow wheat, or plant orchards. Eradication teams have stepped up their campaign to destroy opium poppies in the fields before harvest.

However, critics say corrupt Afghan authorities and security forces are themselves heavily involved in the trade and are unlikely to mount a serious crackdown, while Karzai is wary of a rural backlash against his already weak government.

Costa said a system of incentives for farmers in the north was working well, but that only 1 percent of $100 million in assistance funds had been dispersed by the Afghan government and the international community.

He said the eradication effort needed to be increased to be effective. Last year, about 10 percent of the crop was eradicated, but Costa said that should rise to close to 30 percent.

"If farmers have one chance out of three or four (of having fields eradicated) they will think twice and consequently next year they may consider raising cattle or chicken or cultivating sugar beets," he said.

U.S. Ambassador Ronald Neumann called Helmand a "gigantic problem" that prevents people from seeing progress made in other parts of the country.

"Helmand is threatening the success of the rest of the nation," he told The Associated Press last week after flying over the green poppy fields of southern Afghanistan.

The U.N. said poppies earn an estimated $2,000 an acre, about 10 times the income from legal crops.

"We need to change the risk/reward balance for farmers, increasing both the attractiveness of licit activity and the retribution for not complying with the law," he said.

Afghan drug production already accounts for more than 90 percent of global supply of opium, the raw material for heroin.

Two Afghan men look at a public awareness billboard about drug addiction in Kabul, where the opium drug trade flourishes in the South.

For you, good enough just isn't good enough.

Temple's programs in Tourism, Hospitality, Sport, and Recreation Management will help you be a winner in the game of life by providing you with leadership tools and networking resources that will ultimately lead you to success. The ball is in your court; take it and run with it.

To learn more, visit us at www.temple.edu/STHM or join us for one of our upcoming Monday information sessions on main campus, 1700 N. Broad St., Room 412, at noon or 5 p.m.:

March 12 | April 9 | May 7

School of Tourism and Hospitality Management TEMPLE UNIVERSITY

So much data, so little space

By Brian Bergstein
Associated Press

BOSTON — A new study that estimates how much digital information the world is generating (hint: a lot) finds that for the first time, there's not enough storage space to hold it all. Good thing we delete some stuff.

The report, assembled by the technology research firm IDC, sought to account for all the ones and zeros that make up photos, videos, e-mails, Web pages, instant messages, phone calls and other digital content zipping around. The researchers also assumed that on average, each digital file gets replicated three times.

Add it all up and IDC determined that the world generated 161 billion gigabytes — 161 exabytes — of digital information last year.

Oh, the equivalents! That's like 12 stacks of books that each reach from the Earth to the sun. Or you might think of it as 3 million times the information in all the books ever written, according to IDC. You'd need more than 2 billion of the most capacious iPods on the market to get 161 exabytes.

The previous best estimate came from researchers at the University of California, Berkeley, who totaled the globe's information production at 5 exabytes in 2003.

But that report followed a different trail. It included non-electronic information, such as analog radio broadcasts or printed office memos, and tallied how much space that would consume if digitized. And it counted original data only, not all the times things got copied.

In comparison, the IDC numbers were made much higher by including content as it was created and as it was reproduced — for example, as a digital TV file was made and every time it landed on a screen. If IDC tracked original data only, its result would have been 40 exabytes.

Still, even the 2003 figure of 5 exabytes is enormous — it was said at the time to be 37,000 libraries of Congress.

So why does it matter how much more enormous the number is now?

For one thing, said IDC analyst John Gantz, it's important to understand the effects of the factors behind the information explosion — such as the profusion of surveillance cameras and regulatory rules for corporate data retention.

In fact, the supply of data technically outstrips the supply of places to put it.

IDC estimates that the world had 185 exabytes of storage available last year and will have 601 exabytes in 2010. But the amount of stuff generated is expected to jump from 161 exabytes last year to 988 exabytes (closing in on 1 zettabyte) in 2010.

"If you had a run on the bank, you'd be in trouble," Gantz said. "If everybody stored every digital bit, there wouldn't be enough room."

Fortunately, storage space is not actually scarce and continues to get cheaper. That's because not everything gets warehoused. Not only do e-mails get deleted, but some digital signals are not made to linger, like the contents of phone calls. But even if the IDC findings don't raise the prospect that disk drives will be virtually bursting at the seams, the study has intriguing implications. Among them: We'll need better technologies to help secure, purse, find and recover usable material in this universe of data.

Chuck Hollis, vice president of technology alliances at EMC Corp., the data-management company that sponsored the IDC research and contributed to the earlier Berkeley studies, said the new report made him wonder whether enough is being done to save the digital data for posterity.

"Someone has to make a decision about what to store and what not," Hollis said. "How do we preserve our heritage? Who's responsible for keeping all of this stuff around so our kids can look at it, so historians can look at it? It's not clear."

Two researchers who were not involved in the study said that because IDC used many of its own internal market analyses, the work will be hard to replicate and confirm. Those researchers, James Short and Roger Bohn of the University of California, San Diego, plan to follow the Berkeley methods in a follow-up report.

Bohn said it would be wise to take IDC's figures "with a certain gram of salt," but he added: "I don't think the numbers are going to turn out to be wildly off target."

Raj Winder-Kaur dismantles computer components at the Hewlett-Packard recycling facility in Roseville, Calif. The computer industry is ramping up its campaign against electronic waste, a byproduct of technology's relentless expansion.

Angry Alaska moose charges helicopter, brings it to ground

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — A helicopter is not necessarily a match for an angry moose. Instead of lying down after being shot with a tranquilizer dart, a moose charged a hovering helicopter used by a wildlife biologist, damaging the aircraft's tail rotor and forcing it to the ground.

Neither the pilot nor the biologist was injured, but the moose was maimed by the spinning rotor and had to be euthanized, wildlife officials said.

"It just had to be one of those quirky circumstances. Even dealing with bears and goats and moose and wolves, this is pretty unusual and truly a very unique situation," said Doug Larsen, regional supervisor for the Division of Wildlife Conservation.

Biologist Kevin White was aboard the chartered helicopter on Saturday for a study of moose near Gustavus, a community of 459 people about 50 miles northwest of Juneau in southeast Alaska. Moose outnumber humans there 2-to-1, White has written in an essay for the Department of Fish and Game Web site.

He shot the animal with a tranquilizer dart, Larsen said, and the pilot maneuvered the helicopter to keep the animal from slipping into a tight space or collapsing in water and drowning.

"The moose would start to move, and then the helicopter would back off and try to keep the moose out in the open," Larsen said.

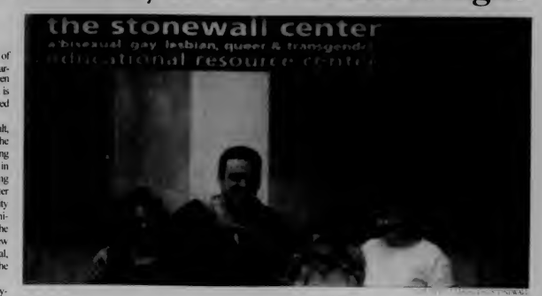
But instead of moving toward open space, the moose charged the helicopter.

"As the animal got closer and closer to going down, an animal sort of loses its thinking – its ability to rationalize what's in its best interest," Larsen said.

Associated Press

LGBT community to hold forum tonight

FORUM from page 1



The Stonewall Center of UMass will be holding a forum tonight for people to express and respond to an assault and battery incident that occurred last week, where homophobic comments were shouted at the victim.

identity," said Beemyn. "Regardless of whether the victim was gay, he apparently was targeted because he was seen as gay under the circumstances. What is important here is someone was attacked allegedly out of homophobia."

In contrast to last week's assault, UMass Amherst was named in the Advocate College Guide as being among the top 20 LGBT-friendly campuses in America in 2006. This reputation, along with programs like the Stonewall Center and the Pride Alliance, the University adheres to a strict policy of nondiscrimination towards sexual orientation. The state of Massachusetts is one of the few states where same-sex marriage is legal, a similar anti-discrimination policy the University follows.

"Hate crimes can happen anywhere," Beemyn explained. "The fact that this crime happened here does not mean that UMass and western Massachusetts are not largely LGBT-friendly places to live, work and attend school. San Francisco is arguably the most gay-friendly place in the country, and it has among the most anti-gay hate crimes," Beemyn continued. "Many LGBT people are comfortable being out here, so it can make them targets, at times, for hate crimes."

Beemyn and other from the Stonewall Center encourage members of the UMass community who wish to express their feelings about the incident to attend the forum in the Campus Center, to be held in 168C Campus Center. Those who cannot attend the event but would like to talk to someone about last week's incident are welcome to visit the Stonewall Center, located in Crampton residence hall.

The Stonewall Center's Web site provides information on tonight's forum, as well as a response to last week's violence.

Stella Gernack can be reached at gernack@student.umass.edu

Some states put untrained cops on duty

By Holbrook Mohr
Associated Press

This image taken from the Greenwood, Miss. High School security videotape shows police officer Casey Wiggins holding a gun on an unarmed teen after only four months of training.

ILLINOIS —Four months into his job, a police officer in Mississippi holds a gun to the head of an unarmed teenager and puts him in a chokehold. A rookie officer in Illinois gets into a car chase that kills a driver. And a new campus policeman in Indiana shoots an unarmed student to death. Some are blaming these harrowing episodes on what an Associated Press survey found is a common practice across the country: At least 30 states let some newly hired local law enforcement officers hit the streets with a gun, a badge and little or no training.

These states allow a certain grace period – six months or a year in most cases, two years in Mississippi and Wisconsin – before rookies must be sent to a police academy. In many cases, these recruits are supposed to be supervised by a full-fledged officer, but that does not always happen.

The risks, some say, are high.

"You wouldn't want a brain surgeon who isn't properly trained. Someone shouldn't be out there carrying a badge and a gun unless they are qualified to be out there," said Jeremy Spratt, program manager of the Missouri Peace Officer Standards and Training Program.

No one seems to know how many untrained recruits are on the streets. But the practice appears to be most common among small-town police forces and sheriff's departments.

Many police chiefs interviewed for this story said that for years, they have used less-than-fully-trained officers without problems, and they strongly defended the practice for reasons of money and manpower.

It allows departments to put new hires on the streets right away, without waiting for them to go through police academy training, which is usually a full-time, weeks- or months-long exercise during which the officer is not on duty but still on the payroll. In some places, there are waiting lists to get into the academy.

Also, some police forces see the grace period as a tryout, during which the department can decide whether the officer is going to work out before it invests thousands of dollars in police academy training. In several states, if a recruit graduates from the academy, the police force is reimbursed by the state, but not if the officer fails to finish.)

"It lets the officer work for the department for an amount of time to make sure that's what they want to do and make sure that's the right person for the job," said Batesville, Miss., Police Chief Gerald Legge. "We get some people that work a few weeks and say, 'This isn't what it was like on TV and this is not for me.'"

Chris Hollingsworth, 24, was hired two weeks ago by the Newton, Miss., police but is not scheduled to go to the academy until April. He said that he is working under the supervision other officers and that he isn't allowed to do much anyway.

"I can see how (the grace period) would be a positive thing as far as letting people see if this is what they want to do for a living," Hollingsworth said. "But I can also see how it would be a negative thing because you're a real big liability until you go through the training and there's not much you're allowed to do."

In 2003, Robert Duplain, a 24-year-old rookie police officer at Ball State University in Indiana, fatally shot a student – three rounds in the chest and one in the head. The officer is facing a wrongful-death lawsuit.

Duplain had taken only a 40-hour "pre-basic course" consisting of mostly online classes and firearms training, said Rusty Goodpaster, director of Indiana's police academy. Indiana law allows new hires up to one year to go through the police academy, but they can take on enforcement duties before then if they take the pre-basic course, Goodpaster said.

Police said the victim, Michael McKinney, 21, had lunged at the officer, who was responding to a burglary call. McKinney's family said he had gone to the wrong home after a night of drinking.

"When someone's put in a situation where they're given a firearm and they're not trained as they should be, you're asking for trouble," said Tim McKinney, the student's father.

A university attorney would not comment on specifics of the case.

In Illinois, Janice Cole, a 58-year-old nurse, died in 2004 when a police SUV driven by Sparta Police Officer Misty McPherson slammed into Cole's car during a chase.

Charles Chapman, the lawyer who helped Cole's family win $5.4 million in a lawsuit, said a policy that allows officers up to six months to enroll in the academy contributed to the woman's death. McPherson had not even started basic training.

"She didn't even know how to turn the sirens on," Chapman said.

Sparta's police chief did not return a call for comment.

In Mississippi, Greenwood Police Officer Casey Wiggins was captured by surveillance cameras at a high school in the Mississippi Delta in December, pointing his weapon at an unarmed student, 17-year-old James Marshall. Marshall, who was not disciplined by the school or charged with a crime, is suing for $2 million.

Police recruits in Mississippi have two years to get trained, during which time they are supposed to be supervised by a full-fledged officer. But no other office was visible in the surveillance tapes during the confrontation.

"Not only could Mr. Marshall have been killed, innocent bystanders could have been killed as well," said Carlos Moore, the student's lawyer. "Clearly, if Mr. Wiggins had been trained, he would have conducted himself in a more appropriate manner."

Wiggins, through his attorney, has said that he did no wrong and that Marshall resisted when the officer approached a group of students to see what they were up to. A hearing is set for March to determine if the officer should face charges.

Some states — Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah, Vermont and Wyoming — require training before officers are put on the force. Elsewhere, the rules are different.

"The minute I say, 'I do,' I can carry out the laws of small-town West Virginia," said Chuck Sadler, law enforcement training coordinator for West Virginia, where recruits have 90 days to apply to the police academy.

Some states like Tennessee, which allows officers six months to attend a training academy, have considered eliminating the grace period, said Brian Grisham, executive secretary of Tennessee's Peace Officers Standards and Training.

"The days of 'Barney Fife, here's your gun and go' are over. You have to be trained first," Grisham said. "There's too much liability."

White House approves eavesdropping implemented in a way that is properly protective and attentive to civil liberties," she said.

SURVEILLANCE from page 1

Some board members were troubled by the Homeland Security Department's error-ridden no-fly lists, which critics say use subjective or inconclusive data to flag suspect travelers.

One area the board will focus on in its report is the computerized anti-terrorism screening system recently announced by DHS and used for years without travelers' knowledge to assign risk assessments to millions of Americans who fly abroad.

Lanny Davis, a former Clinton White House counsel and the lone Democrat on the panel, described the board's first report to Congress as modest. He said most of the work in the past year was spent being briefed on the administration's surveillance programs.

"We felt reassured by the checks and balance concerns," Davis said. He said that after several classified briefings, members were impressed by the multiple layers of review, which included audit trails to track whoever has access to the data.

Still, Davis said he anticipated the board will continue to monitor the program as needed. "It would be a mistake if that was the end of the review," he said.

The board's initial findings come as Congress is moving forward on measures to give the board more authority and make it more independent of the president. Created in late 2004, the panel was established as a compromise between Congress and the White House after a recommendation by the Sept. 11 commission.

Both conservative and liberal civil liberties groups have urged the members to aggressively review the eavesdropping program and have questioned whether board members would stand up to the president if he were flouting the law.

In recent weeks, the administration has agreed to let a secret but independent panel of judges oversee the program. But many lawmakers and civil libertarians have remained skeptical about its legality, and the Justice Department's inspector general is investigating whether the agency used any of the information improperly.

Marc Rotenberg, executive director of the Electronic Privacy Information Center, called it absurd that the board effectively gave the eavesdropping program its stamp of approval even before the administration was forced to backtrack and submit it to court oversight.

"It is critical that Congress make the civil liberties board independent of the executive branch," he said.

The board does not have subpoena power, and the White House can change its annual reports before they go to Congress. The members serve at the pleasure of Bush, and Attorney General Alberto Gonzales has final say over whether officials must comply with the board's recommendations.

Separate House and Senate measures would require that the entire board – not just the chairman and vice chairman – be confirmed by the Senate.

The House version would also remove the board from the executive office of the president but keep it within the executive branch and give it subpoena power. The Senate version would keep the board within the executive office and allow it to ask the attorney general to issue subpoenas, with notice

Three bodies found in burning car in Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — The bodies of two children and an adult were found Monday in a car that was set on fire, authorities said.

The car was found ablaze in an industrial park area of Springfield shortly before 10 a.m., police Capt. Robert Cheetham said.

Dennis Leger, a spokesman for the fire department, said the bodies and the car's interior were burned beyond recognition. He said the children were "really, really young, maybe 2 or 3 years old."

"As fire fighters extinguished the fire they noticed there was somebody in the fire," he said. "By taking a closer look, there appeared to be two smaller bodies in there."

The car was in a parking lot away from other vehicles at Harvey Industries. Springfield arson and bomb squads were investigating.

—Associated Press

Norovirus sickens 124 students on N.J. college campus

FLORHAM PARK, N.J. — Fairleigh Dickinson University's Florham Park campus was recovering Monday from a suspected norovirus outbreak that has sickened at least 124 students, school officials said.

Students began falling sick Thursday, university spokesman Art Petrosemolo said. Twenty students were treated at a hospital and released last week and over the weekend. Others visited the health center. An undetermined number of faculty and staff members also were sickened, Petrosemolo said.

A dozen new cases were reported Monday, said Florham Park health officer Dr. George Van Orden.

"We have seen a decrease over time, so hopefully the controls are working," he said.

Cleaning crews were sent into dormitory bath rooms and dining halls, and the recreation center and pool were shut down for 24 hours for cleaning. Hand sanitizer was distributed at the library, computer labs and the dining hall, and students were urged to wash their sheets in hot water, Petrosemolo said.

The 24-hour virus is spread person-to-person and causes flu-like systems including nausea, vomiting and diarrhea.

Test results later this week should confirm the cause of the outbreak, Florham Park health officials said.

The campus has about 2,200 undergraduate and 1,500 graduate students.

Associated Press

University's ground workers get job done

SNOW from page 1

times during a school year, Monn says that every inch of snow takes a day to clean up. When it comes time to work, the staff uses a particular process to get the job done, she said.

"There are two zones of landscaping services on campus, divided by the campus pond," said Monn. "Each zone includes a supervisor who makes the decision on who to send out to plow, which is often determined by effectiveness, prior storm status and quality."

Monn said each zone takes care of its respective areas to clean the campus. First, a "zone-time" sanding machine in each zone covers the snow with a combination of road salt and Ice B'Gone, an environmentally safe de-icer. Then, about six plows cover the plow routes, which mainly include roads, driveways and sidewalks throughout campus. Finally, the landscape servicing crew, as well as custodial staff and volunteers shovel off stairs, handicap ramps and other hard-to-reach areas on the property.

When UMass decides to close its campus, it is because the roads are unsafe for students and staff to drive or walk. At 4 a.m. when the decision is made by a team of Physical Plant employees and UMass administration, snow removal workers are still out in full force.

"It is all about the safety of the campus community," said Monn. "The two deciding factors of a snow day are safety and timing, to make sure people will be able to safely travel back and forth from campus during the storm."

When UMass is closed for the day, the dining commons, health services, the police station and campus hotel remain open. Fine Arts Center and Mullins Center events are not included in the campus closing.

"If the weather is real terrible, and if the campus is already closed, we'll just do the same thing," said a Mullins Center administrative. "We'll post whether or not we'll be open for the event on our Web site as soon as we know."

So for those students who expect a snow day after seeing a couple flurries out their windows during the night, a smart idea would be to wake up on time and look forward to a chilly, but safe, walk to class.

"We are always preparing for campus to open on time," said Monn.

Holli Senbert can be reached at lsenbert@student.umass.edu

SPRING BREAK
service to and from the airport
4 to BOS ~ $60 each
4 to NYC ~ $90 each
4 to BDL ~ $55 each
Exclusive Car Services
877 695 4665

LIMO SERVICE 24/7/365 ANYWHERE ANYTIME

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Guilty by association

Domenic Poli

My beautiful girlfriend is studying abroad in Italy right now and I miss her terribly. Even more disheartening than not having seen her in over two months is hearing of the problems she's facing over there simply because she is an American.

Let me elaborate.

About a month ago she walked into a coffee shop so her friend could buy a snack. After going a few minutes without receiving help from the employees behind the counter, the friend was about to ask for some service when one of the Italian workers gave with a snooty, Mediterranean "No." When my girlfriend and her friend asked why, the employee responded (in accented English), "Because you come from a country where George Bush is your president."

Stunned, my girlfriend just said, "Buona giornata (Have a good day)," and she and her friend turned around and left.

The aforementioned story was not exaggerated or made up – it really happened. And she said it wasn't a one-time thing.

In fact, more and more often American citizens are experiencing this kind of hostility when touring throughout the world and it seems most of it stems from the actions of our commander in chief, i.e. his decision to invade Iraq.

In March 2003, President Bush tried to gain international support for the invasion, but came up a little short of his goal. France neglected to send troops, Canada neglected to send troops, Germany neglected to send troops. Even Egypt and Israel (arguably our two greatest allies in the Middle East) refused to support the war against Saddam Hussein.

These nations, and others that did not send support, said Saddam did not have the weapons of mass destruction (WMD) Bush claimed were there. They further asserted that invading Iraq would distract us from the real war on terror as well as from countries like Iran and North Korea – both of which were reportedly making greater strides toward dangerous WMDs.

And the 30 countries that did send aid (the coalition of the willing) did so with much reluctance and protest from their respective governments' political rivals and numerous citizens and activists.

The coalition of the willing included allies such as the UK, Poland, South Korea, Australia, the Philippines and…you guessed it: Italy.

In March of 2003, against strong domestic opposition, then-Prime Minister, Silvio Berlusconi, sent 3,000 Italian troops to Iraq – the fourth most after the US, UK and South Korea – in order to assist the nation he said "is the best friend of my country."

The war now reaches its fourth anniversary later this month – and not a lot of progress has been made.

The mistakes our administration makes here are affecting the wellbeing of Americans elsewhere.

Just look at the facts.

The WMDs found by military forces proved too old to be used as designed (according to the U.S. Department of Defense, the administration's own inspectors and Charles Duelfer, the chief weapons inspector) and 16 different U.S. spy agencies say that the war has made terrorism worse because it has fueled another generation of Islamic extremists.

Since the invasion, the land of my ancestors has amassed the third highest number of soldier casualties (33) of any coalition nation stationed in Iraq.

It is for these reasons (and others) that Americans are facing resentment when touring foreign countries.

The mistakes our administration makes here are affecting the wellbeing of Americans elsewhere. Italians are sick and tired of our establishment's faulty decisions resulting in the deaths of their soldiers…and, quite frankly, I don't blame them. But how is it the fault of my girlfriend – or any other American, for that matter?

Newsflash Europe: many U.S. tourists hate President Bush and his policies. And even if they don't, the unpopular decisions of a nation's government cannot be blamed on the citizens of that nation. It's just like how Italians/Italian-Americans were not responsible for the Nazi-supporting actions of Benito Mussolini during World War II.

The carnage that this mess has caused is being blamed on innocent Americans like my girlfriend, and it's just not right.

I know that there are no Italians or other foreign nationals reading this, but I feel obligated to try to protect all of my fellow citizens.

Americans tour the world probably more than any other group of people in it (in fact most countries' economies flourish because of it) and it's not fair that they get harassed because of our president.

So, to any foreigners out there who might hold a grudge against Americans, not every loud tourist with red, white and blue on their lips agrees with the policies of President Bush.

The consistent harassment our citizens endure has lead to many of them placing Canadian flags on their bags in an effort to avoid a tongue-lashing. But should we be denying our identity as Americans? Despite the war, our country is a great one. We need to be proud of our nation and the ideals for which it stands.

I'll be visiting my girlfriend over Spring Break and I won't be shouting the National Anthem in the middle of a piazza, but if someone approaches me, and asks if I come from the U.S., I for one will proudly say, "Yes I am…and I'm not ashamed of it."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli a student.umass.edu

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Send an e-mail to:

LETTERS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pinky got a Brain

Debbie Friedman

Will the real Christian conservatives please stand up? That was the question being asked last week, when elite members of the evangelical posse met in their secret underground bunker in Florida. The group, who officially work under the name Council for National Policy, were not meeting for their usual discussions on how to take over the world. Instead, they met in a state of near panic, over the absence of a strong Christian Conservative candidate for 2008.

According to a Feb. 25, New York Times article, members of the Council are experiencing "great anxiety," over having no champion for their cause. They know that George W. Bush will soon be entering his final lap, and as of now, there is no one for him to hand off the baton of incompetence to. Without a smooth transition, all the effort put into demonizing homosexuals, restricting medical advances and invading private life will be at risk. This is not something the Council for National Policy, Dick Cheney or the brain of the whole operation, Karl Rove, takes lightly.

It's clear McCain has to do a lot more repenting of his sins before he will be welcomed into the arms of the God squad.

However, there are many republicans who are bending over backwards to seem appealing to the Christian conservative crowd. John McCain is one displaying pathetic brown nosing towards men he once called "agents of intolerance." It is a sad sight. But despite his endless kiss ass politics, Jerry Falwell and the crew appear to see right through him. It's clear McCain has to do a lot more repenting of his sins before he will be welcomed into the arms of the God squad.

Rudy Giuliani is another front-runner who also does not have a prayer for winning over these men. His liberal record on abortion and gay rights combined with affairs and divorces are more than enough to keep him out of consideration.

And Mitt Romney, well he's a Mormon. So no amount of conservative policy could possible allow him to receive the backing of a purely Christian base. That is, unless things get really desperate.

Some lesser-known republicans have been jumping through hoops for the cool kids of the Christian conservative movement as well, including Gov. Mike Huckabee of Arkansas and Representative Duncan Hunter of California. For now though, Jerry Falwell and the gang are still holding out for a hero, giving them plenty of reason to panic. The source of this panic is not solely over the lack of a 2008 candidate, though. Instead it stems from the fear these men have of losing dramatic amounts of power and influence within the American political landscape.

"In the aftermath of the stinging defeats in the midterm election, and with discontent over the Iraq war weighing heavily on the public, some Christian conservatives worry that they may find themselves on the sidelines of the presidential race," writes New York Times reporter, David Kirk Patrick. This certainly could be the case, as people on all sides of the political spectrum are growing tired of the Bush administrations abuse of power more everyday.

Yet despite all this, you can be sure that "the brain" (Karl Rove) of the Bush administration is working day and night to revamp the operation. Somewhere in D.C., he hides, goggles on and beaker in hand, desperately trying to keep the powerful fusion of conservativism and Christianity from exploding in his face. And while the odds are against him, he does have a history of pulling off some impressive things. In fact, over the last eight years, Rove has proven himself to be on the same level as some of the most famous evil geniuses this world has ever seen – one of them being a villain who interestingly enough is also named "the brain."

Even though this other brain is actually a cartoon mouse, the similarities between the two characters are striking. Both are devious, power hungry figures obsessed with taking over the world. And both will stop at nothing to achieve their goals.

But these evil geniuses have one major difference – a sidekick named Pinky. Pinky is the cartoon brains mind numbingly stupid, but loyal partner in crime. He follows the brain blindly through his outrageous schemes.

Rove on the other hand, no longer has a sidekick. His "Pinky" used to be the American people, who were mind numbingly oblivious to politics and current events. They allowed his plans to happen without questioning a thing. Fortunately, the American people have learned of Rove's deceptive schemes, and are with drawing their support one by one.

Therefore, no matter how genius of a plan Rove and the Christian conservatives come up with, or how great of a candidate they may build for 2008, they still won't win. They can't win with out a sidekick to support them. It's impossible. After all, without "Pinky", the brain would just be a psychopathic mouse without a punch line. And without the American people, Rove will just become a burnt out political advisor without a job.

Debbie Friedman writes on Tuesdays. She can be reached at drfriedm a student.umass.edu

Karl Rove and company no longer hold the ear of a dense constituency like they used to.

Immigration impact imminent

Joshua H. Wilder

The time has come for both the government and citizens of this country to take some time and come up with a list of priorities. Instead of worrying about Britney Spears shaving her hair off, we should do something about the constant stream of illegal immigrants rushing pass the border.

Some estimate that over eight million illegal immigrants are living in our country today, with more coming in as this column is being written and read. While many people are thrilled about how well these immigrants can clean houses and cut grass, it seems painfully obvious that if something isn't done to actually protect our borders soon we will be left susceptible to all sorts of undocumented intruders.

Democrats and Republicans, these politicians are bad enough on their own, but when they work together to come up with plans all I can do is cover my eyes and expect the worst. Case in point, President Bush and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi have been working hard to implement a guest worker program on American soil.

This program would put illegal immigrants on a path towards citizenship and give them the unbelievable privilege of being able to work freely for an undisclosed amount of time. After this window of time closes, politicians suggest that the immigrants will be sent back to Mexico, although it would be unwise to hold one's breath while that happens.

It is bad enough that Americans have been getting laid off left and right so that corporate bigwigs can save money on cheap labor in China, but now we are openly giving away jobs to illegal immigrants as well. People will say that the immigrants are doing jobs that no American would ever do, however at this rate people will be begging to get any job they can in a few years.

Nothing is wrong with legally immigrating to this country, in fact most of the student body here at UMass descended from legal immigrants. These immigrants waited their turns, so to speak, arrived in America and learned English. The problem is that these illegal immigrants bypass the "legal" aspect of the transaction all together and refuse to learn English.

The real issue with the guest worker program is that it represents a complete submission by the government on the immigration issue. President Bush, who unfortunately is the most powerful man in the world, seems to be admitting that he is powerless when it comes to protecting the borders. It is not too late to put a fence around the border or implement some sort of program to send illegal immigrants back home. Yet the response from the government is sluggish and moot.

People will say that the immigrants are doing jobs that no American would ever do, however at this rate people will be begging to get any job they can in a few years.

What is even more astonishing is the fact that we are living in the age of terrorism, a time when homeland security is supposed to be our number one priority. The government has been constantly warning us of the dangers we are facing, and yet they seem unconcerned with eight million or so undocumented people running around the country.

To make things even worse, some people are actually pushing to give illegal immigrants temporary driver's licenses so they can work as truck drivers. How can any rational human being actually say that they feel safe on the roads with undocumented workers behind the wheel of giant trucks?

Thankfully, Governor Terminator was smart enough to veto the measure, although at this rate nobody can be sure what will happen.

This is situation really comes down to legality; if people illegally enter the country they should be prosecuted. If we are to maintain any sense of democracy, we need to follow through on our laws, especially when it comes to security.

Granted I am all for equality for everyone. America is a great country with far more opportunities than Mexico, yet we need to protect our own citizens to be sure that this country remains so great. When you open up the boarders and throw caution to the wind, you are taking a huge gamble. Most immigrants are just trying to be better their own lives, but we cannot be sure who is trying to work on an onion patch and who is trafficking cocaine.

It always takes a catastrophe for people to wake up and pay attention to an issue. Hopefully we won't be reading a horror story in the newspaper soon about an illegal immigrant who broke the law on U.S. soil, although when our president offers them a free ride in, we will be reading one soon. Count on that.

Joshua H. Wilder can be reached at jhwilder a student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MAKE IT THE LAW OF THE LAND

(In response to Kevin Foley's Friday article) – There ought to be a law requiring pedestrians to signal to oncoming drivers when entering a crosswalk. They should be required to put out their arm, point and look in the direction of the oncoming traffic, staring at the oncoming driver. Who am I to say this? I am an Amherst pedestrian who does this every time I enter a crosswalk.

I am not in the business of playing chicken with oncoming traffic. I clearly signal my intent, stare down the oncoming car if necessary, verify response and cross. Cars stop quickly and reliably every time.

Of course legally I have the right of way the moment I enter a crosswalk. Of course, I don't have to signal, but I do so because it extremely useful to me and to oncoming drivers. I am both a driver and a pedestrian, and I would love to see this practice become commonplace through regulation and enforcement or through public health education.

Gina Rheault
Amherst Resident

TEXTBOOKS NOT GOLD BARS

Thank you for the eye-opening yet disturbing article about the unethical connection between universities and the banks proving loans ("US college students' loans investigated," 2/27). While student loans present a challenge to getting an affordable education, another hurdle is present: the high cost of textbooks. The average student spends $500 a semester on textbooks. Publishers drive up the cost of books by releasing unnecessary editions, and "bundling" books with extras such as CD-ROMs and workbooks. Revised editions and bundled books effectively kill the used book market.

Fortunately, the Affordable Textbooks Bill will be voted on in the Massachusetts State House this spring. The law would require textbook publishers to adopt better business standards, such as updating editions only when needed, giving students the option to buy books unbundled and disclose prices to professors. Similar laws have been passed in Connecticut, Washington and Virginia. With support from their constituents, this bill will become a law.

Jake Rogers
UMass Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Arcade Fire's ambitious sophomore album stands up to the test

Montreal based rock band The Arcade Fire return with "Neon Bible." The bands newest album may be the disc to launch The Arcade Fire to the next level of rock'n'roll stardom.

BY MATT O'ROURKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nearly two weeks ago, almost no one outside of independent music circles had heard of Arcade Fire. The name alone usually leads to shrugs and questions about where the blaze occurred. However, that changed when the Montreal-based rockers brought two of their most accessible songs off of "Neon Bible," their sophomore album, to the national stage on Saturday Night Live.

Since the release of "Funeral," the band's debut album, Arcade Fire has become more candid in their lyrics and defined in sound. Lead vocalist and frontman Win Butler, strapped with an acoustic guitar, noticeably made a statement. Scrawled across the instrument's body was a Haitian proverb – "SAK VID PA KANPE" – "an old sack does not stand up." This saying easily applies to the questions constantly posed by critics – how does a band after a universally-acclaimed debut record endure?

Arcade Fire is uncompromising in its confidence on "Neon Bible," an ambitious, darker product than "Funeral." The album's title clearly is no accident either, perhaps referencing John Kennedy Toole's book. The title could just as easily reference the location the album was made – at a church, with a full pipe organ. Nearly every song aims for epic, scattered with moments memorable on a first listen. Whereas their debut record concerned itself with issues such as loss and family, "Neon Bible" focuses on the apocalypse and religious freedom. The progression of songs titled "Neighborhoods" in "Funeral" are gone, familiar territory no longer explored as the band worries about the coming future.

In "Black Mirror," the first single and the album's opener, which sounds like a ramshackle nineteenth century opera overture, Butler sings of World War III. "Mirror, Mirror, on the wall, show me where the bombs will fall," he moans over a carnival atmosphere.

The organ takes center stage in "Intervention," the first song performed by the band on Saturday Night Live. Arcade Fire introduced themselves to America in the form of immigrants wearing Bulgarian style shirts with suspenders. "Intervention," a cry out for help in one's most desperate moment, may be their most accessible track. Echoing voices and strings crescendo into a climax with Butler exclaiming, "hear the soldier groan, we're going it alone!" The introspective becomes public visually when Butler smashed his acoustic guitar on live television after the last note was plucked.

THE ARCADE FIRE
"NEON BIBLE"
MERGE RECORDS
4.5/5

By the time the band plays their second song, they are free to embrace the energy that permeates "Funeral" in the energy-packed "Keep the Car Running." Arcade Fire returns to their roots here – shouts, percussion, and all.

Butler is joined by his wife and co-vocalist, Regine Chassagne, on "Black Wave Bad Vibrations," a split-track where Brian Wilson's Beach Boys are clearly the subject of the tribute. Chassagne no longer takes a backseat and is featured prominently on several tracks.

Despite the song's title, "(Antichrist Television Blues)" takes the role of a prayer. Butler, sings of escape: "I don't want to work in a building downtown, no I don't want to see when the planes hit the ground," he sings. Here Chassagne shines. Her heart-stirring vocals soar, a clear contrast to the glum of the lyrics.

The following track, "Windowsill," continues and builds upon that same vision, where introspective feelings reveal themselves. Butler, a Texas native, croons, "Don't wanna fight in a holy war, Don't want the salesmen knocking at my door. I don't wanna live in America no more." Corporatacracy is an easy target, especially MTV, but the message perhaps now has more footing with the group's growing popularity.

Amidst the darkness lay glimmers of hope and gorgeous orchestration pushed to the limit, sometimes too much so. Listeners may find themselves overwhelmed by the wall of sound, but there inlay the brilliance of Arcade Fire. Every screech and rumble is intentional, if only to build upon the old-sound of yesterday's great art-rock bands.

"The Well and the Lighthouse" renders an upbeat rhythm backed by a grandiloquent rock symphony. The song contains one of Arcade Fire's signature transitions from fast-paced to waltz.

"No Cars Go," when first produced on Arcade Fire's self-titled EP seemed more like a rough draft than a final cut. Revised and revitalized, the song clearly is bolstered by the band's now larger budget for "Neon Bible." Complete with a horn section, and backed by a full military choir, "No Cars Go" may be the defining moment of the album.

So where does "Neon Bible" ultimately leave Arcade Fire? Somewhere between the click of the light and the start of the dream, one every musician strives for.

Matt O'Rourke can be reached at morourke a student.umass.edu

Freya does not live up to the potential of original band's legacy

BY MICHAEL HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Freya's latest album has failed them. Clocking in at less than 30 minutes in length, "Lift The Curse" offers no originality and is another LP to throw away.

The band is made up of five members, four of which played in the socially and politically aware band, Earth Crisis. Earth Crisis promoted a vegan, straight-edge lifestyle in the 1990's hardcore scene.

Freya has gone in a different direction, opting for a thrash metal and heavily influenced by hardcore, using Norse mythology as its base, naming themselves after the Norse goddess of love and war. They make a couple references to Norse folklore throughout the album. However, the constant themes of vengeance and suffering overshadow any Norse intent they began with, and actually make this album feel like Christian rock.

Every two-minute song on this album sounds like the previous one. Any chords that may feel different from song to song are drowned out by Karl Buechner's insistent screaming. The songs are better when they are stripped down and simple, that this album would have worked better with instrumental-laden tracks. The constant vocals take so much away from this album, that it is not fair.

Karl Buechner's vocals sound like any other trash metal band. The guitar work of Erick Edwards and Bulldog are repetitive from track to track, and Ethan D'Henry's bass and Tony Tornabene's drumming follow the line. It's almost like they are a cover band.

Let's put it this way: Freya is like Scott Stapp suddenly resurfacing as the front man of Slipknot. Granted, this guy probably just wanted to rock out and have some fun. They should have kept that fun in the studio if they weren't going to create a serious album. The songs are so short and essentially worthless that they really couldn't add 30 seconds of guitar soloing to a couple tracks, so that Edwards and Bulldog could show off their chops?

FREYA
"LIFT THE CURSE" VICTORY RECORDS
1/5

The one highlight of the album is the final track, a cover of Black Sabbath's "War Pigs," and that is for its absolute ridiculousness. Why on Earth would Freya cover this song when a lot of bands have already previously done it. The only reasonable explanation is that they wanted to throw in a political punch at the end.

Freya absolutely butchered "War Pigs," not only because of the putrid hardcore attempt of the song, but mainly because of Buechner's vocals. "War Pigs" is one of the most resonating protest songs ever written, and a large part of that is because of Ozzy's "Oh lord yeah!" that he moans at the end of each verse. Freya apparently decided that wasn't important and left those out. The band that covered "War Pigs" for Guitar Hero II at least made the attempt to sing those.

After the painful first verse in the Freya version, where Buechner proved that he couldn't hold a note, he switches to screamer mode for the chorus. The guitar work on this song is also terrible, with the band playing different notes at important parts of the song. It is like they got drunk one night and accidentally recorded the song. Nevermind, being straight-edge allowed them to create a forgettable album.

For those who want to listen to something where you can head bang in your dorm room or drive fast in your car, download one or two of the songs. The groundwork for thise album had some potential to really stay, but it has a rushed feel, like a carpenter deciding not to frame the second floor of a house to save some time. I'm not even going to recommend any particular song, because they are all the same.

Michael Hardman can be reached at mhardman a student.umass.edu

Freya contains four members of the 1990's hardcore band Earth Crisis. Instead of following the inspiration of the straight edge lifestyle once adopted by Earth Crisis, Freya has taken a more thrash metal approach.

Tally Hall rocks Iron Horse Night Club

BY MATTHEW CADWALLADER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Every band from Pink Floyd to The Killers has at some point been compared to The Beatles, an inevitable critical cliché that results from resounding success. The tragedy is that when a band comes around that actually resembles The Beatles' sound, the comparison is usually disregarded. So when I tell you that this band is as close to The-Beatles-of-our-generation as it comes, don't take it lightly. They aren't the same thing, but they are damned similar. Catchy tunes mixed with stunning vocal harmonies and a dose of matching apparel all contribute to the image.

In fact, in 2004, the band's keyboardist Adam Horowitz won the John Lennon scholarship from Yoko Ono and BMI Music Group for writing their song "Good Day." If there is anything drastically different about the two bands it would be their live performance. The Beatles were more or less a strictly studio-band especially during their final four years. Tally Hall on the other hand seems to thrive in the live environment.

The self described "wonky rock" band made their first headlining appearance in the Valley on Thursday at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton and displayed all of the genius of a band with great things in its future. With as much energy and zeal as they could muster, the band lit up the stage (and the floor at one point) with a brilliant performance.

The show began with The

See HALL on page 6

Local solutions for a world wide problem

BY ROB HOUSE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A recent survey conducted by MIT found that Americans now rank climate change as the country's most pressing environmental problem. Between front page articles in Time and the publicity garnered from Al Gore's An Inconvenient Truth, the issue is finally hitting mainstream America. Even President Bush has acknowledged the significance of climate change in his most recent State of the Union address. To many Americans, global warming remains something abstract.

What can we really do to help stop it? For most of us, driving remains a necessity, and hybrid cars are just too

See GLOBAL WARMING on page 6

Global warming harm can be reduced

One way for people to help the environment is to purchase products endorsed with the Energy Star logo, another way to reduce the effects of Global Warming is to use "post-consumer recycled" paper.

GLOBAL WARMING from page 5

expensive, with the technology limited to certain models.

Powerful senators like John McCain and Barack Obama have proposed bills to limit the carbon dioxide emissions of large commercial sources, like power plants and manufacturing facilities. However, these bills are still in the preliminary stages and do nothing to improve the disconnect between global warming and the general public. So, you may be wondering, "What can I do to help stop global warming?" The following list is a brief compilation of simple tasks that take almost no effort and have a major impact on the amount of carbon dioxide you personally contribute to global warming:

1. Wash your clothes in cold water: detergent works just as effectively in cold as in hot water, but uses less energy.

2. Change your light bulbs: Buy an ENERGY STAR energy-efficient light bulb, (sometimes called compact fluorescent, or CFL for short) to replace burnt out incandescent bulbs. They last up to 10 times longer and consume 2/3 less energy.

3. Shut off your laptop or computer when you're not using it. Do people really need to see your away message to know that you're sleeping? Plus, it's so easy to use the hibernate feature and have all your open programs come back in under 30 seconds.

4. Use "post-consumer recycled" paper for your printing needs. There's usually a recycling symbol at the bottom of the package.

5. Ride the PVTA. It's free! Don't know how to read the schedule? Call 413-586-5806, tell them where you want to go, and they'll tell you how to get there!

6. Unplug chargers for your cell phone and other adaptor-using electronic devices when not in use. They consume electricity even if your phone isn't charging. Even better, plug everything into a surge protector and turn the switch to "off" when you leave the room. (Wikihow.com)

Rob House can be reached at rhouse@student.umass.edu.

Tally Hall shines in Noho concert

Tally Hall may be the closest the twenty first century ever gets to a Beatles-like live performance.

HALL from page 5

Casual Fiasco, a Burlington, Vermont based band who sounded like something of a mixture between moe. and Dispatch. Their 45-minute set was highlighted by some excellent guitar work by lead guitarist Will Read. Anyone interested in the jam band scene would do well to give them a listen in a live venue, while their recorded stuff is okay, they are much better in concert.

When The Casual Fiasco had finished and Tally Hall was setting up, the crowd was treated to an unusual collection of scenes from various thriller and action movies via a projector and screen next to the stage. While Sly Stallone, The Governator and Jean-Claude did their thing on screen, the band was downstairs getting into their signature attire; black pants, white button-up shirts and single color ties (each band member has his own distinct color.) As they wandered up on stage, and a group gathered to stand at the foot of the stage, the music video for "Good Day" (directed by guitarist/vocalist Joe Hawley) set the mood.

The crowd was small at the Iron Horse with the upstairs closed and only about 100 people attending. This hurt the overall atmosphere as there simply weren't enough people to get a good buzz going around (the bass player commented towards the end of the show that the crowd was pretty "docile.") But it wasn't all bad as the band took advantage of the small crowd in their own unique way. After several songs, a computer voice announced to the crowd that the band would be doing an acoustic set, meanwhile the five guys made their way off the stage and asked a guy sitting in the middle of the crowd if they could make use of his table. And so, sitting in the middle of the crowd with acoustic guitars, bongo drums and a portable xylophone, the band performed a short acoustic set. And just before they got back up on stage, they passed out lyrics to Mr. Big's "To Be With You" and led the crowd in a sing along.

Back on stage, the band continued to show their overwhelming talent. The only member not to sing was the drummer (although after a brief crowd interaction he was almost prodded into singing through a megaphone on the last song,) with the other four members shared singing duties equally, each being the primary vocalist on different songs throughout the set. As if their performance wasn't exhilarating enough, the band finished up with none other than Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Freebird," with Guitarist Rob Cantor displaying some serious skill by nailing the solos.

Matthew Cudvallader can be reached at mcudvall@student.umass.edu.

Gastineau Girls launch series on YouTube

Lisa Gastineau (second to the left) poses with fans at the premiere party of her new web episodes. Gastineau and her daughter Brittny have a new series of short videos on YouTube, the two previously had a reality television show on E! Entertainment Television.

BY MANDY THOMAS

After a two year spout on an E! network reality TV show the Gastineau Girls are popping up again as self-proclaimed social experts and energetic entertainment team; only this time, the mother and daughter duo are appearing once a week via internet video.

New York City socialites, and sometimes super models, have already streamlined ten airings of what they call "Celebisodes." The three to five minute rants include topics such as the age old fashion no-no of wearing see-through dresses, using your dog as an added fashion accessory, finding the right hair-do for you and explaining how hard it is to be perfect when living in B-list celebrity spot light.

"The topics range anywhere from finding the best jean that makes your butt look good to asking men on the street what they think about the latest fashion trends," said Lisa Gastineau.

Lisa said the show was initially designed for women, but the "Celebisodes" are pegged for men as well.

"We did this one episode about trashy lingerie," Lisa said. "We asked women what they thought men liked, and then we asked the men to pick out what they really like."

The Gastineau girls have their own personal channel on ManiaTV.com called "G-SPOT TV," where new shows can be found each week and old shows run non-stop. Daughter of the duo, Brittny said responses to the "Celebisodes" have been so far so good.

"We're also working on a cosmetic line and we're writing a book called 'The Gastineau Girls Guide To'," Brittny said.

Lisa described the book as a transitional opinion piece that shows the picks and pans of the two girls' everyday lives on things like what to wear to job interviews and maintaining healthy personal relationships. Lisa believes the book will also provide a common ground for the two very different generations she and Britney represent.

"Some people think they can't do what their mother says and some mothers think they can't listen to their daughters," Lisa said.

The release date for the book is still unknown, but new "Celebisodes" air every Monday at 11 p.m. on ManiaTV.com, but can viewed 24 hours a day on "G-SPOT TV."

Mandy Thomas can be reached at ajthomas@student.umass.edu.

WRITE FOR ARTS!!

E-MAIL US AT ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Looking for business experience??

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking qualified applicants to fill the positions of:

- Business Manager
- Assistant Business Manager
- Distribution Manager

Do you need advice?

Please e-mail any questions you'd like help with to

Veronica Garrett, Advice Columnist at arts@dailycollegian.com

Lasme adds to resume

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

Gladness. Lasme broke Camby's school-record for career blocks (336) on Jan. 28 against Charlotte. He now has 381 in his career, which ranks 21st all-time in NCAA history.

"For him, he probably has a hard time explaining it because it's so natural to him," Ford said on how Lasme became such a good shot blocker. "There is an art to shot blocking. There are so few shot blockers out there."

Lasme became just the third player in NCAA history to record four triple-doubles in the same season on Feb. 28 against La Salle. He joined Jason Kidd (California in 1994) and Michael Anderson (Drexel in 1986) with his 17-point, 10-rebound and 10-block performance on senior night at the Mullins Center. The third category in all four triple-doubles was blocks.

"There may be only three or four guys that can literally change a basketball game because of their shot blocking, and [Stephane] is one of them," Ford said.

UMass won its first Atlantic 10 regular season championship since 1995-96 on Saturday, defeating Saint Joseph's 71-67. The Minutemen share the title with Xavier, with both teams holding a 13-3 conference record.

"It means everything," Lasme said on becoming co-champions. "It means more than being Player of the Year.

"We all deserve it," he added. "It was one of our goals at the beginning of the season. We worked so hard everyday to get to this point."

Xavier and UMass enter the Atlantic 10 Tournament as the No. 1 and 2 seeds, respectively. The Musketeers own the tie-breaker because of their 83-77 win over the Minutemen on Jan. 18.

The tournament begins on Wednesday, with the top four seeds getting a first-round bye. George Washington (3) and Rhode Island (4) are the other two teams receiving a bye.

UMass plays the winner of No. 7 Saint Louis/No. 10 Duquesne on Thursday at 6:30 p.m. in Atlantic City, N.J.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Lasme finished the season with impressive numbers, registering 13.5 points and 9.4 rebounds per game to go with his 154 blocked shots. The forward now has 381 blocked shots in his career.

March Madness contagious as NCAA Tournament looms

Greg Oden and the Ohio State Buckeyes are a virtual shoe-in to the dance in March, but there are still plenty of open spots on the floor, keeping spectators glued to their TVs, computers, and brackets. UMass still has an outside shot at an at-large bid in the NCAA Tournament.

Rob Greenfield

I was hesitant to write a column about March Madness. What is there left to say? Everyone is getting on the bug right now, and there are hundreds of columnists across the land writing what they love about college basketball during this time of year.

Sometimes it's trivial to get so involved in something like March Madness. There are lunatics out there right now, camped out in their basements, glued to a computer screen with the shades drawn (and occasionally detaching themselves to take a look at the bubble teams play on TV in their conference tournaments), waiting to see who will be where in the Holy Bracket.

Of course, there are the gamblers, and not just the fill-out-the-bracket-for-the-office-pool gamblers – the bet-on-how-long-it-takes-for-the-coach-to-take-off-his-suit-jacket gamblers.

So I wanted to take a step back from all of the lunacy this March, kick back and watch the insanity without becoming crazy-glued to it.

Well, I failed.

I'm checking ESPN.com every day for the latest on the bracket busters and the bubble teams, and I'm watching the contenders for the at-large bids very closely because of your Massachusetts Minutemen and their increasingly impressive resume.

Here's the truth about March Madness: it evokes the most powerful emotions and pride, while providing endless opportunities for small-time colleges and secondary basketball programs across the nation.

The University of Pennsylvania won the Ivy League conference tournament and made it into the NCAA Tournament. While Clemson and Florida State are struggling for their season's survival in the bowels of the Atlantic Coast Conference, the Quakers are already dancing.

Some might call that the weakness of the system. I call it Democracy.

And it's not just Penn that had a chance to do it. Yale, Dartmouth, Brown, and Harvard all had a shot to make it. That brings in the fans, the students or alumni who have some pride in their schools and go to the games or listen to them on the internet.

The pride doesn't end there. College basketball's main appeal (like other college sports) is with the idea of the amateur. The kids aren't getting paid and they're going to school like the rest of the students on campus. Of course, the graduation rate of college basketball players is something to be debated and questioned, but the appeal still remains.

Students can go to class with Greg Oden and Kevin Durant.

On this campus, you could have a class with Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman, the guys you see battling for the ever-elusive at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament.

And to top it all off, the players have more on the line. For most college basketball guys, these years will be the last of their playing days. They cherish every game, every practice, every time they walk onto the holy hardwood of their respective home courts.

They don't jog. They sprint.

They don't try to pick up a loose ball. They dive and tackle it.

They don't take plays off. They don't space out when they're on the bench. They don't scream at their coaches.

Basically, they play a game that all athletes can relate to. When you were in high school, you put in maximum physical and mental effort on the court or you were sitting on the bench.

It's high drama – 63 games as the culmination of months and years of hard work.

So it was extremely hard to resist, especially now that UMass is in the middle of the bubble talk. On ESPN.com, they have the Minutemen as one of the last four team's out of at-large contention.

UMass has won its last six games dating back to a win over Fordham in the Bronx. Seniors Lasme and Freeman have spent the last four years expending every ounce of their energy on the Mullins Center hardwood.

They have been through a coaching change, the coming and going of personnel and athletics staff, and the indifference of the majority of the UMass student body to the plight of their teams.

These are the guys worth watching in March. For Lasme and Freeman, the last four years of their basketball lives in Amherst will end sometime soon, and they will fight tooth-and-nail to make sure it's not too soon.

There is a lot riding on the next couple of weeks for players and coaches across the country. Some seniors are preparing for their stretch run through the college basketball playoff system. Others have already gone home with their dreams of an NCAA berth out of reach.

And a select few have already accomplished their goal. Davidson, Eastern Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Creighton and Winthrop are all playing in the biggest college basketball stage in the world – win or lose, the players will go home happy.

That is what Lasme and Freeman will strive for. That is what all the players will strive for.

And we're here to watch them try.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Bright future ahead for Minutewomen

ROSENSWAIKE from page 10

basketball plagued the Minutewomen all season long, and the problem single-handedly cost this team games. Outcomes were consistently being decided by which team scored more points off turnovers, a fact that didn't bode well for the Minutewomen considering they coughed the ball up 77 more times than their opponents.

While everyone on the team was guilty of committing an abundance of turnovers, Latham was the main culprit. Make no mistake about it; Latham had a terrific senior season. She led the team in rebounding (9 per game), assists (3.1), steals (2) and finished second in points per game, averaging 12.8. But her problem handling the rock really hurt the team down the stretch in games. She committed more turnovers (117) than the two point guards – Sakera Young and Kim Benton – combined.

While UMass was tremendous in the low-post this season with Latham and leading scorer Kate Mills, they really struggled from the perimeter. Mills and Latham constantly drew double-teams under the basket due to the relative inability of their teammates to knock down jumpers.

Freshman Kim Benton was able to connect on 50 3-pointers, but the rest of the team only managed to hit 56 more. UMass opponents not only shot a higher percentage from long range, but they nailed 166 triples compared to just 106 for the Maroon and White.

Losing Latham to graduation will leave a big void at the center position for UMass, but if they're able to correct those two issues it will help soften the blow.

REASONS TO BE OPTIMISTIC

Kate Mills. The teams co-captain was robbed last week when she was named to the All-Conference Third team. She was spectacular from start to finish this season; averaging 16.1 points and 6.9 rebounds per contest. Most impressively, she shot a robust 53.8 percent from the field and 81.9 percent from the charity stripe. She also chipped in 72 assists and broke the single-season UMass block record, swatting away 64 shots.

The rest of the A-10 better watch out, because Mills is back next season and she should be carrying a big chip on her shoulder due to the lack of respect she's been getting. With Latham no longer in the fold, Mills is primed for a monster season and an increase in scoring and rebounding is likely.

UMass will be older and more experienced next season. Pam Rosario averaged over 11 points and five rebounds per contest, and will be back for her senior season. I expect big things from her next year. Alisha Latham will also be back, and although she won't fill the stat sheet, her defense and leadership qualities often go unnoticed.

The point guard play – which was a bit erratic this season – should greatly improve in 2007-08. Sakera Young really started to come on strong late this season, and her defensive ability and penetration skills will only get better in her junior campaign. Her growth as a point guard will perhaps be the key for the Minutewomen in the next two years.

Joining Young in the backcourt will be Kim "Silky smooth" Benton. Despite a mid-season struggle with her shot, Benton still managed to end the season tied for third for the most three-pointers made in a season in school history. She has much to work on in terms of being a point guard, but when it comes to shooting – she's deadly. When she's set, or coming off of a screen – she's as good as they get.

UMass may have ended its season on a sour note, but they have a lot to be proud of – and a 2007-08 season to greatly look forward to.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Daily Collegian Sports Blog Coming Soon!

Attention First-Year Students:

Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, March 12th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,

www.umass.edu/uhs

Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Divers impress at NCAA Zone A Regionals

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's diving teams participated in the NCAA Zone A Regional Meet in Piscataway, N.Y., this weekend. For the men, junior R.J. Rappe took part, while sophomore Karen Upperco and seniors Melissa Pond and Mary Jenkins dove for the Minutewomen.

In her final season at UMass, Pond made her first appearance at the NCAA Zone Meet. On the three-meter board, she finished in 12th place with a score of 249.35 points. Pond had her best season this year – she placed fourth on both the one- and three-meter diving boards at the Atlantic 10 diving championships in Buffalo, N.Y.

"[Pond] had an excellent meet in the three-meter [dive]," UMass diving coach Mandy Hixon said. "She had gotten a little injured before we left, she slipped off the board so we didn't know if she was even going to dive at the [NCAA] Zone Meet. But she went to the meet and finished 12th which is great since she's never been there. It's rare that a walk-on comes onto the team and finishes that high in a national meet."

Jenkins also finished 12th for the Maroon and White, but her finish was on the one-meter board. This was her second time at the NCAA Zone Meet. As a sophomore, she finished 23rd on the one-meter board and 36th on the three-meter plank. Her performance in her final meet for UMass didn't turn out exactly as she or Hixon would've liked.

"Mary had a little bit of a difficult meet," Hixon said. "On the one-meter, which is her best event, she wasn't that sharp and she struggled on the three-meter board but I have no excuses for that."

In her senior year for the Minutewomen, Jenkins established herself as one of the best divers in program history.

"I think both of the seniors were absolutely terrific," Hixon said. "They finished up their senior year as far as they could with no regrets. Sometimes seniors go into their senior year just trying to make it through that final season. These [women] trained hard and made it as far as they could. I think they feel great about themselves and can now move on to the rest of their lives."

Upperco performed the best of any of the Minutewomen divers, her fifth-place showing in the one-meter event was vastly better than her 22nd-place finish at the event last season. Her performance on the three-meter board also improved, as a freshman she took 29th in the event only to finished in seventh place this year.

At the A-10 Championships, Upperco lost her A-10 crown in both events, but Hixon feels as though the young diver is destined for success on the national stage.

"Placing isn't really the barometer of how well a diver does," Hixon said. "Karen had a very good meet, but she's definitely good enough to make it to the NCAA [Championships] and I think she's starting to realize that now."

Rappe finished seventh on the one-meter board and eighth on the three-meter board in his third appearance at the NCAA Zone meet. As a freshman, he took 27th on the one-meter board but improved to seventh last season in the same event. While his placing remained the same, his coach knows that he is getting better and his future prospect has Hixon excited.

"R.J. did a great job," Hixon said. "He's battled with injuries all year so he hasn't really been able to train at the level he wanted to. But he was still a better diver this year than he was last year."

Joe Meloni can be reach at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

FILE PHOTO / UMASS MEDIA BY-LATASHA

Senior Mary Jenkins made her second appearance at the NCAA Zone A Regionals this weekend in Piscataway, N.Y. She capped a storied UMass career by finishing 12th in the one-meter board as one of four divers representing the Maroon and White.

Defense heating up during goals drought

M. LACROSSE from page 10

10 goals per game - a feat they have accomplished in each of UMass' two outings so far this season.

Hofstra tallied eight on Feb.24, Yale managed just seven goals against the Minutemen at Garber Field Saturday. In a game where he saw little he could chalk up as positive, UMass coach Greg Cannella made it a point to commend his team's defensive effort after losing to the Bulldogs.

"I like the way our defense played again," he said. "They performed really well. [UMass goaltender] Doc [Schneider] was great in goal again." Schneider recorded double-digit saves on Saturday. He stopped 12 Yale shots and before that, he notched nine against Hofstra. So far on the season, Schneider has .584 save percentage and 7.5 goals-against average.

The only problem is that so far eight and seven goals are all its taking for teams to defeat the Maroon and White.

Stat Book

UMass is even with its opponents in the faceoff department. Both the Minutemen and their opponents have won 17-of-34 faceoffs. Hayes has taken the majority of those, going 15-for-30 while the other four were taken by Joe Real (2-of-4) ... In other possession stats, the Minutemen have scooped up less groundballs than their opponents (41-55), but they have less turnovers (28-29).

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland.umass.edu.

COURTESY / MASS MEDIA BY-CATLINS

Senior captain Brett Garber has tallied three points in the first two games of the season, registering two goals and one assist.

FRUSTRATED THAT NO ONE LISTENS TO YOU?

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP!

(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Xavier takes Women's A-10 crown

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Correspondent

The Women's Atlantic 10 tournament play started Friday and did it ever produce exciting results. The third-ranked Xavier Musketeers defeated St. Joe's Monday night, 65-59, to become the A-10 Champions.

Upset seemed to be the word of Day One, as three teams were defeated by their lower-seeded counterparts. No. 9 Dayton, No.10 St. Bonaventure and No. 11 Saint Louis all advanced into the semi-finals, adding fuel to the fire that is the story of the underdog.

On the losing end of things were No.8 La Salle, No. 7 Massachusetts, and No. 6 Richmond. Final scores of these games are as follows: Dayton defeated La Salle, 57-43, Saint Louis overtook Richmond, 69-61, and Saint Bonaventure toppled the Minutewomen, 63-60.

In other conference-play action, No. 5 Saint Joseph's defeated No. 12 Rhode Island, 68-52.

End of the Road

Day two of the A-10 tournament ended the championship dreams of two out of the three underdog teams from day one. No. 1 George Washington showed no rust from entering the tournament on a first round bye as they earned a victory over the No. 9 Flyers, 61-45. George Washington did not move on to the tournament finals uncontested, however.

Junior guard Brittany Holterman (10 points, six rebounds) and Junior forward Nikki Oakland (nine points, eight rebounds) led the charge for Dayton in the loss. The colonials won this game in part because of the effort of sophomore center Jessica Adair who was the game's top scorer with 14 points.

Also in action, No. 2 Temple downed No. 10 Saint Bonaventure, 84-60. Senior forward Kamesha Hairston led the Owls with a game-high 19 points. Alongside Hairston, Senior guard Fatima Maddox notched 11 points in support of her fellow upperclassman.

However, the underclassmen also fair well in the game. Freshman guard LaKeisha Laddy and sophomore guard Candace Borrows added 10 points a piece. Junior guard Priscilla Edwards and Senior forward Audrey Latendresse shared the team-high of 14 points for the Bonnies.

The other non-upset match-up pitted No. 3 Xavier against No. 11 Saint Louis. Point-wise the closest game of the day, the Musketeers edged the Billikens 64-63. Saint Louis Senior guard Tyler McIlwraith (12 points, 6 rebounds) and Xavier Freshman forward Amber Harris (24 points, 3 blocks) both led their respective teams in scoring.

Live to Fight Another Day

No. 5 Saint Joseph's kept its tournament hopes alive with a decisive victory over No. 4 Charlotte, 76-64. The last upset team of the first round of the A-10 Tournament, the Hawks had a strong showing on the court by Senior guard Ayahna Cornish who finished the game with 30 points and 6 boards.

After starting the game on a 15-3 run, the 49ers fizzled out in the end, despite the effort of freshman guard Wendy Stywalt who led the team with 16 points despite coming off the bench.

From First to Worst

No. 5 Saint Joseph's made a statement that they were ready to play by beating top-seeded George Washington, 57-55. The Colonials held a sizeable lead for most of the contest, but the Hawks overcame a 13-point deficit in the final five minutes of the game thanks in part to Senior guard Whitney French and her 14 points and five turnovers to help her team get back into a tough game on the road.

With just 34 ticks on the clock, Red-shirt freshman guard Brittany Ford nailed two free-throws to give the Hawks their first lead of the game, and eventually the win. The Colonials' sophomore center Jessica Adair led the team with 15 points.

X Marks the Spot

No. 3 Xavier narrowly squeaked by No. 2 Temple by a final score of 54-53. The Musketeers were led by senior forward Joei Clyburn who scored a team-high 15 points, including a crucial free-throw with 7.9 seconds left in the game to give her team the win. The Owls best effort came from Kamesha Hairston, who had 18 points.

How Sweet it Is

No. 3 Xavier became the A-10 Tournament Champions by defeating the No. 5 Hawks, 65-59. Clyburn showed the strength of the Musketeer's bench, as she led all scorers with 19 points in 35 minutes. Brittany Ford tried valiantly to keep the Hawks in the game, posting a team-best 20 points and four rebounds.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

MICHAEL PHOTIN / COLLEGIAN

Junior Kate Mills will be due for a big year next season as she and the Minutewomen attempt to fill the void left by departing center Tamara Tatham, who will be lost to graduation.

RSOs:

Put Your Advertisement in the Daily Collegian!

RSOs receive a discounted rate for advertising. Advertise your group's events at low cost.

Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
Every Thursday:
♦ OPEN MIC ♦
Live Bands
Tuesday, March 6th, 2007:
TRACK 5
Saturday, March 10th, 2007:
ROCK 201
♦ Student Band Wanted ♦
Need a place to play? Come to Seven O's!
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Saturday
Next to Cuffside Apts.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

1	6					9	2
		5	6	4	3	8
8							3
		8	7		6	9
		9	4		8	7
5							9
		2	3	9	1	6
9	4					2	7

ACROSS
1 Killed violently
5 Grasp suddenly
9 West African republic
14 Ripped
15 Old Capri cash
16 Lubricated
17 Purple fruits used as table vegetables
19 Work, as dough
20 Bothers
21 Dodgers
23 Become visible gradually
25 Anger
26 Picture holders
30 Discomposed
35 Bar for lifting
36 Vexatious kids
37 Old French coin
38 Baking box
39 "It Happened One Night" director
40 Hick
41 "___ Town"
42 Brass or bronze, e.g.
43 River ducks
44 Do-over suits
46 Pad
47 QB Manning
48 Extended narrative poem
50 Annapolis or West Point
54 Rorschach test pattern
59 One who fails repeatedly
60 Welder's gas
62 Japanese capital
63 Try to outrun
64 Get an eyeful
65 Mary-Kate and Ashley
66 Soaked in anil
67 Lads

DOWN
1 Musical interval
2 Theater area
3 Work units
4 Shed tears
5 Scowls
6 De-soap
7 Cultural expression
8 Foundation
9 Small, racing vehicles
10 Get in the way of 11 Away from the wind
12 Close by 13 Calculates totals
18 Biblical outcast
22 Broad view
24 Intended result
26 Story
27 Musical variety show
28 Turn away
29 Chess pieces
31 Not a single
32 Customary
33 Aristocrat
34 Poet Edgar
36 Cinderella's destination
39 Slate as true
40 CSA soldier
42 Wing flap
43 In bad taste
45 Overnight flight
46 Colored slightly
49 Separate portion
50 Choir voice
51 Unmoved
52 Invites
53 Inmates' exercise area
55 Shapeless form
56 Toy block maker
57 Exclusively
58 Golf gadgets
61 Coral islet

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: • Trivia Night
WED: • Open Mic Night (all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMC & All Credit Cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

Quote of the Day

"I want to wait to have sex until I'm married."

-Britney Spears

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

ISN'T IT WEIRD THAT MEL HAS BEEN ON EARTH FOR A MONTH AND NOBODY'S SAID ANYTHING?
BUT HE'S GOT THREE EYES!
PSSH, AND THERE'S YOUR PROOF: POLITENESS? OVERRATED.
AW, YOU POOR THING. HERE YOU GO!
I GUESS HE DOESN'T LOOK LIKE YOUR STEREOTYPICAL ALIEN.
PEOPLE PROBABLY ASSUME IT'S A BIRTH DEFECT AND LOOK AWAY OR SOMETHING.
YES, WE SHOULD ALL JUST POINT AND STARE AND YELL LIKE YOU DO.
WHAT THE--THAT'S MY COFFEE, YOU SCHNUCK!!

The Family Monster By Josh Shalek

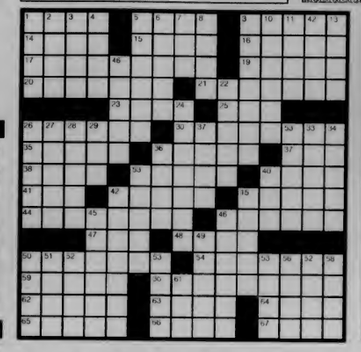
The guest bedroom is empty. The Great Healer has abandoned you.
I was taking time to heal myself.
The answer is a warm fuck.
But you feel silly, Tuna.
I don't need to be encouraged to be happy
Fuck it.

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

HEY, ROOMIE! LOOK WHAT I GOT FOR OUR ROOM WHILE YOU WERE GONE!
WHAT? DID YOU REALLY NEED THAT?
...OR ARE YOU JUST BUYING STUFF SO PEOPLE WALKING PAST OUR ROOM SEE IT AND THINK YOU'RE COOL?
I DON'T EVEN KNOW WHAT IT IS.

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

You have to find your own paradise. You can't visit ours.
I want our friends to visit the cross, too
You sound like a recording industry executive. Paradise is meant to be shared.
Why can't they understand my point of view?
They can--that's what makes them different from us.



Submit your comics!
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You're a lot like country music. Only crazy people like you.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Never stress about school but rather how much you spend to go here.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Breakfast is the most important meal of the day. Unless you're nocturnal.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Stay up very late watching movies of a questionable nature.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will uncover the dark secret of that weird birthmark on your leg today.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Sorbet is a pitiful excuse for a frozen delight. Stick with ice cream.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You alone defy the adage that it is impossible to have your cake and eat it too.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Where would you be if you physically ran out of time? My guess is Wendy's.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Do not be unsure of yourself unless you suffer from amnesia.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
David Hasselhoff is your long lost cousin. You come from an amazing gene pool.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Find the nearest baby. Hold it in the air and begin singing "The Circle of Life."

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Remember, it is extremely hard to look tough with a lollipop in your mouth.

I can show you the world, take you wonder by wonder... but first you must give me a lovely bouquet of comics.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartments for Rent

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in ketchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus $2,900/mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable telephone Internet access)

Apartments for Rent

in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/ office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Employment

The UPS Store Part-time. 20-25 hours per week. Busy, multi-tasking, friendly atmosphere. Packing, sales, customer service experience a plus. Outgoing, detail oriented personality needed. Some lifting required. Apply in person at 6 University Drive (next to Gold's Gym).

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

House for Rent

Northampton Cathedral ceiling, skylites, hardwood floors, 4-5 bdrms. 9/1 $1950. 413-730-6660

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

www.daily collegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Player of the Year honors go to Lasme

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts men's basketball forward Stephane Lasme was named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year and Defensive Player of the Year by the conference's head coaches on Monday. He was also named to the A-10's First Team, along with teammate Rashaun Freeman.

Lasme became the first UMass player to be honored with the league's Player of the Year award since Marcus Camby received it in 1995-96.

"It feels great," Lasme said. "I wasn't ready to get it, but at the beginning of the season coach Lord told me that I could get it. I just kept working hard and kept doing what he wanted me to do."

"He's come a long way, there's no question," UMass coach Travis Lord said. "He deserves it, and it shows that hard work definitely pays off."

The 6-foot-8 senior from Gabon, Africa is now one of only four UMass players to be named the conference's top player. He joins Camby, Lou Roe (1985) and Harper Williams (1992).

"When I found out I was like a little kid at the candy store," Lord said. "I immediately got on the phone and tried to call him. I left him a message because I was so excited."

Lasme finished the regular season as the Minutemen's second-leading scorer, behind Freeman. His 13.5 points per game were an improvement from the 10.5 average last season, but it was his shot-blocking presence that turned heads.

His 154 blocked shots ranks second in the nation, just 34 behind Alabama A&M's Mickell

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

MICHAEL PATRICK O'LEARY/COLLEGIAN

Senior Stephane Lasme was named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year, as well as earning the conference's Defender of the Year honors. The Minutemen's shot-blocker dominated teams in the paint all season, finishing with 154 blocked shots, an A-10 single-season record.

ATLANTIC 10 END-OF-SEASON AWARDS

Player of the Year
Stephane Lasme (UMass)

Defensive Player of the Year
Stephane Lasme (UMass)

Rookie of the Year
Robert Mitchell (Duquesne)

Most Improved Player
Dionte Christmas (Temple)

Sixth Man
Charles Little (Dayton)

Coach of the Year
Jim Baron (Rhode Island)

Student-Athlete of the Year
Kieron Achara (Duquesne)

All-Conference First Team
Stephane Lasme (UMass)
Rashaun Freeman (UMass)
Will Daniels (Rhode Island)
Justin Doellman (Xavier)
Ahmad Nivins (Saint Joseph's)

Second Team
Dionte Christmas (Temple)
Bryant Dunston (Fordham)
Drew Lavender (Xavier)
Tommie Liddell (Saint Louis)
Brian Roberts (Dayton)

All-Defensive Team
Stephane Lasme (UMass)
Kieron Achara (Duquesne)
Justin Cage (Xavier)
Carl Elliott (George Washington)
Kevin Lisch (Saint Louis)

Strong season will be known for sour end

Eli Rosenswaike

The players on the Massachusetts women's basketball team know it, and it's likely to be on their minds for quite some time. They blew the game against St. Bonaventure on Friday in the opening round of the Atlantic 10 Conference tournament, and their season is over because of it. And unfortunately for them, that is likely what this team will be remembered for.

And that's not fair. It's not fair for a team that competed hard in 29 other games – 17 of which were victories – to be solely remembered for one meltdown in the final game of the season.

For starters, this team wasn't projected to tear up the A-10 conference. Despite ending last season on a hot streak, UMass still only finished the year with an 11-17 record. The Minutewomen entered this season with a relatively young squad, and the team's lone senior – Tamara Tatham – never experienced a winning season in her three previous years at UMass.

The Maroon and White finished the season 17-13, which was good for its first winning season since 1998-99. UMass coach Marnie Dacko guided the team to a 7-7 record against conference opponents in the regular season, placing them in a tie for sixth out of 14 teams.

In Dacko's first four years leading the Minutewomen, her teams went a combined 22-42 in conference matchups. Until this season, UMass was a team that many conference foes looked forward to playing. This is certainly no longer the case, as the Minutewomen gave every team in the conference a tough game.

Their .500 conference record doesn't really do the team justice, nor does it reflect how well they played. Five of their seven conference losses came away from home, and four of those came during a difficult six-game road trip.

Not one team in the conference blew the Minutewomen out. UMass fell by double digits only once, and that was against the ninth-ranked team in the country, George Washington, by 13 points.

Although a lot of their problems were their own doing, the Maroon and White were just a few late-game breaks away from being one of the elite teams in the conference.

TAKING THAT NEXT STEP

The inability to take care of the

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 7

Goals few and far between for UMass

BY JEN PICCOLO

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team entered its season opener with a lot of expectations pushing them but fell behind the eight-ball quickly. After a 13-6 defeat against Hofstra, UMass coach Greg Cannella and several players admitted that six goals weren't going to beat many teams.

The Minutemen (0-2) struggled once again on offense against Yale Saturday at Garber Field, matching their first weekend total of six. But if there is one thing Cannella and his squad can take away from the tough loss to the Bulldogs, it's the fact that they have many players capable of scoring – it's just a part of putting it all together.

Danielle Rossi Pedrick is one of four multiple-goal scorers for the Minutemen. The midfielder recorded all three of her goals in the season opener against Hofstra, tallying two goals and an assist.

Five of the six goals scored by the Minutemen on Saturday were recorded by four new faces. The only repeat scorer was Jim Connolly. He notched his first of the season against the Pride. Bobby Hayes (two goals against Yale), Tim Balise, Andrew Recchione and Pat Larmon all notched their first goals of the season on Saturday – Hayes' scores were the first of his career.

Cannella said the coaching staff has been trying to make Balise, in particular, more aggressive going to the net.

"I was happy for him because we've been encouraging Timmy to go hard to the cage," Cannella said. "He lined up with a short stick on him and he did go hard, turned the corner and scored. That's a big step for Tim."

With Hayes scoring two against Yale, that brings UMass' multiple scorers to four, joining the freshman faceoff specialist are Brett Garber, Rory Pedrick and Connolly. Garber and Pedrick scored each of their goals against Hofstra and were held off the scoreboard on Saturday.

SILVER LINING

While the offense struggles, the UMass defense continues its stellar play. The Minutemen set a preseason goal of holding opponents to less than

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

MICHAEL PATRICK O'LEARY/COLLEGIAN

After their first winning season under coach Marnie Dacko, freshman Kim Benton and UMass' season was cut short in the A-10s.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 26 LO: 6 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 2007

A-10 BASKETBALL TOURNEY BEGINS PAGE 14

SERVING SOMETHING GREAT PAGE 6

Woman calls 911 alleging rape in UMass dorm room

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A 31-year-old man was arrested early Saturday morning by the University of Massachusetts Police Department for sexually assaulting a UMass student in her dormitory room.

Mkaka V. Joel, of 272 Dudley St., Apt. 8, Boston, was charged with rape and assault and battery after three police officers responded to a 911 call at 4:02 a.m. in Wheeler Hall, according to a statement made by UMPD officer Luis Antonmarchi.

The Daily Hampshire Gazette reported that Joel appeared on Monday before Judge W. Michael Goggins in the Eastern Hampshire District Court and pleaded innocent to the charges brought before him.

According to court documents, Joel and the alleged female victim had been watching movies together in her dormitory room when the assault occurred.

Reports state that the alleged victim told Joel that she did not want to have intercourse with him, but was ignored by Joel, who continued to advance towards her. Joel allegedly grabbed her by the wrist as she attempted to exit the dormitory room, pulled her towards the bed and raped her, documents stated.

The two had dated casually over the past three months, police said.

According to Antonmarchi, the alleged victim made the 911 call from a neighbor's room. When questioned by officers Joel did not deny the allegations of sexual assault, according to the police statement.

Joel posted a $1,000 bail and was released from custody on Monday. He is expected to appear next in court for a scheduled pre-trial conference on April 6, according to the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Open forum addresses diversity

Alleged hate crime prompts students to voice opinions

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nearly a week after the campus was shaken by an attack that left one student hospitalized and another, who is accused of screaming homophobic slurs at the victim, behind bars, University of Massachusetts students, faculty and administrative officials gathered in a open forum last night to discuss the incident and possible solutions to insure that a similar crime will never happen again.

Tony Brennan, 24, of 5 Dawes Ave, Winchester, Mass. on Sunset Avenue in Amherst was arrested outside MacKimmie residence hall at 12:06 a.m. after an altercation that left one 20-year-old UMass student with a concussion and severe injuries to his face, including a fractured eye socket.

UMass detective Lt. Robert A. Thrasher, lead investigator in last week's incident, was on-hand to explain the process and progress of his investigation and the steps the local police are taking to protect students from hate crimes.

"Everyone in the administration is aware of the problem, and we are working to address these issues further," said Thrasher.

Associate Vice Chancellor of the Center for Student Affairs and Campus Life Byron Bullock participated in the forum, stating the Center is moving towards addressing the concerns of prejudice being felt and seen on campus.

"There's a lot that the Center can do and will be doing in the near future to address some of your concerns. I think it's productive to get people in a room to discuss these issues and how they impact us in our daily lives," said Bullock. "As we continue to build the Center we're looking at ways to create more of a student voice to increase the opportunity for students to come forward to talk about these issues."

One of the forum participants, UMass graduate student Joshua Mason, criticized the adminis-

See FORUM on page 3

Members of the Stonewall Center, Pride Alliance, local police, administration, and LGBT leaders held a forum at the UMass campus center, yesterday.

Students start new fraternity on campus

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When freshman Kevin Bolduc started a new semester at the University of Massachusetts, he did not know he would be a founding father of an internationally recognized fraternity.

Bolduc, the recruitment chair for Pi Kappa Alpha (Pike), thought that being a founding father is "such a unique and interesting" experience. "It is a great opportunity to benefit the UMass community and to enhance [his]...leadership skills."

Pike, founded in 1896 at the University of Virginia, has initiated over 215,000 members to over 200 chapters and "upholds one of the largest average chapter...size of any international fraternity," according to the Pi Kappa Alpha handbook.

Freshman Brian DiNardo, also a founding father, said that Pike wants to have a part in helping UMass. "We don't want UMass to be here for us, we want to be here for UMass," he said.

DiNardo emphasized the importance of strong recruitment for Pike. "[Recruitment] is such a huge thing," he said. "We need to have men completely committed to bettering the Amherst community and our fraternity."

Recruitment, up to this point done by Pike, consultants Vince Drieling and Christian Barajas but now run by Bolduc, consists of recommendations and a two-step interview process.

Recommendations can be from anyone such as faculty, athletics coaches, bosses or RAs, said Drieling and Barajas. These recommendations help show the two consultants if the candidate is "the right man" for the fraternity.

The first interview, the most formal, revolves around introducing the fraternity to the prospective member while Drieling and Barajas determine whether or not the candidate represents Pike's values. Known as SLAG to its members, these values stand for "Scholars, Leaders, Athletes and Gentlemen" according to the Pike handbook.

After the first interviews, if Drieling and Barajas are satisfied with the man's "values" they will invite him back to talk more about the fraternity and eventually give him a bid to join.

According to Barajas, Pike, although having only been on campus since the start of the spring semester, has been "successful due to everyone on campus trying to build a stronger Greek community."

Drieling also noted that their success was helped in part by the supportive "Greek community...and [Student Affairs] administration." The Student

See FRATERNITY on page 3

CHRISTIANE CARDOZO/COLLEGIAN

'The Unspoken Du Bois'

James Turner, founder of Africana Studies and Research Center and professor of African-American Politics and Social Policy at Cornell University spoke at the UMass Campus Center yesterday, in a lecture entitled, "The Unspoken Du Bois: W.E.B. Du Bois and the Future of Black Studies in the Twenty-First Century."

New horizons for homeless children in Mass.

Executive Director of Horizons for Homeless Children Sue Heilman with a group of children, left, and Heilman with State Representative Timothy Toomey at the new Playspace at the Somerville Homeless Coalition's Cross St. Shelter in Somerville, right.

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Since its establishment in 1990, the homeless families of Boston have found a new hope for independence and growth through the charitable foundation Horizons for Homeless Children.

Started by Sue Heilman in 1990, the foundation has successfully changed the lives of thousands of families, starting in the greater Boston area and since spreading statewide. The mission of Horizons for Homeless Children is to improve the quality of life for both the children and parents by creating a developmentally stimulating environment, intending to allow the children to live and learn in healthy ways.

Through Playspace Programs that exist in almost 130 shelters in Massachusetts, children are engaged in creative activities in "kid friendly" spaces, including games, blocks, books, arts and crafts and much more. These activities work to enhance the verbal and physical skills of the children so that they might use those tools to grow and develop.

The organization has recruited and trained more than 800 volunteers called Playspace Activity Leaders (PALS), to participate in educational activities with the children. According to Jody Carey, Playspace Programs Western Region Director, the feedback for the Playspace Programs has been favorable. "What we see at this point, the children love it, and the parents love it," she said.

Since opening the Western Region office a year and a half ago, the Playspace Programs have extended to 14 shelters. In addition to the Playspace Programs, Horizons for Homeless Children has three Community Children's Centers where children between the ages of two months to six years old spend their days in the classroom with three qualified early childhood teachers, as well as trained volunteers.

To date there have been 7,500 trained volunteers who have dedicated two hours per week to helping these young children work towards a better future. The teachers and volunteers challenge the children to learn through active discovery, which includes trips around the state to places such as the Franklin Park Zoo and the Children's Museum. The teachers have also been trained to identify developmental issues with the children and how best to address these issues with the needs of homeless children.

While the children are active in the classroom, the Community Children's Center offers many opportunities to parents to learn to become self-sufficient. The Center offers classes in the Parent Support Program, which includes education, training and services to these parents, such as GED classes and job training.

The Center also offers counseling services and parenting workshops to help parents in raising their children. Family Advocates are licensed social workers who assist parents in getting the services their families need. The Family

See HOMELESS on page 3

Young people take prescription drug abuse to college

BY BEN SUSNICK
THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

COLLEGE PARK, Md. If there's any one thing recreational drug experts are likely to remember about this generation, it would probably be that young people are refusing to follow the drug use trends of yesterday.

This generation's predecessors might have been content to dabble in cocaine, try marijuana or drop ecstasy. But nowadays, recreational drug use is far more likely to begin with a prescription and an orange bottle – a trend troubling drug experts who say the potentially dangerous pharmaceuticals showing up in dorm rooms and even college libraries are the product of habits likely formed in high school, according to a newly released analysis of several studies conducted by the Partnership for a Drug-free America that examined drug use among high-schoolers over four years. Conner, a freshman art history major, said few students in his circle have experimented with harder drugs.

"I don't know that many kids that have done coke, none that have tried crack, and only a few that have dropped acid. I can't even count all of the ones who've taken Adderall," he said. "In my freshman year of high school, I took it at 9 at night and stayed up all night to do math homework."

And unlike the trends of previous generations – which often followed drugs providing brief euphorias – the 18-to-25 set today are far more likely to use pharmaceuticals for a wide range of purposes.

"I don't know what I would do without it," said Catherine, who earlier had taken a dose of the Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder drug Adderall. "There's no way I could have kept my scholarship if I didn't use it."

Strewn across Catherine's dorm room floor were laptops, textbooks and notes from a variety of classes. Also on the floor was freshman art history major Marianne, who said during a study break that when she took Adderall before college, it was for different reasons than studying.

"When we would go out drinking

See PRESCRIPTIONS on page 2

Man attempting break-in calls cops

If only all criminals were this helpful. A 24-year-old man called police to tell them he was trying to break into a church, but he wasn't having much luck.

Police said the would-be thief's call prompted them to show up at St. Paul's Lutheran Church, where they found him waiting. The man told them he had hoped to get married in the church and was trying to use a metal shovel to break through the doors. He told them, if anything, he figured they could help.

Officers search the man and found marijuana. He then invited them to his home, where he told them they would find more drugs.

They did: He showed them his stash of marijuana and stolen prescription drugs.

The man was arrested on charges of criminal damage to property, possession of drugs and paraphernalia, police said.

—Associated Press

POWER(RED)

TO MAKE A STATEMENT.

Get 300 free text messages a month for one year.

Sign up for new service and show a valid college ID at the Sprint store. After 12 months, pay the regular monthly fee.

RED MOTORAZR™ V3m
Motorola and Sprint are collaborating with (PRODUCT)RED™ to help eliminate AIDS in Africa.
JOINRED.COM

This feature-packed phone is the only RED MOTORAZR that lets you download music wirelessly from the Sprint Music Store.sm

$59.99

$109.99 2-year price
Plus $50 mail-in rebate with new line activation and 2-year agreement

CALL 1-800-Sprint-1
CLICK sprint.com/powered
GO to the nearest Sprint or Nextel store

Sprint POWER UP

Sprint stores

BROOKLINE 301 Harvard Street 617-277-0600◆
BURLINGTON 91 Middlesex Turnpike 781-221-1447
CAMBRIDGE Cambridgeside Galleria ✉ 617-374-9936◆
DANVERS Liberty Tree Mall 978-774-4325
FRAMINGHAM 275 Worcester Road 508-628-0600◆
HINGHAM 92 Derby Street, Ste 127 781-749-7727
HOLYOKE Holyoke Mall ✉ 413-534-6074◆
HYANNIS Cape Cod Mall 508-775-3834
KINGSTON Independence Mall ✉ 781-585-5637
LAWRENCE 160 Winthrop Ave 978-975-5650◆
LEOMINSTER 14 Commercial Way 978-840-4273
MARLBOROUGH Solomon Pond Mall ✉ 508-786-0696◆
MILLBURY Shoppes at Blackstone Valley 508-865-8125◆
NATICK Natick Mall ✉ 508-651-2955◆
Natick Mall 508-647-0461
NEWTON 210 Needham St ✉ 617-244-2898
NORTH ATTLEBORO Emerald Square ✉ 508-699-3656◆
1400 S. Washington St. (Rte. 1) 508-695-3459◆
NORTH DARTMOUTH 129 Faunce Corner Road 508-997-6205◆
NORWOOD 1337 Boston Providence Highway (Rte. 1) 781-255-5566
PEABODY 232 Andover St. ✉ 978-977-7346◆
North Shore Mall 978-532-0250
9 Sylvan Street 978-573-3500◆
SAUGUS Square One Mall ✉ 781-233-3302◆
114 Broadway Turnpike Rte. 1 N. 781-233-7676
SHREWSBURY 196 Boston Turnpike Rd 508-798-3300◆
SWANSEA Swansea Mall 508-675-3647
TAUNTON Silver City Galleria ✉ 508-822-5455◆
WEST SPRINGFIELD 1702 Riverdale St. 413-733-8262◆
PREFERRED DEALERS
AUBURN Online Communications 508-832-9886
CHICOPEE Focal Point Communications 413-552-4100◆
FITCHBURG The Cell Phone Store 800-NEXTCALL
HOPEDALE Online Communications 508-473-8805
MARLBOROUGH Online Communications 508-480-0055
MEDWAY Online Communications 508-533-5565
MILFORD Nextgen Wireless 508-473-6996◆
SPRINGFIELD Focal Point Communications 413-730-4442◆
TOWNSEND Datalink Communications 978-597-0300
WORCESTER Nextgen Wireless Greendale Mall 7 Neponset Street 508-852-3299

◆ Hablamos Español ✉ Nextel Store with Sprint products

Coverage not available everywhere. Available features and services will vary by phone and network. The Nationwide Sprint PCS Network reaches over 250 million people. Voice calling area reaches over 165 million people in the U.S., Puerto Rico, U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam. Offers not available in all markets. Additional terms and restrictions apply. Subject to credit approval. See store or sprint.com for details. Phone Offer: Offer ends 03/31/07 or while supplies last. Requires a new line of service with a new two-year subscriber agreement. Taxes excluded. Service Plan: Up to $36 activation and $200 early termination fees apply per line. Deposit may be required. Instant Savings: Activation at time of purchase required. No cash back. Mail-in Rebate: Requires purchase by 03/31/07 and activation by 04/14/07. Rebates cannot exceed purchase price. Taxes excluded. Line must be active 30 consecutive days. Allow 8 to 12 weeks for rebate. Free Text Messaging: Text message overage is $0.10 per message. To avoid charges, you must contact us prior to the billing end date of the 12th plain month. Risk-Free Guarantee: Call us to deactivate and return (to place of purchase) complete, undamaged phone with receipt within 30 days of activation. You are responsible for all charges based on actual usage (partial monthly service charges, taxes, Sprint fees, etc.). Project RED: Motorola and Sprint will collectively make a $17 contribution on the sale of each RED MOTORAZR V3m phone to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria. See www.motorola.com/red, JOINRED.com, or www.theglobalfund.org/en for more details. ©2007 Sprint Nextel. All rights reserved. SPRINT, the logo and other trademarks are trademarks of Sprint Nextel. All third-party product or service names are property of their respective owners. All rights reserved.

FOCUS on drivers

Students take Adderall, Ritalin to concentrate

COURTESY PHOTO/STOCK.XCHNG

The pressures of college coursework often prompt students to depend on drugs like Adderall for academic success instead of an occasional high.

PRESCRIPTIONS from page 1

back then, it would help us stay up. In high school, I used it for fun, as a diet pill or to sell it," Marianne said. "I never take it for fun anymore."

The pressures of college coursework often prompt students to move toward depending on drugs like Adderall as a substance for academic success rather than for an occasional high, and as many as 20 percent of college students have used Adderall or the similar ADHD treatment Ritalin, according to a study released by the National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse in 2004.

Prescription painkillers have also experienced a sharp rise, according to an analysis of several drug use studies performed by the Partnership for a Drug-Free America over the past four years. Use of the powerful painkiller OxyContin jumped 2.7 percent to 3.5 percent, and Vicodin use jumped from 6.0 percent to 6.3 percent.

During the same period, marijuana use dropped from 30.1 percent to 25.8 percent, the analysis showed.

Closer to home, researchers here found last spring that students in College Park reported ADHD treatments like Adderall and Ritalin are easily available and in widespread use, said Erin Artigiani, deputy director of policy and governmental affairs for the Center for Substance Abuse Research at the university. Students participating in the study were from a diverse background, Artigiani said, representing those at high and low risk for drug use.

"People are using these prescription medications instead of coffee or energy drinks because they felt that they were safe, long-lasting and more effective ... as well as having fewer calories," Artigiani said. "In our key findings, alcohol, marijuana and, as far as stimulants go, Adderall and Ritalin were the most easy to get according to the panel."

Freshman psychology major Nina is one student who began using Adderall in high school and has never considered obtaining a prescription because the drug is so easy to get.

"The first time I took it was in high school for AP exams when I had eight straight hours of testing," Nina said. "It makes me feel absurdly alert. I feel like I could stare at millions of pages and never get bored, you focus so intently."

Marianne and Catherine said they've used Adderall so long, they've built up a tolerance requiring them to take the drug in higher doses for effect. Sometimes they need as much as 75 mg of time-release pills over a 48 hour span for intense cramming sessions. Adderall comes in capsules of up to 30 mg.

"I weigh about a hundred pounds, so I know I shouldn't be taking that much," Marianne said, her eyes focused on a homework assignment. "But if I don't, I'm lazy and don't accomplish anything."

Although many common side effects of abusing such medications are headaches, anxiety, dehydration and skin rashes, Kendra Smoak, who leads the Alcohol & Other Drug Peer Education programs at the Health Center, said the drugs carry more dangerous effects such as triggering of a pre-existing medical condition like an irregular heartbeat. Combining the drugs with alcohol is even more concerning, Smoak said.

"When you take stimulants with alcohol, you may not feel as drunk because an upper counters the effect," Smoak said. "Are students talking about it? Yes. Are we educating students about the harmful effects of abusing prescription meds? Yes, definitely."

For Catherine and Marianne, however, warnings about side effects are far from their minds.

Speakers praise University's effort, but expect more tration for their silence since the attack.

MICHAEL PULLEN/COLLEGIAN

UMass graduate student, Brian Koslowski answering questions during an interview with Channel 22 News after the diversity forum ended.

FORUM from page 1

"The administration is here to respond to these types of problems immediately," said Mason. "Their voices should be booming from the rooftops, and as of right now, nothing has been said."

Speakers praised the University for their efforts to improvise diversity on campus but said that bringing diversity to campus is only half the battle.

"The administration needs to understand that diversity isn't all about numbers," said Mason. "Yes, bring people here, but understand that after certain people arrive they feel very segregated."

One sobbing female said she was disappointed that an attack on a student was needed in order for the administration to seriously address issues of diversity on campus.

"The University has addressed the issue of diversity for years, but it's been a particularly narrow view of diversity. I think it's pathetic that it took this kind of event for the University to realize that homophobia on campus is very real," said the sobbing woman.

"I don't think we're doing enough. I don't think we're discussing this enough. We need to go crazy about this. There's a lot more we can do," said UMass student Christopher Dumay.

Brennan has been charged with aggravated assault and battery, assault and battery to intimidate someone based on race, creed or sexual orientation with bodily injury involved, and civil right violations.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at mbbelliv a student.umass.edu

Conservative students defend beliefs at D.C. conference

By Jackie Valley
DAILY KENT STATER (KENT STATE U.)

KENT, Ohio — Five members of the Kent State University College Republicans joined conservatives, including Rudy Giuliani and Ann Coulter, at the Conservative Political Action Conference in Washington, D.C., last week.

Elizabeth Eisaman, president of College Republicans, said the conference – an annual conference for the exchange of conservative ideas among students – attracted its largest crowd ever with about 6,000 people.

At the conference, Coulter made news headlines when she used the word "faggot" to refer to Democratic presidential candidate John Edwards.

Matt Adelman, treasurer of College Republicans, said Coulter's remark faced a mixed crowd: about half the people in the room at the time seemed shocked, and the other half just laughed.

"It definitely caught a significant number of people off guard," he said, adding it was mentioned in the news for the remainder of the conference, but attendees no longer addressed it.

Eisaman said the conference gave members an opportunity to "take our beliefs and try to defend them," in addition to interacting with other college groups from across the country.

Speakers included well-known conservatives, such as Sean Hannity, Tom Delay, Newt Gingrich and one speaker who hits closer to home Mike Adams, the University of North Carolina-Wilmington professor who accused Kent State professor Julio "Assad" Pino of being linked to a Web site promoting terrorism on his online blog last week.

Eisaman said Adams used Pino and Kent State as an example of increasingly liberally slanted college campuses in the United States.

Other topics for speeches, panels and debates covered a wide range of current issues including global warming, civil liberties, immigration and the Iraq war, she said.

Eisaman said the conference prompted civil discussions currently facing the country.

"It was a great experience to learn about dealing with people and not getting angry with people who don't agree with you," she said.

The following data represents the results of 1,705 registrants who participated in a straw poll at the conference about who should be the Republican nominee for president in 2008:

34 percent favored Rudy Giuliani
30 percent favored Mitt Romney
30 percent favored Newt Gingrich
24 percent favored Sam Brownback
20 percent favored John McCain

Adelman said the poll results made him rethink the importance money and popularity play in politics.

Even so, Adelman said the conference was a valuable experience.

"It was really interesting to hear a bunch of leaders within the conservative movement give their perspective on where the conservative movement is going," he said.

Obama talks with UMass president

BOSTON — Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama visited the city on Monday in relative anonymity, a departure from the trail of flashbulbs that normally accompanies the Illinois senator's campaign.

Obama attended a closed-door luncheon with his regional finance committee at the University of Massachusetts Club on the 33rd floor of the skyscraper at 225 Franklin St., said university spokesman Bob Connolly.

The chairman of that fundraising committee is Alan Solomont, a wealthy business man, top Democratic fundraiser and UMass-Lowell alumnus who hosted the Obama meeting.

Jack Wilson, the school's president, has an office on the same floor. He stopped out to greet Obama before the lunch, Connolly said.

"The president was welcoming him to Massachusetts and briefly talked about what the university is up to," he said.

Obama flew to Boston from Alabama where he spoke at a civil rights commemoration on Sunday.

—Associated Press

Fraternity returns after 7 year hiatus

FRATERNITY from page 1

Affairs office, which Dreling said is unfairly seen to be "anti-fraternity by most UMass students," was welcoming and excited for Pike's return to campus.

Though once a recognized chapter on the UMass campus, Pike has been inactive since 2000 due to a "diminishing membership," Michael Wiseman, the director of the Office of Fraternities and Sororities, said Monday.

Although Pike does not have a house yet, the members are not too concerned for the time being. "A frat is a lot more than a house…we have a lot of goals to fulfill before we get a house," commented Sam Boyd, Pike pledge education chair.

According to Dreling, it is easier to focus on recruiting the "best men on campus" and "all aspects of [fraternity] operations" without the responsibility of a house.

Wiseman said that the new fraternity shows that "there is still an interest…in Greek life" and that Pike is "off to a good start."

Bolduc is excited about the new opportunity to help found Pi Kappa Alpha. "Everybody is cheering us on," he said. "We have the support of all the other fraternities on campus."

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre a student.umass.edu

Homeless shelter aims to rebuild families

STEPHANIE SOSTCHIN/COLLEGIAN

State Representative Linda Dorcena Forry makes a new friend at the opening of a new Playspace at the Crittendon Women's Union Shelter in Boston.

HOMELESS from page 1

Advocates help in developing family goals and in motivating the families to live independently. Some of the support groups and educational opportunities they provide for parents include the Nurturing Program, Budgeting, Housing Search and Legal issues and parenting groups.

In order for a parent to be enrolled in the Community Children's Center, it is asked that they must be willing to work towards self-sufficiency, as well as be expected to visit their child's classroom once a month, and meet with the Family Advocate twice a month. In addition, the parents are required to be enrolled in one or more of the following activities for a minimum of 20 hours per week: school, job training, full or part time employment or community service.

Horizons for Homeless Children seeks to increase the resources for young homeless children through improvements in the system at the local, state and federal levels, and to prevent homelessness when possible. With more than 20,000 Massachusetts children subjected to homelessness every year, Horizons for Homeless Children continues to spread statewide through the Playspace Programs.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 95

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Styles by Deborah & Co.
HAIR SALON & SPA
65 University Drive, Amherst 549-5610
Paul Mitchell Signature Salon

Spring Break Specials
$5 OFF Spa Pedicures
$10 OFF Leg & Bikini Wax (combo)
$5 OFF Haircuts

Also specializing in chemical relaxing, pressing, and styling ethnic hair.

Coupons may not be combined. Offers expire 3/30/07

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Thurs, March 8th
All DC's
7 am to 9 pm

A New England Maple Day

Breakfast
• Maple Muffins
• Maple Sausage
• Steel Cut Oatmeal
• Local Maple Syrup
• Maple Donuts

Lunch
• Maple Fudge
(Made by UMass Bake Shop)

Dinner
• Maple Glazed Salmon

Enter to win a basket of Local Maple Treats Valued at $30.00

Maple Sugaring video provided by Massachusetts Maple Producers Asso

www.umass.edu/diningservices

goodbuy
Nair for Men. 5.19

Target.com/SpringBreak07

EXPECT MORE. PAY LESS.®

Building UMass

The Past, PRESENT, and Future: A three part series.

Today is the second of a three part series discussing the history of our university's physical development. Last week was a look at what was, now we see what is.

James Mathews

Looking out from the ground level concourse of the W.E.B. DuBois library, it's often hard to make sense of UMass. The Southwest towers disappear behind the blue-grey walls of Hartlen hall, the Campus Center and the GRC block any view of the north end of campus, and every hour a continuous stream of unrecognizable students flows past, obscuring all the rest.

Twenty-three floors up, where a sign in the elevator lobby proclaims the "best view of campus," things are a little more clear. There, in a silence broken only by turning pages, scratching pencils and flickering fluorescent lights, UMass is visible for what it is: a work in progress, a campus under construction, a strange hodgepodge of architectural styles, built over the years without a uniting vision. Most of all, it is a young state university, still growing, as yet undefined. From above, one can feel its potential for both failure and success.

Down and to the east, on either end of the Machmer complex that stretches along North Pleasant Street, the construction project known as "New Dirt" can be seen in all its glory. The steel skeleton of the Studio Arts Building juts high out of the remnants of a parking lot. Dump trucks, cranes and concrete mixers surround the future site of the Integrated Science Building on the hill next to the Worcester Dining Common. Both projects are scheduled for completion in 2008, at a combined cost of $120 million. For now, they are hardhat areas, surrounded by fences, layered in mud, inaccessible to students.

To the west, between the green roofs of the Mullins Center and the barnyard fences of the Hadley Horse farm, lies the most ambitious of the current projects. The Central Heating Plant, a rather advanced combination of technologies, will be up and running sometime next spring. It will burn both oil and natural gas, and will reuse wastewater in order to diminish its impact on the local water supply, saving some 200,000 gallons a day. Upon its completion, the old coal-powered heating plant, whose faded brick smokestacks have been a constant campus presence for nearly 50 years, will be demolished. For the University, this event will mark the end of a sad story, and perhaps, an era.

The story is one that not many students are aware of. Nearly 40 years ago, in the final years of the John W. Lederle Chancellorship, UMass put into motion quite similar plans to replace the old heating plant with a newer, more advanced operation. The site was set for

It is a young state university, still growing, as yet undefined. From above, one can feel its potential for both failure and success.

Fillon Farm Road, past the Sylvan dormitories, behind the North Live Nation. The plant was built, but irreversible design flaws doomed it to a life of non-operation. Its designer and contractor went bankrupt. Large amounts of asbestos were involved in the project, a fact that has long stood in the way of its demolition. It stands to this day, and from the twenty-third floor, its white-tipped smokestack is visible in the distance just to the north of Orchard Hill. It is a stark reminder of the perils of low-bid building.

As the flagship campus of a state famous for its "Big Dig" failures, UMass has much to learn from stories such as this. This semester alone has seen contractors implicated in the botched installment of electrical conduits in the Skinner Hall renovation project, and the failure of thermostat systems in the newly built North Dormitories. Without a doubt, high-visibility projects like the new Central Heating Plant have not been put in unskilled hands, but only time will tell whether projects of lesser importance have been executed with proper responsibility. If not, they will be condemned to futures of constant renovation and repair.

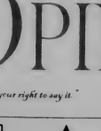
Amongst the UMass student body, stories abound concerning such buildings and their various states of disrepair. It's said that the Library would collapse if books were shelved on every floor. It's said that the Graduate Research Center is falling apart as we speak. It's said that by the year 2025 the Southwest towers will fall to the ground, because — well, it's a good story.

Yet without extensive research, no student will ever know the truth about the Library, the GRC or the fate of the Southwest towers. In the long run, however, truth is not the aim of such tales. They all go to illustrate the same central point: a kind of sentiment common to the UMass student body for the past 20-odd years; those flagship buildings may be nice, but you can't trust them. If you don't watch out and stay outside the fence, a brick might fall on your head.

Looking down from the Library, it's hard to disagree. To a student, there's hardly any comfort in the sight of the Graduate Research Center's 17 concrete stories, or Southwest's towers of brick. There is something both intimidating and careless about the way our school has been built, a visual reality that no press release or admissions pitch can play down. The only remedy is to build better, to build more carefully and to build with the student in mind. On the New Dirt Web site, drawings of the buildings currently under construction show a grassy, tree-lined campus, dotted with few-rise wood-paneled academic buildings, lined with windows, filled with light. Perhaps there is hope for the future.

James Mathews can be reached at jsmathew@student.umass.edu

A young American for freedom



Andrew Freeman

My fellow Americans, as I speak here in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center, I see the promise of America. I see a bright and beautiful future of higher pies and wings taking dream, where no child will be misunderestimated again, let alone left behind. In short, I see freedom, descending in her intoxicating beauty from the heavens to each and every one of us.

And it is on the wings of this very freedom that I announce my candidacy for the Republican nomination in 2008.

You may be surprised by this. What does a student from the bluest of blue states have to offer the Grand Old Party, the party of Lincoln, Reagan and Nixon? To answer, let me tell you a little about myself.

I grew up on a farm in Massachusetts, a farm in the middle of a blighted urban neighborhood. I saw firsthand the devastation wrought by welfare and social security — people having money to spend in times of crisis. My parents were hard-working, and despite both being blind and quadriplegic, they managed to raise a family of 42, teaching us good Judeo-Christian-Islamic values. They taught me what it means to be an American: to stand tall, speak with authority and mispronounce words.

First I would serve my country. I did this by promising to join the army, and then ducking out to work on a friend's political campaign.

I came to the UMass four years ago, and was astounded. Coming from a small farm in a blighted urban community, I beheld the big rural University with wonder and fascination. But wonder turned to despair when I realized the nature of the place.

The students were lackadaisical, lethargic and liberal. Worst of all, they were godless. A mob of them participated in a Communist uprising the very year I arrived. These fanatics worshipped a group called the "Red Sox," one with aspirations of World domination; and they rampaged, turning over cars and attacking hallowed private property. It was repeated the next year when their Communist clique won the World Series.

Witnessing the cultural degradation on campus, my mission became clear. I would work to eradicate the source of this affliction by gaining as much power as possible and ruling as an enlightened despot.

First I would serve my country. I did this by promising to join the army, and then ducking out to work on a friend's political campaign. Then I started drinking. Then I stopped drinking, declared myself born-again and saved and decided to run for president.

Let me outline the themes of my campaign. Foremost, I plan to work hard for the average American, my constituent. Whether you're the hardworking Secretary of State who handles election results in Florida, or a salt-of-the-earth Supreme Court Justice, I will represent your interests.

We need a guest-worker program for this country. The average hardworking American, managing a trust fund inherited from his or her parents, wants cheap fruit without having to pick it him or herself. Only immigrants can supply it. Our country was built by immigrants, the hardworking indentured servants and slaves who came over to harvest our resources, wanting nothing more than a pat on the back and a chance for freedom.

A great man once said, "Our enemies are innovative and resourceful, and so are we. They never stop thinking of ways to harm our country, and neither do we." Like Bush, I will employ every means to fight our enemies. No Iraq will be left untumied in our search. No innocent civilian will not be sent to a rogue nation like Syria to be tortured for information. It has been said "All that is necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing." My message to you is, do nothing because this good man will protect you.

When I see America, I do not see a land inseparably divided between Red and Blue, between Republicans and Communist traitors. I see one land, one nation under God. All it takes to turn a Blue state Red is a little blood.

My opponents will say that I am a liar, that I have more shaky positions than the Kama Sutra. Don't believe their slander. In the past, my remarks have been interpreted as supportive of gay marriage, abortion, gay abortion and marriage of abortionists. Nothing could be further from the truth. The left-wing media deliberately distorted my statements, cutting "n't" and "don't"s from articles, even removing them from film with seamless editing. I never have, nor will I ever, knowingly lie to the American people.

I offer a message of hope, a message of peace. I offer massive tax-breaks for the highest income brackets. In short, I offer the best in America: freedom.

Andrew Freeman is a GOP candidate for president. Lobbyists with wads of cash can reach him at adfreema@student.umass.edu

Ripping into style

Anthony David Rueli

You've seen it happening all over the place. It's nothing new; it's been going on for quite some time, at least since I was in high school. Some people overlook it, some people embrace it (because, well, it's just so damn hip) and some people, like me, are disgusted by it. No matter you feel about it, you must admit this trend is blessed with longevity — no quickly passing fad here. On the edge of your seat yet? Well, I won't torture you any longer.

Some time ago, I noticed that a friend of mine had a hat on that I hadn't seen him in before. Intrigued (as I easily am), I went to compliment him on his new hat — and then I realized that there was a problem. Instead of a crisp, new, freshly purchased-looking brim, I found a ragged, worn, frayed (and fraying further) mess of fabric.

I gave my pal the benefit of the doubt and assumed that this was an old hat that he hadn't worn in a while and that I had never seen. So, after the formalities were out of the way, I hesitantly said, "So, I've never seen you in that hat before." My friend smiled and said the words that would make my heart sink into my stomach: "Well, that's because I just bought it!"

A few days ago, another friend and I were having lunch at Berkshire Dining Hall. I had gotten my food more quickly than he had, and I was already seated when he approached the table. As he began to sit down, I noticed that her jeans were ripped at the knee. I pointed to her leg and said jokingly, "It's kinda cold out, you should save your old jeans for a warmer day." She looked at me, confused, and repeated that same dreadful statement. "Huh. I just bought these jeans yesterday."

Call me an old man — out of touch or whatever you will, but I find this entire situation completely ridiculous. Back in the day, when people bought new clothing items, they were fresh, new and unscathed by wear and tear. People would see you on the street in your crisp new hat or sparkling new blue jeans and think, "Gosh, he/she sure looks sharp!"

Likewise, the people who owned the new clothing would also be proud of their recent purchases. They would show them off whenever the chance arose and always hoped that people would notice and comment on them. When their new apparel began to fade and fray, they would become depressed and hide the old clothes in the back of their closet while they went out to buy more new clothes.

Aside from the obvious fact that the clothes do not look as good, it is also very impractical to buy them for other reasons. I mean, the clothes will not last nearly as long as clothes that are, you know, in one piece when you buy them. Basically, you're paying more money to buy clothes that look worse and won't last nearly as long. Brilliant.

A long time ago, back when this trend first emerged, I was very distressed about it. I decided that if I wanted someone who would understand and sympathize with my position, it would be my good friend Andrea.

Of course, I was correct, and not only did Andy manage to alleviate my worries regarding the topic, but we also formulated an idea to capitalize on this debacle. Let's see what you all think of it.

Andy and I decided to open our own business selling brand new automobiles. How does this relate to what I've been talking about, you ask? Well, our cars would be very different from the ones that are sold now.

Basically, you're paying more money to buy clothes that look worse and won't last nearly as long. Brilliant.

Once we purchased the cars from various automobile manufacturers, we would add one more step before we put them on the showcase floor. We would take sledge hammers and give the car a few nice dents on the side or the roof. We would put a nice crack in the front windshield and tear up the nice leather seats. Oh, and we would of course have to make sure that the tires aren't filled up to their proper amount — we have to make these things sell, after all.

Sound ridiculous? Of course it does. Ask yourself, though, is it really that much different than cutting a hole in a pair of pants before they go on the shelf or fading the letters on a new T-shirt before it is hung on the sales rack?

What I'm trying to say is that people once took pride in looking presentable in their clothing. Wearing jeans with holes in them and hats with frayed rims was once a sign that it was time to invest in some new clothing — now it's a sign that you're supercool!

Anthony David Rueli can be reached at arueli@student.umass.edu

An apt comparison

Ben Duffy

He was known as "the Angel of Death," and he remains one of the most notorious figures of the Twentieth Century. Dr. Josef Mengele is perhaps best known for his 21 months at Auschwitz-Birkenau, where he determined which incoming prisoners were fit for work and which ones should be gassed immediately upon arrival.

As a camp physician, Mengele conducted experiments on inmates that would later shock the outside world when they were uncovered. Dr. Mengele attempted to change the eye color of brown-eyed children by inserting chemicals into their eyes using needles. He maintained research collections of twins, dwarves and people with abnormalities. He was known to personally kill some of his subjects just to settle arguments with other physicians as to the actual diagnosis. Mengele dissected live infants, castrated men and boys and exposed women to harsh electrical shocks. Dr. Mengele's laboratory was a true house of horrors.

Fewer people know what Dr. Mengele did after the war. He escaped prosecution for his deeds by slipping away to South America, where he lived out the rest of his life under an assumed name. In 1992, the New York Times reported that Argentinean authorities had just recently released old files related to Nazi war criminals who fled to Argentina after the war. Among those war criminals was Josef Mengele, who practiced medicine in Buenos Aires in the 1950s.

According to the Argentinean files, Dr. Mengele "had a reputation as a specialist in abortions," which were illegal at the time. His practice came to the light of authorities when a young woman died while having an abortion at Mengele's clinic. The documents show that when Mengele had his day in court, one of his friends arrived just in time with a "package presumably filled with a large amount of money." Two hours later, Mengele was a free man.

It doesn't require a great stretch of the imagination to think that Auschwitz's mad doctor went on to become an abortionist in Argentina. Actually, becoming an abortionist seems like the next logical step in the career trajectory of such a disturbed man.

Josef Mengele rightly merits our disdain because he represents the grotesque mutation of what a doctor is supposed to be. Doctors are supposed to heal, not harm. When a doctor forgets this fundamental principle of medicine, it's hard to call him a doctor at all. What he's practicing isn't "medicine" in the strict sense of the word, because medicine cures the wounded and ill; it doesn't take lives.

It doesn't require a great stretch of the imagination to think that Auschwitz's mad doctor went on to become an abortionist in Argentina.

For this reason, doctors have long been held to a set of medical ethics. Yes, these ethics even pre-date the Christian era, for those of you who insist that people who oppose the horrid practice of abortion are somehow "imposing" their religion upon others. True doctors (by which, I mean doctors who heal) have known for thousands of years that killing the unborn is wrong. One of these oaths of medical ethics is the Hippocratic Oath, which states unambiguously that "I will neither give a deadly drug to anybody who asked for it, nor will I make a suggestion to this effect. Similarly, I will not give to a woman an abortive remedy."

Not surprisingly, many medical schools today require their graduates to recite a sanitized version of the oath that ignores thousands of years of ethics. That pesky oath couldn't keep up with the times, so the oath had to change. I wonder if the Germans would have changed the oath if they had won the war.

The fact that Dr. Mengele became an abortionist in Argentina after the war isn't just a strange coincidence. The evil doctor just continued practicing his evil "medicine" in a new country. Just as he flagrantly violated the ethical standards of his profession at Auschwitz, so too did he flagrantly violate the ethical standards of his profession in Buenos Aires. At Auschwitz, his chosen victims were twins and dwarves. In Argentina his chosen victims were the unborn. At Auschwitz, he wasn't really curing the sick, unless you consider brown eyes to be a sickness. In Argentina, he wasn't curing the sick either, unless you consider pregnancy to be a disease. This particular leopard just couldn't change his spots.

I sometimes wonder why we can't see that there's a little Dr. Mengele inside of every modern-day abortionist. What kind of "doctor" can suck two children out of the uterus before lunch, two after lunch and make it home in time for dinner and a full night of sleep? His killing become so mundane that they no longer see what they're doing as wrong.

Dr. Mengele rightly belongs in the Evil Doctor Hall of Shame. Heck, he's the evil doctor prototype, the standard to which we compare all evil doctors. Abortionists should be held to the same standard. What they're practicing can't legitimately be called "medicine," but they continue to masquerade around with white coats and clipboards as if they were real doctors. I'd like to live to see the end of the Mengele Trial of modern "medicine."

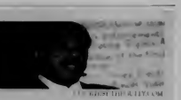
Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

SEND US YOUR EDITORIAL COMICS!

Contact editorial@daily-collegian.com for more details.

COURTESY OF NOTHINGSOCIAL.COM

Point-Counter-Point



AP PHOTO/THE LITTLE LITTLE.COM

A case for reparations

Jeff Napolitano

The recent apology by the state of Virginia, as well as the discovery of a direct connection to slavery within living generations between Al Sharpton and Strom Thurmond, raises the issue of reparations for African-Americans in this country.

It is an issue that is inextricably tied to others. It is knotted into the illegal invasion of Iraq and the resurgence of anti-immigrant sentiments. The "resources wasted on war and "Homeland Security" could be used in building a more equitable society. Because the justification and necessity of reparations addresses so many underlying ills inherent in this country, the demand for reparations lies at the heart of African-American social struggles. For this country to tackle the issue of reparations entails a reckoning of the mortal sins that founded this country and the dramatic inequality of the wealth generated on the backs of those who continue to endure the legacies of de jure and de facto racism.

Economic rights must follow in the footsteps of civil rights before any claim to equality can be taken seriously. The argument for reparations, from an economic perspective, should be quite simple for anyone to agree with, from fiscal conservative to flaming liberal. For hundreds of years, beginning in the 16th century, African-Americans were enslaved as private property in the Americas. The wealth generated by enslaved, uncompensated labor provided the capital for oiling the engines of the Industrial Revolution. Slavery was institutionalized and encouraged in federal and state law, and was enforced by the state.

We, as a self-proclained democracy, cannot move forward without a fundamental redistribution of wealth and consideration about where all this wealth comes from.

Numerous institutions that we take for granted today, including some of the biggest private insurance and banking companies, made their money through the institution of slavery. Though economic booms were created by African-American labor, those who gained the wealth never received a single dime of compensation. As children, we are constantly told to take responsibility for our actions. Why doesn't our moral conscience and a sense of responsibility extend to institutions of power? It is a sad note that our society is on the cusp of dismantling progressive measures such as Affirmative Action (in the name of equality), while ignoring such historical injustices as slavery.

For centuries, the product of grueling, forced labor was stolen by and added to white that had the most capital, the most resources. But the case of reparations isn't simply about stolen labor in some distant past. Institutional racism continues to exist. According to the 2000 census figures, for men of the same level of education, white men made between 24-27 percent more than black men. This existing pay disparity (which is much worse between white men and women of color) represents the continuation of the theft of wealth from African-Americans and reinforces the de facto segregation that American people claim is now been so odious in the form of de jure segregation.

Martin Luther King, Jr. put it far more eloquently. "When millions of people have been cheated for centuries, restitution is a costly process. Inferior education, poor housing, unemployment, inadequate health care, each is a basic component of the oppression that has been our heritage. Each will require billions of dollars to correct."

We, as a self-proclaimed democracy, cannot move forward without a fundamental redistribution of wealth and consideration about where all this wealth comes from. Between slavery, Jim Crow segregation and the disenfranchisement of Black people (which officially ended in 1968, but was still blatantly apparent in the last three national elections), our government has forcefully intervened to prevent the accumulation of wealth in the African-American community.

None of this takes punitive costs into consideration. Reparations should also account for the cost of humiliation, torture, rape, degradation, assault and emotional devastation for half of a millennium, an enduring genocide. As Robin Kelley writes in his book "Freedom Dreams," "[historic campaigns for reparations] was never entirely, or even primarily, about money. The demand for reparations was about social justice, reconciliation, reconstructing the internal life of black America and eliminating institutional racism."

Such campaigns from Black radical movements were "geared more toward collective needs than toward accumulation." The U.S. government has yet to even apologize for slavery. This is part of the demand for reparations – a recognition of human dignity.

A frequent response to the inequalities of today is "It's not my fault," and is often heard among whites. While it makes sense that someone born in 1985 should not be held responsible for slavery nor segregation, we should keep in mind that the argument for reparations is a call for universal freedom and justice. Furthermore, if you are white, your race, and have likely gained, since your birth, the privilege borne from the legacy of racism, whether you asked for it or not. What matters is that rampant inequality still exists, and continues to plague the emotional and spiritual well-being of everyone in this country.

There will not, and cannot, be peace, equality and justice in this future of this country until the past is accounted for. This was true a hundred years ago and will be true tomorrow. Inequality still reigns in our society, and the first — however uncomfortable — step towards its correction are reparations.

Jeff Napolitano can be reached at jnapoli@cfrrc.umass.edu.

Should not pay a toll

Tucker Merrick

One of the most important lessons taught to young Americans at school is the taint of slavery on their native country. It is undeniable that the United States owes much of their development to the industry and injustice that was the Slave Trade. It is a stain that the country will probably never be able to fully wash off. Every few months, there is another story to remind citizens of the inequality that still exists for blacks, and steps that still haven't been taken. This month there are two.

Virginia's official apology for slavery in late February has hit the scene along with the Al Sharpton-Strom Thurmond connection. With their simultaneous break into the news, questions of slavery guilt have arisen, and the idea of reparations is once again rearing its ugly head.

Where is the proof that reparations will bring full equality and integrity to this nation?

Reparations revolves around the seemingly fair notion that slavery harmed not only slaves, but their descendents. Their families were heirs to injustice, forced to tolerate intolerance. As such, any institutions or government known to have profited from slave labor must make monetary amends – an eye for an eye.

But in truth, reparations can never be that simple, for there are simply too many facets to make it plausible, a characteristic for which time is responsible. Reparations to Japanese interned during World War II were finalized by Ronald Reagan under the Civil Liberties Act of 1988. This was an easy act to implement due to the fact that many of these Japanese victims were still alive. Records clearly indicated who was interned where, and $20,000 was paid to each internee along with a well-deserved apology.

Yet in the case of slavery, there is no way to determine a system of compensation for descendants. Does one get more money depending on how directly related to slaves they are? In three-plus generations, family trees have grown substantially, and even if proper records were taken, it would be hard to figure out exactly how much one deserved – maybe pedigree charts would have to be drawn up to determine proper percentages.

Along with this notion, who is to be held accountable? For one, slavery was abolished over 140 years ago. Anyone directly involved in this injustice has long since passed, and the only people to pay now are those who hold an ambiguous accountability. If bigger fish were targeted instead, more injustice is wrought in the name of justice. With reparations as common practice, every tax-paying American could be held accountable for the past actions of the most prevalent profiteer of slave labor, the United States.

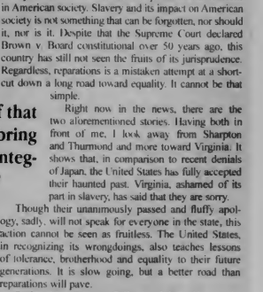
And it is here where these progressive ideas will take a regressive turn. Where is the proof that reparations will bring full equality and integrity into this nation? Looking at human nature, it's more reasonable to infer that many will not easily accept being targeted and punished based on the wrongs of their fathers. In fact, people will begrudge having to give money for a wrong which they are not directly responsible. The tension that already exists in relation to inequality between races and the perceived haves and have-nots will only grow and manifest itself in uglier ways.

The concept of reparations is an idealistic, yet faulty theory on how to alleviate the ever-present racial tensions in American society. Slavery and its impact on American society is not something that can be forgotten, nor should it, nor is it. Despite that the Supreme Court declared Brown v. Board constitutional over 50 years ago, this country has still not seen the fruits of its jurisprudence. Regardless, reparations is a mistaken attempt at a shortcut down a long road toward equality. It cannot be that simple.

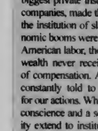
Right now in the news, there are the two aforementioned stories. Having both in front of me, I look away from Sharpton and Thurmond and more toward Virginia. It shows that, in comparison to recent denials of Japan, the United States has fully accepted their haunted past. Virginia, ashamed of its part in slavery, has said that they are sorry.

Though their unanimously passed and fluffy apology, sadly, will not speak for everyone in the state, this action cannot be seen as fruitless. The United States, in recognizing its wrongdoings, also teaches lessons of tolerance, brotherhood and equality to their future generations. It is slow going, but a better road than reparations will pave.

Tucker Merrick is a Collegian Editor. He can be reached at jmerrick@student.umass.edu.



Beyond the gender binary



Jackie Hai

In a Room Selection Bulletin sent out last week, the University of Massachusetts Housing Assignment Office announced a new gender-free housing suite starting in Sylvan next fall. The HAO wrote: "This option is available to students who do not want to identify a gender, students whose gender identity is in transition and their friends and allies."

First off, kudos to UMass and Residence Life for taking this step. I've noticed that our campus has been consistently progressive when it comes to acknowledging and accommodating the existence of students who identify themselves outside a binary gender definition, from the "sex" field in RA application covers that lists "female, male, trans, intersex" as options, to roommate agreements that encourage roommates to openly discuss their comfort level with having male, female and transgendered guests staying in the room.

These may seem like small things, but UMass deserves praise in this area simply because the topic of transgenderism is all but invisible in our society today. While advocates for LGBT civil rights have made inroads and great progress in recent years, at least in some parts of the country, the "T" in that string of letters is perhaps the least understood by the public. Transgenders are often a subject of confusion and mislabeling even in liberal spheres; in the mainstream, reactions range from ridicule and contempt to fear, disgust and violent rage. But that's only when people are brought face-to-face with the topic. Mostly, it's just not talked about at all.

UMass deserves praise simply because the topic of transgenderism is all but invisible in our society today.

Before going on, it might help to clear up said confusion with a crash course in gender theory. I'm certainly not an authoritative source, and many definitions we're about to embark on have a variety of interpretations, but here's what I can explain to the best of my knowledge. If you're unfamiliar with this stuff, hang on to your hats.

Sex is a biological categorization and gender is a social construct. The most common sexes are male and female, essentially determined by chromosomes and hormones, but intersex conditions can naturally occur as well. Gender roles, defined by cultural expectations and traditions for masculinity and femininity, manifest in society through jobs, household dynamics, peer interactions and stereotypes about dress code and behavior.

"Transgender" and "genderqueer" are overlapping umbrella terms for gender identity, encompassing a broad spectrum of people who identify with a gender different from the one assigned to their sex, both genders, neither gender or a combination of the above. Transsexuals identify with a sex different from what they were born with and usually undergo hormone treatment and sex-change operations if they have the means to. Transvestites are individuals who cross-dress, but don't necessarily identify with another gender or sex. Sexual orientation, which describes where one's attractions lie, is independent of gender and sexual identity.

It's unfortunate that when transgenderism isn't being ignored, it's usually being portrayed negatively in popular media. A recent episode of Cops propagated the grossly misinformed view of male-to-female transsexuals as a danger to society, luring in unsuspecting men and then murdering them. On Jerry Springer and daytime talk shows, transgendered people are often reduced to sideshow freaks paraded across the stage to be ostracized or pitied.

Those pushing for transgender rights tend to get hit by the anti-political-correctness backlash a lot. I have no doubts that the HAO's new gender-free housing option will be met with its fair share of eye-rolling and people thinking, "Oh, please! What's next, species-free housing?" or "Why draw so much attention to this?"

In addressing these protests, we need to remember that like race (and unlike species), gender is in the process of being deconstructed such that its delineations are not as rigid as commonly assumed. Many theories now view gender as more of a continuum than an either/or definition. Secondly, it is considerate of the University to create a safe space for those who want one. Even in the most liberal of places, like our very own Happy Valley, hate crimes can and do happen. UMass is right to offer its support in this way.

That said, sometimes political correctness does get taken too far, to the point where people take offense where none was intended. Someone repeatedly and intentionally calling a transgendered individual by the wrong pronoun out of malice is one thing, but many times, people make mistakes simply out of unfamiliarity with the issue, railing on the latter solves nothing and only causes further alienation.

Transgenderism need not be such a touchy subject for discussion. After all, its taboo status is nothing more than a social construct in itself. Many other cultures don't even define sex and gender the way we do; third-gender identifications, like the two-spirit in Native American and Canadian First Nation tribes, and the hijra in South Asia, abound outside of our own society.

It doesn't take a great leap of logic to think outside the black-and-white view of the matter that's so pervasive in our lives, all that's needed is an open mind to see that gender is a more fluid thing than we previously thought.

Jackie Hai can be reached at jhai@student.umass.edu

A selling sitcom

Michael Dennis

The television industry has been in a sad state of affairs for quite some time now. Bigger and better has not become a good thing for channel surfing. Between the numerous sensationalistic 24-hour news networks, ridiculous reality shows and the five hundred or so MTV channels (none of which actually broadcast music videos), we're suffering from a serious case of quantity over quality. As a result, if programs don't instantly bring in blockbuster ratings, the plug is quickly pulled.

Things haven't always been this way — even in the early '90s, when "Seinfeld" struggled its first few years, it was given a chance to prove itself. Not so today for award winning sitcoms like "Arrested Development," a show that's demise has proved, once and for all, that content and originality are not factors for television network executives.

But alas, there is a potential new series on the horizon that will aim to create a new low. Much like any good intervention, which serves to artificially force the afflicted to hit rock bottom before they harm themselves irreparably, the good folks at the ABC network have decided to step in and help the television industry kick its hardcore crap habit. ABC purveyor of such treats as the overwhelmingly realistic "Grey's Anatomy" (because, after all, doctors never stop having sex) and the X-list juggernaut "Dancing With The Stars," has brace yourself – ordered a pilot for a new TV sitcom based on the cavemen in the well-known GEICO Insurance advertisements.

According to ABC, the series, tentatively titled "Cavemen," will center around the cavemen characters as they "struggle with prejudice on a daily basis, always striving to live the lives of normal thirty-somethings in 2007 Atlanta." Admittedly, it has an inkling of potential, in terms of the parallels that it could draw from modern day race and gender relations. The big question is how deeply into issues the show would delve, with the guess here being not very.

But the nature of the current 30-second spots in which the cavemen characters appear is that any amusement viewers receive from them is undeniably superficial. After all, more than anything, they breed familiarity through simple repetition – if GEICO didn't want to sell insurance, they wouldn't hammer the cavemen into our heads.

More importantly, there are some disturbing cultural implications at work here. It's not often that corporate mascots are adapted to appear in a creative form that's supposedly for our entertainment. Being that the cavemen characters appear in GEICO advertisements, one could safely assume that GEICO owns the rights to them, or at the very least has some say in the way they're used. Even the most corporate-centric, hardest of hardcore capitalists would tell you that GEICO would not green-light such a creative venture without getting something out of it. Sure, this could be manifested through some simple behind-the-scenes financial transactions, but it won't be. At best, we'll be bombarded with even more GEICO ads during commercial breaks – at worst we can count on some not-so-subtle product placements and tie-ins.

It's not often that corporate mascots are adapted to appear in a creative form that's supposedly for our entertainment.

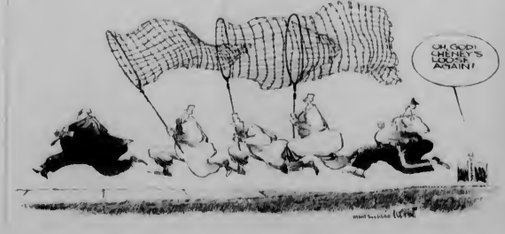
Believe it or not, as absurd as this all sounds, it's happened before. I ver heard of Baby Bob? Baby Bob is a real life baby that get this talks! Most recently, he's appeared in ads for the Quiznos Sub chain. Years earlier, he was featured in TV spots for a dotcom company at the height of the infamous boom. In the ads he's appeared in, little Bob doesn't really do anything – he just sits there and talks about a product, and the fact that he's a baby and talking (amazing!) is supposed to be enough to keep our attention and amuse us sufficiently. (Those companies are lucky if most people, exasperated by the miracle laid before them, gained their composure in time to actually realize what tiny Bob was pushing!)

Naturally, after he made his debut and became the hottest new thing, executives at CBS thought it would be a brilliant idea to give Baby Bob his own 30-minute sitcom. After nine episodes that caused the collective ears and eyes of America to bleed endlessly, the "Baby Bob" show died. (Too bad Bob didn't die with it.)

Luckily, as they were for little Bob's enchanting half-hour, the odds are stacked against "Cavemen." Though it'll no doubt fall flat on its face as soon as it hits the airwaves, it probably won't even get that far. For all the television pilots that are produced, an extremely slim number actually turn into TV shows. And that tells you something about how unbearably horrendous some of those pilots must be. If "Everybody Loves Raymond" can last for nine entire seasons, and "Rules of Engagement" can even see the light of day, then conventional wisdom would tell you that a monkey slapping peanut butter against a camera lens could give "American Idol" a run for its money.

But in this case, while a caveman may be able to easily acquire GEICO insurance (it being so easy and all), creating a successful sitcom requires a bit more skill than that. So here's a new one for you: "Cavemen." So stupid, an ABC executive would greenlight it!

Michael Dennis can be reached at mkdennis@student.umass.edu



WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR. MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU.
THE COLLEGIAN IS ALWAYS LOOKING TO IMPROVE ITS COVERAGE.
PART OF THAT MISSION EMANATES FROM TAKING THE PULSE OF YOU, THE MEMBER OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY. TELL US WHAT YOU THINK, SPEAK YOUR MIND.
Send an e-mail to:
LETTERS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Celebrity Chef Betty Rosbottom visited Berkshire Dining Commons Monday night to cook meals from her latest cook book, "The Big Book of Backyard Cooking." Around 2,800 students enjoyed Rosbottom's cuisine.

Bon Appetite

Betty Rosbottom comes to Berkshire Dining Commons as part of Guest Chef series

BY TERESA REILLY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Berkshire Dining Common is attempting to make your dinner more enjoyable by holding special events. Monday night the staff welcomed Guest Chef Betty Rosbottom.

"We are quite pleased with the turnout," said Rosbottom. "This is a very receptive audience." The line for the chef's meals never died down throughout the dinner time (5-9 p.m.) rush. Plus, the chocolate mint brownies were gone as soon as they were put out.

"I enjoyed the variety," said Meghan Caffery, a UMass sophomore who grabbed the chicken, rice and green beans. "It was like nothing we ever had before."

The menu was prepared from Rosbottom's new cookbook "The Big Book of Backyard Cooking: 250 Favorite Recipes for Enjoying the Great Outdoors." The book contains 250 recipes that the UMass Dining Services had to flip through. "We needed to find food we could pump out in large quantities," said Ryan Pipcynski, the Assistant Manager of Berkshire. According to Pipcynski, an estimated 2,800 students come through Berkshire at dinner time.

"I was surprised at how green the green beans stayed in such mass quantities," said Rosbottom. The green beans tossed with olive oil and chives went quickly. "It surprised me how many students took their green beans. Their mothers must have raised them well."

The fennel and rosemary coated chicken was also popular, but cooks had put in the extra effort for it. "They were grilling chicken outside," said Rosbottom. The temperature was reported in the 20's that night. "They wanted to make sure they got it right," said Pipcynski, "but in March [the weather] is 50/50."

Perhaps Berkshire Dining Hall should have cooked from another one of Rosbottom's books instead of the one intended for summer grilling. Rosbottom is the author to numerous cookbooks including "American Favorites," "First Impressions: 175 Memorable Appetizers and First Courses" and "Weekends with Friends."

Rosbottom is also the author of the column "That's Entertaining," which has been printed in the L.A. Times every week since 1987. The article contains unique ideas about home entertaining and of course, recipes. According to Rosbottom's Web site (www.bettyrosbottom.com) the article is also printed in such papers as The Baltimore Sun, The St. Louis Post Dispatch, The Columbus Dispatch, The Minneapolis Star Tribune and The Philadelphia Inquirer.

Rosbottom is also the host for the WGBY program "On the Menu." The show takes viewers to various restaurants and features chefs from around the Valley. During each show Rosbottom prepares at least three recipes with the featured chef.

In addition, she is also a cooking teacher at Yankee Candle in South Deerfield, Mass. where Martha Monaghan, the UMass Dining Services Special Coordinator, is a student of Rosbottom's. "She just kept telling me how great this place is," said Rosbottom.

Rosbottom's appearance at Berkshire was part of the DC's Guest Chef Series, where UMass is inviting various chefs to give students something different. Joanne Weir, cookbook author, and Ralph Coughenour, executive chef from UNH, have already contributed to the series.

According to Ken Toong, the Director of the Dining Services, the staff is looking to conduct many more special events. In April, they are going to attempt "home-cooked meals" which will use recipes from parents.

"We already have so many contributions," said Toong.

Berkshire hopes to hold special events at the least, once a month if not once a week. Students can check out the DC Web site for an ever changing list of these events.

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu

Music transcends culture

A conversation with Grammy Award Winner Yusef Lateef

PHOTOGRAPH BY YUSEF LATEEF | COURTESY

Former Professor Yusef Lateef has performed with Roy Eldridge, Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra and Charles Mingus. In 1987 Lateef won a Grammy Award for his album "Yusef Lateef's Little Symphony."

BY BRAD FARBERMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Former Five College Distinguished Professor and Grammy Award-winner Yusef Lateef (for 1987's "Yusef Lateef's Little Symphony") and multi-instrumentalist taught four classes at four of the five colleges from 1997-2002.

"One of the romances of American history is the music of African-Americans," said Yusef Lateef, 86, at his home in Amherst, Mass. last week.

These included "Applied Music" at University of Massachusetts, "Ensemble Participation" at Hampshire College and "History of African-American Music" at Smith College and Amherst College. He also taught private lessons at U Mass.

"Education helps a person think clearly and creatively," said Lateef. "It teaches discipline."

And requires endurance. Lateef offers that education is a process; it extends throughout a person's lifetime.

"It's a continuum," said Lateef. "It's a sum of events. As one travels along that line of thought, one accumulates technique and refinement of qualitative entities."

One also accumulates a B.A. and M.S. from Manhattan School of Music, as well as a Ph.D. from U Mass, if one is Lateef. Not to mention a roster of legendary musicians whom Lateef counts as both former colleagues and his most important teachers.

Lateef performed with trumpeter Roy Eldridge in 1947.

"I learned about being sincere, and that the attitude one takes when moving onto the bandstand is one of utter seriousness," said Lateef. "I learned that from Roy."

Lateef performed with the Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra in 1949.

"I learned a lot about rhythm, and how to conduct a band," said Lateef on his time in Gillespie's group. "Dizzy said he could give a lesson in rhythm to someone at Harvard and it would last them a year."

"That's a very profound statement," added Lateef. "But he could back it up."

Lateef performed and recorded with bassist Charles Mingus from 1960-1961.

"Charles Mingus was a man of huge creative proportions and he had his own individual ways of producing serious music," said Lateef. At one rehearsal, while working on Mingus' "Ecclusiastics," the bassist directed Lateef to solo on tenor saxophone at a spot in the chart where no chords were listed. When Lateef inquired as to which chords he should solo over, Mingus drew a coffin where the chords would have been, calling on Lateef to "play the coffin."

"He planted the idea of death, if you will," said Lateef. "That's an example of teaching a person how to think that is different from the status quo."

Straying from the status quo, however, has never been a problem for Lateef. Many credit the Detroit native with having introduced an Eastern influence, as well as a number of exotic instruments, to African-American music. On albums like 1957's "Other Sounds," 1961's "Eastern Sounds" and 1964's "Live at Pep's," Lateef played argol and shanai (two reed instruments from India), oboe (an instrument traditionally connected to European classical music) and bamboo flute in addition to tenor saxophone and flute.

"The purpose is not to mimic anyone, but to be inspired by what has been," said Lateef. "That's how new things come about, new ways to project soundscapes."

And new ways to do business. In 1992, Lateef launched YAL Records, his own imprint. To date, the label has issued more than thirty albums, each lead or co-lead by Lateef.

"I've spent my life playing music and producing music and it's just part of what I do," said Lateef. "It's a result of studying and producing music."

Another result of his studies in religion, this time was his decision to convert to Islam in 1948, and to change his name to "Yusef Abdul Lateef" his given name is William Huddleston. The name, which means "servant of god" ("Abdul" meaning "servant" and "Lateef" meaning "gentle, amiable and incomprehensible") gives him "something to strive for," he says.

Similarly, Lateef has created a new word to describe his music, in lieu of nonsense words like "jazz" or "bebop," he has dubbed his work "autophysiopsychic music," or "music which comes from one's physical, mental and spiritual self."

"[Music is played by the] body and fingers, which coordinate ideas from the mind and spirit," said Lateef.

Elaborating on the inspiration for this term, Lateef quotes the late Don Cherry: "Style is the death of creativity." With "autophysiopsychic music," Lateef is free of pretense or obligation, and able to indulge in any and all areas of the musical spectrum.

For now, the only limit Lateef places on his music is where he chooses to present it; Lateef will not perform in a venue that serves alcohol.

"The music deserves more than that," said Lateef, explaining that patrons in a pub, for example, are unable to concentrate on music due to consumption of alcohol. "Too much blood, sweat and tears have gone into the music to have it in a venue like that."

Lateef recalls playing on a gig with Mingus in New York's Greenwich Village, at a venue where alcohol was being served.

"The people were talking as loud as we were," said Lateef. "Mingus stopped the band and said 'You can leave now. I'll give you your money back.'"

Lateef's deep respect for the music also stems from his religious beliefs.

"If you hear a beautiful voice, you move toward the voice and see it's a lady singing," said Lateef. "It's my opinion that the beauty is not the lady's voice, but the beauty of the entity that created the lady."

Lateef finds evidence of this in a performance he attended by the late tenor saxophonist Ben Webster at Montmartre in Copenhagen. Webster's rendition of "Yesterday," by The Beatles, was met by an emotional audience.

"It was so beautiful that the Danes were crying," said Lateef. "[But] it wasn't Webster. It was the entity that created Webster."

Lateef finds a comparable beauty in the life and music of another late tenor saxophonist, the great Lester Young. For Lateef, Young's music is proof that the way one lives their life comes out in their song.

"His music sounded of kindness and compassion," said Lateef. "And that's the kind of man he was."

Lateef plans to perform with recent band mates The Belmondo Brothers in France, the Netherlands and Austria later this year. Several months ago, Lateef performed in Monaco and Spain.

"The particular beauty [of African-American music] enables it to travel far and wide, and to be appreciated not only where it was born, but across both oceans," said Lateef.

Lateef's latest album, "Yusef Lateef at the Bottom Line," documents a five performance from 1977 featuring Albert "Tootie" Heath on drums. It was released on YAL in 2006.

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberm@student.umass.edu

Joffrey Ballet leaps onto FAC stage

BY SYDNEY TOWNE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Joffrey Ballet brought three acts of dance to the Fine Arts Center stage Monday night. The mixed classical, musical and theatrical pieces to a sold-out audience. The effortless performance bridged the divide between the art of ballet and the fun of dance.

A black box stage design lent itself to the starkness of the first piece "Apollo," a work by George Balanchine from 1949. White minimalist costumes outfitted Apollo and his three muses as they danced from his birth to his ascension to Mount Olympus. The contrast of their bodies in white against the empty, black background highlighted the fluidity with which they performed.

Apollo, performed by Fabrice Calmels, was the image of godliness in both form and movement. He erased any doubt in the audience as to the physicality of ballet with his sweat-soaked leaps and lifts of the muses. The intensity of his performance injected the abstract design of the piece with a vitality that drew the audience in.

The second act was a shock of riotous color and movement after the restraint of "Apollo." "Deuce Coupe" is a series of vignettes set to Beach Boys music. Choreographed by Twyla Tharp in 1973, exclusively for The Joffrey Ballet, "Deuce," the surprise of rock-pop music, was simply the beginning in what could have been a much lengthier work.

The female dancers claimed the stage in swingy, tangerine dresses while the men wore vibrant red pants and loud floral shirts. These bright bursts of color swirled together as the dancers in larger number and more exuberant fashion than traditionally thought to be possible in a ballet.

It seemed Tharp intended to highlight the humor possible in song and dance with selections of songs that included "Big Tall Texan," "Shut Up Get Home" and "Papa Ooh Mau Mau." The dancers, at times, became the very characters the song spoke of, while in other moments simply seemed to be enjoying the exuberance of the music. Julianne Kepley stood out as a ballerina who clearly does what she loves, while Brian McSween demonstrated an innate sense of comedy and shone in the ensemble.

The sheer excitement of the dancers as they moved through one song to the next brought the audience along on what felt like a privileged glance into a world of talent and fun few experience in person. The gritty, dance hall vibe of some songs seemed a complete departure from the world of ballet and yet was effortlessly integrated with more traditional moments.

There was never a moment, even when the stage was full that the dance was in unison, rather and indeed even better, the dancers were never combined in more than trios or pairs. The harmony and interplay of these little groups kept the crowd at attention for the full 40 minutes. The introduction of Tharp and her modern dance techniques to The Joffrey Ballet's repertoire can only be considered an asset and crowd favorite.

Returning to a more classically oriented style of ballet, The Joffrey dancers ended their performance with "The Green Table." An anti-war piece created in 1932 for the International Choreographic Competition "The Green Table" won top honors and

See BALLET on page 7

During Joffrey Ballet's performance Monday night, the dance group mixed rock and pop music to create a twist to traditional ballet.

See LATEEF on page 7

Lateef discusses prolific career

Originally born with the name William Huddleston, Lateef changed his name to Yusef Abdul Lateef in 1947 after converting to Islam. Abdul means servant and Abdul means gentle.

LATEEF from page 6

"autophysiopsychic music," or "music which comes from one's physical, mental and spiritual self."

"[Music is played by the] body and fingers, which coordinate ideas from the mind and spirit," said Lateef.

Elaborating on the inspiration for this term, Lateef quotes the late Don Cherry: "Style is the death of creativity." With "autophysiopsychic music," Lateef is free of pretense or obligation, and able to indulge in any and all areas of the musical spectrum.

For now, the only limit Lateef places on his music is where he chooses to present it; Lateef will not perform in a venue that serves alcohol.

"The music deserves more than that," said Lateef, explaining that patrons in a pub, for example, are unable to concentrate on music due to consumption of alcohol. "Too much blood, sweat and tears have gone into the music to have it in a venue like that."

Lateef recalls playing on a gig with Mingus in New York's Greenwich Village, at a venue where alcohol was being served.

"The people were talking as loud as we were," said Lateef. "Mingus stopped the band and said 'You can leave now. I'll give you your money back.'"

Lateef's deep respect for the music also stems from his religious beliefs.

"If you hear a beautiful voice, you move toward the voice and see it's a lady singing," said Lateef. "It's my opinion that the beauty is not the lady's voice, but the beauty of the entity that created the lady."

Lateef finds evidence of this in a performance he attended by the late tenor saxophonist Ben Webster at Montmartre in Copenhagen. Webster's rendition of "Yesterday," by The Beatles, was met by an emotional audience.

"It was so beautiful that the Danes were crying," said Lateef. "[But] it wasn't Webster. It was the entity that created Webster."

Lateef finds a comparable beauty in the life and music of another late tenor saxophonist, the great Lester Young. For Lateef, Young's music is proof that the way one lives their life comes out in their song.

"His music sounded of kindness and compassion," said Lateef. "And that's the kind of man he was."

Lateef plans to perform with recent band mates The Belmondo Brothers in France, the Netherlands and Austria later this year. Several months ago, Lateef performed in Monaco and Spain.

"The particular beauty [of African-American music] enables it to travel far and wide, and to be appreciated not only where it was born, but across both oceans," said Lateef.

Lateef's latest album, "Yusef Lateef at the Bottom Line," documents a five performance from 1977 featuring Albert "Tootie" Heath on drums. It was released on YAL in 2006.

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberm@student.umass.edu

Ballet performance bends genre line

BALLET from page 6

was first performed by The Joffrey Ballet in 1967.

The grim piece features the aristocrats who create war, the men who fight it and the women who suffer through it. Linking each scene was Michael Levine as Death who fought with and eventually overcame someone in each scene. Death cloaked in war paint and Trojan-like battle regalia seemed the embodiment of the ideals of honorable, historic war. He was, however, the saddest character as he escorted almost the entire cast to their deaths as if it was simply his duty and therefore unavoidable.

The desolation of the cast and the anguish with which they portrayed their acceptance of their fate was contrasted by the lively interactions of the gentlemen in black. These aristocrats who gestured and postured over "The Green Table" were distinctly separate from the other dancers by their dress, masks and lighthearted dancing. They were the directors of war and therefore were exempt from the results of whatever decisions they made over their large, inanimate table.

Why The Joffrey Ballet included "The Green Table," a pacifist piece, in their touring schedule for 2007 can only be guessed, but the current Iraq War seems an interesting place to look. The expression of the horrors of war should resonate with a country currently involved in one.

This performance was a beautiful presentation of the side of war that most Americans in the current war fail to fully realize. War affects the soldiers who fight, the men and women who love them and the people on whose land the battles are fought. "The Green Table" showed an exaggerated version of the powerful as detached and aloof while the populous suffers the consequences.

The Joffrey Ballet presented the full crowd at the Fine Arts Center with a glimpse into the history, fun and power of dance. It was a truly enlightening night of professional ballet. It left the crowd, which remained until the last bow, full of awe for the skill of the dancers, the insight of the choreographers and the beauty of their combination.

Sydney Towne can be reached at stowne@student.umass.edu.

"The Green Table" segment of the performance was more oriented toward the classic style of ballet. The scene also had political imagery.

IF YOU CAN'T SEE THAT

1
2
3
4

ILLEGAL DOWNLOADING

5

IS STEALING

6

THEN KEEP READING

7

If you download music illegally, you are stealing music.

Every month, thousands of students face university disciplinary action or lawsuits and fines that cost thousands of dollars.

Legal downloading doesn't cost much. The choice is yours. Pay a little now or a lot more later.

RIAA

Developed by university students for the RIAA.

The sweet taste of revenge

COURTESY OF UMASS DINING SERVICES

Ralph Coughenour poses with Sam the Minuteman after arriving at the Berkshire Dining Commons last week. Coughenour came to UMass after losing a bet with Dining Services. UNH agreed to send its top chef to UMass after losing to the Minutemen in the football playoffs last fall.

BY MARY-FRANCES HECK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

If you happened to eat dinner at Berkshire last Tuesday night, you can thank the University of Massachusetts football team for the delicious and different food selection. Why you ask? Well, you see, when the football team won their playoff game against the University of New Hampshire last fall, the UNH Director of Culinary Services lost a bet. In payment of that debt, he agreed to come to campus and cook dinner for students in the Berkshire Dining Hall. Chef Ralph Coughenour was on hand to talk to diners as they sampled his creations.

The menu he prepared for hungry UMass students included some of our Atlantic 10 opponent's favorites. The UNH staff served up Roast Wild Salmon with Cranberry Mustard that would rival any fish dish prepared at UMass along with Chicken Chesterfield, London broil, Warm Brownie Pudding and Chocolate Chip Cheesecake. The delectable dinner was made more pleasurable by the friendly presence of Coughenour and his associates.

Upon speaking with Chef Coughenour, it became clear that he is no ordinary cook. With over 30 years of experience, he is truly an inspiration to the profession. He started working as a vegetable cook at the age of 14 and quickly grew to love the culinary arts.

While he did not attend a formal culinary school, Coughenour was taken under the wing of a well known chef trained in the European Apprenticeship Program. This chef honed his culinary techniques and has remained a mentor throughout his career.

"I joined the American Culinary Federation when I was very young and studied techniques very hard," noted Coughenour.

For those thinking about a profession in hospitality or food service, Coughenour has a few suggestions: "First of all, spend some time working in the hospitality industry. It can be a large hotel or a small restaurant. You will need a certain work ethic along with passion in order to be successful in this field."

And passion, he has. Coughenour works hard to keep food service exciting for students who eat his food three times a day. "I study trends and what is going on with other colleges as well as other restaurants and am constantly trying to develop new ideas and items.

"Every week I have a production meeting with the culinary staff. I have challenged them to bring a few new recipes and ideas for review every week," Said Coughenour.

In addition to keeping up with food trends, Coughenour works hard to include as many local and sustainable components into his menus as possible. "At UNH we do work through our vendors to use as many local ingredients, like cheeses, milk and other dairy products, as we can. As far as produce, the growing season is short and we demand such large quantities that our produce company sources that for us," says Coughenour. "We do have one special meal each fall where all local farmers and produce are featured. It has been very successful. We also work very closely with the UNH Organic Gardening Club and purchase almost everything that they grow. I even make suggestions as to what items to grow before they plant so we will have a need for them," Coughenour continued.

Coughenour is clear on his high standards of maintaining quality in everyday cooking. "My attitude has always been that there is a right way and a wrong way to prepare everything. Everything from a burger to steak tips should be the freshest and best that it can be."

These values have led Coughenour to the top. Although he did not attend culinary school, he serves as an instructor for the Hospitality Management Program at UNH. He also works on the Advisory Committee for the Food Service Management Program. Coughenour advises prospective management students to "research, visit and choose a program but never stop working. It is both the experience as well as the education that will make you a good manager or chef," says Coughenour.

The University of New Hampshire, like the UMass, has a hospitality program through its school of management. It also offers a Food Service Management Program through the school of applied science. UNH is currently discussing the future development of a Culinary Arts Program.

While cooking for students in a dining hall may not seem cutting edge, there are industry standards and trends that change just like restaurants.

"The concepts that we design for our facilities are becoming more complex and require a la minute cooking skills," Coughenour remarked at the innovative design of Berkshire dining hall during his visit. "I really like the type of wok stoves that they use for stir fry and I thought that the Vegan station was very, very well designed."

Mary-Frances Heck can be reached at mheck@student.umass.edu.

Williams gets loopy at Calvin concert

BY MICHAEL TRABERT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With no warning, the lights suddenly dimmed and an acoustic guitar sounded this past Sunday. Keller Williams skipped an introduction and played while walking out on stage to start his two-hour set at the Calvin Theater on Sunday.

A flowing mop-top hairdo covered his eyes that were for the most part illusive to the audience while he played. His first song of the night "Freeker by the Speaker" was an audience favorite and he looked like a bobble-head figurine as he moved around to the sound of his own music, causing his hair to fly in different directions.

Williams's composure was low energy and relaxed, he almost looked a tad forlorn. His music, crisp and weird, was still danceable which the audience did not hesitate to take advantage of.

From the hype of this concert, Williams's jam-band fan base, and number of promotional flyers floating around one would have expected the Calvin to be packed. Surprisingly, there were many empty seats and most of the concertgoers congregated up front in the orchestral pit area to dance. The approximately 300 spectators consisted of the same sort of stereotypical hippy matinee one can expect to find at such a show.

Williams at one point told the audience in a sort of freestyle rap that they might not let him back because he didn't fill the venue. This was a little uncalled for, and instead of complaining about the people who weren't there, he should have thanked the people who did come. Maybe that is the reason why he appeared a little downtrodden.

The stage had a myriad of instruments that Williams used during the show. His acoustic guitar was the only thing that he carried with him. To his left and right he had a guitar and an electric bass on stands so he could just walk up to them and play a riff without having to put the instrument on. Also accompanying him was a drum machine, piano, microphone and a bunch of effect instruments like a guiro and some sort of odd handheld piano-type-thing that you blow into to operate.

A staple of his performance was his ability to loop sounds. He would use a special pedal to repeat riffs played on instruments so he could create a jam by himself. This is extremely impressive, but after being repeated a few times, the novelty wore off. Most of the time you don't even realize that he is looping, by using it subtly he transforms this would-be novelty into a legitimate act.

The stage art itself was a grand sight. Whoever designed the set paid attention in their art school design class. There were two drapes that changed to various bright greens, reds and yellows. Between the drapes was an oval screen with a lacey gold border that mostly focused on Williams but had some trippy videos of hot air balloons, a kid dancing and what looked like Windows media player visualizations. Other lighting effects were also moved around the Calvin to stimulate the audience.

As a surprise, Martin Sexton, solo artist and collaborator on Williams's new album took over on guitar and performed a couple of songs with Williams on piano. Sexton had a beautiful voice and seemed very grateful to be onstage performing to the thankful audience.

Williams covered many songs during his performance. Some of the artists covered were Phish, Talking Heads, Sublime and The Grateful Dead. These covers were all very subtle and usually sandwiched between Williams's own materials. Williams made those songs his by conforming them to his style.

According to Williams, this was the last stop on his tour. It was unfortunate that the venue wasn't packed, but a great show was still performed.

Michael Trabert can be reached at mtrabert@student.umass.edu.

During Keller Williams' performance last Sunday night Martin Sexton came on stage to collaborate on two songs with Williams.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON

The courses are challenging. Everything else is a breeze.

At UMass Boston, summer learning is about stretching your mind, not your patience or your pocketbook

- Over 500 courses offered days, evenings, or online
- Small classes taught by distinguished UMass Boston faculty
- Easily accessible Boston Harbor campus
- World-class education at a real-world price

Registration Starts April 2.

illuminate your summer

summer.umb.edu UMASS BOSTON 617.287.6000

UMass Theatre Guild

SPRING COFFEE HOUSE
THREE RING CIRCUS

Sunday, March 11th
7-11 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Enjoy the performances of talented Five College students and eat some delectable goodies!

FREE!

RSOs:

Put Your Advertisement in the Daily Collegian!

RSOs receive a discounted rate for advertising. Advertise your group's events at low cost.

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10PM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN

★Swimming ★Tennis
★Basketball ★Fitness

COMPETITIVE BASKETBALL GAMES w/JERRY Mon/Thurs 6-8pm
OVER 30 FREE CLASSES WEEKLY

HAMPFIT.COM for Rates & Info

Join Now
Spring Special
$149/ 10 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

BITE ME!

Pizza Shark Plus presents Two-for-one Mondays

Buy any large pizza, get a second large pizza FREE with your UMass ID

Cheese $12.00	Pepperoni $14.00	Pesto $17.00
Teriyaki Steak $18.00	BBQ Chicken $17.00	Antipasto $18.00
Buffalo Chicken $17.00	Seafood $18.00	White Pizza $14.00
Mediterranean $17.00	Roasted Veggie $17.00	Margherita $17.00
Shark Therapy $17.00	Honey Mustard Chicken $18.00

(413) 259-4259
17B Montague Road, Amherst MA 01002
*higher price prevails. must show UMass ID at time of purchase. offer expires 3/17/07

Typadis climbs school scoring chart

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was only a matter of time — or in this case just four games into the 2007 campaign — that former Massachusetts women's lacrosse player Jada Emery would relinquish her spot in UMass' all-time top 10 career goals club.

Junior Kathleen Typadis is the current Minutewoman responsible for knocking Emery down to 11th in the record books.

Emery had amassed 88 career goals in her stellar four years at UMass, and was ranked 10th all-time in career goals. Typadis passed Emery with her second tally (10th goal of the season) in an 18-7 shellacking of the Harvard Crimson Saturday. It was her 89th career goal in just 39 games donning the maroon and white.

"It was very exciting," Typadis said about becoming a member of UMass' all-time top 10 scoring club. "It was a good moment."

But Typadis made it clear that her eventual entrance into the record books didn't enter her mind until after the days leading up to Saturday's game.

"It kind of gives me the jitters," Typadis said. "I don't really like to jinx myself. I just try to go into games with a clean slate and try to do my best every game."

The quarterback of UMass' offense needs just 13 more scores to rank fifth all-time in career goals. And if the Minutewomen's offensive machine remains in proper working condition, she could potentially become UMass' all-time leading goal scorer. That title belongs to Pam Moryl, who found the back of the net 170 times from 1982-1985.

Typadis has put her name in the record books early and often in her two years in Amherst, and soon may need a section reserved in the media guide /publication just to keep track of all her records and accomplishments.

In 2005, her freshman season, Typadis became third all-time in UMass single-season draw controls with 36. That seemed to be the number of choice in Typadis' rookie season, as she registered 36 goals and 43 points at year's end. Her season total in points in 2005 also ranks as the freshman record.

A year later, the Medfield, Mass. native began to establish herself as a constant scoring threat, leading the team with 43 goals, which ranks fifth all-time in the single-season goal club.

Typadis is also riding a consecutive scoring streak that has reached 28 consecutive games. She has registered 11 goals thus far in 2007. That streak will be put to the test when the 3-1 Minutewomen clash with the No. 7 Dartmouth Big Green this afternoon.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos caught a sneak peak of UMass' star attraction and hasn't been disappointed with the feature presentation Typadis has turned out this spring.

"I was actually familiar with her when I was coaching at Northwestern," Venechanos said. "We came to watch a couple of games at UMass last year. She was a really quick and athletic attacker. She was a real game breaker. Once she had the ball in her stick she was a threat to score.

"She is more of a leader with her play her play speaks volumes," Venechanos added. "Every time we need a goal, if we need a huge groundball, or if we need a spark, she's definitely there for us. And I think she'll continue to do that for us for the rest of the year."

But Venechanos knew that one of her star players still had room for improvement heading into the 2007 campaign.

"She was a little bit reckless at times during the fall season, but I think this year she's been able to see the game better and the game is now coming to her more," Venechanos said. "A lot of her scoring chances are a lot higher percentage than they were in the past."

The pupil agreed with her teacher's assessment that there is still more she can do to become even more of a threat on the field.

"The coaches are pushing me to do more with my left hand and taking drives on my left," Typadis said. "Obviously assisting more this year and getting people open is going to be a big thing for me."

Even though Typadis headlines the team's attack, it is evident this season that her scoring magic is rubbing off on her teammates, as UMass has experienced an offensive resurgence in the young season.

The Minutewomen are averaging 12.50 goals in their first four games this season. Except for a six-goal performance in the season-opening loss to Holy Cross, UMass has averaged 14 goals in their last three contests, all of which resulted in wins. In 18 games last season, the Maroon and White averaged only 8.25 goals a game and scored 14 goals or more on just two occasions. The 18-goal performance versus Harvard was the most goals UMass notched in one game since the 2001 season.

The Maroon and White has wasted no time in displaying its reborn offense to opponents this season as well, having scored 32 first half tallies in its first four games. UMass had 79 first half goals in 17 games a season ago.

Sophomore midfielder Holly Drown has been Typadis's partner in dishing out a steady dose of offensive assault on opponents this year. She is tied for lead in goals with 11, including a career-high five goals in the win over Harvard. In fact, the Minutewomen have six players who have tallied four or more goals this year.

"All the coaches are pushing the attackers and even the defense to be a threat to the goal and they want everyone to be versatile and take it to the net," Typadis said. "I think that's really balanced our attack and given us more scorers."

With the offense at this point thriving under Typadis's leadership, goals along with the wins should likely continue to pile up for the Maroon and White.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu

Yarworth, Newcomb build for future

The nature of collegiate sports dictates that athletes must one day leave the program to pursue the rest of their lives. To maintain success and build a program, great coaches must attract talented athletes annually to compensate for the departure of their seniors. Russ Yarworth and Bob Newcomb are great coaches and because of this, the departure of the class of 2007 will not partalyze the University of Massachusetts's swimming and diving program.

Senior Ethan Swisher headlines a class of Minutemen that became one of the most successful in school history after securing the program's ninth Atlantic 10 Men's Swimming and Diving Championship this past February in Buffalo, N.Y. Not only did this class win races, but they provided the team with depth in every event.

While it's something of an impossibility to replace these swimmers, the roles they played on the team will need to be filled by current members of the team if UMass plans to repeat as A-10 Champions.

Freshman Trevor Ziegler looks to fill Swisher's role as the team's top backstroker and individual medley specialist. Ziegler had an outstanding freshman campaign for the Minutemen and, with the guidance of Yarworth and next year's upperclassmen, should continue his progress. Freshman Andrew Willbrant fits into the same category, but will need to use his less-than-stellar showing at the A-10 Championships as motivation for his increased role next season.

Senior Jake Hogue carried the Minutemen's breaststroke unit for the last two seasons, but got help from junior John Weaver. He actually outperformed Hogue at the A-10 finals in the 200-yard breaststroke finishing fourth to Hogue's fifth. However, Hogue's presence in the locker room may prove the most difficult aspect to replace. He was the first two-time captain for the Minutemen since the late 1980s.

While none of this year's freshmen are particularly strong in the breaststroke, Yarworth added Patrick Koehne, the reigning New Jersey State YMCA Champion in the 100-yard breaststroke and 200-yard IM as part of his early recruiting class for the 2007-08 season.

The rest of this year's seniors, Greg Chartier, Mike Cordes, Mike Herald and Gordon Leonard stabilized the Minutemen with their ability to post strong times in different events. Chartier leaves UMass as one of the best 400-yard individual medley performers in school history. Freshman Justin Brooks performed well in the event this season, but this is probably the weakest event for the Minutemen heading into next season.

The freestyle sprinting unit projects as the strongest unit for the Minutemen heading into next season. Freshman Jean Molitete won the 100-yard freestyle at the A-10 finals and third in the 50-yard freestyle. Ziegler stepped in for freestyle sprints as well this season. Junior AJ Vavella won the 100-yard freestyle at the A-10 finals as a freshman and performed well this year while battling mononucleosis.

For next season, the Maroon and White sit in great shape but will need continued contribution and development from their entire roster if they are to carry on the legacy of UMass swimming.

Like Swisher on the men's side, senior captain Liz Lovejoy should prove the most difficult to replace in the pool for the Minutewomen. She willed the Minutewomen to a second-place finish at the A-10 Championships, the best for the program since winning the title in 2001. However, she could also be compared to Hogue for the role she played as a leader on the team. At the moment it's difficult to suggest who could replace Lovejoy as the team's anchor in relays and vocal leader.

Joe Meloni

Freshmen Elizabeth Walsh and Kathryne Chalikis distinguished themselves as upcoming stars on the team, so it isn't absurd to think either of them could become Newcomb's go-to swimmer. But to suggest that they rise to the level of Lovejoy in just their second year at UMass, while not entirely unlikely, may be a little impractical.

The Minutewomen boast a solid core of juniors who can take over for Lovejoy as a captain on paper. But to replace the enthusiasm and grit Lovejoy brought to UMass will prove quite the chore. Junior Allison Volpe improved down the stretch and if pushed could take over for Lovejoy in both capacities.

Considering their finish at A-10s, it is shocking how paltry the Minutewomen's crew in the breaststroke was. At the A-10 finals, the only final heats devoid of a swimmer from UMass were the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke. Sophomore Jackie Porter's 11th-place finish was the best anyone from UMass could muster.

Newcomb addressed that need in recruiting. Jessica Staroselec comes to UMass from the Jersey Gators Aquatic Club where she became a nationally regarded performer in the breaststroke.

The Minutewomen's diving unit took the biggest hit with the graduation of Melissa Pond and fellow senior Mary Jenkins. But diving also turned out to be the most fruitful aspect of recruiting for the Minutewomen.

Anne Fogerty, one of the nation's top gymnasts, nearly signed with California but turned it down to dive for UMass diving coach Mandy Hixon.

Replacing their departing seniors will not be an easy task. But Newcomb and Yarworth have proved that, where good programs fall short, they're just great.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

UMass closes out indoor track season

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts track and field teams closed out their seasons over the weekend in Boston. The Minutemen competed in the IC4A Championships hosted by Boston University and the Minutewomen finished at the ECAC Championships hosted by Northeastern.

Junior Christina DeRosa was the lone Minutewoman runner at the ECAC Championships. DeRosa finished 23rd in the 5,000-meter race, coming in at 17:37.95. DeRosa said she was happy to compete in the ECAC after working hard all season.

"I was just going for time because once you get to a meet like that it's like your there, you've done all the work," DeRosa said.

DeRosa ran well this season. At the New England Championships she set her personal best time in the 5,000 with a fifth-place finish (17:22.96). Before the championships, DeRosa cut her time down each race in the event. At the start of the year, her time was 17:44.70 at the Valentine Invitational, where she placed 18th overall. At the Atlantic 10 Championships DeRosa cut her time down to 17:38.73, placing third overall.

"I would have been happier if my time was closer to what I ran [at New England's], but it's still one of my top times of the season," DeRosa said.

DeRosa's season didn't start the way she planned. She was running the 3,000-meter race like she had the previous season, but she became disappointed in her times.

"The beginning of the season started out rough for me. I wasn't running my 3k times anywhere near the 3k times I was running last year," DeRosa said.

This season her best 3,000 time came at the BU Quad meet, she placed third with a time of 10:18.28. Last year at the New England Championships, she ran the 3,000 meters with a personal best time of 10:04.05. DeRosa is more focused on the longer distances now, and after suffering an injury, she has been unable to prepare for short distance meets.

"During the indoor season I haven't done many speed workouts because I've been having calf tightness so [coach Julie Lafreniere] has been trying to keep me off the track," DeRosa said. "She's been trying to rest me for the past couple of weeks and I've been continuing to improve with all that rest."

During the outdoor season, DeRosa will be competing in the 10,000-meter event. The outdoor season starts March 31 at the UMass Five-Way Meet. This will be the first meet at the new multimillion-dollar track and field complex.

The Minutemen finished their strong season with twelve athletes representing UMass at the IC4As. Senior James Godinho finished 23rd in the 400-meter dash with a time of 48.86 seconds. Godinho just missed his personal best time of 48.61 seconds good for third all-time at UMass.

The 4 x 400 meter relay team featuring junior Nathan Barksdale, Godinho, senior Manny Harris-Lopes and sophomore Kevin Laneta finished 23rd with a time of 3:18.77. Their season-best mark came at the New England Championships with a time of 3:17.62.

In the 4 x 800 meter race the team of freshman Ryan Diorio, junior Ryan Durkin, junior Matthew Klypka and junior James Bentley placed 17th with a time of 7:51.82. Their best mark of the season also came at New Englands with a time of 7:43.25.

The distance team of sophomore Josh Boone Godinho, junior Kevin Murphy and sophomore Peter Lortunato placed 10th with a time of 10:01.61. They were the only UMass team to set a season best time their previous best mark also came at the New England Championships with a time of 10:08.73.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

Check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog Go to:
dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

FACTORY DIRECT
DISCOUNT MATTRESS WAREHOUSE, INC.
FORMERLY SLEEPY HOLLOW
LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY!!
VOTED # 1
Futons Mattresses Platform Beds 10 Yr. Hardwood
10 BELCHERTOWN RT. 9 TO NORTHAMPTON
DISCOUNT MATTRESS
www.directdiscountmattress.com
(413) 253-BEDS (2337) RT. 9 Amherst
SUN-MON: 12-4 TUES-SAT: 10:30-6

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Looking for business experience??

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking qualified applicants to fill the positions of:

- Business Manager
- Assistant Business Manager
- Distribution Manager

Contact Daniel Grant at 413-545-3500 for more information or stop by the collegian in the basement of the campus center

WALK ON WATER

Saturday, March 10, 7:30 p.m.
School of Management 137
UMass Amherst

The most popular Israeli film ever shown in the U.S., this thriller about a Mossad agent assigned to track down an aging Nazi war criminal challenges our beliefs about sexuality, vengeance, and the morality of killing.

An unusual double feature about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict offers inspiration and humor

Encounter Point tells the story of Palestinians and Israelis who risk everything—their social standing, their relationship to their families, and even their lives—to promote a nonviolent end to the conflict (2006, 85 minutes, English, Hebrew, and Arabic with subtitles)

West Bank Story is a musical comedy about dueling falafel stands in the West Bank—a hilarious parody of Romeo and Juliet and West Side Story which makes a serious statement about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (21 minutes, English)

2006 Academy Award Best Live Action Short Film

Sunday, March 11, 7:00 p.m.
School of Management 137
UMass Amherst
Free and open to the public

More information at www.umass.edu/jewish or 413.545.9642

UMASS AMHERST

Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival, and cosponsored by the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life, and Brit Tzedek v'Shalom, the Jewish Alliance for Justice and Peace

UM given early report card

Junior Pam Rosanio played well all season long, but began to struggle towards the end of the year. She finished with 11.1 points per game.

W. BASKETBALL from page 14

categories, amassing a 16.1 points-per-game average, 53.8 percent shooting, 482 total points and 64 blocks.

She is also second in total rebounds, third in assists and sixth in steals, with numbers of 207, 72, and 18, respectively.

Maroon and White fans can count on Mills to use her 6-foot-1 frame to tear opponents apart underneath the basket next year as she tries to pilot her team back to the A-10 Tournament.

FORWARD PAM ROSANIO: A-

Comments: Dedicated, displays great effort, good leadership skills.

Known for playing tenacious "D", Rosanio exhibits the signs of an unofficial team leader. The hard-nosed junior zips around the court following the ball like a hawk and she has the stats to coincide with this die-hard intensity.

The psychology major is second on the team in assists, with 74 on year. Her 323 points, 155 boards and 34 steals all rank third on the Minutewomen, in addition to being fifth in blocks (4).

If Rosanio continues to play with a fire in her belly next season, she's likely to be one of the most important factors in another UMass A-10 Championship run.

FORWARD TAMARA TATHAM: B+

Comments: Humble, hard working, disciplined, but overly timid at times.

As the last few seconds of the St. Bonaventure game drained off the clock, Tatham watched her college basketball career end on a lousy note.

Fours years of dedication will not go to waste for the team's lone senior, however. She has earned many accolades – both this season and over the last four years – that will serve as sweet reminders of playing collegiate hoops.

The Brampton, Ontario, native was the best rebounder for UMass, pulling down a team-high 269 boards on the season. She also proved to be the team's best bandit – registering 59 steals.

Tatham leaves UMass in the spring with a diploma, but that's not all she will have to remember her playing days.

In her four years of donning the maroon and white, Tatham has accumulated 1,386 points as a Minutewoman, putting herself eighth on UMass' all-time scoring list.

And though that is not an A-10 Championship crown, it is still something she can talk proudly about with her grandchildren someday.

CENTER WHITNEY MCDONALD: C

Comments: Powerful, tall, strong. Not very fleet-of-foot.

At a towering 6-foot-2, the junior is the tallest member of the Maroon and White – and she can drop in those easy buckets from under the glass. That is, however, when she plays.

She averaged only 10 minutes per game, depositing 81 points in that time.

She has the power and the stature to dominate at the baseline, but must see more court time if she is to utilize her talents.

GUARD DIATEMA HILL: C+

Comments: Talented, scrappy, reliable. Needs more time to develop.

A skinny, quick freshman, Hill has potential just waiting to blossom. Given some time to hone her skills, she can be a major contributor to UMass success.

Despite averaging only 1.3 minutes per contest, the guard from Queens, N.Y., scored 34 points in her first year of college ball.

She also has 45 boards, 22 assists, 12 steals and a block already to her credit.

GUARD DEBIN BELL: INCOMPLETE

Comments: Promising, hard working.

The junior transfer from John A. Logan College saw the least amount of minutes (four) of any member of the Maroon and White but still managed to record a block and an assist.

She showed promise in high school and during the recruiting process, but will need more playing time to make a name for herself as a Minutewoman.

GUARD KIM BENTON: B-

Comments: Feisty, gritty, intense, athletic, a natural shooter. In need of more consistency.

At the season's beginning, any ball that freshman sharpshooter Kim Benton put up from behind the arc seemed to be magnetized to the net. As flawless as she is when she's on her game, however, she can enter a shooting drought at the drop of a hat.

Despite scoring 181 points, the pinsize prodigy went several games without draining a single shot, ultimately plummeting her to 33.3 percent shooting, with a 35 percent from behind the arc.

Her 5-foot-5 stature doesn't prevent her from being productive, however, as she snatched 54 rebounds throughout the season. She also registered 50 assists and 23 steals.

Benton plays with a feistiness and passion that can't be taught. If she can become more consistent, she could very well be the future of UMass women's basketball.

GUARD ERIN CALIPARI: INCOMPLETE

Comments: Hard working, popular with teammates.

After almost two full seasons with the Minutewomen, Calipari finally scored her first collegiate point in UMass' Feb. 11 matchup against Rhode Island.

In the waning minutes of the game, Calipari received a pass from Stephanie Gerardot and let one go from behind the 3-point line. The ball soared high into the air at a steep arc, only to make a perfect swish through the nylon. Her peers exploded off the bench to congratulate her for the tally, which had been a long time coming.

The daughter of UMass men's basketball coaching legend John Calipari, Erin was a three-time letterwinner at White Station High School in Memphis, Tenn., and is also a frequent participant on the women's practice squad.

GUARD STEPHANIE GERARDOT: C+

Comments: Scrappy, hard working. In need of more consistency.

Though her numbers were not something to be sniffed at, they were the result of underachievement.

It was a rollercoaster ride between good nights and bad nights for the sophomore, as it always seemed like a crapshoot as to whether she would have a fruitful performance.

Even with the inconsistency, Gerardot managed to put up some healthy numbers – she finished up her second season with 126 points, 50 rebounds, 30 assists and a block to her name.

GUARD SAKERA YOUNG: B-

Comments: Durable, hard nosed, tough. Needs to take more chances.

After one particularly rough game, one UMass parent approached Young with a big hug and a smile and said, "Thank you for sacrificing your body out there like that. I could never plow through people like you did."

That is the most general representation of what the well-spoken sophomore brings to the table for the Minutewomen every game. She displays the grit of NBA star Allen Iverson driving to the basket – often winding up on the floor.

The result of her resiliency over the season was 79 points, 72 assists, 66 boards, 36 steals and two blocks.

GUARD ALISHA TATHAM: B

Comments: Reliable, good leadership skills. Is a defensive specialist.

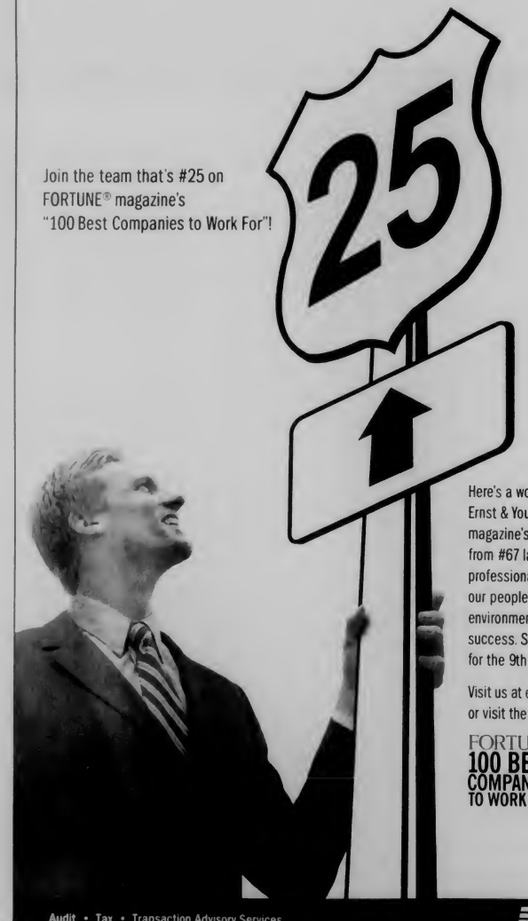
Last but not least is junior captain Alisha Tatham. The younger sister of Tamara, Alisha is a responsible and even-tempered leader. Though Dacko was occasionally disappointed with the guard's offensive production, she explains that it is Alisha's coverage on defense that sets her apart.

Given captainship – along with Mills – by her teammates, Tatham uses her natural ability to lead to ready the locker room from each game.

She made steady progress in the statistical categories as the schedule progressed – finishing up the year with 191 points (6.4 per game), 91 boards, 35 assists and 24 steals – but it wasn't enough to keep her team's season going.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Take the road to success.



Join the team that's #25 on FORTUNE® magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work For"!

Here's a workplace where you can really go places! Ernst & Young jumped up to #25 on FORTUNE® magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work For" from #67 last year – ranked higher than any other professional services firm. At Ernst & Young, our people are our edge, so we create an environment that promotes your growth and success. See for yourself why we've made the list for the 9th year in a row. This way to a great career!

Visit us at ey.com/us/careers for more information or visit the EY page on facebook.com.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2007

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Fordham riding high

A-10 TOURNAMENT from page 14

won their last 14 home games before the UMass loss. Brian Roberts leads the Flyers in nearly every offensive category, including points scored with 18.2 per game.

Charlotte had a disappointing regular season considering the expectations. De'Angelo Alexander and Leemie Goldwire, Charlotte's shooting tandem, have been spectacular as expected. Alexander is fourth in the conference in scoring at 17.7 points per game and ninth in rebounding with 7.2 boards per game from the guard position.

The matchup between these two teams is decidedly even. They split the regular season series (Charlotte won at home and Dayton held serve on its home court) and they've only squared off five times since Charlotte's move from Conference USA to the A-10.

If the adage about guard-play winning championships holds true, then Charlotte should beat the Flyers in the first round. Alexander and Goldwire are overwhelming when they're on, and if they're not, D.J. Draydon can wreak havoc on the interior to get the inside-outside game going for his shooters.

Dayton is also terrible on the road and has just one win this season away from Dayton Arena. Charlotte wins this one.

NO. 5 FORDHAM VS. NO. 12 RICHMOND, 2:30 P.M.

Richmond snuck into the A-10 Tournament and is clearly the underdog against the upstart Fordham Rams, who have bounced into the postseason on a four-game winning streak.

The Rams, after a 15-point loss to the Minutemen on ESPN on Feb. 15, put together four straight victories, starting with Duquesne on Feb. 18 and finishing with an 80-73 win over Temple on March 3.

Marcus Stout and Bryant Dunston have emerged as a potent 1-2 punch, averaging 15.5 and 14.5 points per game, respectively. Dunston is getting some hard looks from NBA scouts and will have his way with Richmond this afternoon in the second first-round game.

Fordham wins big.

NO. 7 SAINT LOUIS VS. NO. 10 DUQUESNE, 6:30 P.M.

Saint Louis is the favorite in this game, but no one is counting out the Dukes after this miraculous season in the wake of tragedy. Duquesne pulled off a stunning 98-93 victory over Boston College at Conte Forum on Dec. 28, and won five straight A-10 games before losing its last seven to finish the season.

Dukes coach Ron Everhart has forced a chaotic pace of play with five-in, five-out substitutions and full-court pressing for the full 40 minutes a game. While it worked for a stretch, teams eventually caught on.

The Billikens are strong up front with 6-foot-10 forward Ian Vouyoukas and equally good in the backcourt with sophomore Tommie Liddell. Robert Mitchell, the A-10's Rookie of the Year, leads the Dukes with just over 15 points per game.

It will be an interesting matchup considering the styles of play. Everhart will try to speed things up while SLU coach Brad Soderberg will try to keep the game in the 50's.

The Billikens win this one with a big performance from Vouyoukas on the interior, as no one from Duquesne has the strength or defensive prowess to stay with the big man.

NO. 6 SAINT JOSEPH'S VS. NO. 11 TEMPLE

This Philadelphia faceoff won't be won easily. The two teams have a storied rivalry that not only involves geographic location but the strength of the two teams through the late 1990s as well.

The Owls are without their longtime coach John Chaney, and his replacement, Fran Dunphy, has led the team through a tumultuous 12-17 season.

Temple's silver lining lies with Dionte Christmas, a 6-foot-4 guard who the A-10 recently named its Most Improved Player, and averaged 20.4 points per game this season, which is good for first in the conference.

The Hawks, seeded sixth, have their lowest seed in the conference tournament since the 1994 season when they started the A-10 Tournament in the eighth spot. Ahman Nivins leads the team in scoring and rebounding with 16.6 points per game and 7.5 boards per game, respectively.

SJU will do everything in its power to stop Christmas, but it will be unsuccessful. Temple wins in the upset.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

Freshman point guard Tiki Mayben and the Minutemen will keep a close eye on today's Atlantic 10 Tournament action. After a first-round bye, U Mass plays its first game of the conference tournament tomorrow.

Minutemen plagued by illness entering Atlantic 10 tournament effect. The Minutemen were playing their best basketball in years, winning nine of their last 10 games and heading into the A-10 Tournament on a six-game winning streak as the No. 2 seed.

PICARD from page 14

Everything projected in the preseason has come to fruition. Their top two goals – win 20 games, and win the regular season conference title – are in the rear-view mirror. The only thing on UMass' mind is winning an A-10 Championship and punching its ticket into the NCAA Tournament.

The at-large bid distraction was only a matter of time. While Lord and the UMass players denied paying any attention to what's going on in the rest of the college basketball world, Pennie was yelling down from his seat in the stands to see who was winning the Oakland/Oral Roberts Mid-Continent Conference Championship game.

Maybe he's a fan of the league, or maybe he wanted to see if Oakland – a team UMass beat 65-56 back on Nov. 17 – would be dancing in a few weeks, possibly making the Minutemen's at-large chances a little brighter.

Either way, to say that you're not tuning into SportsCenter, or checking out the latest bracket busters on the Internet as a member of a team that doesn't seem to be getting the respect it deserves – most predicted brackets have Xavier getting the only A-10 bid – seems like anything but the truth.

"They understand what's going on without us talking about it a whole lot," Ford said on calculating where his team currently stands in the latest field of 65. "They don't talk about it a whole lot, but I think they understand.

"I fight a little temptation," he added. "But I don't do it. I'm not smart enough to figure it out first of all. Secondly, I'm dealing with a lot more stuff right now, and that's trying to figure out how to have practice."

Practice? Are we talking about practice? What are we talking about?

We're not talking about a game, we're talking about practice. And with "flu-like symptoms" plaguing the team, a solid practice is something the Minutemen may not be benefiting from prior to the biggest game of the season to this point.

In sickness or in health, James Life doesn't seem to be worried.

"I don't think there should be any concerns man," the senior said in between shooting 3-pointers yesterday. "We think we're the most dominant team in the A-10. We just have to play up to our abilities and do what coach wants us to do, and do what we've been doing all year long, and there should be no problem."

The Minutemen will be watching tonight's Saint Louis versus Duquesne game in Atlantic City. And tomorrow night, the show must go on, whether they're 100 percent healthy or not.

"I think there's advantages and disadvantages of getting that first-round bye," Mayben said. "The advantages are that you only have to win three games, and you get an extra day of rest."

If Dr. Mayben's diagnosis is correct, UMass is going to need it.

Danny Picard is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

45 YEARS Six Flags NEW ENGLAND AUDITIONS

NOW SEEKING:
CHARACTERS, CHARACTER ACTORS, SINGERS & DANCERS, USHERS, EMCEES, VARIETY PERFORMERS & STREETMOSPHERE

2007 OPEN CALL AUDITION SCHEDULE

MARCH 9th, 4pm-6:30pm
UMASS - AMHERST
Fine Arts Center Theater, Rm. 204
UMASS Campus - Amherst, MA

MARCH 15th, 4pm-7pm
SIX FLAGS HUMAN RESOURCE CENTER
1156 Main St., Agawam, MA

- Please arrive early to fill out paperwork.
- Save time and apply at sixflagsjobs.com beforehand!
- Please bring headshot and resume.
- All performers should dress comfortably and be prepared for a short movement combination to be taught.
- Singers- please prepare 1-2 song selections to perform acapella not to exceed 2 minutes. Singers are required to dance.
- Superhero and Supervillain character applicants should wear tight fitting clothing that shows muscle build and be prepared to try on costumes at audition.
- All roles require close interaction with Guests and co-workers.
- Must be at least 15 years old to apply.
- Six Flags supports and enforces a drug-free working environment.
- MUST be Energetic, Enthusiastic, and Team focused.

Competitive pay, employee activities, and the chance to deliver high quality entertainment with the largest regional theme park company in the world!

45 YEARS Six Flags NEW ENGLAND

FOR MORE INFO:
413-786-9300 x3320
sfneshow@sftp.com
Shows & Entertainment
1623 Main St., P.O. Box 307
Agawam, MA 01001

Check www.sixflags.com/newengland for updated schedule and details

SIX FLAGS: TM & © 2007 Six Flags Theme Parks Inc. LOONEY TUNES: TM & Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc. (s07)

PINOCCHIOS on the go
Specials of the Week
Buy 2 Calzones GET 1 FREE
5 FREE WINGS With Purchase of any Large Pizza
(413) 256-4110 Call Now!
Sun-Wed Open 'til 1am
Thur Open 'til 2am
Fri-Sat Open 'til 3am

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			9
5			2	6		4		3
	3	9			1	7
9			6				7
	5						1
	6				7			9
		3	8			5	2
8		5		1	6			7
				7

ACROSS
1 Ringlet
5 Thick slices
10 Gullible dupes
14 Fabled canal
15 Lama's land
16 The Police or Green Day, e.g.
17 Computer input
18 Fossil resin
19 Lively dance
20 Grammary adjunct
22 On a plane
24 Alimony recipients
25 Serengeti stalker
26 Act parts
29 Scarlet birds
33 City on the Rhone delta
34 Fashions
35 Illuminated
36 Related
37 Partnered
38 ___ qua non
39 Opposite of WSW
40 Sees socially
41 "___ Life Is It, Anyway?"
42 Carves spotters
44 Wobble
45 Feed the pot
46 Hunky-dory
47 Pang
50 Clothes collection
54 Called up
55 Lasso
57 Pension $$
58 False god
59 Missed the mark
60 Catches in the act
61 Autry of oaters
62 Tightly packed
63 Elation

DOWN
1 Relinquish
2 Russian river
3 Religious custom
4 Like most bread
5 Declares
6 Prom rides
7 Brief wd.
8 Speller's contest
9 Taxed to the utmost
10 Robust
11 Solid surface
12 Dock of the bay
13 Auctioneer's word
21 Chopping tools
23 Long, fluffy scarves
25 Takes on cargo
26 Fully gratified
27 Hag
28 Foley or Glasgow
29 Carries the burden
30 George who was Mary
31 Washer cycle
32 Take the liter
34 Picture border
37 Brought under control
38 Swerving off course
40 Fender indentation
41 Move along
43 Confused jumble
44 Violent diatribe
46 Destinies
47 Math course
48 Emulate an ibis
49 Privy to
50 Alert to danger
51 Preacher Roberts
52 Ballplayer Ruth
53 Latin being
56 Anger

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

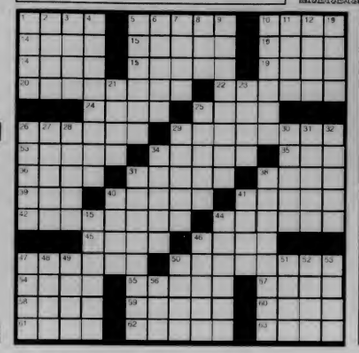
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY: On the Rocks
SATURDAY: Hi8us
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted Best Neighborhood Bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd., N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Forget about style; worry about results."

-Bobby Orr



Submit your comics!
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

WHOA, WHOA
WHAT?
"WHAT" GEE, I DUNNO, MAYBE THE PART WHERE YOU'RE WALKING FIVE DOGS YOU DON'T OWN?
OH. THAT YEAH
ALL RIGHT, GOTTA GO BUDDY HERE HAS TO PEE ON THIS STOP SIGN AND LET THE SMELTIE DOWN THE STREET KNOW WHERE THE BITCH STANDS. THAT'S NOT DEROGATORY WHEN YOU'RE DESCRIBING FEMALE DOGS. I JUST LEARNED THAT.
YOU ARE GOING TO HAVE TO EXPLAIN THIS??

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

CAN ANYONE BUY ONE OF THESE LITTLE ADS TO SELL SOMETHING IN THE PAPER?
SURE, DUDE. WHAT ARE YOU SELLING?
MY CAR. THE PARKING PERMITS ARE SO EXPENSIVE, I JUST NEED TO GET RID OF IT.
DUDE, YOU DON'T HAVE A CAR.
SWEET, DUDE. THAT WAS EASIER THAN I THOUGHT!

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

SO, HOW DID YOUR FRIEND'S WEDDING GO SATURDAY?
OH, MY GOSH. NIKKI!! IT WAS UNBELIEVABLE!
HER DRESS DIDN'T FIT, THE GROOM ALMOST FAINTED, AND THE MINISTER SAID THE WRONG NAMES.
OH, HOW SWEET.
I KNOW! I CAN'T WAIT TO GET MARRIED.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

I'm sooo fierce with GIRLS
I wish Conner would get me some Fertile Myrtle
Let me see some Fertile Myrtle
STOMP STOMP STOMP STOMP STOMP STOMP STOMP STOMP STOMP
He is good at seeing what I'm not Amber is his art

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will find an athlete here on campus and insist that they marry you.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you wear a watch on the same wrist everyday you will become lopsided.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Do not run from your problems. They are fast like cheetahs and sure to catch you.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Stop listening to such sad music, try a mariachi band. Dancing will abound.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Change can be a good thing, especially in the case of underpants.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Let chickens loose in your hall and tell your RA it's a surprise social.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
This campus would be twice as cold if your hotness wasn't raising the temperature.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Sit down with a Tootsie Pop and try to solve one of life's greatest mysteries.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will get jury duty soon. Go in naked and screaming and they will let you leave.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Keep in mind that creamed corn is the reason why babies cry.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Host a pot luck dinner and throw everyone out after they arrive. Free Food!

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The watched pot never boils but the boiling pot is always watching you.

Visit The Amherst Brewing Company
mount snow
Promo Wednesday Nights
Win Lift Passes, Equipment & Merchandise.
Join This ABC Bartender at... mount snow
Get more info about our menu and calendar events at amherstbrewing.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Learn, Lead, and Succeed Be and do something bigger than yourself. Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable telephone Internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

The UPS Store Part-time. 20-25 hours per week. Busy, multi-tasking, friendly atmosphere. Packing, sales, customer service experience a plus. Outgoing, detail oriented personality needed. Some lifting required. Apply in person at 6 University Drive (next to Gold's Gym).

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

HOUSE FOR ENT

Northampton Cathedral ceiling, sky-lites, hardwood floors, 4-5 bdrms. 9/1 $1950. 413-730-6660

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Submit your classifieds online at www.dailycollegian.com

Minutewomen winning behind explosive offense

W. LACROSSE from page 14

White play its home games at McGuirk Stadium, but tonight's game will be played at Garber Field because lights will be needed for the late afternoon start. Garber is the only athletic field equipped with lights on the UMass campus.

"I think we're excited to play at Garber [Field] we practice there twice a week, it's a great lacrosse environment," Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen are coming off a three-game winning streak with victories over Harvard, Vermont and Boston University. They crushed Harvard, 18-7. Leading the scoring punch was midfielder Holly Drown with five goals and Kathleen Typadis with three goals and three assists.

The Maroon and White has been unrelenting all season, outshooting Harvard 44-18. The offense is shooting at a high rate and the defense is stopping shots from happening. In the past three games the Minutemen have outshot their opponents 97-65.

Drown has 20 draw controls in four games, equaling her total from all of last season. She is second on the team in points with 14, displaying stellar efficiency with 11 goals on 23 shots. Drown also has three assist this season.

"She does a little bit of everything and I think she brings a lot to our team," Venechanos said.

"Defensively she's always there for a big stop. In the beginning of the season she wasn't taking as many shots, but if we can get her shots she usually converts on them.

"She's definitely one of our leaders out there on the field and people look up to her."

Typadis is another one of the Minutewomen's leaders. She has been acknowledged as the UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week, pushing her goal-scoring streak to 28 games. She leads to the team with 11 goals and four assists.

Venechanos has credited UMass's offensive boost to teamwork.

"A lot of it has to do with people's awareness of each other, the attack is executing more, and they're playing together. We had a lot more assists [against Harvard] than we had in the other three games combined," Venechanos said. "Hopefully we can use that momentum from these three games and bring it to Dartmouth."

The Minutewomen had nine assists in the first three games and nine assists against Harvard.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

KASEY WINGLER / COLLEGIAN

In just her third season as a Minutewoman, Kathleen Typadis, is 10th on the all-time scoring list with 89 career goals.

UMass has string of untimely injuries

HOCKEY from page 14

Thiessen's 919 for Northeastern.

Finally

Saturday night's home-ice clinching win over Maine was a special night to a lot of players for a lot of reasons. Freshman Brett Watson had a reason all his own.

The center scored his first collegiate goal with two seconds remaining in the third period of the game. With the Black Bears' backup goalie Dave Wilson on the bench in favor of the extra attacker, Watson streaked up the right side and threw the puck into the net from the right faceoff circle.

His teammates came rushing to him, as Watson clinched the game, and thusly home ice for the Minutemen. He finished with one goal and four assists on the regular season.

Watson was the final freshman receiving regular playing time to put the puck in the net. Redshirt freshman Sam D'Agostino played in just seven games and did not record a point.

Will Ortiz was the highest scoring rookie, finishing seventh on the team with 19 points on seven scores and 12 assists.

Defenseman Justin Braun also contributed as a freshman, with four goals and 9 helpers while Martin Nolet chipped in with a goal and three assists.

Bad Timing

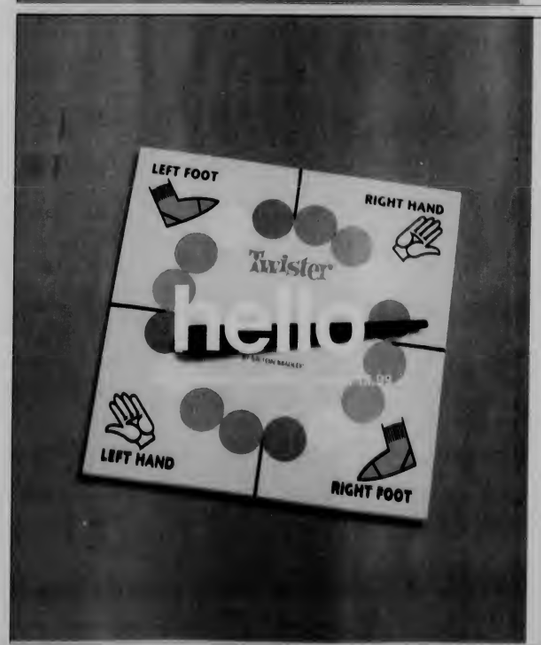
Injuries are plaguing the Minutemen at the worst time possible. Forward Zech Klann missed his sixth-straight game Saturday night after going down in practice heading into the road trip to Vermont. Defenseman Topher Bevis has now missed four straight and hasn't returned since hitting the boards hard in the 3-0 loss to Vermont on Feb. 17. Defenseman Martin Nolet missed his third consecutive game with an undisclosed injury.

Filling in for just about everyone, senior Mark Matheson continued to split time between center and defenseman for the Minutemen, while also playing the point on the power play.

The assistant captain has been listed as the third-line center for UMass, with Jordan Virtue getting the nod at defenseman. However, Matheson has essentially taken over both roles, with Virtue filling in for some of Matheson's shifts at center

Senior captain Matt Anderson has been hot of late. He has played most of the second half of the season as the team's fourth-line center but has notched five points in his last four games, including three goals and two assists.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tournament time

Tourney decides fate for all but two A-10 teams

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Tournament decides the season for all but two teams – Xavier and Massachusetts.

In higher-profile leagues like the Atlantic Coast Conference, the Big Ten and the Big 12, at-large bids are there for the taking, and teams don't put an overwhelming emphasis on conference tournaments because the automatic bid is just a nice spring-time bonus.

But for the A-10, a league that has declined from top-to-bottom steadily since 2003 when four teams from the conference made it to the NCAA Tournament – Saint Joseph's, Dayton, Richmond and Xavier – the conference tournament is the one-and-only, the last call before closing time.

Saint Bonaventure and La Salle didn't make it into the A-10 Tournament, so that leaves Charlotte, Dayton, Duquesne, UMass, Xavier, Saint Louis, Saint Joseph's, Temple, Fordham, George Washington and Rhode Island.

Xavier and Massachusetts are the only teams with a shot at an at-large bid. Xavier has the better chance of the two teams. The Musketeers have won eight straight games to end their season and have road wins against Virginia Commonwealth (the Colonial Athletic Association Champion), Villanova, Illinois and Kent State under their belt, to go along with their 23-7 overall record.

UMass has a 23-7 record as well – 12-5 on the road, an attractive statistic for the selection committee – with a road win over Louisville, a team that has helped the Minutemen recently by beating some solid teams (Pittsburgh, for one) in the Big East.

For the rest of the pack, it's tournament title or bust. After Xavier and UMass, the lines blur a little bit and the mediocre teams will have to beat up on each other to get to their ultimate destination.

No. 8 Dayton vs. No. 9 Charlotte, 12 p.m.

The Flyers enter the A-10 Tournament on a two-game winning streak that followed a three-game losing streak. They beat Temple and Saint Louis to finish the season but lost two games at home – to UMass and Xavier – in the three weeks preceding.

Dayton hadn't lost a home game this season until the Minutemen handed it a 77-69 loss on Feb. 18. The Flyers

See A-10 TOURNAMENT on page 11

As the A-10 Tournament commences today, sophomore point guard Chris Lowe and the Minutemen can rest up because they have a first-round bye. UMass plays the winner of today's SLU-Duquesne game.

Illness plagues Minutemen

Donning street clothes and sitting a few rows apart, Luke Bonner and Matt Pennie stared aimlessly onto a near-empty hardwood at the Mullins Center on Wednesday afternoon before practice.

Brandon Thomas was sprawled out along multiple folding chairs behind the bench, while captain Rashaun Freeman was being checked out at the health center.

It certainly didn't look like a team that was about to make a run into the NCAA Tournament for the first time in nine years.

Danny Picard

"It's flu-like symptoms," freshman point guard Tiki Mayben said from across the way.

So much for that first-round bye.

The Minutemen finished the regular season as Co-Champions of the Atlantic 10 with Xavier. As a result they were awarded – as the top four seeds are – a free pass in the first round, leaving an extra day off while Saint Louis and Duquesne battle for a rematch with UMass in the quarterfinals tomorrow night.

As it turns out, the Minutemen do have a first-round opponent: the flu.

"You all probably know more than I know about it," UMass coach Travis Ford said when asked about the situation before practice yesterday. "I don't know. Right now, we're just trying to figure it all out."

UMass athletics team physician Pierre Rouzier said in an e-mail on Tuesday night that he could not get into specifics because of medical confidentiality regulations, but did confirm that players on the team are suffering from a respiratory illness that's also affecting many coaches and trainers.

"It shouldn't be too serious but it sure is bad timing," Dr. Rouzier said.

It's also bad luck, and with practice being cancelled on Monday, and the team's energy being at an all-time low yesterday, the situation at hand is anything but positive.

In fact, it's just another distraction. Combine this with all the hoopla of a potential at-large bid into the Big Dance, and you get Ford's worst nightmare.

Everything, up until this flu setback, was perfect. Ford's plan of peaking at the right time was in full

See PICARD on page 11

UMass and Maine are familiar foes

Watson notches first career goal on empty Black Bear net

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team is going to start seeing bears in its sleep. The Minutemen (18-11-5, 15-9-3 Hockey East), will host the Maine Black Bears at least two more times this weekend after sweeping a two-game homestand last Friday and Saturday.

The Minutemen clinched home ice for the opening round of the Hockey East playoffs with the sweep, bringing the Black Bears right back to Amherst for the best-of-three series for a chance to play in Boston for the Hockey East Championship on March 16 and 17.

The Mass Attack is no stranger to playing Maine in big-game scenarios. The last time the Maroon and White had home ice in the playoffs – during the 2003-04 season – they advanced all the way to the conference title game, where they met the same Maine squad.

The game was one for the record books, as the Black Bears downed the Minutemen, 2-1, in three overtimes.

The year before, UMass upset Maine in consecutive games in the quarterfinals to advance to the semis. That was the same year the Minutemen fell to Maine by scores of the 8-3 and 4-0.

UMass is 8-35-5 all-time against Maine, including this season. Three of those wins came during that 2002-03 season. Two more came this year. UMass won the season series, 2-1 (Maine won the early meeting, 4-1, at Alfond Arena on Oct. 28). Now they will try to win a total of at least four out of five games against a team that was the top-ranked squad in the nation early in the year.

Rewarded for your efforts

Goaltender Jon Quick was named CCM/RBK Hockey Player of the Week for his performance in the wins over the Black Bears. The sophomore made 59 saves in just two games, registering a 2.00 goals-against average and a .937 save percentage.

Quick finished his first regular season as the Minutemen's No. 1 netminder with a record of 16-10-5, starting 31 of 34 games for the Mass Attack.

His 2.22 goals-against average was fifth best in the conference, and his .926 save percentage was fourth in Hockey East. Quick recorded a total of 876 saves on the season, bested only by Cory Schneider's 887 with Boston College and Brad

See HOCKEY on page 13

The Maine Black Bears return to the Mullins Center this weekend for the quarterfinals of the Hockey East postseason. It is the first time since 2004 that Justin Braun (above) and UMass have home-ice advantage.

UM gets graded after tough loss

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team's 2006-07 season was snuffed out with a 63-60 loss to St. Bonaventure on Friday in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. The Minutewomen allowed a 16-point second half lead to slip into oblivion.

With that the long schedule is over for members of the Maroon and White, all of whom – despite the spring academic semester being a little less than half over – must now ponder a special type of report card.

Coach Marnie Dacko: C+

Comments: Hard-worker, dedicated, knowledgeable and in need of more consistency.

The heartbreaker against the Bonnies left a hole of dissatisfaction with UMass coach Marnie Dacko, who has failed to lead the team past the early stages of the A-10 Tournament in her four years as coach.

Since the beginning of the 2002-03 season, Dacko has a dismal 62-81 record and has yet to turn the Maroon and White into the conference contender she was hoping for when she took the job.

Before taking the UMass reigns, Dacko had tenures as an assistant coach at St. John's and Northwestern and was the head coach at Cornell. She compiled 387 victories at the prestigious universities before moving to the Pioneer Valley.

Whatever the reason, that success has not yet carried over to the Maroon and White – but progress is being made.

The 17 wins of the recently-finished campaign established a new UMass season high for Dacko. The 13 losses were also the lowest since the Dacko regime began at the start of the 2002-03 season, when the Minutewomen went 14-14.

Hopes of bringing home an A-10 Championship are not all lost for the coach – the determination is there and the know-how is as well. With a little cooperation from her players, Dacko might be able to pass the ultimate collegiate hoops test and realize her championship dreams.

Forward Kate Mills: A+

Comments: Dominating, good leader, immensely talented, responsible.

The team's captain and vocal leader, junior Kate Mills was at the head of the class this season. The junior led the Maroon and White in four essential

See W. BASKETBALL on page 10

Senior Tamara Tatham finished the season as the Minutewomen's second-leading scorer with 12.8 points per game.

No. 7 Dartmouth poses big challenge

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

It doesn't feel like spring with the below freezing weather and the gusting winds, but that doesn't matter for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. The Minutewomen (3-1) are finally coming home after winning three straight road games.

The Maroon and White face No. 7 Dartmouth today at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Last season, the Big Green made it all the way to the NCAA Championship game, losing to Northwestern. Dartmouth (2-0) has been very successful against UMass with an 18-8 all-time record against the Minutewomen – including a 16-7 win for the Big Green last season.

"They are a very smart team and disciplined," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "In the past their defense has been one of the best in the nation and this year their attack is equally as strong, so they're definitely a tough team to beat."

The Big Green lost six starters to graduation this season. However they are off to a fast start with wins over No. 15 Syracuse, 11-10, and New Hampshire, 19-9.

"It's a good test early on in the season to see where we are," Venechanos added.

This weekend will be Venechanos's first home game as coach of UMass. Last season the Minutewomen did not take advantage of their home field, falling to 3-6 at Garber Field.

"I think we're very excited to finally have a home game, we did a great job on the road," Venechanos said. "When you play on the road there's a couple more challenges in terms of focus level, and I think the girls are looking forward to have this opportunity to play a home game against such a great team like Dartmouth.

"With four games underneath our belt, I think it's just another game," Venechanos added when asked if the team was nervous about the first home game.

This season the Maroon and

See W. LACROSSE on page 13

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

FLURRIES : HI: 23 LO: 0 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 2007

UMASS FACES ROUND TWO WITH SLU PAGE 10

POETS BRING TALENT TO AMHERST BOOKS PAGE 5

STEM Ed

Rutgers University researcher John M. Francisco of the National Science Foundation spoke at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday, in a seminar entitled "Teachers Attending to Students' Mathematical Activity," as part of a 3-year, NSF-funded longitudinal study.

SGA discusses recent campus hate crime

By Amber Vaillancourt
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association's meeting yesterday marked its 1519th regular meeting.

With just 19 Senators present, the SGA engaged in a series of discussions, ranging from divesting in Darfur to the recent hate incident on campus.

Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum informed the SGA about an upcoming meeting of the Trustees where they will discuss "increasing fees by 3.5%, in addition, raising housing fees by significantly more than that."

Leiblum also reminded the Senators that the nomination period for positions including Area Government standing, Student Trustee, or SGA President will be going on until next Thursday at noon.

SGA President Elvis Mendez notified the Senate about the possibility of a week-long event, presented by both the Muslim Student Association and the SGA "dealing with Islamaphobia, dealing with different issues about it with the Muslim community on campus."

The event would take place near the end of April or the beginning of May.

Secretary of the Registry Jamie Corliss brought attention to the issues surrounding the recent hate incident involving UMass students on campus, and the forum that discussed it on Tuesday evening.

"During that forum, a lot of really positive dialogue and discussion came up. I want to extend a thank you to everyone who went and I also want to encourage everyone to continue this discussion and dialogue, talk about and realize what the assault means for our community. When I say our community, I do not mean just the queer community, I mean our campus and the atmosphere we have here," said Corliss.

"It's a shame that the rest of the administration, that claims to put students first, was not there. As students, we have an immense power at this university. It is once again time for us to utilize this power. Enacting sustainable changes in this atmosphere is our responsibility," Corliss added.

MassPIRG also made an appearance at last night's meet-

See SGA on page 3

Topics discussed at last night's SGA meeting ranged from campus finances to divestment in Darfur.

Carroll returns to reporting in Middle East

BOSTON — Jill Carroll, the journalist held hostage for nearly three months in Iraq last year, has returned to the Middle East to report for the Christian Science Monitor, a newspaper spokesman said Wednesday.

Carroll has been working out of Cairo, Egypt, since last month, Monitor spokesman Jay Jostyn said.

"We haven't determined how long she will be there," Jostyn said.

Carroll took on the Cairo assignment after completing a fellowship at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government. She analyzed the decline of international news bureaus in the changing newspaper industry during the semester she spent at the school's Joan Shorenstein Center on the Press.

"We are really not saying anymore than that," Jostyn said when asked whether Carroll asked to be posted in Cairo and whether there were any concerns for her safety.

Carroll was working as a freelancer for the Christian Science Monitor when she was kidnapped in Baghdad on Jan. 7, 2006. She was released March 30.

The kidnappers, a formerly unknown group calling itself the Revenge Brigade, had demanded the release of all women detainees in Iraq. U.S. officials did release some female detainees but said the decision was unrelated to the demands.

Associated Press

University of Massachusetts alumna Jill Carroll was released from captivity in Baghdad March 30, 2006, after being held hostage for nearly 3 months.

Stop and Shop negotiations may end in union strike

New contracts to cut benefits

By Debra Friedman
Collegian Staff

Sunday marks the deadline for the Stop and Shop Company to reach an agreement with local union officials to prevent thousands of employees throughout Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island from striking.

Talk of a strike escalated on Feb. 17, when a three-year contract employing nearly 40,000 Stop and Shop workers expired, and a new contract proposing cutbacks to health care and retirement-related benefits was left on the table, leaving unions leaders and employees in a state of discontent.

Since then, the five local unions representing Stop and Shop workers within the three states have been trying to negotiate with company officials to make changes to the contract, in order to better satisfy employee needs.

Union officials say they have "given the company a very complicated and comprehensive contract proposal," which they believe to be "a fair and equitable contract for everyone," according to a memo posted on their Web site, ufcw328.org taxonomy term/5.

Stop and Shop management is expected to respond to their proposal by the end of this week.

"We hope that they will return with a package that will allow us to settle these negotiations in a positive manner," union officials said of their proposal. However, if a settlement is not reached by Sunday, all five unions are prepared to strike immediately – an action that will have significant effects on 231 Stop and Shop stores within New England.

A strike would also have a major impact on the lives of many University of Massachusetts student employees who work part time at the Hadley Stop and Shop, manning cash registers, stocking shelves and providing customer support.

UMass senior Juan Latorre works 20 hours a week in the dairy section of Stop and Shop. He estimates there to be nearly 40 students working at the Hadley

See STOP&SHOP on page 3

Governor proposes UMass fund increase

Governor Deval Patrick's proposal to increase UMass' funding by 4 percent would bump the University's budget from $444 million to $462 million.

By Chris Hynes
Collegian Staff

Governor Deval Patrick proposed a four-percent increase in funding for all University of Massachusetts campuses in a proposed state spending plan for the 2008 fiscal year filed last week.

Initial analyses of the spending plan indicate the appropriation increase would bump the University system budget up from $444 million to $462 million.

This potential increase in funds would be spread throughout the five UMass campuses. However, the amount each site receives is based upon the number of students and campus programs. The Amherst campus receives around 40 percent of this state fundmg.

"State support for the University is very important and we appreciate it," said Libby DeVecchi, Communication's Director for the UMass President's Office.

"Generally speaking the money goes to the operating budget," DeVecchi explained. "But it can also be invested in things like campus programs and faculty programs."

"Given the state's challenging financial picture in the next fiscal year, I am very pleased that the governor has shown his commitment to providing an $18 million funding increase for the University of Massachusetts in his first budget," Board of Trustees Chairman Stephen P. Tocco expressed in a prepared statement.

"The governor's budget proposal reinforces his confidence in UMass and the value in investing in the University of Massachusetts system," President Jack M. Wilson said in the same statement. "We know we are offering the state a good return on its investment, given the University's $4.3 billion annual economic impact within the Commonwealth, and we appreciate the governor's acknowledgement of the important role of UMass and public higher education

See DEVAL on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 96

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3693 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Szajgin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belloveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Perez
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Paddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Mint error makes unknown amount of 'Godless dollars'

By Joann Loviglio
Associated Press

An unknown number of new George Washington dollar coins were mistakenly struck without their edge inscriptions, including "In God We Trust," and are fetching around $50 apiece online.

The properly struck dollar coins, bearing the likeness of the nation's first president, are inscribed along the edge with "In God We Trust," "E Pluribus Unum" and the year and mint mark. They made it past inspectors and went into circulation Feb. 15.

The U.S. Mint struck 300 million of the coins, which are golden in color and slightly larger and thicker than a quarter.

About half were made in Philadelphia and the rest in Denver. So far the mint has only received reports of error coins coming from Philadelphia, mint spokeswoman Becky Bailey said.

Bailey said it was unknown how many coins lacked the inscriptions. Ron Guth, president of Professional Coin Grading Service, one of the world's largest coin authentication companies, said he believes that at least 50,000 error coins were put in circulation.

"The first one sold for $600 before everyone knew how common they actually were," he said. "They're going for around $40 to $60 on eBay now, and they'll probably settle in the $50 range."

Production of the presidential dollar entails a "new, complex, high-volume manufacturing system" that the mint will adjust to eliminate any future defects, the mint said in a statement.

"We take this matter seriously. We also consider quality control a high priority. The agency is looking into the matter to determine a possible cause in the manufacturing process," the statement said.

An undetermined number of George Washington dollar coins missing the edge inscription, "In God We Trust" were created.

Guth said it appeared from the roughly 50 smooth-edge dollars he has authenticated that the problem had to do with quality control rather than a mechanical error.

"These coins are struck like normal coins, then they go through another machine that adds edge lettering in another process. These apparently skipped that process," he said. "We've seen a couple of instances where the edge lettering may be weak or indistinct, but we're not talking about that here."

The coin's design has already spurred e-mail conspiracy theories claiming that the religious motto was purposely omitted. That rumor may have started because the edge lettering cannot be seen in head-on photographs of the coin.

It is the first U.S. coin to have words stamped around the edge since the storied 1933 $20 gold "double eagle," among the rarest and most valuable in the world. In 2002, a 1933 double eagle was sold for $7.59 million — the highest price ever paid for a coin.

The Washington dollars are the first in a series of presidential coins slated to run until 2016. After Washington, the presidents to be honored on dollar coins this year will be John Adams, Thomas Jefferson and James Madison.

The 215-year-old Philadelphia mint, located downtown on Independence Mall, employs about 500 people and last year produced about 7.8 billion coins. The overwhelming majority of error coins are caught by inspectors and melted down.

Amherst Police log

Alleged stalker spotted at Judie's

Tuesday
March 6

8:36 a.m.

A larceny was reported on Sacco Drive. The individual noticed a digital camera had been purchased online with his credit card and was sent to a different name and address.

11:08 a.m.

Chad A. Waterman, 23, of Raynham was arrested for assault and battery. Waterman's girlfriend reported domestic abuse, claiming that she was choked and attacked by her boyfriend and later escaped to a neighboring apartment while Waterman was arrested.

12:01 p.m.

A Chevy Impala was hit driving through a parking lot at the post office on University Drive. While the Impala had the right of way, the driver of a Ford Taurus backed out of a parking space in the lot, hitting the right side of the Impala. No injuries were reported.

5:30 p.m.

A Toyota Short Bed traveling on Montague Road was hit from the rear by a Ford Taurus. The driver of the hit vehicle put on his blinker and intended to turn left when it was struck by the Taurus, whose driver claimed he did not see the blinker. The Short Bed was towed; no injuries were reported.

7:44 p.m.

A suspicious male was reported at Judie's Restaurant on North Pleasant Street. The male party had allegedly come into the restaurant for the past three days and gone directly into the restroom. One customer recognized the man as a "banned persons" at Mt. Holyoke College for allegedly stalking women.

Wednesday
March 7

1:28 a.m.

A suspicious individual was reported at Spirit Haus on College Street for going through a vehicle behind the building. Police investigated and found that the party in question was the owner of the car and was looking through the vehicle to find a jack.

6:43 a.m.

Russell C. Morrison, 38, of Amherst was pulled over by police while driving a Dodge Neon. Morrison was arrested for operating a vehicle with a suspended license.

Compiled by Holly Seabury

Dozens of children in custody after immigration raid

By Ray Henry
Associated Press

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. — Dozens of young children were stranded at schools and with baby sitters after their parents were rounded up by federal authorities who raided a leather goods maker suspected of hiring illegal immigrants, authorities said Wednesday.

Gov. Deval Patrick said the children of the detainees — most of whom are from Guatemala and El Salvador — might not be receiving proper care. However, federal immigration officials insisted they coordinated with state social service agencies in advance to prepare for child care.

"We are particularly concerned about the Guatemalan community and the risk that they may be fearful about disclosing the existence or whereabouts of their children given their history with government agencies," Patrick wrote in a letter asking U.S. Rep. William Delahunt to ensure federal authorities allow social workers access to the detainees.

Immigration officials said 327 of the 500 employees of Michael Bianco Inc., mostly women, were detained Tuesday for possible deportation as illegal aliens.

Delahunt contacted federal officials and later Wednesday said he was told state workers would be allowed to interview two dozen people being held at the former Fort Devens military base. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., also weighed in on the matter with federal officials, including Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff, said spokeswoman Melissa Wagoner.

About 100 children were stuck with baby sitters, caretakers and others, said Corinn Williams, director of the Community Economic Development Center of Southeastern Massachusetts.

"We're continuing to get stories today about infants that were left behind," she said. "It's been a widespread humanitarian crisis here in New Bedford."

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement said no children were stranded and that authorities released 60 detainees for humanitarian reasons, most related to child care issues. Spokesman Marc Raimondi said the agency coordinated with the state officials on Monday afternoon, and those still in custody were given the option of letting their children stay with a guardian or putting them in state care.

"We had an agreement in place," he said. "We are not aware of anyone who had any children that weren't being cared for."

Social service officials said they were working with local officials and community activists to help families. The department found 29 foster homes for children and matched 35 children to families affected by the raid, authorities said.

Carlos Miranda said his girlfriend, Marisela Inestroza, was detained because she didn't have a proper work permit. He was taking care of their 9-month old daughter, and she was trying to breastfeed from him when he holds her, he said.

"If you feel you don't want us here, just deport us and let us go," the Honduras native said through an interpreter.

Correction

Yesterday's Daily Collegian article entitled "Open forum addresses diversity" attributed several comments to Joshua Mason. Mason spoke at the event, but was incorrectly quoted for another speaker's statements.

SPRING SPECIAL

SUPERCUTS
every time

AMHERST

Amherst Plaza Shopping Center
(next to Big Y Supermarket)
181 University Drive, Rte. 9
(413) 259-1135

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
Call Ahead Service available

Ask about our COLOR and WAXING SERVICES

$10
Super Haircut
(reg. $13.95)
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSHC

15% OFF
Hair Products
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSCS

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com

STAR OF THE COMEDY CENTRAL SPECIAL "BOYISH MAN"!

MARCH 17TH
From HBO's "Tourgasm" and NBC's "Last Comic Standing 2 & 3"
GARY GULMAN

THIS SATURDAY!
JOHN VALBY
aka Dr. Dirty

MARCH 23RD
LAVELL CRAWFORD

APRIL 21ST
ADELE GIVENS

MAY 26TH
PABLO FRANCISCO

McMurphy's
Uptown Tavern
presents...
The Annual McMurphy's Blarney Blowout
Get Your Irish On!!
Saturday March 10, 2007
Live Music at 4:00 pm
Free food and giveaways
Doors Open at Noon

Market employees react to potential strike

STOP & SHOP from page 1

Stop and Shop, and says a strike would be dramatic for all of them. He is especially concerned about what a strike will do to his financial situation.

"I would immediately have to curb any recreational spending to be able to take care of my bills, rent and other college expenses," he said. "And at this point in the year, it would probably be too late to find another job, so I might have to get by with what I have until the end of the semester," he added.

Sokol Bena is another UMass student who works about 15 hours a week in the produce section of the grocery store. He says a short strike would give him some much needed time off but knows it would inconvenience many other students who work there.

"Most students who live off campus, have to pay bills, so that could be a problem," said Bena.

However, no matter their differing views on the personal impact of a possible strike, Bena and Latorre both say they feel strongly about the issue at hand.

"Losing benefits usually means a wage increase, but now it's getting to a point where it isn't being made up for, so the issue has to be addressed," said Latorre.

In the midst of all the negotiations, members on both sides of the table have been hard at work preparing for the worst-case scenario. Stop and Shop management started hiring temporary employees to fill the stores if necessary, while current employees have been out knocking on doors and handing out flyers, hoping to gather customer support, which Latorre says has been "overwhelming" so far.

But even with strong customer support and widespread unity amongst workers, Stop and Shop employees are up against a tough legal team headed by Peter J. Hurtgen, who has the reputation of not budging when it comes to labor contract disputes, according to Jeff Jones, the union shop steward at the Hadley store.

Health care benefits are the heart of the contract dispute. The Stop and Shop Company is seeking "modest contributions from associates towards the cost of their health care coverage," according to a press release put out by Stop and Shop headquarters on Feb. 24.

These contributions refer specifically to employees' health care premiums, which as of now are completely covered by the company. Stop and Shop has proposed that employees contribute more to their pension plans as well.

As retribution for these cuts, Stop and Shop representatives say they "are proposing a good wage increase that will keep our associates competitive in the industry."

But Jones says these changes are unfair.

"We already contribute modestly, more than modestly, in high deductibles and co-payments, especially for pharmaceutical drugs," he said.

Jones, who is on the union bargaining committee, also claims that the wage increase proposals are not nearly what they should be, compared to how they have progressed over the last nine years.

"In essence, you have a company who made a $700 million net profit last year, asking us to take a wage cut," said Jones.

Spokesperson for the Stop and Shop Company, Robert Keane responded to these comments by saying that the company "remains dedicated to the cause and is working hard to reach an agreement."

The five unions are planning to meet separately on Sunday to have their bargaining committees present the modified proposals. They will then vote on the next plan of action, which will either include settlement or strike.

Until then, all that Stop and Shop employees and customers can do is wait and hope for the best.

"I expect Stop and Shop to come back with an improved package because I am an optimist," said Jones. "Whether they will or not, I don't know."

MassPIRG lobbies SGA for Darfur divestment support ing, when its "Save Darfur" campaign coordinator Stephanie Aines presented motion 2007-S19, "A Motion to Support the University of Massachusetts Divestment from Sudan."

SGA from page 1

"We're hoping to get UMass to divest. You can be the first SGA if you end up voting tonight in support of divestment. There are other campaigns working on divestment at the other UMass campuses. So hopefully, all five will vote to support the motion. Then it does go to a decision by the board of trustees, when they go to pass divestment, it gets signed by President Wilson, and then the accountants take the money out of the accounts on the list here," Aines explained.

Aines believes that millions of dollars are being invested in these companies, but it was impossible to track the exact amount invested in each company through UMass' accountants in Shrewsbury because the stock market is constantly fluctuating.

"The roles of the companies are different," Aines said. "These companies give money to the Sudanese government, and to the Chinese government, Chinese companies directly, and other companies. So the Sweden company (Lundin Petroleum), for example, they might be invested in Chinese companies and Sudanese companies. The Chinese companies give money to the government of Sudan, both money and weapons to fund the genocide."

The genocide in Darfur has displaced more than two million people, and the death toll is currently upwards of 400,000 people.

The motion, which was passed unanimously, states "BE IT RESOLVED, that the Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, fully support a vote by the Board of Trustees to divest our funds from the following, but not limited to companies..."

Nine of the companies included was the well known carmaker, Rolls Royce, based in the United Kingdom.

Aines reminded the SGA that the UMass community divested from South Africa during Apartheid in the 1970s and 1980s.

Aines also stated that the UMass community voted in 1986 to divest funds from countries with similar racist and violent policies leading to crimes against humanity.

Aines added that the town of Amherst, along with Amherst and Smith Colleges, have already divested from Sudan.

Harriet Chandler, a Senator from Worcester, sponsored a bill calling for a statewide divestment from Sudan, which will be brought up in the State House on March 15.

New bill to give aid to sexual assault victims

By Pedro Oliveira Jr.
Badger Herald (U. Wisconsin)

MADISON, Wis. — Sexual assault victims would be eligible to receive information and access to emergency contraception treatment, according to legislation introduced Tuesday by state Senate Majority Leader Judy Robson, D-Beloit.

"This bill is about patient's rights, proper standards of medical care and how we treat crime victims in the state of Wisconsin," Robson said at a Capitol press conference, surrounded by supporters.

According to Meg Robertson, a nurse who specializes as a sexual assault examiner, sexual assault is physically and emotionally devastating, and most people are unaware of the available treatment options.

"Understandably, when a victim is initially seen in the emergency room, they do not know what questions to ask or what specific treatment options there are to prevent a pregnancy," Robertson said. "Every victim has a right to be told how to prevent a pregnancy after an assault."

Pro-Life Wisconsin, however, opposes the proposed legislation, calling emergency contraception an "abortion-causing drug."

"[We] sympathize with victims of sexual assault who desire to prevent a pregnancy, and we would support, for the women, treatments that truly prevent contraception," said Peggy Hamill, state director of Pro-Life Wisconsin. "However, it is extremely difficult to determine whether or not fertilization has occurred at the time emergency contraception is directed to be taken."

Hamill added, "We must always err on the side of protecting innocent human life."

During Robson's press conference, University of Wisconsin senior Amanda Harrington, a rape survivor, urged lawmakers to support the bill.

UMass officials doubt significant impact of state funding increase in Massachusetts," he said.

DEVAL from page 1

This increase for the 2008 fiscal year may not be as enticing as advertised however.

"When analyzing the cost of mid-year fiscal year 2007 collective bargaining increases into fiscal year 2008, the governor's budget plan represents slightly more than level funding, or a $948,000 increase," argued Ed Blaguszewski, Director of News and Information at UMass. "In addition to collective bargaining increases, the University also faces increased operating costs each year — energy prices, for instance, have risen notably. When all this is taken into account, we do not expect a substantial amount of extra money to be available, based on the governor's proposal," said Blaguszewski.

The "House 1" budget recommendation is not the only way the state house can offer additional support to University initiatives. In 2006, the Legislature passed an economic stimulus bill that included $2.5 million for studying the University's potential role in advancing stem cell and related research areas, which was split between the Amherst campus and the UMass Medical School in Worcester.

In addition to the projected increase in funding, the governor's plan also provides some funding for salary increases for some state and community college employees, as well as a $4,000 hike in the state scholarship fund which would level-fund the account at $89.8 million.

Chris Hynes can be reached at chynes@student.umass.edu.

Want to write for News?
Stop by the Collegian...
we're here all night

WALK ON WATER

Saturday, March 10, 7:30 p.m.
School of Management 137
UMass Amherst

The most popular Israeli film ever shown in the U.S., this thriller about a Mossad agent assigned to track down an aging Nazi war criminal challenges our beliefs about sexuality, vengeance, and the morality of killing.

An unusual double feature about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict offers inspiration and humor

Encounter Point tells the story of Palestinians and Israelis who risk everything—their social standing, their relationship to their families, and even their lives—to promote a nonviolent end to the conflict. (2006, 85 minutes, English, Hebrew, and Arabic with subtitles)

West Bank Story is a musical comedy about dueling falafel stands in the West Bank—a hilarious parody of Romeo and Juliet and West Side Story which makes a serious statement about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. (21 minutes, English)

2006 Academy Award Best Live Action Short Film

Sunday, March 11, 7:00 p.m.
School of Management 137
UMass Amherst
Free and open to the public

More information at www.umass.edu/jewish or 413.545.9642

UMASS AMHERST

Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival, and cosponsored by the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life, and Brit Tzedek v'Shalom, the Jewish Alliance for Justice and Peace

Thurs, March 8th
All DC's
7 am to
9 pm

A New England Maple Day

Breakfast
• Maple Muffins
• Maple Sausage
• Steel Cut Oatmeal
• Local Maple Syrup
• Maple Donuts

Lunch
• Maple Fudge
(Made by UMass Bake Shop)

Dinner
• Maple Glazed Salmon

Enter to win a basket of Local Maple Treats Valued at

Maple Sugaring video provided by Massachusetts Maple Producers Assoc

www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An air of arrogance

Kaitlyn Silva

Sometimes, it's easy to forget that UMass is part of a state college system. Our local news talks about how price increases and the Board of Trustees affect this campus, making it easy to forget that there are still four other UMass campuses throughout the state. Can you even name them all off the top of your head? If you can't, don't worry. Chances are you're not alone.

The five campuses are Amherst, Boston, Lowell, Dartmouth, and our Medical School located in Worcester.

We're the flagship campus. What does that mean? It's basically a fancy way of saying that the Amherst campus was built first and happens to be the largest. However, this title does comes with its perks. We've got more programs and funding than any other school in the UMass system to keep us at least semi-content. We've never really stopped to question whether this is fair to other schools that bear the University of Massachusetts label. Yeah, we're a successful university. But if another UMass college is not as successful, some of our funding perks should be given to them in order to aid their improvement rather than kept here so we can blow it, probably on more "new dirt."

If you grew up in western Massachusetts, this university may have always been simply "UMass" to you. However, I grew up in the city of Lowell, and this campus was "UMass Amherst," just as the Lowell campus was "UMass Lowell." Amherst was just like every other UMass campus. There was nothing special about it. It was just another one of the state schools until a well-meaning tour guide pushed the idea upon me that UMass Amherst was the flagship school, simply known as UMass, and it was the best campus in the entire UMass system.

While students, faculty and board members should be proud of the achievements we've reached here, some pride has become arrogance. Is the research we do here more important than the research done on some of the other campuses? Are our students smarter than those at the other four campuses combined? The answer to these questions is no. Then why is it that UMass seems to receive more special attention and treatment than all of the other campuses combined, which only leads to hate from students attending other UMass schools?

For instance, UMass Board of Trustees Chairman Stephen Tocco recently suggested eliminating the long-standing UMass Lowell hockey team in favor of one Division I state team in Amherst, Way to go, Mr. Tocco and Mr. Wilson, you've managed to separate the UMass school system in a way that distance never could!

despite Lowell's better overall record and higher revenue. UMass President Jack Wilson has expressed interest in the proposal. In response, the Lowell newspapers have called for the Amherst team to be abolished instead and students have suggested that Sam the Minuteman be hung in effigy on the UML campus. Way to go, Mr. Tocco and Mr. Wilson, you've managed to separate the UMass school system in a way that distance never could!

Does the term "separate but equal" mean nothing to these people? Destroying a well-established program of any kind is not going to increase unity among the students in the various UMass colleges. Would you be willing to travel halfway across the state once or twice a week in order to cheer for a collegiate team or participate in an activity or program that you and your college had no real connection to, besides the "UMass" heading? Unless you're a hardcore fan of the activity, it's doubtful that you would. So why do the trustees think this will unify the five campuses?

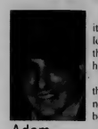
Of course, students have little to do with this matter. We realize that the other four campuses are almost entirely separate from us except for certain occasions, such as when the Board of Trustees chose to obnoxiously raise tuition fees. Boston, Lowell, Dartmouth, and UMass Medical are not just baby branches of our mother institution. They are established colleges with their own legacies. We are no better than them because there's no real basis for comparison, and students realize this.

However, it's UMass Amherst that's receiving criticism from other schools because of the perks we attain at their expense. The situation would be different if a UMass college cut a team or program for its own financial reasons instead of a program being threatened by board members for the benefit of another UMass school. The students at one college lose something important to them while the students at the other college don't really receive any benefit from the change. It's an unfair system of picking favorites.

Until all of the staff, students, faculty, and yes, the Board of Trustees realizes that each UMass college must be treated as its own separate entity, there will always be problems in the UMass state school system. We have to realize that we're not the only UMass campus out there and examine the way that the other four schools are being treated.

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at ksilva@student.umass.edu

A humbling anniversary



Adam McGillen

What does today mean to you? Is it just another Thursday loaded with long, dull classes and daydreams of the endless possibilities this weekend holds? Probably.

Is it just another cold, windy day that leaves you wishing you had never left the warm embrace of your bed? Probably.

Or is it a day for remembering sacrifices and heroics that shaped the generation before ours?

Forty-one years ago today – March 8, 1966 – 3,500 American Marines landed in South Vietnam, the first ground combat troops to set foot in the paddies. Three years later, over half a million Americans were serving in Vietnam, fighting the war against Communism.

The Tet Offensive. The Kent State shootings. The My Lai Massacre.

There was a draft, and students just like us had their numbers called. Some donned fatigues and served, some burned their draft cards, and some ran to Canada. Soldiers marched in muck, students marched in protest, and both stepped in the line of fire. All were brave in their own right.

Soldiers marched in muck, students marched in protest, and both stepped in the line of fire. All were brave in their own right.

America was torn.

Comparisons of the Iraq debacle to Vietnam are numerous. Both wars garnered support from the people through deceptive media portrayals, which amounted to pro-war propaganda – playing on the fears of the average freedom-loving American. Service members laid down their lives in both wars – 58,000 in Vietnam, and the current total in Iraq stands at 3,175. Civilian casualties (estimates range from 900,000 to approximately 4,000,000 dead) marred the cause in Vietnam; just as many today exclaim the growing civilian cost of America's occupation of Iraq (approximately 60,000 dead).

Ultimately, in a war like Vietnam, the ambiguity of the objective prevents a clear-cut victory. In Iraq, America has achieved the overthrow of Saddam, but how do we strive for "victory" now? We should withdraw our troops, but we'd risk leaving Iraq in a messy civil war. We should win the war, but we should not wreak any more damage upon the people of Iraq. We should take vengeance upon the terrorists, but we should not become vengeful terrorists ourselves.

America is torn.

In remembering America's involvement in Vietnam, the most significant lesson to take away is the value of open debate. In no way is criticism of America and her actions un-American. For a democracy to function at its highest levels, its constituents must always be revolutionaries striving to change their world for the better. Refuting an American-led war does not mean you do not support our troops, but rather that you are fighting your own war for the sake of all the soldiers who serve you.

We, the people, are the true commanders-in-chief, and it is our responsibility to decide what is best for the soldiers who so selflessly dedicate their lives to serving us and protecting the rights we hold so close. As Americans, we are bound to our military – it acts on our behalf, speaks to the world with our voice, and reaps what we sow. To pass blame onto inept leadership is to shuck that responsibility. We may not have elected Bush in 2000, but we certainly re-elected him in '04. As voting-age Americans, we must all work hard to be informed, seek truth, and come to terms with what we feel is the best course of action for our military. It does not require tactical training, just a respect for human life.

There is nothing more American than feeling strongly about your own opinion and fighting for American lives. If we all recognize our duty, demand more than non-binding resolutions to voice our opinions, and vigilantly seek a righteous course for our loyal men and women in camouflage, never will a soldier's life be lost in vain. We can all find something to march for.

So tonight, if you are participating in the regular Thirsty Thursday festivities around UMass, take some time to raise your Dixie cup or shot glass and toast the 3,500 Marines who landed in Vietnam exactly 41 years ago today. Remember the sacrifice they made then, and the sacrifice many soldiers, some of them your classmates, are making today.

And never forget that their service for you is not free; you have a duty to serve them as well.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgillen@student.umass.edu

Our administration has recently pushed for UMass-Amherst to be the lone state school from Massachusetts in Hockey East.

Racial politics 101

Greg Collins

Appealing to people's emotions on race seems to be one of the most effective political ploys public figures use to advance their own careers. No more was this truth evident than in the recent Duke lacrosse scandal. This past December, North Carolina Durham County District Attorney Mike Nifong dropped rape charges against three white Duke lacrosse players who were accused of sexually assaulting a black stripper at a team-hosted party one year ago.

Nifong has been criticized justifiably for his handling of the case. At first, there appeared to be overwhelming evidence supporting the accusations the stripper made against the players. This was the ideal situation of polarizing racial politics at its best – a group of well-off white males exploiting a poor black woman for carnal desires.

Yet gradually, information surfaced exposing that Nifong had a weak case against the players. In December, it was revealed that DNA samples on the stripper were not from the players, but from other men at the party. Additionally, the stripper's contradictory recollections of the night undermined her credibility.

Despite the mound of evidence revealing conclusions inconsistent with the predetermined mindset of Nifong that the white men exploited the black woman, the district attorney continued to pursue the case while continuing to make inflammatory statements that further intensified the racial aspect of the case.

At the time of the case, Nifong was running for reelection for the district attorney's office in Durham, N.C., a largely black district. The fact that Nifong continued to pursue this case in the face of flimsy evidence, and the way he exaggerated the element of race, exemplified the cunning way public figures exploit race in order to further their political careers.

But we should not be shocked that people like Nifong have tried, and continue to try, to manipulate race to win support from the people. Nifong was not the only one to have preconceived notions about this classic case of white versus black. Many liberals, media members, and college faculty also cemented their view that the players were guilty before the actual facts showed that there was a weak case against them.

For instance, following the accusations, 88 Duke professors from the Trinity College of Arts and Sciences took out a full-page ad in the student newspaper supporting the stripper and publicizing what they perceived as a racist and sexist environment in the Duke community.

It provided further proof that many people continue to focus on race in determining the guilt or innocence of parties involved in an ongoing investigation. Even more so, the knee-jerk reactions from the New York Times, the NAACP, and Duke professors automatically assuming the players' guilt is an indication that too many people in the United States are tricked by public figures who use race as a wedge issue to further their own careers or pass policies which reflect discriminatory attitudes towards people of different races.

It should come as no surprise that Nifong tried to play the race card in carrying out the case and in trying to get reelected when people continue to be fooled by this form of racial politics. It is not confined to the legal system, but it is evident in other areas of American politics as well.

Liberals and media elites would not be as obsessed with Barack Obama, an effective politician but someone who, if he were white, would not be receiving not nearly as much media attention as he is getting now. The fact that he has an overly liberal voting record and limited foreign policy experience should be more important factors in evaluating the legitimacy of his presidential candidacy. But people who focus on race do not have time to carefully consider merit.

Too many people in the United States are tricked by public figures who use race as a wedge issue to further their own careers.

Much like in other cases when public figures use divide-and-conquer strategies in politics, they are not directly affected by the words and actions for which they are responsible. While Nifong has been charged with ethics violations – charges he will most likely duck – the people most negatively affected are the Duke lacrosse players, their families and the Duke lacrosse program. Their reputations are already tarnished by the empty-headed accusations of Nifong, and they will continue to be stigmatized for the rest of their existence. The stripper will also be seen as being racially insensitive towards whites and as someone who plays the victim card.

We would like to think we have moved past this limited thinking regarding what characteristics truly shape a person's essence. Aristotle said many years ago, "For the many judge by externals, since that is all they perceive." Do not be surprised that politicians like Nifong will continue to play the race card when we continue to judge by externals. Only when we look at a person's internal being will public figures stop trying to play us off as fools.

Greg Collins can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

J-walkers need re-education

If UMass students, presumably aged 17 and older, still need to be told to look both ways before crossing the street (and in a full page article no less), perhaps they should repeat kindergarten.

C'mon people, grow up and learn to respect the rules of the road or get back onto your Big Wheel and leave the streets to the grown ups. Should adults really have to be told to look both ways? It's no wonder why UMass has a reputation for juvenile behavior.

Erin Mandeson
UMass Faculty

8,221?

This past weekend, the UMass hockey team filled the hearts of all of their fans with pride as they conquered a Herculean obstacle, beating the boastful Maine Black Bears in back-to-back victories and secured home ice advantage in the playoffs for only the second time in the team's history.

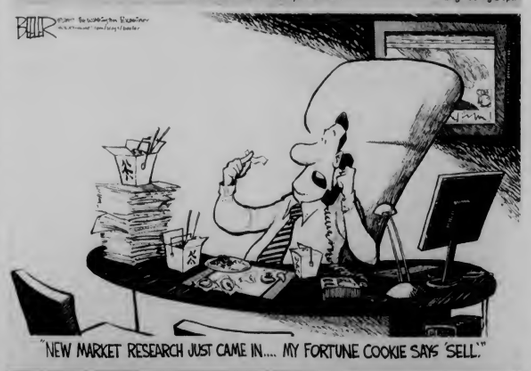
While I was thrilled to see the team finally get the fan support they deserve in terms of warm bodies occupying seats at the Mullins Center Saturday night (8,221 fans), there were moments when the Mullins Center felt much more like the Newman Center in terms of noise and enthusiasm.

It was embarrassing to see 75 or so U-Maine fans audibly chant and cheer louder than the Minutemen during a 10-minute stretch following Maine's 2-1 lead in the second period. Ironically, these Maine fans were sitting less than a section removed from the Maroon Platoon – our vaunted student cheering section. Thankfully, our hockey team found motivation from deep within and was able to weather the Maine storm, ending the stunned silence in our home crowd by scoring the tying goal.

Nonetheless, it was quite disappointing that it took us doing something positive to elicit any type of audible response. Instead, we should be buzzing all night, independent of the score, making the Mullins Center the hardest place for opposing fans to visit and opposing teams to skate. While I am anything but the team spirit police, our hockey team has played their hearts out for us this season, and they deserve the fullest level of support as they try to advance to the Hockey East Championship.

As such, be more than just a warm body filling the Mullins Center this weekend and make some noise. Get off your feet, and make those Maine fans wish they never opened their mouths. Go UMass Hockey!

Tony D'Amato
Polymer Science and Engineering Dept.



WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR. MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU. THE COLLEGIAN IS ALWAYS LOOKING TO IMPROVE ITS COVERAGE. PART OF THAT MISSION EMANATES FROM TAKING THE PULSE OF YOU, THE MEMBER OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY.

TELL US WHAT YOU THINK. SPEAK YOUR MIND.

Send an e-mail to:
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Chamber music to thrill eager audience

Montague Bookmill to host string quartet concert Friday

By Michael Hardman

The Chiara String Quartet is [illegible] path through- [illegible] and their next [illegible] Montague Bookmill [illegible]. The quartet [illegible] form of chamber [illegible] revitalizing their [illegible]. It has been [illegible] they just perform [illegible] they become [illegible] audience can [illegible] through- [illegible] written for [illegible] of instruments [illegible] "[illegible] capable [illegible] room, salon, [illegible] a book [illegible] String Quartet's [illegible] praised by the [illegible] Times. The Strad [illegible] dramatic" with a [illegible] of approach. The [illegible] for expert [illegible] their per- [illegible] unusual [illegible] it was the [illegible] ways in the

See CHIARA on page 6

CHIARA STRING QUARTET

MONTAGUE BOOKMILL

FRIDAY, 8 P.M.
ADV. $10,
DOOR $12

The quartet features Rebecca Fischer and Julie Yoon on violin, Jonah Sirota on viola, and Gregory Beaver on cello. They are known as a powerful foursome with four distinct, unique voices that come together to form an other-worldly cohesive group.

The dark atmosphere of the Montague Bookmill will nicely

The Chiara String Quartet members, violist Jonah Sirota, cellist Julie Yoon, cellist Gregory Beaver and violinist Rebecca Fischer (from left to right) have recorded albums of the chamber music they have become famous for performing.

Amherst College senior's play tackles serious mental illness

The original play details one woman's lifelong battle with Borderline Personality Disorder

By Samuel Pearson

[illegible] Half-Way [illegible] 800 Verde [illegible] Mental [illegible] to an [illegible] and [illegible] Amherst College [illegible] New [illegible] a friendly [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Bookmill provides a perfect setting for Chiara's concert compliment the music Friday night, as the performance area of the mill is generally lit in a haunting manner. Coupled with old books lining the shelves and dark visible beams, the night promises to enchant.

CHIARA from page 5

The Killigrew Café, located downstairs of the book store, offers rich coffee and a variety of microbrews. They also have a menu filled with sandwiches, salads, and other treats.

The biggest difference between the Chiara String Quartet and other chamber music is how they present their music. The quartet usually performs in a club setting, playing their music in sets. They announce the song that they will be playing and give a back story as well.

They play all styles of music, from new classical to old-school "classical," as well as cover tunes. Their music is based upon intensity and the strength of feeling. The quartet has transcended the stereotype that classical music is for the rich and the old. For anybody with a broad sense of music taste and a yearning to test the bounds of reality, then these four musicians will not disappoint.

The Chiara String Quartet members were taught at The Julliard School, and together they have won four awards. Most recently they were named the 2006 Winner of the Guarneri Quartet Artist Residency from Chamber Music America.

The set list they are playing Friday night will be based upon the setting, the place, the time of the year, and their feelings. The Bookmill is located about 15 minutes north of the UMass campus, in the forests of western Massachusetts alongside the Sawmill River and a waterfall. The river is still somewhat frozen, so the night should be filled with sinister grooves interwoven with light atmospheric songs.

The concert is set to begin at 8 p.m. this Friday, March 9. The Montague Bookmill is located at 440 Greenfield Rd. in Montague, MA. Tickets are $10 in advance or $12 at the door.

Michael Hardman can be reached at mhardman@student.umass.edu.

The Chiara String Quartet is known for its ability to add modern touches to classical chamber music.

The Julliard School hosted the string quartet for two years as a graduate quartet-in-residence in 2004 and 2005.

UMass brings poets to town for Visiting Writers Series

POETS from page 5

it have a surprise and some sort of intensity." Over the years, Jackson said his writing has grown from simply poems about tiny images, like little photographs, and the occasional telling of a story. Jackson's newer work is said to contain more stories that are shorter and faster.

"The new poems are like the still pictures from before only a lot more pictures and twisted together," Jackson said. "It's like the movie Crash with two or three stories twisted together and really quick."

Jackson is the author of nine books of poetry, including "Unauthorized Autobiography: New and Selected Poems," and "Heartwall." He is also the editor of an eastern European chapbook series and two anthologies of Slovene poetry, "The Fire Under the Moon and Double Vision: Four Slovenian Poets." He has received fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Guggenheim Foundation.

The other award-winning poet featured tonight is Ralph Angel.

Richard Jackson is an author of several books including "Heartwall." He will be reading his own work tonight at Amherst Books at 8 p.m.

He is the author of four books of poetry including "Exceptions and Melancholies: Poems 1986-2006." He is also a translator of Federico Garcia Lorca's "Poem of the Deep Song." His honors include the James Laughlin Award of The Academy of American Poets, the Willis Barnstone Poetry Translation Prize and the Bess Hokin Award of the Modern Poetry Association.

This year's program Director is Dar Wier, and the Associate Director is Lisa Olstein. Other sponsors of the Visiting Writers Series are the Juniper Initiative, the UMass Arts Council, the UMass Alumni Association, Vice Provost of Research, the English Department and the Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts. All events are free, wheelchair accessible and open to the public.

Mandy Thomas can be reached at mandyrudy@gmail.com.

Do you need advice?

Please e-mail any questions you'd like help with to

Veronica Garrett,
Advice Columnist at
arts@dailycollegian.com

UMass Theatre Guild
SPRING COFFEE HOUSE
THREE RING CIRCUS

Sunday, March 11th
7-11 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Enjoy the performances of talented Five College students and eat some delectable goodies!

FREE!

Citizens of humanity
YOUR FAVORITE JEANS.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Looking for business experience??

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking qualified applicants to fill the positions of:

- Business Manager
- Assistant Business Manager
- Distribution Manager

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ's ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD

Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"

WANTED: HIP YOUNG PROMOTERS/HOSTS • Earn $$$$

Calling all DJ's

Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us

18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass

10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

BITE ME!
Pizza Shark Plus presents
Two-for-one Mondays
Buy any large pizza, get a second large pizza FREE with your UMass ID

Cheese $12.00	Pepperoni $14.00	Pesto $17.00
Teriyaki Steak $18.00	BBQ Chicken $17.00	Antipasto $18.00
Buffalo Chicken $17.00	Seafood $18.00	White Pizza $14.00
Mediterranean $17.00	Roasted Veggie $17.00	Margherita $17.00
Shark Therapy $17.00	Honey Mustard Chicken $18.00

(413) 259-4259
17B Montague Road, Amherst MA 01002
*higher price prevails. must show UMass ID at time of purchase. offer expires 3/17/07

Saint Louis earns rematch

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

Feb. 24 thanks to a few clutch plays from senior James Life and Gary Forbes. Life snapped out of a seven-game cold streak from behind the arc to give UMass a 49-47 lead with 1:38 left in regulation.

A Vouyoukas layup and free throw put Saint Louis back on top by one, but Life stepped up again on the next possession and made a most uncharacteristic drive to the net, picking up a foul and draining both free throws.

The Billikens had a chance for a last-possession shot, but Forbes picked the pocket of Tommie Liddell at the top of the key and made two free throws with less than a minute remaining, sealing the UMass win.

Both teams will be ready for the rematch.

"I actually think we match up better against UMass," Saint Louis coach Brad Soderberg said on comparing the Minutemen with Duquesne. "I think [we've] been conditioned to play in a tournament like this, but we'll find out soon enough."

UMass players have been battling a respiratory illness the past few days, so the Minutemen bench will need to continue their solid play. Brandon Thomas, Dante Milligan, Ricky Harris, Luke Bonner and Tiki Mayben have provided UMass coach Travis Ford with a complete second unit, something that was non-existent for most of the season.

With Ford able to rely on more than just Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme these days, it takes a load off of everyone's back.

"We need everybody to contribute," senior James Life said before practice on Tuesday. "There have been games in the past where we didn't have the bench come in and contribute, but there are no excuses.

"We need everybody. From one to 10, we need everybody to be on top of their A-game in order to make a run."

The Minutemen, depending on how healthy they are, will have to match up with the Billikens' two big men once again in Vouyoukas and Bryce Husak. The latter only had two points against Duquesne last night, but Vouyoukas put together an impressive 19-point, nine-rebound performance to lead his team into the quarterfinals.

Regardless of who was next in line, the Billikens were just happy to get out of last night's game alive.

"Nonetheless, we survived, and we lived to play another day," Soderberg said after the win.

The Minutemen and Billikens battle for survival tonight in Atlantic City. The winner moves on to the semifinals to play the winner of George Washington and Saint Joseph's tomorrow night at 9 p.m.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

The last time UMass faced Saint Louis, senior guard James Life broke out of a shooting drought to lead the Minutemen to victory. He nailed a 3-pointer with just over a minute and a half left to give UMass the lead.

UMass tries for first title since '96

HISTORY from page 10

in the A-10 Tournament.

The Minutemen were the No. 1 seed in the tournament in 1993 and beat St. Bonaventure in the quarters, URI in the semis and rival Temple in the finals to advance to the NCAA Tournament.

UMass made it to the second round in the Big Dance that year before losing to sixth-seeded Virginia. The Minutemen were the No. 3 seed in their part of the bracket.

In 1994 it was a similar scene. Roe was once again dominant, averaging 18 points and eight rebounds per game in the conference tournament, and UMass beat Temple in the final again, this time by 11 points.

Again, the Minutemen fell in the second round of the NCAA Tournament, losing to underdog Maryland in the second round, 90-87.

The next year saw the emergence of star forward Marcus Camby, who was thoroughly dominant during his time in the Pioneer Valley.

As a sophomore, Camby was named to the All-Championship team after averaging 7.7 points and 5.3 rebounds in three games. Roe, in his senior campaign, averaged 14 points and eight rebounds in those three games, and UMass beat Temple in the conference final once again, 63-44.

UMass lost to another underdog in the 1995 NCAA Tournament after winning its first three games to get to the Elite Eight. Oklahoma State ended the Minutemen's season with a 14-point thrashing. UMass was a No. 2 seed and OSU was a No. 4 seed.

The next year is considered UMass' crowning achievement in the college basketball world. The Minutemen won the conference tournament again and made it all the way to the Final Four for the first time in school history before losing to fellow No. 1 seed Kentucky, 81-74.

UMass received an at-large bid in the 1997 season after losing in the conference tournament for the first time in six years (Saint Joseph's beat Rhode Island in the final), and the Minutemen got an at-large bid in 1998 as well.

In both seasons they went out in the first round of the NCAA Tournament (in '97 to Louisville and in '98 to Saint Louis).

And UMass hasn't made the NCAA Tournament since. This season perhaps, has been the Minutemen's best shot at the NCAAs since the 1998 season, although the conference tournament hasn't treated UMass well recently.

In 1999, UMass went out in the second round to Xavier. In 2000, Temple finally vanquished the Minutemen in a 54-47 victory in the semifinals before going on to win the tournament.

The 2001 A-10 Tournament, Temple got the ultimate revenge by beating UMass in the finals, 76-65.

The next year it was a quarterfinal loss to Xavier in double overtime, and then back-to-back-to-back-to-back first-round losses followed. From 2003 to 2006, the Minutemen didn't get past their first game, losing to the likes of George Washington, La Salle, Duquesne and finally Xavier last season.

UMass had beaten the Musketeers in the final game of last year's regular season before drawing Xavier in the first round. The Musketeers won the conference tournament and gained the automatic bid to the NCAA's.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

The Atlantic 10 Tournament is senior Rashaun Freeman's best chance of getting UMass to its first NCAA Tournament since 1998.

Harvard poses as another test for UM

M. LACROSSE from page 10

total of five goals in the game's final period.

Harvard tied that game 54 seconds into third quarter, after scoring with just two seconds to go in the first half. Those were the only two goals for the Crimson in either the second or third periods, ultimately dooming the outcome for them.

"I just think that everybody knows that Harvard is a good program. They made it to the NCAA Tournament last year, it was a hard-fought game here last year," Cannella said. "You're looking at a very competitive team. I think our guys know that they're good."

Instead of focusing solely on their own problems, Cannella says the Minutemen have spent the greater part of the week scouting the Crimson. UMass enters the game struggling on offense, and the Crimson have a tough time keeping the opposition out of the net.

Cannella said that, throughout the course of a season, there is never any major overhaul, just tweaking some aspects of his team. He may change someone on the man-up unit or maybe vary the offense a little from week to week. Cannella failed to mention whether or not he'd done either of those entering this weekend.

One area that does concern the coach is UMass' ability to play against the zone defense. Canella mentioned how the Minutemen have yet to score against the zone, a defense both Hofstra and Yale employed at different points over the past two weeks.

"I think we've played well in both those games [Hofstra and Yale], obviously not well enough," Canella said.

Harvard enters the contest as losers of two games in which it heeded 13 goals. The Minutemen have yet to crack seven in their two defeats.

"You never know, you hope so, yeah. You want to breakout everyday and every game," Cannella said about turning around his team's scoring woes. "I think that we have to score more goals, everybody knows that. Without putting too much pressure on the offense, that's the reality. I think all those guys realize that, so that's not something that we dwell on."

But on the flipside, UMass' defensive corps has held up its end. The Minutemen have yet to surrender more than eight goals in a game. Yale barely mustered seven in their tight win in Amherst last Saturday.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu

Minutewomen falter in home opener

W. LACROSSE from page 10

of a damper on things."

Despite the loss, Venechanos seemed to be satisfied with her team's effort and was willing to concede the Big Green was the better of the two teams yesterday.

"I'm very proud of our team," Venechanos said. "They worked hard and I'm very happy with the effort we put in. We just have to execute a lot better."

In what has been the norm this season, the Maroon and White started slow in the second half. The Maroon and White allowed Dartmouth to score the first four goals of the half in the opening 11 minutes to extend its 5-1 halftime lead to eight goals.

To UMass' credit, it scored four of the last six goals Wednesday, but was never able to recover from its dreadful start to the second half.

But Venechanos dismissed the notion that her team has struggled coming out of the halftime break this season.

"I think we've been actually doing a pretty good job of that, I just think Dartmouth executed and we didn't and that's what it all came down to," Venechanos said. "I'm definitely proud of the way we played. We never gave up in the second half."

The opening minutes were a defensive struggle, as both teams fought for possession, but neither team generated any viable scoring threats.

The Big Green's Margo Duke broke the stalemate at the 22:37 mark with the first of four unanswered goals for Dartmouth. Duke's goal marked the third time in five games the Minutewomen have conceded the first goal of the game.

Junior attacker Melynda Zwick stopped the bleeding with just over two minutes remaining in the open frame with her eighth goal of the year. Dartmouth squelched whatever momentum the Minutewomen may have looked to seize, scoring the last goal of the half with 14 seconds on the clock.

The Big Green capitalized on their rare first-half scoring opportunities, tallying five goals on just eight shots against UMass redshirt senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy. McCarthy finished with three saves at day's end. UMass was out shot 17-16 for the game.

The Big Green are now 17-10 all-time versus UMass and have won the last six straight affairs between the two schools. UMass' last win over Dartmouth came in 1999.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu.

Once again it was Kathleen Typadis leading the UMass offense. She scored two goals in the Minutemen's loss to Dartmouth yesterday.

Hair By Harlow
SALON & DAY SPA
EXPERIENCE...
- Rejuvenating facials
- A variety of massages
- Nail pampering
- Hair design

Brazillian Waxing!

220 NORTH PLEASANT STREET
AMHERST, MA 01002
PHONE: (413) 253-8897

Goten
OF JAPAN STEAKHOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING CUISINE PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE!

Early Bird Specials
Tues.-Thurs. 5-6 PM
Saturday 12-3 PM
Sunday 4-5 PM

Hours of Operation
Monday Closed
Tues.-Fri. 5-9 PM
Saturday 12-10 PM
Sunday 4-9 PM

104 Old Amherst Rd, Sunderland off Rt. 116
413-665-3628
www.gotenofjapan.com

SPRING BREAK
service to and from the airport
Exclusive Car Services
877 695 4665

4 to BOS ~ $60 each
4 to NYC ~ $90 each
4 to BDL ~ $35 each

LIMO SERVICE 24/7/365 :: ANYWHERE :: ANYTIME

MARTHA'S VINEYARD
HARBOR VIEW HOTEL
AND KELLEY HOUSE
has the following seasonal openings:
Children's Activities
Bell Staff/Drivers
Front Desk Manager
Affordable seasonal housing.

Available for on-campus interviews March 16, 2007.

Please contact Nancie Lucas
Human Resources Director
508-627-6367
or email hrd@harbor-view.com to schedule an appointment.

UMass lacking on offense

SOFTBALL from page 10

pitched a C- game that day. Even in the [California] win she was only about a C-."

While poor luck played a role in the Minutewomen's five losses, UMass needs to address their lack of offensive production if they plan to defeat the Yellow Jackets in the second meeting. The Maroon and White have scored one or fewer runs in six games to this point in the season, posting a 1-4-1 record in those contests – the tie came after the officials called a game with Kansas after five innings due to rain.

However, in their last two games, the Minutewomen scored a combined 15 runs on 21 hits in the victories.

"We're trying to win with hitting, instead of winning without hitting, which I think is a lot easier to do," Sortino said.

Senior first baseman Amanda Morin began the season poorly for the Minutewomen before breaking out of her slump with a 2-for-5 performance against Coastal Carolina in the Minutewomen's last game. Overall, Morin, the Minutewomen's leadoff hitter, is getting on base at a .325 clip, a far cry from last year's .437 mark.

"I thought she had a good tournament in San Diego. I thought she was very, very much out of sorts in the five games we played in Georgia. She just wasn't Amanda," Sortino said. "She's really worked hard at doing a better job driving pitches she can handle."

The success of the Minutewomen depends on Morin's production. Sortino considers Morin one of the team's biggest off-the-field leaders and although she is not a captain, her younger teammates look to her for guidance.

"I thought her turnaround was magnificent," Sortino said. "She's the leader in the infield. She's the one with maturity and she's the one the kids will look to.

"I don't know that she's pressing. I think she needs to get comfortable and she is not comfortable being in the light."

Fellow senior Candice Molinari has done just the opposite for the Minutewomen. Typically hitting in the two-hole behind Morin, Molinari's .571 on-base percentage leads the team – as do her nine runs scored. She also leads the team in hits (12) and stolen bases (4) – she is now second all time on the school's career SB list, with 81.

While the Minutewomen's offensive woes appear to have amended their offensive woes, defensive struggles are still a problem – through 10 games the Minutewomen committed 13 errors. Sortino chalks problems in the field up to early season rustiness and the hectic schedule preventing the team from developing a rhythm.

"The errors that we made are more mental which cause the physical blemish. We're just now taking care of the ball," Sortino said. "All of those errors were unforced."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Sortino has new pitching partners

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last season, the Massachusetts softball team made it to the NCAA Super Regionals on the right arm of freshman ace Brandice Balschmiter. This year, she's has a partner in the circle as the team tries to return to the postseason.

In 2006, senior pitcher Jenna Busa struggled after finishing the 2005 campaign as the A-10 Tournament MVP. That forced Balschmiter quickly into the lead role for the Minutewomen. She handled it seamlessly, winning the conference's Pitcher of the Year award.

At 6-foot-1, she was an imposing figure for any batter in the box, and more so once one of her 73 mph pitches went by. However, freshman Bailey Sanders may just make Balschmiter even tougher to hit.

Balschmiter proved last year that she is a power pitcher that throws low and hard. She finished last season with an ERA under one (0.97), going 32-9 in 49 appearances (37 complete games), giving up fewer earned runs than games played.

Entering the early stages of the 2007 campaign, she hasn't missed a beat. She boasts a 1.05 ERA through six appearances, going 2-3. However, her win-loss record is more indicative of UMass' offensive issues than her pitching (she's given up just six earned runs all year).

Her running mate, Sanders, is keeping pace as a rookie. Her 2.15 ERA and 2-2 record in her first four collegiate appearances have impressed UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

"[Sanders] is tremendous," Sortino said. "I think if you look at [her first four starts], I was pretty pleased with her performance. She gets better every week. She's definitely starting to come into her own."

The reason the pair of hurlers work so well together is because of their vastly different styles in the circle. Balschmiter's game is all about speed (though she's working on a few new movement-based pitches). While Sanders is softball's equivalent to the junk-ball pitcher in baseball. She does not possess the same speed as Balschmiter, but she's has enough movement on her pitches to get hitters to chase her around the strike zone.

"Bailey's all over the [strike zone]," Sortino said. "She's up and down. She's got a rise-ball, curveball, screwball, drop-ball, changeup, so she's all over the place, which is nice."

That change in pace from Balschmiter's style will make a lot of batters do a double-take as they try to adjust from one style to the other.

"She doesn't throw as hard as Brandice," Sortino said. "She throws 63 miles an hour, but when you're looking at 70 [from Balschmiter] it looks like [Sanders] is throwing in slow motion."

Teams will certainly have plenty to study entering those doubleheaders during the A-10 portion of the schedule. And if one pitcher ever spells another in mid-game, it should prove to be a tough adjustment.

"Heaven forbid they have to come in and take care of what the other one couldn't finish, it's going to be a difficult adjustment," Sortino said. "It's tough to adjust [to a new pitcher]."

In addition to her blistering fastball, Balschmiter has been developing her changeup, to keep batters guessing. At the same time, her drop-ball – a brand new addition to her arsenal – has provided her with a wider pitch selection.

"The third time up, [for a batter] to start with an 0-0 change, that's a new look," Sortino said. "That's a nice way for her to get ahead, when you're sitting on the fastball and looking for something 70 miles an hour, and it comes in a 52 and you're just looking at it."

Jeremy Rice can be reach at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Fatigue not an issue for HEA goalies

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hockey has one of the longest seasons in collegiate sports. From October to March, 10 teams compete for the Hockey East Championship and a berth in the NCAA Tournament field. The eight that are still playing this weekend all have one thing in common – they all have a clear No. 1 goaltender.

But since the season is so long, how much of a physical toll does it take on the players, especially the goalie? Since the goaltender position is arguably the most important on the ice, naturally the last thing a team wants to do is overwork its star goalie. However, the league's coaches tend to agree that goaltender fatigue will be a non-issue for their teams in the next few weeks.

But consider that Cory Schneider of Boston College, widely considered by many to be one of the top goalies in Hockey East, leads the league in minutes played (over 2,000) and is fourth nationally.

Schneider has started every game for the Eagles this season, playing every minute except for 12. Since the goalie has allowed no more than three goals in his last four starts, there is no indication that he is a victim of fatigue. BC coach Jerry York believes that today's goalies, in general, have better stamina than in past years.

"I think if you look around our league, the goaltenders now are just better athletes," York said in a conference call on Feb. 20. "They're just playing more minutes than they've ever had. Cory Schneider is not the exception in minutes played. If you look at our league – it used to be six, seven years ago – they were all split. If they were not split, it was a 75-25 [ratio]."

But should Schneider become injured, or if his play deteriorates, the Eagles have no alternative. Senior Joe Pearce has played only six minutes this season, only when he relieved Schneider in a 7-1 loss to No. 1 Notre Dame (27-6-3) in October. The only other goalie on the team's roster is sophomore Adam Reasoner, but he is not a viable option since he has not seen the ice this season.

Maine's situation is an excellent example of the danger of not developing a backup. Before Ben Bishop went down with an injury on Feb. 3, the 6-foot-7 goalie was on pace to start every game for the Black Bears.

Now, freshman Dave Wilson is trying to learn on the run, posting a 4-4 record as the new starter, playing relatively well. But the young goalie certainly would have been better off if he made his first start earlier in the season.

Unlike the other seven teams who entered the season with a proven goaltender, coach Greg Cronin of Northeastern chose to shoulder the responsibility on freshman Brad Thiessen. The freshman is third in minutes played with nearly 1,900 minutes, behind Jon Quick of Massachusetts.

"[Brad [Thiessen] is in great shape," Cronin said. "Like other teams, we've had an injury, virus bug that he's managed to escape so far. He has great dedication, he's a very professional guy, always early for practice and staying late. He's a freshman who has been very consistent throughout the year – even when playing in very difficult environments, he's played great. He doesn't get flustered, doesn't get bothered. The rhythm of the team runs through a goalie, not just how he plays the puck, but how he handles himself."

FIRST ROUND PREVIEW

Luckily for those schools that qualified for eight-team tournament, one of the teams that is playing the best hockey, UMass Lowell (8-21-7, 7-16-4 HEA), will not be playing this weekend. The River Hawks and Merrimack (3-27-4, 3-22-2 HEA) will be the only two Hockey East teams able to get a one week head start on preparations for next year. Regardless, eight teams vie for the 2007 Hockey East Championship, played out over three rounds during the next two weekends.

The top four regular season finishers host best-of-three game series, with the hope of obtaining the right to play in the semifinals and finals, held at the TD Banknorth Garden in Boston.

NEW HAMPSHIRE V. PROVIDENCE

New Hampshire (23-9-2, 18-7-2 HEA) appeared to have the top seed locked by December, but the Wildcats almost lost their position to a surging BC team. Several of the scorers who were on pace to have record years, namely forwards Trevor Smith and Matt Fornataro, have cooled off immensely since the first half.

One could even make the argument that UNH is playing its worst hockey going into the playoffs, stumbling to the finish with a 1-1-4 record in its last six games. But the team is still incredibly talented and has a very dynamic offense, averaging over three and a half goals per game.

To make matters worse for the Wildcats, Providence (10-21-3, 9-15-3 HEA) is a tough draw for being the No. 1 seed. The problem for PC all season has been putting the puck in the net. However, the Friars averaged over 4.5 goals per game during their last five contests, including scoring seven goals against UNH on Feb. 24.

If PC can get increased scoring from its top forwards, especially Jon Rheault and Colin McDonald, and solid goaltending from Junior Tyler Sims, an upset could be a possibility. However, winning two games at the Whittemore Center will be a tall order. UNH has lost at home only four times all year.

BOSTON COLLEGE V. NORTHEASTERN

Even though their campuses are only separated by a few miles, Boston College (22-11-1, 18-8-1 HEA) and Northeastern (13-16-5, 9-13-5 HEA) have not played since Jan. 1. The teams split the season series, 1-1-1, but a lot has changed with both teams since their last meeting.

Right now, the Eagles are arguably playing the best hockey in the conference. They won their last six games after losing to BU in the Beanpot final, nearly one month ago. And the line of Brian Boyle, Brock Bradford and Nathan Gerbe is playing as well as any group in the conference.

Meanwhile, the Huskies won their last game against BU, but lost both games of a home-and-home series with Massachusetts (18-11-5, 15-9-3 HEA) two weeks ago. Northeastern has a young team, as their two leading scorers and starting goalie are freshmen.

After the team's letdown in the series with UMass, it will be interesting to see how NU responds in a playoff situation and win two games in a hostile environment like Conte Forum.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY V. VERMONT

In a battle between the league's top two defenses, this series has only one certainty – goal scoring will be limited. And each team has one of the top goaltenders in the country. Both John Curry of BU and Joe Fallon rank among the top three nationally in goals-against average and have solid support from their defensive corps.

The teams met just two weeks ago with two games in Burlington, Vt. BU won the first while the Catamounts took the second game.

The Terriers are one of the more rested teams in the tournament, having last played on Feb. 28. They limped into the playoffs by losing their last two games, thereby losing the second seed to BC, and is 2-2-1 since winning the Beanpot on Feb. 12.

BU clearly is capable of shutting down teams and scoring goals, but it will be up to coach Jack Parker to keep his team from becoming complacent. Last season, the Terriers won the Hockey East regular season, the conference tournament and the Beanpot, but flamed out in the second round of the NCAA Tournament to BC.

Vermont is another team that is not playing its best hockey going into the playoffs. UVM only has three wins in its last 10 games and failed to capitalize on an opportunity last weekend to earn the fifth seed by earning only one point against Lowell. Vermont has the advantage on special teams, as they sport the league's second-best penalty kill and have slightly better power play efficiency than BU.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

UM season ends at USCSA Nationals

BY JUSTIN MCGRAIL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts ski team will be given a huge test this weekend. It will compete in its fifth consecutive USCSA National Championship, starting today and continuing to Saturday, Mar. 10, in Winter Park, Colo.

The women's giant slalom was held yesterday and the men's giant slalom is today. The women's final race is on Friday, March 9, and the men's is on Saturday, Mar. 10.

Nationals will be the final race of senior Rush Hawkins' collegiate career. At his three previous Nationals appearances, Hawkins placed in the top five in three races and two top 10's in his other races. In 2004 as a freshman, he finished second place in the giant slalom and was a First Team All-American selection.

Hawkins' sophomore season was one for the record books. He swept the Nationals, taking first place in both the slalom and the giant slalom. It was the first time an American had swept the competition in over 10 years.

Last season was a bit of a setback for Hawkins. He finished in the bottom half of the top 10 in both races. This would normally be good for any other skier, but it was very uncharacteristic for Hawkins, especially after his record-setting performance at the previous year's competition.

Not only will Hawkins be looking to have a great finish, but the entire team will be trying to win an overall championship. The Minutemen had a solid end to their regular season and placed strongly at the ECSC Regional Championships. In 2004, the men upset a lot of teams by placing third in the giant slalom and fourth overall for the weekend.

Two years ago was a record year not only for Rush Hawkins, but for the entire team as well. UMass placed third overall at the nationals that year. It was the highest finish in the school's history.

The 2006 Nationals didn't go the way the Minutemen had hoped. They placed fifth in the giant slalom and sixth in the slalom. Despite the results from the previous year, the team will be looking to improve and top their third place finish of two years ago.

Even though the Minutewomen won't be competing as a team, it still has a representative in Eliza Hawkins. For the younger Hawkins, this will be her third USCSA National Championships in her three years on the team.

In her first ever race at Nationals, she was the top skier for the Minutewomen, coming in 10th place. This was a preview of things to come in 2006. She missed first place by twelve-hundredths of a second in the giant slalom and took fifth place in the slalom. This was enough to give her first-place overall and an individual National Championship. Following this performance, she will be aiming to win back-to-back titles at this year's competition.

The Minutemen are looking to add to their perennially solid finishes this weekend, and women's standout Hawkins will be trying to capture her second National Championship of her career.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrail@student.umass.edu

Styles by Deborah & Co.
HAIR SALON & SPA
65 University Drive, Amherst ~ 549-5610
Paul Mitchell Signature Salon
Spring Break Specials
$5 OFF Spa Pedicures
$10 OFF Leg & Bikini Wax (combo)
$5 OFF Haircuts
Also specializing in chemical relaxing, pressing, and styling ethnic hair.
Coupons may not be combined. Offers expire 3/30/07

New WORLD Theater
UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
Duurbaar (unstoppable) journeys into horizon
by Ananya Dance Theatre
Wednesday, March 14, 2007
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium
Tickets are $15 general public, $8 [illegible] seniors, $5 students with valid ID. Tickets available at FAC Box Office, 545-2511. For more info, [illegible] website or call NWT at 545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

From Your Dorm To The Airport And Back!
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter
The Easy Way to the Airport!

Tired of the Dorms?
IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
EVERY THURSDAY:
♦ OPEN MIC ♦
LIVE BANDS
FRIDAY, MARCH 9TH, 2007:
COVALENCE
SATURDAY, MARCH 10TH, 2007:
ROCK 201
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CUMBERLAND FARMS

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

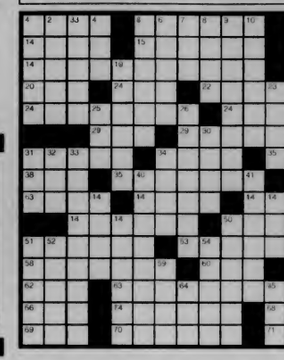
		6	8		9	1
5	9						2	3
		9	5		4	2
6								5
		1	9		6	3
4	2						8	1
		3	2		1	6

ACROSS
1 Bulk
5 "A Streetcar Named Desire" character
11 Remote
14 Empowered
15 Made neat
16 Fuss
17 Celestial pulsar
19 Dine
20 Inhuman creatures
21 Crumb carrier
22 Formal letter
24 Lack of color
27 Shortcomings
28 Commercial pieces
29 Part of an eye
31 Really small
34 Fast-food option
35 Easy task
38 Annapolis letters
39 Excoriate
42 Bullpen stat
43 Cry out loud
45 Rabbit relative
46 Waistcoats
48 Dwell
50 Lawn moisture
51 Personal views
53 Wheel of fortune?
58 Drunker
60 Bellow
61 Competed
62 Eminem's music
63 Becomes more lever
66 Small bill
67 Imposes, as taxes
68 Catholic leader
69 Mousse surface
70 Puts up
71 Mimic

DOWN
1 Craze
2 Aids in wrongdoing
3 Partly melted snow
4 Immovable
5 Rocks
6 Traces of color
7 Aaner and Ames
8 Dieter's catchword
9 Jumping game
10 Dantley of the NBA
11 Freeway speed zones
12 Fully grown
13 Lassos
18 Travis and Quaid
23 Instigates litigation
25 Actor McKellen
26 Diligent searcher
30 Shrek, for one
31 Bath place
32 NASA partner
33 Absorbed completely
34 Warty amphibian
36 Gallery filler
37 Ballerina steps
40 Cheater
41 Writer Waugh
44 Kodak attachment
47 She sheep
49 Quell
50 Illegal coercion
51 Barbor's sharpener
52 Climbing vine
54 Two quartets
55 Group of scouts
56 Brownish gray
57 Word on a door
59 Glowing review
64 Muscle spasm
65 Whirlpool tub

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Moan and Dove
$3 draught week after spring break.
come in and try the world's best beers.
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day



Submit your comics!
collegianecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"It isn't just one man, damn it. It's Zorro."
-Stuart Wilson in "The Mask of Zorro"

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

YOU'RE PROBABLY WONDERING WHAT I'M DOING WALKING ALL THESE DOGS.
DID I ANSWER YOU THEN?
I SEE. OKAY. GOTTA GO. NINA'S HUNGRY. THOUGH THAT'S NOTHING NEW. YES, I WENT THERE.
WHY DOES HE KEEP AVOIDING THE QUESTION?
YOU KNOW I AM. I ASKED YOU POINT BLANK YESTERDAY.
YOU KNOW FULL WELL YOU DID NOT.
WHAT AM I, THE PAUL WHISPERER? HA HA—OH GOD!

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shaleb

1. Idea
2. Preparation
3. Preperation
Doesn't "execution" come next?
No preparation continues, then break time, then Seinfeld reruns until bed

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

TELLING WHAT HAPPENED AFTER THE WEDDING!
DURING THE RECEPTION, WHEN THEY TOSSED THE BOUQUET, THERE WAS A FIGHT TO CATCH IT.
A REAL FIGHT?!
WELL, I LOST A TOOTH, THE FLOWER GIRL WAS BLEEDING AND NOW MY ROOMMATE WON'T TALK TO ME.
HOW MANY WERE FIGHTING?
JUST ME AND THE FLOWER GIRL, BUT SHE WAS PRETTY SCRAPPY FOR EIGHT YEARS OLD.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shaleb

I'm glad you brought us here Ernesto.
It is a Paradise truly.
A place with cats can be called Paradise.
Every city needs a loafer.
I'm glad to spend as much of the rest of my life here as possible.
What the...
Trouble in Paradise.
KAF KAF
KAF KAF KAF

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If a black cat crosses your path, pet it... heavily.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Few can pull off a leather jacket but all cows seem to do well with it.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Music can soothe the most savage of beasts, even Mel Gibson.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Q-tips were invented for a reason yet still we wage war with guns.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Captain Vegetable is very disappointed in your low intake of leafy greens.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If you keep getting junk mail about your lack of sexual prowess, take it as a sign.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Muhammad Ali will concede his title to you. You are the greatest!

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If a word ends in "cide" you know it's not good.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
All of your marine friends are singing in harmony and begging you to kiss the girl.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
If your pants are too small just trim a little bit off of your legs.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Never lick a raw chicken breast, bestiality is strange.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Make a big mess wherever you work and blame it on the emo kid.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Orders For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/ part time after college www.umass.edu/army-rotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/ office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

EMPLOYMENT

The UPS Store Part-time. 20-25 hours per week. Busy, multi-tasking, friendly atmosphere. Packing, sales, customer service experience a plus. Outgoing, detail oriented personality needed. Some lifting required. Apply in person at 6 University Drive (next to Gold's Gym).

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/ hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton Cathedral ceiling, sky-lites, hardwood floors, 4-5 bdrms. 9/1 $1950. 413-730-6660

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

COLLEGIAN

Want to get your message out?

Advertise in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace.

Call 413-545-3500 or stop into our office in the Campus Center Basement.

Or submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Round Two with SLU

Tournament nature forces Minutemen to play waiting game

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team didn't know who it was playing until 8:30 p.m. last night. After watching the Saint Louis Billikens use a 19-4 run in the second half, the Minutemen are well aware of who they'll be playing in tonight's Atlantic 10 Tournament quarterfinal matchup.

Saint Louis gave UMass one of its toughest games of the season back in February, and it won't get any easier this evening at 6:30 p.m.

As the Minutemen sat in the stands last night at Boardwalk Hall in Atlantic City, N.J., the Billikens held off Duquesne's last-second effort to win the game, 78-77.

"[UMass] is a great team," SLU guard Kevin Lisch said after last night's win over Duquesne. "But we played them tough at their place, so that has to give you a little confidence there. I'm just excited about being able to play another day."

"I think they have some good interior players, and we were able to play them basket for basket last time," Ian Vouyoukas said. "So hopefully on a neutral court we can do that again."

The Minutemen defeated the Billikens, 53-50, on

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

Junior Gary Forbes and the Minutemen take on Saint Louis in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament tonight in Atlantic City, N.J. UMass hasn't advanced past the quarterfinals since 2002.

After success in early '90s, A-10 tourney hasn't been kind

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts basketball has been in the Atlantic 10 Tournament every year for the last 30 years. In 1977, the Minutemen (who had their school nickname changed from Redmen just four years earlier) beat Rutgers in the quarterfinals, but lost to Duquesne in the semis before winning the consolation game against West Virginia.

The Minutemen lost in the quarterfinals for the next five years dating to 1982, then won two quarterfinal games in the next two seasons before losing six straight years in either the quarterfinals or the first round.

Fifteen years after the Minutemen played in their first A-10 Tournament, they won. In 1992, on the back of 21-point efforts from Jim McCoy and Tony Barbee, UMass beat Rutgers in the first round and took care of Rhode Island and West Virginia in the next two rounds to take the first A-10 Championship in the school's history.

The Minutemen enjoyed the early-to-mid '90s as a time of UMass dominance in the conference. UMass won the A-10 over the next four years, making it five straight wins from 1992 to 1996.

Forward Lou Roe began his tenure in the postseason during the 1993 season and was named to the All-Championship team after averaging 13.3 points and 10 rebounds per game

See HISTORY on page 7

UMass has never faced Saint Louis in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. UMass defeated the Billikens 53-50 in the team's last meeting on Feb. 24 at the Mullins Center. Tune in tonight at 6:30 for the quarterfinal matchup on CN8.

Atlantic 10 Tournament Scoreboard: Day One

Yesterday's Results

#8 Dayton	81	#5 Fordham	63
#9 Charlotte	63	#12 Richmond	61
#7 St. Louis	78	#6 St. Joe's	66
#10 Duquesne	76	#11 Temple	62

Today's Games

#8 Dayton vs. #1 Xavier
#5 Fordham vs. #4 URI
#7 St. Louis vs. #2 UMass
#6 Saint Joe's vs. #3 GW

UM faces lone in-state rival

Jordan Field site of long history's 38th matchup

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Unlike many other Massachusetts athletic teams, the men's lacrosse team doesn't have many in-state rivals. While hockey plays five teams from the Bay State, besides UMass, there is just one other Division I lacrosse program.

The Minutemen (1-2) travel to Cambridge on Saturday to square off with that team, the Harvard Crimson (0-2). These natural rivals have played each other 37 times, dating back to 1970.

"It's always a close game, whether it's here or there," UMass coach Greg Cannella said from his office on Wednesday. "We used to play them a lot later in the year, in April, now we play them a lot earlier. It's always been a hard-fought game, they've always been a solid team. It's one of the only interstate rivals we have now."

After scoring two goals against Hofstra in UMass' season opener, Rory Pedrick went without a goal against Yale last Saturday. He isn't alone in his struggles, the Minutemen have yet to crack seven goals.

UMass decisively leads the all-time series, 27-10, including 17 victories out of a possible 20 games in Cambridge. The Minutemen have not lost on the road to Harvard since 1983, but this doesn't deter them from respecting the Crimson as a viable opponent.

Despite the lopsided final from last year's contest at Garber Field, 12-7, the game was tight in the fourth quarter Harvard hung with the Minutemen for much of the game before the home team pulled away. UMass scored a

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

Dartmouth offense proves too tough

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

It's back to the drawing board for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, as the reservoir of optimism and high hopes the Maroon and White had built up prior to Wednesday's game took a hit from the No.7 Dartmouth Big Green.

Dartmouth (3-0) lived up to its reputation of giving nightmares to opposing offenses, stifling UMass' resurgent offense en route to a 11-5 victory in the Minutewomen's home opener at Garber Field.

DC	11
UMass	5

The Minutewomen (3-2) look to give the UMass faithful more to cheer about in their next contest Saturday afternoon at McGuirk Stadium against the Albany Great Danes. Game time is slated for 2 p.m.

Wednesday's loss snaps UMass' three-game winning streak, which was the most wins the Maroon and White had strung together since the 2003 campaign.

Dartmouth attacker Kristen Barry led all scorers with three tallies on the day.

Junior attacker Kathleen Typadis led UMass' anemic attack Wednesday with two goals, both of which came in the second half. Typadis now has 13 scores for the year and extended her consecutive-scoring streak to 29 games.

"They put some tremendous pressure on the ball, and we were ready for that," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We were definitely prepared for everything they were going to do. We just weren't able to execute when we needed to.

"We had some opportunities early and if we were able to execute the game could have been a little closer. They're a great team and they're very well coached," Venechanos said. "They definitely executed a lot better than us in the first half and the beginning of the second half put a little bit

See W. LACROSSE on page 7

Dartmouth's defense smothered the Minutemen at Garber Field yesterday. The No. 7 Big Green dealt UMass its second loss this year.

Minutewomen head back on the road

Senior centerfielder Candice Molinari and the Minutewomen head to Florida for five games between today and Saturday afternoon.

By Joe Melost
Collegian Staff

Just when they finally readjusted to the New England winter, the members of the Massachusetts softball team got back on a plane to head south to Tampa, Fla. The Minutewomen will compete in the USF Adidas Spring Break Invitational where they could play eight games in four days.

UMass takes on Indiana (3-5) tomorrow at 4 p.m. in the first game of a double-header before squaring off with Tennessee Tech (15-8) – the first pitch is scheduled for 6 p.m.

On Day Two of the tournament, UMass (4-5-1) gets a rematch with No. 20 Georgia Tech (20-3) – the Yellow Jackets defeated the Minutewomen, 3-0, on Feb. 24. In that matchup, sophomore ace Tiffany Johnson limited the Minutewomen to two hits, holding them scoreless.

Get put together an early rally after two singles and a catcher's interference call loaded the bases for junior Savannah Brown. She promptly cleared them with a double off UMass sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter.

"We're really fortunate to see them again," UMass softball coach Elaine Sortino said. "They won the [first game]. That game came down to catcher's interference. We have not been very lucky at all in the games that we've lost. And, quite frankly, if we have to be catching breaks, I'd rather be catching breaks in May and June.

"Brandice gave up one hard hit ball in that game and it was the bases-clearing double," Sortino said. "I remember that they didn't make much noise after that inning. I thought she

See SOFTBALL on page 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 35 LO: 21 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 2007

UMASS 'SICK' OVER A-10 LOSS PAGE 10

BEN KWELLER HEADS TO NORTHAMPTON PAGE 5

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Tempers flare at ROTC rally

Approximately 30 students shouted antiwar sentiments at speakers at the Student Union yesterday to protest a student rally, held by the Republican Club, to draw attention to a recent incident in which a list of prospective military recruits was stolen from the Campus Center. See more photos of conflict on page 4.

Groups nearly come to blows outside Student Union

By Wes Rahn
Collegian Staff

An organized, on-campus rally in support of ROTC erupted in conflict yesterday as members of the audience shouted their anti-military sentiments at the three featured speakers.

The rally, which began at 12:20 p.m. on the steps of the Student Union, was organized by the University of Massachusetts Republican Club. After the event started, it took ten minutes for protestors to begin heckling the speakers.

According to Rob Shepherd, the rally was held to draw attention to a recent incident in which a list of prospective recruits was taken off a ROTC table by members of the Radical Student Union. The speakers at the rally called for the expulsion of those involved in the theft under a violation of the Student Code of Conduct.

Ed Cutting who spoke in support of the recruiters called the act of stealing the list of names, "an act of treason." One of the anti-war protestors in the crowd shouted back, "then I'm proud to be a traitor!"

According to those in attendance there were approximately fifty people gathered in the audience. Rob Shepherd, the treasurer of the Republican Club, estimated that approximately thirty of them were there in protest. He believes as well that those involved in taking the list were there.

"We were there giving our speeches and kids started coming up and screaming at us," he said.

See RALLY on page 3

Mendez, 21, said the job of SGA president, while time-consuming, has "been one of the best experiences I've ever had."

SGA, Mendez paving the way for future

President optimistic for University

By Matt Bellivfau
Collegian Staff

Students might not know it, but they have a very valuable friend in Elvis Mendez.

Mendez is the Student Government Association President at the University of Massachusetts and he spends most of his day thinking of ways to improve student life on campus.

With his university staring in the face of a financial crisis, tuition and fees continuously climbing to new heights, administrators becoming a literal watchdog over its student body and national polls showing that students have become increasingly apathetic towards politics, Mendez and his core of student senators have a tough road ahead.

Mendez, 21, admits the job hasn't been exactly what he signed up for 11 months ago.

"I expected it to be a little different," said Mendez. "I define myself more as an organizer than a politician. I didn't realize, ironically, how political everything really is."

As president, Mendez says he's struggled with the notion of being the voice of not only the 18,000 students at UMass, but the thousands of students that "should be here and are not."

"How do you do what's in the best interest of the whole, how do you represent the whole? Up until this point I could only speak for me," said Mendez.

Recently, Mendez and the SGA have brought their voice to newly elected Gov. Deval Patrick, having multiple sit-downs with one of the most influential people in university funding, and although Mendez and the SGA are hesitant to take full credit, they have been met with positive results.

In Gov. Patrick proposed state budget, UMass is set to receive a 4 percent increase of state funding, vaulting the total to $462 million.

"That in itself shows that even in a tough budget year, lobbying can be done," said Mendez.

Mendez admitted that the SGA has faced more losses than victories in the past few years, but in paving for the future it may equip the future student government with some additional power.

"I think it's an intelligent investment of our time. We're

See SGA on page 3

Gambling issues addressed

By William McGuinness
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Council on Compulsive Gambling has designated this week [Mar. 5-12] as "Problem Gambling Awareness Week." The non-profit, private health agency has decided to direct its efforts to, "teach Massachusetts media outlets more about gambling disorders."

The organization also hopes to promote the availability of problem gambling treatment services for people in the Commonwealth who are experiencing problems with their own or a loved one's gambling.

Through workshops and luncheons geared toward educating the media, the Massachusetts Council on Compulsive Gambling will teach on subjects such as teenage gambling, and speakers will share stories on the effect of the activity on their lives.

"The addiction rate for college-aged people is twice that of the adult population, so to have that presence at a university is very important," Ed Looney, executive director of the Council, told the Associated Press.

"For most people, gambling is fun and exciting, but simply a form of excitement. For others, gambling becomes an addiction," reads the Faculty Staff Assistance Program Web site.

The group is located in the ground floor of University Health Services.

Some students at the University of Massachusetts feel as though the majority of students have their gambling habits under control.

"Just as the majority of people who purchase alcohol have their drinking under control, most people who play poker are not problem gamblers," says recreational card player and UMass student Matt Sote. "Anybody who has played a significant amount of poker in a casino has seen that guy who continues to lose money he obviously can't afford, much like the booze-bag at the end of the bar whose liver obviously doesn't need that seventh Long Island [iced tea]."

However, according to the Faculty Staff Assistance Program, the problem can often exist more subtly. "Compulsive gambling has been called the 'hidden addiction' because even though gambling can be psychologically devastating, there are no obvious physical signs of addiction. Many gamblers need help in recognizing the signs of compulsive gambling. Often the spouse, friends, and employer of the compulsive gambler recognize the problems and seek help before the gambler does."

This help can be found on the University Health Services Web site, or by calling Gamblers Anonymous, a self-help group based on a twelve-step program that closely resembles Alcoholics Anonymous, at (413) 732-7854.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu

Professor blasts advertising

By Cara L. Grassmann & Eden Usher
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts communications professor Dr. Sut Jhally continued the fourth of five Distinguished Faculty lectures to be held this school year. His lecture entitled, "The Factory and the Living Room: How Television Exploits its Audience" focused on advertising, the American family, and social criticism of the media.

Throughout more than twenty years of service to UMass, Jhally has produced, written, and edited videos including Hijacking Catastrophe: 9/11, Fear and the Selling of American Empire; Peace: Propaganda and the Promised Land; U.S. News Media and the Israeli Palestinian Conflict, and Wrestling with Manhood: Boys, Bullying and Battering.

Jhally has also published books including "The Spectacle of Accumulation: Essays in Culture, Media, and Politics," and "Enlightened Racism: The Cosby Show, Audiences, and the Myth of the American Dream."

In his lecture, Jhally spoke of the influence of advertising and its effects on programming. He mentioned commercial-free HBO and Showtime as "the best American programming," but noted the increase in product placement and said, "advertisers will go where the audience goes."

Jhally also acknowledged the negative feelings of American viewers towards advertising saying, "kids are made on the basis that we do not want to watch them."

According to Jhally, the advent of television and other notable technological advances including the remote control, VCR, and TiVo, have threat-

Communications professor Dr. Sut Jhally lectured in the fourth of five Distinguished Faculty lectures yesterday.

See JHALLY on page 3

WATCH LIVE GAMES FROM THE 2007 NCAA® DIVISION I MEN'S BASKETBALL CHAMPIONSHIP ONLINE FOR FREE!

NCAA MARCH MADNESS ON DEMAND powered by CBS SportsLine.com

VIP

SIGN UP EARLY FOR VIP ACCESS: ncaasports.com/mmod

The only way to get better coverage would be to have CLARK KELLOGG broadcasting from your desk. And even he can't cover all 56 games* from the first three rounds.

Presented online by COURTYARD Marriott DELL

ncaasports.com/mmod

NCAAsports.com CBS SportsLine.com CSTV PROUD PROMOTIONAL PARTNER

*Local blackout rules will limit availability to 37 games for most people. This product will not include the Opening Round game on March 13, 2007.

NCAA March Madness on Demand is only available to registered users of CBS Interactive network web site thirteen (13) years of age or older. No cost to register for any of the CBS Interactive network sites. Availablity of NCAA March Madness on Demand is subject to local television blackouts and capacity restrictions. Minimum system requirements to view. Certain terms and restrictions apply. © Copyright 2007 NCAA. All rights reserved worldwide. The NCAA and March Madness are licensed by or trademarks of the National Collegiate Athletic Association. All other licenses or trademarks are property of their respective holders. Copyright © 2007 CBS SportsLine.com, Inc. All rights reserved. CBS SportsLine is a registered servicemark of SportsLine.com, Inc. CBS "eye device" is a registered trademark of CBS Broadcasting, Inc. All other licenses or trademarks are property of their respective holders

Student club disputes theft of ROTC list

RALLY from page 1

"They were shouting various anti-war rhetoric such as 'Get the ROTC off campus' and 'Osama wasn't in Iraq.'"

According to Shepherd, the Republican Club has a policy to ignore verbal assault and other aggressions, both things they run into quite often.

"Generally speaking, this kind of stuff happens all the time," said Shepherd, "we don't want to start a fight; we just want to get our voice out there."

He cited another event organized by the Republican Club when a speaker was invited from the University of North Carolina to talk about free speech. Shepherd claims members of the Radical Student Union also interrupted that speaker with chants of protest.

"Pretty much any event we have, we have to worry about people who come to protest," he said. "They get hostile or angry, call us bigots and other things that are just aren't accurate."

Shepherd says that people can protest anyway they want, but taking the list of names went beyond the line, and shouldn't be tolerated. "Regardless of their views of the war or the Bush policy the ROTC is separate from that," he said. "The University needs the ROTC to exist and they have a right to try and get people to join and these hoodlums violated the student code by taking that list."

The Republican Club supports the ROTC on grounds claiming that when the University was founded under the Morrill Land Grant, the ROTC was a requirement for the University to exist.

Members of the Radical Student Union failed to return phone calls and e-mails by press time.

Refrigerator tosses beer cans

By Estes Thompson
Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — When John Cornwell graduated from Duke University last year, he landed a job as software engineer in Atlanta but soon found himself longing for his college lifestyle. So the engineering graduate built himself a reminder of life on campus: a refrigerator that can toss a can of beer to his couch with the click of a remote control.

"I conceived it right after I got out," said Cornwell, a May 2006 graduate from Huntington, N.Y. "I missed the college scene. It embodies the college spirit that I didn't want to let go of."

It took the 22-year-old Cornwell about 150 hours and $400 in parts to modify a mini-fridge common to many college dorm rooms into the beer-tossing contraption, which can launch 10 cans of beer from its magazine before needing a reload.

With a click of the remote, fashioned from a car's keyless entry device, a small elevator inside the refrigerator lifts a beer can through a hole and loads it into the fridge's catapult arm. A second click fires the device, tossing the beer up to 20 feet. "Far enough to get to the couch," he said.

Is there a foam explosion when the can is opened? Not if the recipient uses "soft hands" to cradle the can when caught, Cornwell said.

In developing his beer catapult, Cornwell said he dented a few walls and came close to accidentally throwing a can through his television. He's since fine-tuned the machine to land a beer where he usually sits at home, on what he called "a right-angle couch system."

For now, the machine throws only cans, although Cornwell has thought about making a version that can throw a bottle. The most beer he has run through the machine was at a party, when he launched a couple of 24-can cases.

"I did launch a lot watching the Super Bowl," he said. "My friends are the reason I built it. I told them about the idea and hyped it so much and I had to go through with it."

A video featuring the device is a hit on the Internet, where more than 600,000 people have watched it at metacafe.com, earning Cornwell more than $3,000 from the Web site.

Cornwell said he has talked to a brewing company about the machine, but right now only one exists. Asked if he might start building some for sale, he said "I'm keeping that option open, depending on interest."

When Cornwell was a student at Duke — an elite, private university in Durham — he participated in the engineering school's robotic basketball contests, said mechanical engineering Professor Bob Kielb. He said students tried to build a robot that could retrieve a pingpong ball and toss it into a small hoop.

"He always did well in it," Kielb said. "He came up with completely unique ideas."

Jhally addresses media effects in faculty series lecture

UMass professor Dr. Sut Jhally, author and producer of several books and videos, was presented the Chancellor's Medal at last night's Distinguished Faculty Series lecture.

JHALLY from page 1

ened advertisers, giving them further motivation to penetrate the American living room.

"American families are much more fragmented than before," said Jhally. He noted that children and parents do not play together as much as they used to and said, "television has become a babysitter."

According to Jhally, the media has infiltrated the American home and are focusing on the child market.

"If kids did not watch commercial television then we would have nothing to sell," said Jhally. "[Kids have become] lobbyists for products against their parents. This is a system [of media] built upon child abuse. Also a system that is deeply apathetic to family life."

Jhally's analysis of advertising continued with his critique of today's media system."The child abuse is systematic and built into the system itself."

According to Jhally, although a lot of advertising had been geared towards children, no one is excluded from media influence. "Watching is an active process, no one is innocent," he said.

Jhally concluded his lecture saying there is a need for societal change when it comes to the media. "We have given over television to people who should not have it. We have lost democratic control of it. We should take it back."

As a U-Mass professor, Jhally noted the importance of enlightening students to the influence of the media saying, "We [teachers] have to get them [students] to see the world as clear as it can be seen."

Shortly after the lecture Chancellor John V. Lombardi presented Jhally with the Chancellor's Medal, the highest honor one can receive for exemplary and extraordinary service to U-Mass.

The next and final lecture in the Distinguished Faculty Series will feature psychology professor Melinda A. Novak on Apr. 23 at 4:00 p.m. in the Massachusetts room of the Mullins Center.

Cara L. Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu. Eden Unver can be reached at cunver@student.umass.edu.

'Jackass' burns genitals in fire stunt

EAU CLAIRE, Wis. — Attempts to do a movie stunt landed one man in the hospital with burned genitals and another facing criminal charges. The men were trying to do a stunt from one of the "Jackass" movies, in which a character lights his genitals on fire.

Jared W. Anderson, 20, suffered serious burns to his hands and genitals, according to the criminal complaint. Randell D. Peterson, 43, who sprayed lighter fluid on Anderson and lit him on fire, was charged with felony battery and first-degree reckless endangerment Tuesday in Eau Claire County Court.

Witnesses told police that Anderson, who was drunk, volunteered to do the stunt Sunday after watching the movie, the complaint said.

According to the complaint:

Anderson pulled down his pants and let Peterson spray him with lighter fluid. When the fire didn't catch, Peterson sprayed more lighter fluid on Anderson, splashing some on his clothing. He tried again to light the fire, catching Anderson's genitals, hands and clothes.

Anderson ran into the bathroom, jumped into the tub and put the flames out. Other guests took him to Luther Hospital, and eventually he was treated at the Regions Hospital Burn Unit in St. Paul, Minn., for second-degree burns.

Anderson told police who were called to the hospital that he didn't want anyone to get in trouble because of the stunt.

Peterson was freed on a $2,000 signature bond. He has a hearing scheduled April 16. If convicted, he faces up to 10 years in prison.

Associated Press

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 93

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamieson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Seagrin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Delland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pratt
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Paddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dobaritto
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonpakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEARS BY THE COLLEGIAN, INCORPORATED, A NONPROFIT, STUDENT-OPERATED, CO-ADVERTISING, WEEKLY. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE; BY AMC THE COLLEGE SCRAWL IN 1901; THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914; AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET ONLY SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING, RATES, AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Styles by Deborah & Co.
HAIR SALON & SPA
65 University Drive, Amherst ~ 549-5610
Paul Mitchell Signature Salon

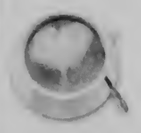
Spring Break Specials
$5 OFF Spa Pedicures
$10 OFF Leg & Bikini Wax (combo)
$5 OFF Haircuts

Also specializing in chemical relaxing, pressing, and styling ethnic hair.

Coupons may not be combined
Offers expire 3/30/07

UMass Theatre Guild

SPRING COFFEE HOUSE
THREE RING CIRCUS



Sunday, March 11th
7-11 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Enjoy the performances of talented Five College students and eat some delectable goodies!

FREE!

WALK ON WATER

Saturday, March 10, 7:30 p.m.
School of Management 137
UMass Amherst

The most popular Israeli film ever shown in the U.S., this thriller about a Mossad agent assigned to track down an aging Nazi war criminal challenges our beliefs about sexuality, vengeance, and the morality of killing.

An unusual double feature about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict offers inspiration and humor

Encounter Point tells the story of Palestinians and Israelis who risk everything—their social standing, their relationship to their families, and even their lives—to promote a nonviolent end to the conflict. (2006, 85 minutes, English, Hebrew, and Arabic with subtitles)

West Bank Story is a musical comedy about dueling falafel stands in the West Bank—a hilarious parody of Romeo and Juliet and West Side Story which makes a serious statement about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. (21 minutes, English)

2006 Academy Award Best Live Action Short Film

Sunday, March 11, 7:00 p.m.
School of Management 137
UMass Amherst
Free and open to the public

More information at www.umass.edu/jewish or 413.545.9642

UMASS AMHERST

Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival, and cosponsored by the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life, and Brit Tzedek v'Shalom, the Jewish Alliance for Justice and Peace

Mendez, SGA leading the way

MENDEZ from page 1

able to see that a lot of [illegible] tuition and financial aid problems have root causes that we can't necessarily address right now, but in two to three years we can put ourselves in a position where we can fight back and win some victories."

While Mendez appreciates some of the success the SGA has recently met, he understands that the majority of today's students may be weary of a government that is focused on building for the future.

"I think those people should realize that that the change we can effect today is not only in our own interest but in the future students of the University," said Mendez. "I think the SGA lacked that maturity and leadership the last couple of years when we've tried to save the world in a year. It takes a long time to effect change in this type of campus, so while we might not see the benefits from these new projects immediately it will be felt in the years to come."

While previous regimes have struggled to connect with UMass Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Mike Gargano, Mendez says the SGA's meetings with him have been surprisingly productive.

"I think we've been more successful in maintaining a healthy relationship with administrators than past years. At the very least we've been civil whether we agree or disagree on something," said Mendez. "It's a good solid step, but it's only a step. In many ways, though we're at the table, our ability to speak and advocate is still very much limited."

Mendez, the self-proclaimed 'organizer,' says a large part of the SGA mission has focused on mobilizing the UMass student body, something that has been a difficult task in recent years.

"I think there's not a level of activism that existed 20 years ago because of the ways we're sort of pacified, not only the paternalistic relationship students share with the administration, but also by the disconnect many students feel towards specific issues."

"It's difficult for students to see what they're fighting for. They ask, 'Why would I go to a Board of Trustees meeting to argue about affirmative action or LGBT issues if I'm not a part of that community?' What they fail to realize sometimes is that you live with people that are a part of those groups, and in a larger sense, you are a part of that community. And that group's survival is really tied to your own ability to thrive on campus," said Mendez.

Hauling a full 13-credit course load, Mendez says the job does take its toll on himself and the senators around him, but it's a price there are all willing to make.

"It's a 24-hour-a-day job. There's always something, an e-mail, a board meeting. It's very time consuming, but it's also enjoyable. It's been one of the best experiences I've ever had," said Mendez.

Mendez has said he will not run for re-election, a decision that has drawn criticism from some of his colleagues.

"I'm not going to abandon the work; I'm going to be connected in some way. I think it's always important to allow some new leadership to develop," said Mendez.

Despite the problems facing the University today, Mendez remains optimistic that the SGA is moving towards the right direction.

"I know it might seem trivial to people on the outside, but we've made huge strides in fighting for improving public education," said Mendez. "This is just the beginning."

Exclusive photos of rally conflict

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

All up in a hoohah

Caroline Moss

"We were worried about vaginas," began Eve Ensler's "The Vagina Monologues." Now, in light of recent events at my former New York public high school, I am worried as well.

At an open-mic night benefiting John Jay High School's literary magazine, three female students chose to perform "My Short Skirt," a liberating poem detailing the idea that no matter how short a woman's skirt may be, it doesn't make her eligible for verbal or sexual assault. The poem, tasteful and respectful, included a stanza with the word "vagina" in it: "I declare these streets, any streets, my vagina's country." The junior girls were warned by the administration not to say "vagina" during their performance, reasoning that "such sexual content" was inappropriate for the audience. Megan Reback, Elan Stahl and Hannah Levinson felt that it was not their place to omit and change a piece of literature that did not belong to them, and ignored the request by saying "vagina" anyway. In turn, they were each suspended for one day.

Though they were suspended for insubordination, the students feel that they should never have been asked to omit the word in the first place. The Katonah-Lewisboro community agrees with the girls.

As do I.

I just don't understand where this administration, who I personally know, can find a ground to argue. The word "vagina" is a word that we're taught in health classes and biology classes. It's a scientific term for a part of the female body. I remember having to label one on a science test in fifth grade. I've known about vaginas long before I attended high school. I'm also going to assume that there probably were not any audience members that, as sixteen years old, went home to mom and dad that night asking what a vagina was and where babies come from.

By Tuesday night, the ordeal made it into national news programming, with over 160 newspapers around the world publishing the story.

Reback, Stahl, and Levinson said "vagina," not "peepee" or "hoohah" or "pussy." And they defied an administration that associated that word, in its correct terminology and respectful context, with shame, fear, and silence, the same three barriers that Eve Ensler gets a little farther over every time a production of "The Vagina Monologues" is performed.

"There are three billion people in this world who have vaginas," Stahl explained to me. "And a lot of them are shunned because of it," Levinson added.

Reback went on to talk about how her one-day suspension was a mere price to pay in order to momentarily liberate the word from the awkward connotations that are tied to it.

All three agreed that the word "vagina" is not a dirty one, and they are ready to see a change, backed by their peers and parents alike. With a Facebook group started by John Jay senior, Sophie Lembeck, over 350 students voiced their opinions and ideas on how to respectfully protest the administration's decision. And it wasn't just support from the raging feminists of the school either. The Facebook group harbored everyone from male senior athletes to freshman in the school play.

By Tuesday night, the ordeal made it into national news programming, with over 160 newspapers around the world publishing the story. Eve Ensler, after hearing the news, responded promptly, giving the students her full support by offering to give a talk at the high school to give students an open forum to discuss the matter further.

"I'm shocked. They have the good sense to know that when an authority figure told them they had to edit a work of literature, that's not what you do with literature in America," Ensler told CBS news.

I'm both ashamed that I am a product of this administration's educational system, and proud to be a part of a community that doesn't take no for an answer. Everyone seems to recognize that the words that are deemed most uncomfortable to discuss are the one's that need the most discussing. Now, with thanks to the school's request to omit the word "vagina" from a poem, they are hearing the word more than ever. Maybe my small NYC suburban hometown and these three girls will give people a new perspective on the terms society deems as taboo.

I applaud Reback, Stahl, and Levinson for what they did last Friday night. Standing up on stage and performing in front of a crowd takes balls. But standing up for what you believe in, using good common sense and integrity instead of being brainwashed by adults who should know better? That takes vaginas.

Caroline Moss can be reached at camoss@student.umass.edu

Be proud of your service

Jon Zagami

In the wake of recent anti-war protests on campus it's easy to get the feeling that soldiers are pawns in a blind and destructive game of torture and murder. This couldn't be further from the truth.

The University of Massachusetts is home to many veterans and service members that have been involved in serving this nation in various ways. I believe that I should explain some of the positive roles that my fellow servicemen have carried out this year.

Soldiers, some that you may even share a classroom with, have airlifted food to stranded cattle in the Midwest earlier this year during their deep freeze. Some soldiers have traveled to the Gulf Coast to assist fellow Americans after hurricane Katrina ravaged the region. Others guarded our airports, and countless soldiers have plowed and shoveled snow when the governor declared a state of emergency.

It may be easy to overlook any humanitarian missions that the military performs when exposed to anti-war campaigns in the Campus Center, and by the immature actions of those that would deface a Veteran's memorial. Earlier this year the Republican club funded and took their time alongside student veterans to honor student soldiers, alumni, and employees. It should be evident to anyone in an academic institution that when a group is collecting funds for disabled American veterans they are performing a good deed. The person responsible for defacing this display exercised stupidity and immaturity.

In speaking with Justin Jackson, a graduate student, on the forefront for the Anti-War coalition, I've realized that some members of radical groups agree that UMass students need to support the troops and he affirms the idea that his group is not against those who serve. My message then would be to the other students that wish to block recruiter's tables and vigils that honor the service of great Americans and fellow students. Have your protests, your displays and your outcries, but remember that it is the troops that allow you to do so. Therefore, when you get the chance, please do not disgrace them, do not cause pain to those who have served or to their family members by defacing veterans memorials, disturbing ceremonies that are meant to give thanks to those people and please remain respectful.

Have your protests, your displays and your outcries, but remember that it is the troops that allow you to do so.

This University embraces students from all ethnic, religious, and sexual backgrounds. At what point are we going to stop targeting the military for conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan? The members of the military on campus should not be forced to hide their service. They should be proud and able to teach the students, staff, and faculty about what they have learned in their experiences about foreign cultures, lands, beliefs and lifestyles.

If you don't like that your family members, friends, and neighbors are being sent to far ends of the earth to be on the receiving end of hostile fire then please write to your policy makers. These are the people that make these decisions. Blocking a recruiting table in the Campus Center may raise awareness of your group in the Pioneer Valley but you are not contributing to the well being of the troops or bringing us closer to the conclusion of this war. People join the military of their own accord and they have the right to do this regardless of your political beliefs. The recruiter on campus does not coerce or force anyone into joining the military; those who choose to serve have already made up their minds. Please be respectful of their decisions as they do not interfere with yours.

The military includes some of the finest members of society and offer many the chances to attend higher learning institutes, see the world and to learn on their own. In a national review blog a Georgia State University professor stated, "Returning soldiers have been among my best students: responsible, respectful, diligent and engaged. They bring their worldliness to the classroom, enriching the educational experience for the other students."

It's time that we thank our returning veterans, embrace their knowledge and allow them to bring their worldliness here to UMass.

Jon Zagami is a UMass student and vice president of the Veterans and Service Members Association. He can be reached at UmassVama@yahoo.com

MILLIONS OF HONEYBEES HAVE DISAPPEARED! GONE! THAT MEANS NO HONEY! NO POLLINATION! NO FLOWERS! NO CROPS! AND NOBODY KNOWS WHY!
*@#$% BUSH!

Devotion to deportation?

Lauren Modisette

As if immigration wasn't causing enough of a stir, we have another issue to throw into the mix. The government is attempting to regulate the masses of illegal immigrants crossing the Mexican border. How are they doing this? By arresting them.

Now this seems plausible enough. The issue here, however, is jail space. With all of the illegal immigrants that are being caught and brought in, there isn't enough room left for those facing serious crimes. In an attempt to keep space available the government has now resorted to a catch and release system. All illegal immigrants who are convicted are sent off with a court order rather than having to stay in jail.

The government wants to change this. Plans have been made to build appropriate facilities to hold the masses of illegal immigrants that are being hunted. At the moment even children are held in these jails.

It is relatively understandable that the government would like to keep tabs on who comes in and out of the country. But is it really necessary to be taking custody of children and keeping them in jails?

Is it really necessary to be taking custody of children and keeping them in jails?

It was also noted that in the jails, immigrants don't even get simple privileges such as access to dining utensils. A National Public Radio reporter observed as women and children scooped food into their mouths with their fingers.

However at the same time, George W. Bush is promising illegal immigrants' citizenship if they come forward. It's about time the government made up their minds about immigrants.

The conditions of receiving citizenship would be to pay fines, backed taxes, and learn English. Bush was quoted saying "[that the proposals seemed like] a reasonable way to treat people with respect."

Does Bush want to imprison them or allow them to stay? The mixed signals are confusing and with all of the articles out there it's hard to tell. Is Bush trying to coax immigrants out of hiding so he can arrest them and place them in these holding facilities they're planning to build? Or does he really want to make them citizens?

Last year, March 10, 2006, there was a protest in Chicago, Ill. among all of the Hispanic workers because Bush was telling them to "go home or go to jail." Employers actually sent their workers to protest to show the country how much they are needed in our economy. Has Bush really changed his mind? If so, then what is up with the holding facilities? When will the country realize that immigrants are essential to our economy?

Why are Americans so afraid of illegal immigrants anyway? It seems that there is a fear of them taking over the job market, pulling it right out from underneath our feet, when in reality they can help our economy to such a great extent that trying to deport them and arrest them will just do more harm than good.

First of all, where is the money going to come from to build these facilities that hold the arrested immigrants? The government will use our tax money to build these facilities when there are so many other issues that can be addressed.

Let's start somewhere simple. Right now the number of employed Americans is higher than the number of retired. Unfortunately, as the baby boomers begin to make it into their 60's this ratio is going to shift. So what does this mean? Higher payroll taxes. This is because there won't be enough people in the work force to accommodate for all of the retirees. Job creation is a big step to solving this problem.

The government can create jobs that would be devoted to fixing ecological crisis. With these new jobs there will be a need for more people. This is where immigration comes in.

People are so afraid of them taking our jobs when we are going to need immigrants to fill them. It wouldn't surprise me if the government began encouraging immigration to prevent a bankruptcy in the Social Security fund.

Either way, the issue on immigration seems like it's never going to end. Looking at the big picture, the United States is simply land. The invisible lines we draw in and around it are relatively selfish. Shouldn't everyone have the opportunity to live a reasonably happy life? If that means that some people need to come to America, why should we stop them? After all, it will greatly benefit us in the future.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu

Cannabis questions

Kevin Pascucci

Nowadays, there are very few people that can say that they've never been offered drugs at some point in their lifetime. There are even fewer people that can say that they turned down the offer. Like many issues in this country, the issue of marijuana use is a polarizing one, with people making different arguments both for and against it. Yet in order for us to begin to resolve this issue, changes need to be made to current U.S. drug laws. Marijuana certainly should not be decriminalized completely, but our current drug laws could be trimmed down.

The major debate over marijuana has centered on the laws and penalties concerning the use and distribution of the drug. In Massachusetts, the law dictates that anyone found in possession of marijuana will face up to a $500 fine and six months in jail. Although the drug laws vary from state to state, nowhere in the U.S. does drug use go unpunished.

In reaction to this, there are a number of "Cannabis Reform" groups that seek to influence a change in drug laws, preferably moving towards the decriminalization of marijuana completely. These groups have taken their movement to the federal level, and have proven that they mean business.

Now, I am well aware that not all drug users are serious abusers. Some people are able to use marijuana every once in a while, and then go on with their lives. In my personal experience though, I see it as more of a control issue than most people would admit.

I unfortunately have watched more than one friend allow drugs to destroy their lives. In all of these cases, my friends' drug addiction started with marijuana, but continued to progress onto harder drugs. Marijuana has often been called a "gateway drug," although it has not been scientifically proven to lead to addiction to harder drugs. More often than not however, a certain high just isn't enough after awhile, and often leaves drug users looking for a better one.

There is another problem facing this country that is closely tied to the drug debate. Although this country has a large number of prison facilities, we are still faced with the issue of inmate overflow. There is also the fact that we spend billions of dollars each year to prosecute marijuana offenders. If there were not so many people being incarcerated for drug possession, the issues of prison overflow and federal spending would be greatly decreased. Our tax dollars could also be put toward much better things than building new prisons and putting away minor offenders.

We spend billions of dollars each year to prosecute marijuana offenders.

The U.S. boasts some of the strictest drug laws in the world, with many other countries taking a much more lenient approach to the war on drugs. In fact, it's well known that marijuana is legal in places such as Amsterdam. What's also interesting to note is that many other countries don't seem to report as big a number of drug users as the United States does each year.

Although a direct correlation has not been drawn between decreased drug use and more lenient laws, a convincing argument could be made.

Marijuana has also been found in past years to be is an ideal therapeutic drug for cancer and AIDS patients, giving it a medical quality. It is said to make common cancer treatments more bearable, as well as decrease the occurrences of clinical depression in patients. I think that this use of marijuana is not a bad thing, and in fact could potentially lead us towards creating better treatments for serious illnesses such as cancer and AIDS.

Cannabis advocates argue that drug use isn't wrong unless it reaches a point of abuse, and therefore it is made out to be a much bigger issue than it actually is. I have a niece who was telling me of her peers' drug use when she was 11-years-old. I don't know about you, but I see this as a major problem.

Ultimately, I think that we should move towards lowering the frequency of drug use, while also focusing on reforming our drug laws to minimize drug penalties. Perhaps by taking a few cues from other countries around the world, we might come closer to making this a reality.

These views concerning marijuana most likely stem from my personal experiences with my friends. Nonetheless, I can't see the sense in decriminalizing it merely because there are millions of people that want to be able to get high whenever they choose. While I talked to one of my friends as he was going through a drug rehabilitation program, I asked him what he would say to other people who are still using drugs. His response was this: "It's not worth it." Trust me, he would know.

Kevin Pascucci can be reached at kpascucc@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PUT THE "U" IN COMMUNITY

I was very pleased to see an article about Horizons for Homeless Children in your Mar. 7 paper. I have been volunteering as a Playspace Activity Leader for this organization since October 2006 and it has been a wonderful experience.

Every week for two hours, I get to play, read, draw, and be silly with amazing children who don't always get enough time to do any of these things. I encourage every member of the UMass community to consider volunteering their time to these kids, as well. There are shelters all over the area, including Amherst and Northampton, in need of volunteers.

All it takes is the desire to make a difference in children's lives, two hours a week to spend at a shelter, and six hours of training sessions. A love of play-dough doesn't hurt, either.

Molly Fenn
Active Volunteer

OTHER PEOPLE'S SHOES

I would like to thank Mr. Duffy for his interesting and well-articulated opinion on abortion. Unfortunately, his opinion and, more importantly, his "facts" are the result of years of misguided sexist education.

Mr. Duffy pointed out that for thousands of years doctors have taken oaths not to perform abortions; he failed to point out that for thousands of years, women have taken this matter into their own hands, and carried this burden themselves.

Before the Crusades and the Inquisition took any woman with medical knowledge and burned her at the stake, women did this openly; since then, we have been reduced to the horrors of back-alley abortions, desperately fighting for a choice that has been ours since the dawn of time. As a Jewish woman I find the comparison between the Holocaust and abortion an offensive one, particularly from a white male who cannot comprehend the intersection of oppression experienced by Jewish women.

I ask Mr. Duffy to pose this question to himself, given his future goals and dreams, what would he do if he got pregnant tomorrow? Not his girlfriend, him. What would he do? What would his parents say? How would that change his life? If he cannot begin to answer those questions, he has no right to judge those who need to, nor how they choose to do so.

Kaitlyn Soligan
UMass Studen

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Music to thrill Pearl St.

Two big bands bring unique sound to town

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ben Kweller and Gomez are coming to Pearl Street this Sunday for a concert that should go down as one of this year's best tours.

Ben Kweller may be just 25 years old, but he is one of the busiest musicians working today. Kweller started the band Radish when he was in high school with his friend John Kent. Radish went onto release three albums before Kweller had even turned 19.

After touring the world many times over Radish broke up, leaving Kweller stranded, but like many musicians before him Kweller packed up his things and headed to New York to start a solo career.

After arriving in New York Kweller's career took off again, but this time a singer-songwriter, which didn't bother him at all. Kweller's witty and illustrating lyrics caught the attention of Evan Duando from the band Lemonheads.

History aside, Kweller is now back playing with a full band again (since 2002) and stirring things up in the rock 'n' roll scene. Kweller and his band could be called sloppy, but rock 'n' roll is supposed to be done sloppily.

His lyrics and melody hit you right in the face as he swoons into the microphone. Some compare Kweller and his band to Weezer, but this comparison falls short because Kweller is willing to actually talk to his fans out in the audience. Kweller is hardly a shy front man.

BEN KWELLER AND GOMEZ

PEARL STREET BALLROOM

SUNDAY, 8:30 P.M.
ADVANCE $20
DOOR $23

In 2006, Kweller was invited to perform on the public television concert series Austin City Limits. The performance started off fine, but as it continued Kweller suddenly got a severe bloody nose. Kweller ignored it and continued performing covering his guitar and microphone with blood.

Instead of going off stage to get something to stop his bloody nose, Kweller asked the crowd for a tampon. After being pelted by a dozen tampons, Kweller proceeded to pick one up and stick it up his nose to stop the bleeding. The tampon worked for a little while, but shortly after beginning to play on the piano the bleeding got worse and Kweller was forced to leave stage.

Kweller's tour mates, the English rockers Gomez are much calmer. That may at first glance cause the tour to appear to be an odd match, but it's not. It's more like a complementary peanut butter and jelly match up. Kweller

See KWELLER on page 7

Ben Kweller began his musical career in high school with the band Radish. He is currently the lead singer of his own band, which will be performing at Pearl Street Ballroom Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

Invisible Children tells tale of Sudan

Soldiers are recruiting children as young as five to fight in the ongoing war in Sudan between the Northern and Southern factions.

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Invisible Children campaign came to Amherst Wednesday night to showcase their documentary about the ongoing civil war in Sudan.

The documentary tells the story of three friends, Jason Russell, Bobby Bailey, and Laren Poole, who traveled to Sudan to create a documentary about the ongoing civil war being fought between Northern and Southern Sudan. The war has been going on for 20 years and is the longest ongoing war on the African continent.

Russell, Bailey, and Poole focused their documentary on the lives of Northern Uganda children being chased from their homes by the rebel armies to either join their army or die.

"After England left Uganda in the 1960s the tribes in the south were left in charge of the country, leaving the north out of power," said Brent Lutz, a campaigner for Invisible Children.

Lutz, Alana Duyao, Heather Larabee, and Chris Zwakenberg are traveling the New England portion of the country to raise awareness for the Invisible Children organization.

"With the north feeling powerless, they began to feel jealousy towards the south. Alice Auma started a spiritual movement to overtake the government in the south and place its power in the north," Lutz continued.

Auma claimed that a soldier from the north covered in holy oils could not die because he was a solider of God. When the soldier did die, she blamed the solider for not correctly following her orders.

Following the death of many soldiers Auma was exiled to Kenya. In her footsteps Joseph Kony started the Lords Resistance Army. "Joseph claimed to be a relative of Auma's to keep the movement going after she was exiled," Lutz said.

Kony led the LRA to abduct

See CHILDREN on page 7

Ask the Attorney

Answers to a renting inquiry

BY LISA KENT
SLSO STAFF ATTORNEY

Q. I'm getting ready to move off campus with a bunch of friends and rent an apartment for the first time. I've heard some real horror stories, though, about students and their landlords. Is there some place I can go to get help?

A: Congratulations on your good judgment! With a little preparation and knowledge, you'll make your first rental experience a successful one.

That's the good news. The bad news, those horror stories you've heard? They're all too common, and all too true.

With off-campus housing in relatively short supply in the Amherst area, landlords have their pick of tenants and may not always be as scrupulous as the law requires. But Massachusetts has strong laws favoring tenants' rights. If you know your rights, and follow some easy steps, you won't be easily fooled or get into a bad situation.

KNOW WHAT YOU'RE GETTING INTO. Believe it or not, many students don't even know the length of their tenancy or the type of tenancy before they start renting. You have to know the type of tenancy you don't sign, it may be easier for you "to get out of the lease," but you will have fewer rights. Many landlords require a co-signer, especially if you're a first-time renter, or live out of state.

WATCH OUT FOR ILLEGAL LEASE LANGUAGE. Believe it or not, at the SLSO we still see illegal lease clauses. Examples include landlords exempting themselves from responsibility for safety measures or following court eviction proceedings. Get your lease checked with us.

ADVANCE PAYMENTS. Landlords can only charge you first month's rent, last month's rent, a security deposit (not to exceed one month's rent), and a key change charge – and nothing else. Beware of landlords charging "apartment prep" fees and the like.

IF YOU GIVE A SECURITY DEPOSIT, GET A RECEIPT AND A "STATEMENT OF CONDITIONS." The security deposit is your money, even though the landlord holds it for the lease term. Make sure you get a receipt for it. Additionally, Massachusetts law requires the landlord to give you a "statement of condition" – a description of the apartment's condition. At the bottom of the statement, there's a space for you to disagree with or add to the description. Don't miss the opportunity to do so – it can save you a big headache if there's a later dispute.

DOCUMENT APARTMENT CONDITIONS BEFORE YOU MOVE IN AND JUST BEFORE YOU MOVE OUT. Many students complain about losing security deposits for damage they say they never caused. Be proactive and take photographs before you move in. Those pictures will come in handy if you ever have a dispute. Better still, take photographs after you've swept up the apartment, to help prove you've been the model tenant.

Students interested in learning about their legal rights and responsibilities as a tenant are encourage to attend a crash course in renting, entitled "Renting 101: How to Rent Your First Apartment" on Wednesday, March 28 from 7 - 8 p.m. at Gorman Hall and Wednesday, April 4 from 6:30 - 7:30 p.m. at Cance Hall.

If you would like more information regarding this event, or would like to make an appointment with attorney to review your lease, please come to the SLSO at 922 Campus Center, or call us at 545-1995. Good luck and happy renting!

The information contained in this article refers to Massachusetts law and does not constitute legal advice. If you need legal advice, seek out an attorney who can give you advice based upon your circumstances and applicable law. Fee paying UMass Amherst students with questions may call the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 to arrange and appointment, or come to 922 Campus Center to pick up more information.

The Book Nook

Revisiting a terrorism novel after author's recent death

BY GENEVIEVE CRANE
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

"Kindergarten," initially written in 1979, has regained some popularity since author Peter Rushforth's recent demise in 2005. Although the death of any once-popular author can easily rekindle the interest of old works, "Kindergarten" may have a stronger hold because it reflects the paranoia that the United States has undergone since September 11, 2001.

Terrorism, it seems, is something that both fascinates and horrifies us. Arguably, a new genre of literature and television has come to light to address our modern fears. (Surely, we can see examples of this in the film United 93, or television show "24.") With this new classification of terrorist literature in mind, "Kindergarten" is a novel that could gain popularity solely out of its timeless content of dealing with fear and innocence in the face of brutality.

But "Kindergarten" is more than that. It is largely a story of recovery. A grandmother, named Lilli, and her three grandchildren separately grieve over the loss of the children's mother who was the victim of a fictionalized terrorist attack.

As the story develops and elusive hints are dropped about Lilli's troubled past, we discover the old woman's family was murdered in the Holocaust and that

See BOOK on page 7

Faculty adds Middle-Eastern vibe to classical music

UMass Viola Professor Kathryn Lockwood, a classically trained musician, is a member of the internationally-acclaimed Lark String Quartet. This Sunday, however, she will be performing with Yousif Sheronick, a professional percussionist. They are calling themselves the Lockwood/Sheronick Project. Their program covers an international musical landscape representing music from Australia to Italy, New York to Lebanon. Their performance will be Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the public.

Kweller, Gomez play Sunday

KWELLER from page 6

being the chunky cool peanut butter and Gomez being the rocking jiggling grape jelly, or rather jam since they are from England.

Unlike their fellow English rockers Coldplay, Gomez has no front man. The band splits singing duties between their three guitarists, Ian Ball, Ben Ottewell and Tom Gray. Ball additionally splits his playing time with the guitar and the keyboards.

Depending on the song, Gomez varies degrees of loudness. But, noise isn't important for the band. What is important is the quality of the song as a whole. Their lyrics are the most important aspect of their music. In interviews they have credited Woody Gutherie and Nirvana as being two of their largest influences. Their overall sound however, is more like a mellower version of The Clash.

Gomez may not have any crazy stage antics or as much wit as Kweller, but their music speaks for itself.

Following the conclusion of this tour Gomez is heading to Australia so don't miss out on a chance to see them before it is too late. They are setting up a summer U.S. tour, but chances are they won't come back to the area until they release another album.

The concert starts at 8:30 p.m. at the Pearl Street Ballroom. Tickets cost $20 in advance and $23 at the door. Be careful because after Kweller's performance last year at the battle of the bands, the show could and should sell out.

Tim McCall can be reached at tim.mccall@gmail.com.

Documentary highlights use of Ugandan kids as soldiers the children of Uganda and either kill them or brainwash them into joining the army.

CHILDREN from page 6

"The prime age [frame] for the LRA to abduct was 5-12, Kony insisted they were easiest to brainwash, and small enough to carry a gun into a school," Lutz said.

The documentary followed children from Northern Uganda and their escape from the LRA. To avoid the rebels the children of Uganda walked long distances to the city's bus parks and hospitals to hide. At these locations the children did not have beds or a change of clothes. Most of the children slept on the floor with a very thin sheet.

"If the children did not escape the rebels they were brought to the Ugandan brush. There they were brainwashed. Some soldiers raped the young girls," Lutz said.

A segment of the documentary highlighted the life of a young woman who was raped by a soldier in the brush. After she was raped she escaped, and had the soldier's child.

In the three years since the making of the documentary, life in Uganda has started to become more peaceful. Donations to the Invisible Children organization are helping schools be rebuilt and creating jobs for the citizens in the north. The United Nations is also involved with peace talks between the two sides of the country.

Tim McCall can be reached at tim.mccall@gmail.com.

The campaign to promote the Invisible Children documentary and the light against children as soldiers is currently on a nationwide tour.

Mournful tale strikes cord

BOOK from page 6

the untimely death of her daughter (along with a metaphorical stroke,) has created a need for some mental housecleaning in order to exorcise her disturbing memories.

There are only a few characters within the novel, but their traits are endearing and they stir up loyal emotions. Corrie, Lilli's eldest grandson, is optimistic, supportive, and yet deservedly melancholy – a bit like a darker version of Beaver Cleaver – while Jo, the middle child, uses humor to deflect pain at a remarkably young age. Matthias, the comic relief infant, completes the feeling that if this novel had been written in the 1990s, lawsuits could have been filed against the sitcom "Full House" (minus Uncle Jessie and Uncle Joey).

On a deeper level, Rushforth leaves no stone unturned when describing the effects of their grief. Lilli revisits the past through painting, Corrie broods, Jo wets the bed, and Matthias creates token poignant moments every time he asks when his mother will return home. Rarely do the family members mention their loss to each other, making the grief within the novel seem more personalized to each character. Rushforth is particularly talented when it comes to uncovering the undertones of embarrassment that often accompany suffering, but he leaves the questions regarding exactly why we undergo such phenomena to the reader.

While the family tries to recreate a new "normal" life, Rushforth incorporates pieces of the past as though he were cultivating literary "shabby chic." It almost seems that Rushforth gets a bit bored with his story of recuperation and would rather focus on the actual traumatic events instead.

Whenever the narrative lags, he adds a new component to throw the reader off balance by utilizing reworked fairy tales doggedly representing the events of the Holocaust. The fairy tales, although gruesomely interesting, are also choked with metaphors. Rushforth did not seem to have the confidence that we as an audience could uncover the meanings within these macabre fairy tales on our own, and so he spent a large part of his time in these reworkings embellishing elaborately on themes of loss, innocence, and victimization.

Overbearing metaphors aside, the fairy tales are undeniably engrossing. Taken from the Brother's Grimm, the stories do not make an effort to hide mankind's flaws from the children who read them. Rushforth embraces this idea by creating variations of endings with surprising results; sometimes, the grisly ending creates a stronger sense of gratification in opposition to the stereotypical "happily ever after."

There is no moving action in this novel, unless we count how many times Rushforth makes us crane our necks backwards into the past. After exhausting the fairy tale theme, he assimilates dozens of letters written by Jewish families in Nazi Germany into the plot in order to tug at our heartstrings. In this aspect, Rushforth succeeds with his eye for detail and timing.

At the perfect moment, Rushforth quotes one letter written by an unsuspecting Jewish mother about her son who innocently writes, "I am sure he will like Berlin. It is a city made for children." Cryptic moments such as these are what make the novel worth reading, regardless of the stagnant plot.

Rushforth certainly has an eye for detail, but his reliance on scrupulous description is easily overwhelming. The strength of the novel is not placed in the detailed accounts as much as Rushforth's ability to zoom out from an isolated incident and show a panoramic view of scenes that the audience is only permitted a glimpse of. The description of Berlin in the 1930s is utterly breathtaking. We as readers are only permitted to catch glimpses of the city, but Rushforth leaves the reader wanting much more.

Flaws aside, this novel reveals an unusual level of artistic caliber and deserves a resurrection. Even the lagging plot can be excused by the emotions of the individuals who drive the story along. Most importantly, Rushforth hides within the pages and lets his characters, rather than his logic, do the talking. As Daphne Du Maurier notes, "Writers should be read, but neither seen nor heard." "Kindergarten" is a novel that reveals the importance of this advice.

Genevieve Crane can be reached at gcrane@student.umass.edu

Do you need advice?

Please e-mail any questions to

Veronica Garrett,
Advice Columnist at*
arts@dailycollegian.com

Looking for business experience??

The Daily Collegian is currently seeking qualified applicants to fill the positions of:

- Business Manager
- Assistant Business Manager
- Distribution Manager

BITE ME!

Pizza Shark Plus presents Two-for-one Mondays

Buy any large pizza, get a second large pizza FREE with your UMass ID

Cheese $12.00	Pepperoni $14.00	Pesto $17.00
Teriyaki Steak $18.00	BBQ Chicken $17.00	Antipasto $18.00
Buffalo Chicken $17.00	Seafood $18.00	White Pizza $14.00
Mediterranean $17.00	Roasted Veggie $17.00	Margherita $17.00
Shark Therapy $17.00	Honey Mustard Chicken $18.00

(413) 259-4259
178 Montague Road, Amherst MA 01002
*higher price prevails. must show UMass ID at time of purchase. offer expires 3/17/07

SPRING SPECIAL

SUPERCUTS®
every time®

AMHERST

Amherst Plaza Shopping Center
(next to Big Y Supermarket)
181 University Drive, Rte. 9
(413) 259-1135

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
Call Ahead Service available

Ask about our COLOR and WAXING SERVICES

$10
Super Haircut
(reg. $13.95)

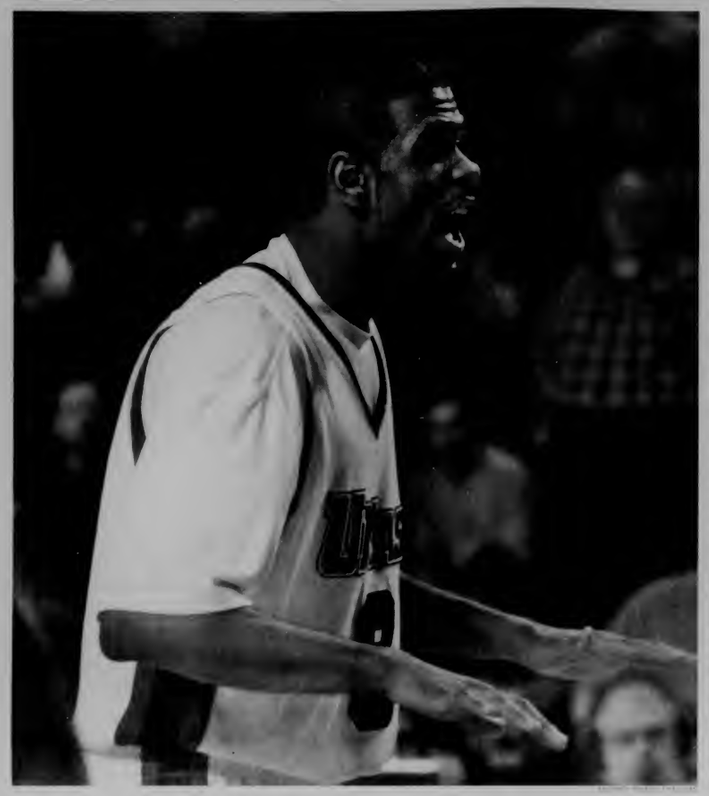
www.supercuts.com

Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSHC

15% OFF
Hair Products

www.supercuts.com

Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSCS



Junior Gary Forbes led the Minutemen with 13 points in the 74-71 loss to Saint Louis last night, but it turned out the team needed three more from him. Forbes made the final shot of the season for UMass, bouncing a last-second 3-pointer off the front of the rim in overtime.

UMass knocked out in upset to Billikens

M. BASKETBALL from page 12

bench dropped to their knees, and the Minutemen lost, 74-71, to the Saint Louis Billikens, effectively squashing UMass' hopes for an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament.

"Saint Louis was just better than us in every aspect of the game tonight," a solemn UMass coach Travis Ford said. "Saint Louis outplayed us in every bit of the game."

Tommie Liddell and Ian Vouyoukas led the way for the Billikens, tallying 24 points and 21 points, respectively.

"We've had high hopes and expectations since this summer," said senior Brandon Thomas, who finished with 10 points. "To make the same exit we did last year is almost unbelievable."

Forbes led the Minutemen with 13 points on 4-of-12 shooting paired with seven rebounds in the loss. Senior captain Stephane Lasme had eight points and 13 rebounds. He had just five shot attempts.

"It's very hard," Lasme said of the loss. "Doing everything we did this year and working as hard as we worked. It's tough."

Senior captain Rashaun Freeman had just six points and two rebounds, and battled foul trouble for the majority of the contest.

Freeman picked up his second foul with just over five minutes left in the first half and received his third two minutes into the second half. The big man had four fouls with just under 10 minutes left in the second half.

Ford gambled and put him back in at the 6:56 mark, but Freeman fouled out on the next possession when Ilusak posted him on the right block and scored with the foul to give Saint Louis a 55-52 lead.

"Obviously Ray wasn't himself from the beginning of the game," Lasme said. "We can't make excuses. I don't think we lost because Ray wasn't himself."

UMass took several stabs at a victory in regulation but the Billikens had all the answers last night.

With 3:20 left in the second half, sophomore guard Chris Lowe (11 points) dribbled through the middle of the SLU defense and threw up a floater off of the glass to give UMass a 63-59 lead.

Saint Louis had already given up a 7-0 run to saddle itself with the four-point deficit, and after Lowe's improbable floater went in, the air seemed decidedly out of SLU's sails.

But the Billikens tied it up at 63 with consecutive baskets (that sandwiched a defensive stop) by forward Justin Johnson – a jumper from the right elbow and a floater over Lasme from the left block.

Sophomore Luke Bonner gave the Minutemen a 65-63 lead with a pair of timely free throws, but Vouyoukas tied it up with a drop-step layup over Bonner on the right block.

The game went into overtime at 65-65, and the Billikens opened up the extra period with a 6-0 run – a pair of free throws by Liddell, a jumper by Kevin Lisch (11 boards, eight points), and a fade-away by Vouyoukas – to put the Minutemen in a significant hole.

Forbes and senior James Life hit threes to put UMass within two, and an SLU backcourt violation gave the Minutemen the ball down two points.

But Lowe turned it over on a dribble drive (a Liddell steal, vindication for Forbes, picking his pocket at the Mullins Center on Feb. 24) and Liddell went to the line with his team up two.

He hit the first free throw and missed the second, but Forbes was unsuccessful on the last-second 3-pointer.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu. Check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog for more coverage at www.dailycollegiansports blogspot.com

UM faces pair of unbeatens

MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

If the Massachusetts tennis team (6-3, 1-0 A-10) wants to continue its successful season this weekend, it will have to earn it. They travel to Ithaca, N.Y. this weekend to take on Binghamton and Cornell, two teams that have posted convincing victories this season, as evidenced by their undefeated records.

Masha Pozar and the Minutewomen face two undefeated teams this weekend in Binghamton and Cornell.

The Minutewomen better bring their game faces for Friday's match, as the Binghamton Bearcats have more than enough bulletin board material. Coming into Friday with an impressive 6-0 record, the Bearcats have a chance to break the school's best dual-record to begin a season since the team was established 35 years ago. They currently share this record with the first Binghamton tennis team from 1972-73 and the 1987-88 team.

As well as using this for motivation, head coach Mike Stevens can also remind his players that they are facing a UMass team that has defeated Binghamton all three times since his team moved up to Division I in 2001.

The Bearcats will be especially tough to beat at their No. 1 and 3 singles positions. Senior Zeynep Altinay has an all-time record of 79-25, and is looking to continue her success with a school-record 80th victory at the No. 1 slot. At the third slot, Ilya Kushnirovich, also a senior, is hot on Altinay's tail with a career record of 77-28.

The Minutewomen will counter with a superstar of their own, Michelle Spiess. The No. 1 for UMass has 59 victories of her own, and is looking to get one step closer to the school-record of 63 held by Jackie Braustein. Spiess currently sits in third place all-time by herself.

Two time Atlantic 10 Women's Tennis Rookie of the Week Ellen de Jong figures to challenge Kushnirovich, as she has been playing at the No. 3 singles spot for the majority of the season.

The Saturday bout against the Cornell Big Red will be no cakewalk either. Cornell shares dominant similarities to Binghamton. Both beat Army by a score of 5-2, while the Minutewomen defeated the Black Knights, 4-3. Both teams are also undefeated and have never had a match decided by a score closer than 5-2.

One key to the matches this weekend will be contributions from players other than the top-three singles for UMass.

"It's the end of our winter season, everyone's tired," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "I'm hoping we get more help from the Nos. 4, 5, and 6 and our doubles' points."

Cornell's two losses to Army came in the No. 2 and 3 doubles, and it will be important for UMass to do well in these positions in order to win. The Big Red did not lose one match in the singles play against Army, so the No. 4, 5, and 6 players are going to have to step up for UMass. The top-three singles players for UMass, Spiess, Pozar, and de Jong are the team's most consistent players, and now it is time for other players to step up and take the Minutewomen to an even higher level.

Despite the intimidating, undefeated records both opposing teams hold, coach Dixon believes that the matches can go either way and that both will be close. She likes the head-to-head matchups that she has on paper.

Of their six victories this season, the UMass team has earned five of them in the spring season. It was not until Mar. 21 of last year that the Minutewomen received their fifth victory, and one or two victories this weekend would improve their spring resume from last year even more.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

New WORLD Theater
UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
Duurbaar (unstoppable) journeys into horizon
by Ananya Dance Theatre
Wednesday, March 14, 2007
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium
Tickets are $15-general public, $8 low-income patrons and seniors, $5-students with valid ID. Tickets available at FAC Box Office, 545-2511. For more info about the shows visit our website or call NWT at 545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org

NCAA Selection Committee may take illness into account

PICARD from page 12

talking about."

"We came in here and lost the first game, so our chances are probably slim," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "But they say [the Selection Committee] keeps things in mind for teams that had injuries and things like that, and this team hadn't been on the floor in four days."

So you're saying there's a chance?

"I definitely think we were one of the top 64 teams in the country," Ford said. "I don't think that's even debatable. If anybody's seen us play when we're healthy, we're one of the best teams in the country.

"I think we deserve it, but again, the people on the committee are going to have to understand what we've been through and what we've done."

UMass is one of the best 64 teams in the country, and the illness that haunted this team all week was greatly underrated.

The Minutemen went into the postseason winning nine of their last 10 games. If you look at their resume, it's pretty impressive, considering the improvement from last season's 13-15 overall record and a 3-13 record away from the Mullins Center.

This year's campaign ended the regular season with a 23-7 overall record, and a 12-5 record away from home – which is tied for fifth in the nation.

UMass' non-conference schedule wasn't a walk in the park either. It included games at No. 4 Pittsburgh, Louisville and Kentucky, and two home games against the ACC's Boston College and Miami.

The only win in those games came at Louisville back on Dec. 13. With the Cardinals currently ranked No. 12 in the country, and with them being what looks like a Big East Tournament contender – Louisville defeated West Virginia 82-71 in double overtime of the quarterfinals – the Minutemen may have an argument.

But it still won't matter. The Selection Committee may keep injuries in mind when choosing the field of 65, but just because players were under the weather for one game won't make the difference between an NCAA bid and an NIT bid.

Granted the situation was totally unexpected and out of its hands, UMass still had a chance to beat Saint Louis.

The Minutemen had a 65-63 lead with 1:30 remaining in the second half, but reminiscent of the entire game, they couldn't stop the Billikens' big man, Ian Vouyoukas, from tying the game and sending it into overtime.

And overtime was the last thing UMass wanted.

"I've never went into a game as leave prepared as we were today," Ford said. "We didn't meet as a basketball team until yesterday, and that was to come down here.

"Now that's not an excuse why we lost today, but if you take everything into consideration what we've been through this week, it's unbelievable."

Playing the biggest game of your career while fighting the flu isn't a dream scenario for collegiate athletes, but it happened, and the Minutemen were the victims of bad timing.

"You can't control everything," Ford said.

An NCAA Tournament bid is now out of its control. UMass' March Madness fate rests in the hands of the Selection Committee.

Travis Ford is calling, but only time will tell if they'll pick up the phone.

Danny Picard is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Senior Rashaun Freeman's career came to an unceremonious end Thursday night. The captain fouled out of the game after having played just 17 minutes and scored just six points.

Bears are back in town

HOCKEY from page 12

Orono.

The next year, the Black Bears exacted some revenge, ending the Maroon and White's best season in its history, in a 2-1 triple-overtime contest in the Hockey East Championship in 2004.

Now they will play a possible five games in ten days in a battle to make it to Boston. And that's just fine with Cahoon.

With Vermont's collapse at home to UMass Lowell – a team that's already watching from home – last weekend's series between the Minutemen and Black Bears evolved quickly into a battle to see where this weekend's rematch would be held.

However, until late Saturday night, there was still a chance that Vermont could have been making the trip to western Mass. If that had happened, this weekend would have a much different feel to it.

While the Minutemen won the first round against the Black Bears, it will mean nothing if they cannot follow through with two more victories over the former No. 1 team in the nation.

"We've got to find a way to get through this weekend," Cahoon said. "It doesn't matter who we're playing."

Early in the season, it seemed that many of the goals were coming from a select group of players. The team's leading scorers – players like Chris Capraro, Cory Quirk, Chris Davis and P.J. Fenton – were not just leading the offense, but monopolizing it.

During the second half of the season (the last month especially), the stat sheets have evened out a bit. Captain Matt Anderson has scored five points over the final four games of the season on three goals and two assists.

Defenseman David Leader – who struggled most of the season to find the back of the net – has caught fire recently. The junior notched six points (three goals, three assists) over the final eight games of the season after recording just four points over the first 26 games.

Cahoon believes that can be attributed to the team's balance on offense, proving that anyone on the ice can score at any time.

"I think it's just team-play," Cahoon said. "Everybody's working real hard to make a contribution. People are stepping up and rising to the occasion."

In past years, the team has been led by just a few players on offense, such as Marvin Degon and Stephen Werner. While trying to fill the void left by the departure this year, it seems everyone is chipping in.

The depth offensively has allowed Cahoon to mix and match his lines without having a real order to them. Instead of having lines ranked one through four, Cahoon believes he simply has four solid lines that can produce for him.

"When we look at our team at the end of the day, one of our strengths is our balance, and so we rely on that balance. It won't surprise us if Chris Davis pops in with a goal or if Kevin Jarman scores a goal. It comes from so many sources and that's one of our strengths."

UMass has made its strongest run of the season to close out its schedule, all while suffering a near-devastating rash of injuries. Now that the playoffs are here, the Minutemen may be getting healthier just in time.

Many of the players that have missed considerable time have returned to the practice rink this week. Defensemen Martin Nolet and Topher Bevis, and forward Zech Klann all have a chance to return for the first round of the playoffs.

"Everybody's day-to-day right now," Cahoon said.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jerice@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore goaltender Jon Quick went 16-10-5 in 31 starts, replacing three year starter Gabe Winer. Quick led the Minutemen to their second-best finish ever in Hockey East.

Anderson comes full circle

ANDERSON from page 12

(one goal and four assists) through UMass' first five games. Soon after the win over Providence on Nov. 4 is when the tough times really began to sink in.

Over the next 15 games he only doubled his point total, scoring just two more goals and three more assists. For the first time in his career, the struggles began to reflect his play on the ice.

"I think that's a pretty tough question to talk about," Matt says with the look on his face telling the whole story of his final year at UMass. He then pauses for a while contemplating his time wearing the maroon and white. "I think that, for me personally, if you look at life as past, present and future – for me I have to focus on the present, stay in the present rather than looking back in the past."

Although it's something he won't freely admit, it's obvious Anderson is disappointed with the way things went earlier in the year. During his first three years on the ice, Matt was a staple on the Minutemen's first and second lines. Rarely, if ever, did you see his name penciled in on the third. That began to change starting with UMass' Nov. 28 contest against Boston University.

UMass coach Don Cahoon shuffled the lines around, moving Anderson down to center on the third line, flanked by Zech Klann and Scott Crowder. The move appeared to work, but only at first. That trio recorded two points in the Minutemen's 2-2 tie with the Terriers. Matt notched an assist. That production eventually faded away, and Cahoon decided it was time for yet another shakeup.

During the early stages of the second half, he put Matt on the second line and eventually back to the top spot against New Hampshire in Durham, but he wasn't at his usual centerman position. Cahoon put him on the right wing with Mark Matheson in the middle and Chris Capraro on the other side. They scored a goal and an assist that game, but something must not have clicked because Anderson's name was nowhere to be found the following night in Amherst.

Cahoon originally said the changes were to counter the Wildcats' lines, but it was evident there was something else there. Anderson didn't appear to be slowed by injury at the time, so the only other option was a grim reality – he was benched. Against UMass Lowell – the school Anderson was very close to attending – he was dropped all the way down to the fourth line.

Matt makes no excuses about his play during the middle stages of this season. He knows it wasn't his best hockey out there. But both he and Cahoon said the move to the fourth line was in no way a result of Matt's skills, a statement Anderson himself later softened on.

"We call the names of the lines by color," Cahoon remarks, refusing to call it the fourth line, instead preferring green line. "It might be the fourth line to go out there, but then you look at the ice time he gets on four-on-four, the penalty kill and the power-play time.

"I think you measure someone's importance to the team with how he's utilized. We think we're more balanced with the lineup the way it is. It's no measurement about someone's ability, it's just how we're going to utilize him."

Anderson agreed at first, but then commented that he'd put himself "in a position to play on the green line and with the guys [he's] been playing with."

"I was put where I belong, I don't think I deserve anything else," Matt says.

However, it has been anything but a bad situation for either Anderson or the Minutemen. The two have enjoyed great success with him on the green line. UMass has gone 8-3-2 in the 13 games that Matt has played the pivot on the fourth line. In that time they've climbed the ranks of the Hockey East standings and now find themselves in their current position, hosting a playoff series for the first time since 2004.

And Matt has flourished wearing green during practice. Since being moved there he recorded points at just under one per game with a pair of two-point efforts – one against Boston College on Feb. 2 and another against Northeastern on Feb. 25. He had a goal and an assist in both of those contests. Anderson has also been an intricate part of the Minutemen's recent four-game winning streak – he has five points the past two weeks, with at least one per game.

The turnaround in Anderson's play is simple – he's finally been able to relax while playing hockey. It's the first time in a long time that he's been able to do that. Entering this season it appeared the scoring load was placed squarely on his broad shoulders. Top scorers from last year, Stephen Werner and Marvin Degon were lost to graduation, leaving Anderson in the void.

Cahoon said the captain was pressing at times during this season, trying too hard to carry the burden of the whole team. It got to a point where Anderson concedes he felt his skating and passing abilities had abandoned him. That is a horrible combination for someone known as a playmaker. The more he struggled, the more he pressed and the less improvement he made.

Matt didn't begin to relax until he came to the realization that the offense didn't have to hinge on his play. Other skaters on the team have stepped up this season to aid their captain. Three of the most notable contributors to the UMass offense are Capraro, Matheson and sophomore Cory Quirk.

All three are having career years in 2006-07 and Anderson is happy to have the pressure finally relieved.

"I think that's something that I've gotten away from. A big part of my personality is being a laid-back kind of guy and I think I need to bring more of that onto the ice," Matt says. "With Mark playing so well and a lot of the guys playing so well, it's kind of played itself out with Cap going back up with Quirky."

But it's not as if Anderson's contributions have been rendered meaningless. Actually the Minutemen are at their best when Matt gets his name on the scoreboard. They enjoy a 13-2-3 record when he scores, and sink all the way down to 7-8-3 when he doesn't. That, coupled with Cahoon's comment above about his utilizing Matt as much as he can, demonstrates that Anderson is still the lifeblood of the Minutemen.

In 2002, he came to the Pioneer Valley as part of a freshman class that was going to send UMass hockey into the future. One repaired shoulder, one mended ankle and a whole lot of effort later, he has the Mass Attack on another stellar run into the Hockey East playoffs, and perhaps even beyond.

Matt Anderson has truly come full circle.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. For more on Matt Anderson and the writer's interview with him, log on to the Daily Collegian sports blog at www.dailycollegiansports blogspot.com

Anderson finished his senior season with 18 points on eight goals and 10 assists. Five of those points came in the final two weeks of the season.

Playoffs return to Amherst for second time in team's history

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's certainly been a productive couple of years for the University of Massachusetts. In the spring, softball and lacrosse made late-season runs to begin to put UMass sports back on the map.

Everyone knows about the football team's brush with destiny this past fall, and the talk of the campus was the NCAA Tournament push Travis Ford was making with the boys on the hardwood.

But lost in all of this, the Massachusetts hockey team is in the midst of possibly its best season ever. Riding a four-game winning streak into the Hockey East playoffs, the Mass Attack (a nickname used only for the hockey team) is trying to make a name for itself in a number of realms.

Generally regarded as an also-ran in one of the top collegiate hockey leagues, UMass has a great chance to establish itself as a perennial contender in a very competitive conference, just three years removed from its first and only previous home playoff series.

At the same time, the Mass Attack is helping to contribute to the growth of UMass sports, which is seeing one of its best overall periods in recent memory.

After a decade and a half without any varsity hockey, UMass hockey made a comeback in 1993, when the Mullins Center was erected. The Minutemen wasted little time reinserting itself back into the sport, diving headfirst into the top conference on the east coast in Hockey East the very next year.

The first (and only, before this year) winning season for the Maroon and White came in 2003-04 under UMass coach Don Cahoon, when the Minutemen reached the Hockey East finals.

"It's a progression," Cahoon said. "We're not thinking a lot about it because all we're thinking about is the weekend. Maybe when the season's over we'll step back and try to analyze more in depth what the significance of it is."

Despite the countless storylines swirling around, Cahoon is maintaining a narrow focus on winning the opening-round series against Maine.

"[Earning home ice] is only going to be a good thing if we succeed," said Cahoon. "It's not going to mean much if we don't win. I'm glad it's here. We've worked hard to get this, now we've got to put it to use."

UMass made its first big move simply by entering Hockey East in 1994. It made the next one almost ten years later when it reached the conference's title game.

The third big step may have been this past weekend's sweep of Maine, which secured the team home ice on the very last day of the season. In 2003-04, the Minutemen finished the regular season on a 0-6-1 slide.

This season's 5-1 record in the final six contests – and especially the sweep of Maine – may be a sign that the Mass Attack is ready to place itself with the New Hampshire's, Boston College's, and Boston University's of the hockey world.

In the last four years, the Minutemen are the only team in Hockey East to break up the "Big Four" (UNH, Maine, BC and BU) and finish in the top four of the conference, earning home ice in the opening round of the playoffs.

And they've done it twice.

Regardless, Cahoon feels there's still plenty of work left to be done to earn the long-term recognition the Big Four enjoys.

"We just have to take care of business now," he said. "Maybe if we do this a few years in a row, I'll feel like we've sustained a level of play that's allowed us to attack that Big Four. Right now, we're just at the end of a season that's been a good season and we'd like to make it a great season. And we can't do that unless we take care of this weekend."

In the midst of all the Hockey East chatter, the Minutemen have by far their best chance to extend their season even further. This year more than ever before, the NCAA Tournament is within reach for the Mass Attack.

With the success of a number of athletics programs on the UMass campus, the hockey team is keeping pace with its sister programs.

"We're playing with the top teams in the country on a consistent basis. No one plays in a better league than us," Cahoon said. "This is the best league in our sport. I think the football program, the lacrosse program, the basketball program are all terrific programs, and our aim is to do as well in our alignment as they do in their alignment. And I think it'll be a great credit to the athletic department if we do that."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jerice@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Cory Quirk finished the regular season second on the team in scoring with 28 points on 12 goals and 16 assists. He and the Minutemen will be looking to bring respect to the program within Hockey East.

Attention First-Year Students:
DEADLINE APPROACHING
Have you completed MyStudentBody?
It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, March 12th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

From Your Dorm To The Airport And Back!
Comfort, Convenience, Door-to-Door Service
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter
The Easy Way to the Airport!

Win one, lose one

Minutewomen split first day of Spring Break Invitational

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

It was a split decision for the Massachusetts softball team on the first day of the Adidas Spring Break Invitational in Clearwater, Fla. The Minutewomen received a 10-1 pounding at the hands of Tennessee Tech after defeating Indiana 8-5 in the afternoon game.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino was disappointed about not sweeping the competition yesterday, but says she knows you can't win them all.

"We just had a tough night finding the strike zone from the mound," she said. "The ball wasn't breaking where we wanted it to break and [Tennessee] got a pretty good piece of the ball."

She admitted, however, that she couldn't take any credit away from the Golden Eagles.

"They came out swinging," she said. "They were very, very aggressive and you've got to tip your cap off to them. They looked to try to drive a handle on the first thing we threw around the plate and they did."

TTU scored the game's first run in the top of the second when senior outfielder Katie Sutherland grounded into a fielder's choice, bringing in freshman Heather Kendrick from third.

After Sutherland stole second, Beth Boden singled up the middle, scoring both Sutherland and senior Ashley Potts.

Katie Speiser then sent another Tennessee rope into centerfield, bringing to the plate Boden, who also had swiped second.

The Maroon and White finally got on the board in the bottom half of the inning. Stacy Cullington provided a single up the middle of her own, knocking home senior Jackie Teman, who pinch-ran for sophomore Samantha Salato at second base.

That was the only offense of the game – which was called after the sixth inning on a mercy-rule – for the Minutewomen as they were forced to play the last four frames with their backs against the wall.

The Golden Eagles widened their lead in the top of the sixth with a three-run homer by Boden made it a 7-1 game.

Junior catcher Stephanie Fischer – the first batter of the top of the fifth – would make it 8-1 when she went deep off of UMass relief pitcher Bailey Sanders. Sanders had entered the game with two outs in the fourth to relieve starter Brandice Balschmiter, who relieved Sanders in the early game against Indiana.

But TTU was not finished yet.

Another blast to left by Boden put the score at 10-1. After the Minutewomen failed to produce any points in the latter half of the inning, the game was called.

The day was not a total disappointment for the Minutewomen, however.

Their earlier win against Indiana allowed them to head back to the hotel with at least a little satisfaction.

The Hoosiers drew first blood in the top of the third inning when sophomore Stephanie Pellerito hit a solo home run off Sanders. Later in the inning Jennilee Huddleston singled down the right-field line, driving in freshman Jennifer Glueckert and junior Janetta Deveau.

The Maroon and White would counter Indiana's punch immediately after squashing the rally – scoring three runs in the top of the fourth inning.

After UMass gave up two more Indiana runs in the bottom of the fifth, both teams went three-and-out in their respective halves of the sixth.

A grand slam by Cullington in the top of the seventh sealed the deal for the Minutewomen, after Balschmiter was able to keep the lid on a nail-biter of the bottom half.

UMass will take on Georgia Tech and Illinois-Chicago today, and Northern Illinois tomorrow morning before bracket play begins in the afternoon.

– Dominic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Junior Stacy Cullington hit a grand slam in the seventh inning of the Minutewomen's first game in the Spring Break Invitational against Indiana. The game-winner marked Cullington's second home run this season.

Minutemen return to the field, open season at Central Florida

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team opens its 2007 season tonight against Central Florida (8-9) in the first matchup of a three-game set. The Minutemen and the Golden Knights will square off Friday through Sunday at Jay Bergman Field in Orlando, Fla.

UMass will see its first live action since the end of last season, while its opponent, the Golden Knights, have had the benefit of playing 17 games to get in the full-swing of things in the early stages of the season.

"Just the fact that they've played in 17 games is an advantage," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "They have warm weather, they're outside and playing on a field and they can really do everything. We have to scale down our preparation, but the main thing is seeing live pitching and outside game situations."

Senior Chris Lloyd will toe the pitching slab for the Minutemen on Friday, while freshman Jared Ireni and sophomore Mike Dicato will get the call this weekend, respectively.

The trio of right-handers are charged with holding down a solid Golden Knight offense, a lineup which currently features five .300 hitters and a dynamic leadoff man in Tyson Auer. Three players in the UCF batting order have previously been drafted by Major League clubs, including Kiko Vazquez – who leads the team with three home runs and 18 RBIs.

UCF has the added advantage of having three hitters in its starting lineup that can bat left-handed to counteract an entirely right-handed UMass pitching staff.

This early in the season, though, Stone isn't too concerned with individual matchups at the plate.

"It would be nice if we matched up that way, but we don't have that," he said. "It's something that we don't need to focus on as much, we just need our people to pitch quality innings – regardless if it's right-left or left-right.

"The first seven games you play, you're really playing against yourselves," Stone added. "I don't really focus a whole lot about what the other team has done. I really try to prepare for what we can do and what our strengths are."

It was a struggle for both teams last season, as the Minutemen finished 14-30 overall and 11-16 in the Atlantic 10, and the Golden Knights ended the year at 22-33.

albeit in a deeper conference (Conference USA). Stone expects a little bit of rust for their first series of the season, but is optimistic his team will start strong.

"Of course I'm concerned about how we will react the first time outside playing games, but I think we're an improved team and have better talent [this season]," he said. "We're playing against pretty good competition and we just need to be tough enough mentally and physically. We want to come out and play, well, play tough and come out with a lot of energy and aggressiveness."

That aggression could pay off for the Minutemen, putting added pressure on a UCF defense that has struggled mightily thus far – having committed 41 errors through 17 games. The Golden Knight pitching staff has also had some early-season problems, issuing 86 walks in only 152 innings. UMass will attempt to exploit those weaknesses this weekend.

"Certain times you want to be patient, but I like to be aggressive on offense," Stone said. "You need to get guys on, move them over, try to get them in and put pressure on the opponent so you can get better pitches to hit."

The Minutemen have the luxury of a rested pitching staff, while the Golden Knights' arms may be slightly fatigued, having played five games in the past week. Irregardless of how the starters do, Stone will have plenty of hurlers ready to go in the series.

"Our plan is to have three starters ready and to have three more starters backing them up," he said. "We'll have middle guys ready, and then short-relievers (junior Aaron Smith and senior Bryan Adamski) ready to go to close out any games. And if people don't pitch on Friday, they'll just get bumped to Saturday."

The entire staff will need to be ready to take the ball against a powerful UCF lineup in order to start the season off well.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu style profile

1. dress
2. sunglasses
3. headband
4. bag
5. wedge

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Right-handed pitch Aaron Smith was 2-2 in 10 appearances last season with a 4.36 ERA for the Minutemen.

UMass looks to keep streaks alive against Albany

UM goes for four straight wins to stay perfect against Great Danes

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

History is on the side of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team for Saturday's meeting with Albany. The Minutewomen (3-2) have never lost to the Great Danes (1-3), winning the only five meetings dating back to 2001.

The game will also mark the second opportunity for UMass to earn its first home victory of the season. It would also be the first win at home for rookie coach Alexis Venechanos.

"We're excited for our second home game of the season," Venechanos said. "We have a 10-day layoff right afterward, so we're looking to put ourselves in a good position going into spring break."

In their last game, the Minutewomen struggled to find the back of the net, scoring only five goals. The team only managed one goal in the first half, struggling with the strong pressure applied by the Dartmouth (3-0) defense.

That performance was in sharp contrast to the team's previous three games – all victories. UMass scored 13, 13 and 18 goals in each of the games, respectively.

However, Albany should allow the UMass offense to get back on track. The team's opponents have outscored the Great Danes by a combined 28 goals.

The Minutewomen will most likely be without the services of Kaytlin McCormick for the sixth straight game. The sophomore has not played yet this season due to an undisclosed injury.

"She's day-to-day," Venechanos said. "When she gets back to 100 percent, we'll put her back in there. She's a tremendous leader and we're looking forward to a speedy recovery."

McCormick was one of the most important cogs of the UMass attack last year. She finished second in team scoring, with 31 goals and four assists as a freshman.

But the team is still looking for someone to step up and fill the scoring void left by McCormick. The scoring responsibility has been solely placed on the shoulders of junior Kathleen Typadis. She has 13 goals and four assists in five games.

"[Typadis] has been doing a great job," Venechanos said. "She's definitely been very dynamic and is a leader [on the field]. She's been doing a lot for us on and off the ball. Melinda [Zwick] and Holly [Drown] have been doing a good job of finding her. In the past, teams have been doubling her early and putting the focal point [of the defense] on her."

While UMass has made strides under Venechanos, Albany appears to be facing a rebuilding season under second-year coach Lindsey Hart. The Great Danes have a combination of young talent and experience on offense, defense and in the midfield.

However, Venechanos and the Minutewomen are not overlooking the Great Danes.

"They have a lot of good athletes on their team – they have some young kids and some older kids. They have good people at each position," said Venechanos.

In last year's match in Albany, the two teams played a close game. UMass prevailed in overtime, 11-10, and scored with less than three minutes remaining to force the extra stanza. The Maroon and White prevailed with a strong second period, overcoming an 8-6 deficit.

As a sophomore, Typadis led all players in scoring with three goals. However, Albany returns two of its top scorers from that game, including senior midfielders Kate Fontaine and Kristy Rajczak. It also welcomes freshman Kayla Reid to the midfielder ranks, who has seven goals this season.

This season, the only Albany victory came on Feb. 22 against Longwood (0-4). The team also failed to defeat two ranked opponents this year, losing to No. 19 Vanderbilt (3-1) and No. 15 Syracuse (3-2). Saturday's matchup will be the last contest in a five game road trip for Albany to begin the season.

For the first time in program history, the Minutewomen will be playing at McGirk Stadium instead of Garber Field. The venue will provide for a larger playing area and a surface that is easier on the body. However, switching from artificial turf to Field Turf can be a significant change, especially how it affects groundballs.

"We've been practicing at both facilities since the fall," said Venechanos. "It's a great field and surface and the [players] are very excited to play there. It's a great venue for any sport and we're looking forward to that."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Junior Attacker Kathleen Typadis leads the Minutewomen with 17 points on 13 goals and four assists in five games.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 3/2/07 Thurs 3/8/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
300 (R) 12:01 am 12:05 am
Wild Hogs (PG-13)* 1:05 4:40 7:10 9:45
Zodiac (R) 12:45 4:10 8:00
Because I Said So (PG-13) 4:50 9:40
Norbit (PG-13) 1:35 4:15 7:35 9:50
Music and Lyrics (PG-13) 1:20 4:30 7:30 10:10
The Queen (PG-13) 12:55 7:15
Reno 911! Miami (R)* 1:45 4:55 7:50 10:15
Breach (PG-13) 12:50 4:40 7:30 10:05
The Astronaut Farmer (PG)* 1:10 4:25 7:35 9:55
Bridge to Terabithia (PG) 1:30 4:30 8:55 9:20
The Number 23 (R)* 1:25 4:35 7:40 10:25
Ghost Rider (PG-13) 1:15 1:40 4:05 4:50 7:00 7:45 9:35 10:20
* no passes or supersavers
• NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Cinemark Superscreen cinemark.com

NOW SHOWING
MAR. 9 - MAR. 15
amherst cinema
THE LIVES OF OTHERS
FRI-SAT 1:15 4:00 7:00 9:45
SUN-THUR 1:15 4:00 7:00
VOLVER
FRI-SAT 2:00 4:30 10:00
SUNDAY 4:30
MON-THUR 2:00 4:30
Pan's Labyrinth
FRI WED. 5:15 7:30
THURSDAY 5:15
THE LAST KING OF SCOTLAND
FRI-SAT 2:45 7:45 10:05
SUN-THURS 2:45 7:45
JANUS FILMS
WILD STRAWBERRIES Fri 3/9 7p
Ingmar Bergman
Now 35mm Print!
WALKABOUT
Nicolas Roeg
Th 3/15 7p SUN 3/18 2p
28 AMITY STREET 413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2			7	3
	8			7		9
7		9	1
		1	2	6		9
2						6
6		8	7	9
			3	5		2
	1		4		8
3		4		1

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Precinct photo
8 Big lug
11 Pig's digs
14 In the dark
15 Masquerade disguises
17 Citizen army
18 Quiver
19 Plant axis
20 Ms. Fitzgerald
22 Avid
23 T-died
25 Former Turkish title
29 Lawbreaker abettor
34 Chevys and Caddies
35 Touch
36 Mayberry kid
37 Rote workers
39 Caesar and Waldorf
41 Surprise attack
42 Spasm
46 Blacksmith's workplace
47 Department store ride
49 Chips in chops
50 Pastime athlete
52 Up, baseball-wise
56 Some necklines
57 Not bona fide
61 "South Pacific" song
63 Pudding-like dessert
65 Water-heating tanks
66 Vanity voyage?
67 6th sense
68 Lip
69 Counts (on)

DOWN
1 Showy blooms, for short
2 Component piece
3 Outburst of laughter
4 Do the crawl
5 Sombrero, e.g.
6 Bay window
7 Page for a certain reader?
8 Money up front
9 Luau dish
10 Implants
11 Hang-up
12 Lug
13 French/Belgian river
16 Winter Levin
21 Lingerie trim
23 Set of circumstances
24 Slippery fish
25 San Diego pro
26 Emanations
27 Unemotional philosopher
28 Japanese car maker
30 Wise lawgiver
31 Dizzying designs
32 Narrow crest
33 Affirmatives
36 Junk email
40 Some distance
43 Genetic reappearance
44 High C, e.g.
45 Said "Hi" to
48 Soap froth
51 Language practice
52 French cleric
53 New Mexico art colony
54 Radar signal
55 Feel bad
57 Cyberspace space
58 Shofar, e.g.
59 Etcher's medium
60 Alias contents
62 Jackie's second
64 Soda

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
the saw doctors
FRIDAY, MARCH 9 • 8:00 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:00 PM
CALVIN 19 KING ST. NORTHAMPTON
GOMEZ & BEN KWELLER
SUNDAY, MARCH 11 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"A man who carries a cat by the tail learns something he can learn in no other way."
-Mark Twain

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

WOW, MY PLACE LOOKS AWESOME, THANKS TO YOU!
YEAH, WE DID GOOD. AND IT DIDN'T COST MUCH, EITHER.
THOUGH I DON'T REMEMBER BUYING THIS.
THAT'S THE COMPUTER TABLE I THOUGHT I COULD ASSEMBLE IT WITHOUT INSTRUCTIONS, AND BUILT A ROCKING HORSE INSTEAD.
REALLY - WOW. NEVER OCCURRED TO YOU TO STOP ONCE IT WASN'T LOOKING LIKE A TABLE?
NOT EVEN ONCE. AND IF I COULD GO BACK AND DO THINGS DIFFERENTLY, I'M NOT SO SURE I WOULD. HECK, I DON'T EVEN OWN A COMPUTER!

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

Global warming
Got it
Famine and disease spreading
Got it
How often do you go over that list?
Once a week or So
Wouldn't your time be better spent trying to Solve one of those problems?
Having the guilt is enough

THE PASSION OF UMASS By Matt Jarrett

You know, they closed I-91 North and South
Makes sense
And yet - here we are - navigating the Nile in hopes of getting to class.
Well, at least it's not as painful as the new housing selection policy.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

What are these?
I think they are here again
KAF KAF KAF
I don't think that's what we're eating
Next class we find Gradie would be interested in monsters
And then we think for monsters first CRUNCH!

Submit your comics!
collegiatecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are causing dissonance among your friends. Leave the country immediately.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Scones are merely a geometrically superior cross between a cookie and a muffin top.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Try rocking the comb-over for a more sophisticated and creepy look.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Pay someone $42 to drink the juice from your trash can. It'll make your weekend.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Buy a giant litter box and potty train your roommate.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your BFFL is totally going to LOL when they see who you grope tonight. TTYL!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will have the sauciest weekend imaginable. Take that any way you want.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You can be as mean as Tonya Harding, and far less good looking and nimble on ice.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Find a sweet, relatively unknown rap song. Memorize it and tell people you freestyle.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Salmon mate only once and then die. You'd think they would try abstinence.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Expose yourself up to your peers. Masticate with your mouth agape.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Buy folders with cute kittens on them for all your classes. Elementary school 4-lyfe!

Pioneer Valley Pizza
Pizza • Wings • Subs • Calzones • Entrees • Salads
Gourmet Pizzas from Small to PARTY SIZE!
Free Delivery 253-1011
Feed your party right!
Buy any Large Pizza, receive 1/2 price "Wings for One" OR another pizza of equal or lesser value for 1/2 price
Not to be combined with any other offers
20 Belchertown Rd. Amherst, MA (across from Cumby's)
We're up when you're up
Sun-Wed 11am-1am
Thurs 11am-2am
Fri-Sat 11am-3am

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town; 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Bartending $300/ day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/ office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton Cathedral ceiling, sky-lites, hardwood floors, 4-5 bdrms. 9/1 $1950. 413-730-6660

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst

SERVICES

Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Advertise in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace.

Submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Short stay in Atlantic City

Minutemen fall in first game to seventh-seeded Saint Louis

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

ATLANTIC CITY, NJ — Gary Forbes dribbled up the court with his team down by three points — the weight of a 30-game season with colossal expectations on his shoulders — and the seconds dwindling off of the clock, which became UMass' enemy when the Minutemen went down by six points at the beginning of the overtime period.

It happened in a flash – a season with so much promise and hope was about to get a stake driven through it by a team considered the extreme underdog in this Atlantic 10 Tournament quarterfinal matchup.

Forbes stopped, up-faked, let the defender fly by, and threw up UMass' final prayer, a 3-pointer that would've tied the game at 74 and sent the two teams into a second overtime.

But there was no miracle ending, no smiles, no victory.

Forbes' shot clanged off of the front rim, players on the UMass

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Mystery illness plagues team, could end chances at NCAA's

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — There are no excuses. Well, maybe just one.

With an unknown respiratory illness plaguing the Massachusetts men's basketball team all week, UMass had to cancel practice the last four days prior to the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Saint Louis took advantage of the ailing Minutemen, taking a 74-71 overtime win in the quarterfinals on Thursday evening.

Danny Picard

Gary Forbes had a chance to tie the game at the buzzer, but he front-rimmed a 3-pointer, eliminating UMass from the A-10 Tournament.

Chances of an at-large bid weren't great going into the game. The one-and-done showing in Atlantic City last night didn't make it any more realistic.

Remember that excuse I was

See PICARD on page 8

Senior James Life played the last game of his collegiate career last night, scoring 12 points in the losing effort against Saint Louis in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. Despite a much improved record over last season, the Minutemen made it no further than the 2005-06 squad.

Atlantic 10 Tournament Scoreboard: Day Two

Yesterday's Results

#1 Xavier	72	#7 St. Louis	74
#8 Dayton	51	#2 UMass	71
#4 URI	73	#3 GW	58
#5 Fordham	69	#6 St. Joe's	48

Today's Games

#4 URI vs. #1 Xavier
#7 St. Louis vs. #3 GW

Check out the Collegian's sports blog for updated coverage of the Atlantic 10 Basketball Tournament all weekend at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com.

Hockey East Scoreboard

#1 New Hampshire	4
#8 Providence	0
#2 Boston College	3
#7 Northeastern	0
#6 Vermont	3
#3 Boston University	2

Mass. under attack as Black Bears return

Rivalry grows as UMass, Maine meet again in postseason series

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

Shocking wins, disappointing losses, some strange endings and a late-season run, summing five of its last six. The Massachusetts hockey team's season has been full of ups and downs, and it's culminated with this weekend.

Tonight, the Mass Attack (18-11-5, 15-9-3 Hockey East) begins a best-of-three series against the team it just knocked off twice to earn home ice Maine (21-12-2, 14-12-1 HEA) went home last Sunday feeling sore after getting swept out of the final home ice spot in the Hockey East standings.

A few days later the Black Bears came right back to Amherst hoping for a better stay the second time around. And this time, there's a little more on the line.

UMass coach Don Cahoon said that playing the same team two weekends in a row has not changed anything for the team's preparation.

"The games last week have nothing to do with this week," Cahoon said. "The only thing that can be taken from last week is some looks that we now know about, and that they know about us. Other than that, this weekend is a total separate entity. [Last weekend] has no bearing."

The Minutemen and Black Bears have met six previous times in the postseason and are no strangers to dramatic finishes. UMass stunned its rivals to the north in the 2003 playoffs, sweeping Maine out of the postseason in consecutive games in

See HOCKEY on page 9

The Massachusetts hockey team hosts the Maine Black Bears in a best-of-three series, all inside the Mullins Center this weekend. It marks just the second time in the history of the program that the Minutemen will host the first round of the Hockey East playoffs.

Senior Captain Matt Anderson has fought his way through five years at UMass, and now he has a shot to lead the team farther than its ever been.

Perseverance the name of the game

Captain Anderson endures injuries and more to lead UM

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Life doesn't always pan out the way we plan. No matter how well things are going, adversity always seems to be lurking in the background, waiting to jump out and ruin it all. Massachusetts hockey team senior captain Matt Anderson knows too well that at any moment, it can all come crashing down.

This weekend's Hockey East tournament quarterfinal matchup with Maine could very well be the end of a tumultuous career in Amherst. Although it's only been five years, to Anderson, it must feel like a lifetime. He's been through so much during his time here that he could probably write a book.

It started at the tail-end of his stellar freshman season. Matt was one of the brightest rookie scorers in the nation when the first of two major injuries struck. He took a check during the first round of the Hockey East playoffs from Maine's Derek Damon that sent him hurtling into the boards at an awkward angle. Anderson's arm caught behind his head, shredding it and forcing him to spend the next 18 months rehabbing. The injury and offseason surgery forced him to redshirt the 2003-04 season.

Matt's eventual sophomore season started off better than anyone could have expected. Through the year's first 18 games, he had 20 points before snapping his ankle in early December. UMass struggled so mightily without its premier scorer that Anderson continued to lead the Minutemen in scoring for some time and even finished the season as their fourth-leading scorer.

Anderson's spirits were low to say the least. He began focusing more on his schoolwork, and even that became too much. He says during that time he was doing too much work and it began to wear him down.

"When hockey got taken away I kind of pushed myself in other areas," he says. "When I hurt my shoulder I kind of hit the gas academically and kind of overburdened myself academically."

Going into last year, Anderson decided it was time for a change. Prior to playing at UMass, Matt had always worn No. 16, but when he arrived for his first year, the No. 12 sweater was available so he opted for that. He went back to No. 16 last season, hoping to leave behind the anguish he suffered with the No. 12.

Although he was healthy during his junior campaign a season ago, Matt couldn't recapture the level of play he enjoyed just one year prior.

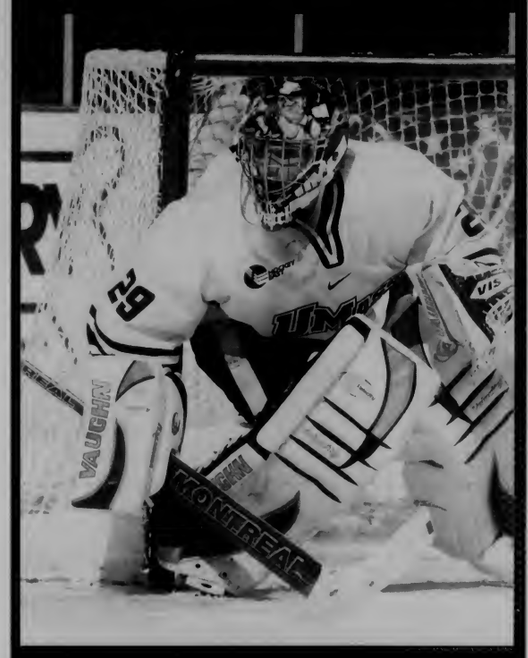
This season was going to be different. The absence of dazzling numbers last season could be chalked up to getting back in the swing of things after his ankle healed. That was supposed to be behind Matt, 2006-07 was going to change all that. But that didn't happen, not right away at least.

Anderson couldn't put much together while playing his usual position – the pivot on the first line. He started off the year relatively well, scoring five points

See ANDERSON on page 9

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Jon Quick, Goaltender



UMass goaltender Jon Quick has earned this week's Athlete of the Week for his performance in the Massachusetts hockey team's two-game sweep over Maine this past weekend to earn home ice in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs.

The sophomore made 59 saves in just two games, leading the Mass Attack past the Black Bears, 3-1 and 5-3 on Friday and Saturday. He ended the weekend with a 2.00 goals-against average and a .937 save percentage.

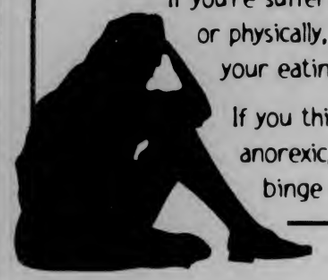
Quick will see the Black Bears at least two more times this weekend as the two teams square off in a best-of-three playoff series.

Food as friend?
Food as enemy?

If your relationship with food feels out of control

If you're suffering, emotionally or physically, because of your eating

If you think you might be anorexic, bulimic or a binge eater



You could be one of the estimated 5 million people in the U.S. with an eating disorder. Eating disorders are serious health problems – physically and emotionally destructive, and potentially fatal.

But confidential help is here, right on campus!

The Eating Disorders Clinic at University Health Services uses a team approach to support the medical, emotional and nutritional needs of women and men with eating disorders.

Take the first step toward healing – call 577-5414 for more information or an appointment.

UMASS AMHERST
UHS Health Education
577-5181
www.umass.edu/uhs

UMass Athletic Wrap

Sponsored by

University Health Services
Health Education

UMass Athletics
Calendar of Events

This Weekend

Friday, March 9

TENNIS
at Binghamton
5:00 p.m.
Binghamton, NY

BASEBALL
at UCF
6:30 p.m.
Orlando, FL

HOCKEY
vs. Maine
7:00 p.m.
Amherst, MA

SOFTBALL
Adidas Spring Break Invitational: March 8-11

SKIING
USCSA Nationals: March 8-11

Saturday, March 10

MEN'S LACROSSE
at Harvard
1:00 p.m.
Cambridge, MA

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
vs. Albany
2:00 p.m.
Amherst, MA

BASEBALL
at UCF
6:30 p.m.
Orlando, FL

HOCKEY
vs. Maine
7:00 p.m.
Amherst, MA

Sunday, March 11

BASEBALL
at UCF
12:00 p.m.
Orlando, FL

HOCKEY
vs. Maine
7:00 p.m.
Amherst, MA

KAREN WINK/COLLEGIAN

Next Week

Tuesday, March 13

MEN'S LACROSSE
at Albany
3:00 p.m.
Albany, NY

TENNIS
at Harvard
3:00 p.m.
Cambridge, MA

Wednesday, March 14

BASEBALL
vs. BC
3:00 p.m.
Amherst, MA

University Health Services
Health Education

UMass reaches NIT
Page 10

Light/Wave features
Faculty cast Page 5

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian

New England's Largest College Daily Est 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 54 LO: 33 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, MARCH 12, 2007

Boston Bound

The Massachusetts hockey team celebrates after its sweep of Maine in the quarterfinals of the Hockey East playoffs. UMass moves on to face New Hampshire in the semifinals at the TD Banknorth Garden on Friday.

Students are left in the dark

Residents get no answers to second campus power outage

By Vincent Capone
Collegian Correspondent

The second power outage in under a month occurred this weekend in North Residential Area and the library at the University of Massachusetts.

On Saturday night around 10:45 p.m. residents of the North Apartments were left with no electricity. Several students said the blackout only lasted about three minutes.

During this short time, students left their apartments to find out what was going on, but were only left with confusion.

"It was really weird and scary," recalls Tricia Antoine of North building D. "I went to go downstairs to see if we had to leave the building, but no one was there. No one has told us why it happened."

Campus officials said they are uncertain of the source of the blackout.

Residents recall feeling puzzled and surprised when the lights went out. Most noticed the outside lights around the living area were still lit, but other buildings in the North complex were also dark. Some students thought evacuation was part of a blackout procedure and proceeded to do so. But when they sought guidance from Apartment Living Assistants or North officials, no one was to be found.

Those who left their rooms returned minutes later to returned power but still no explanation only adding to the confusion.

As of now, students are still left in the dark as to what caused the short power outage. Some residents blame the campus's power supply or a glitch in the electrical system. Others, like Jenny Chen, thought they were the cause of the outage.

"I had no idea what was happening," said Chen. "I thought I had blown a fuse or something."

The power quickly returned after a few minutes and most students recall just shrugging the outage off and returning to their prior engagements.

"I was confused for a bit but the lights came back on after a few minutes," said Antoine. "After that I returned to normal."

— Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu

Colleges nationwide begin to adopt smoke-free environments

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

According to an anti-smoking organization and a recent article in USA TODAY, no fewer than 43 campuses nationwide have gone completely smoke free.

Americans for Nonsmokers Rights states that most residential schools have been slow to pick up the trend, but some universities like the University of North Dakota with an enrollment of 13,000, have fully adopted a smoke-free student atmosphere. In the USA TODAY article, University President Chuck Kupchella states, "Smokers will still have rights, just not on our campus."

In 1997, 28 percent of college-aged people were smokers compared to today's 33 percent.

While the University of Massachusetts allows smoking in designated areas, University Health Services Director Bernette A. Melby said of the smoke-free atmosphere, "It's a good idea.

"Limiting the areas where people can smoke certainly has an impact on the number of smokers on campus," Melby said. "However, we also want to be on the forefront of students' stop smoking decisions. Not only do we want to convince people to stop smoking, but we also are devoted to helping them in the quitting process."

Currently, smoking is prohibited in residence halls and areas of the campus where nonsmokers cannot avoid the exposure to smoke. Also, the sale of tobacco products and the free distribution of these products by vendors is also not allowed by University policy, according to a motion dated Nov. 20.

See SMOKE on page 3

Chuck Kupchella is president of the University of North Dakota, one of the 43 campuses nationwide to adopt a smoke-free atmosphere.

Earthfoods Café gives alternatives

As the trend of vegetarianism increases, Earth Foods Cafe provides healthy, meat-alternative entrees for students on campus. Their funds go directly to Grass Roots Organizing Works, a local community organization.

By Felicia Whatley
Collegian Correspondent

There is no specific labeling or federal regulation for the word "vegetarianism" in the United States. According to Geraldine June of the Office of Nutritional Products, Labeling and Dietary Supplements at the Food and Drug Administration, vegetarian companies advocate and educate people about vegetarianism. But students at the University of Massachusetts enjoy the fruits of their labor in a growing trend at Earth Foods Café.

Earth Foods not only provides a source of affordable healthy meal alternatives, but is also using its funds to give back to the community while giving students experience in running a business.

"We use fresh produce and everything is made from scratch. A few of the favorites are macaroni and cheese, maple ginger tofu and tofu pot pie," said Jamie L. St Jean, a BDIC Holistic Health and Society major and co-manager of Earth Foods.

While collegians debate what constitutes as vegetarianism, Earth Foods redefines college survival food with an escape from trans-fatty, deep-fried animals and pepperoni pizza. The café offers a fresh approach to eating healthy and fighting the

See CAFE on page 3

Budget cuts hurt 'Something Every Friday' student program

By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

A program on the University of Massachusetts that promotes an alternative to drinking and partying on Friday nights is receiving the short end of the stick when it comes to funding.

The Something Every Friday program – a program put on by the Student Activities Center that usually consists of a movie every Friday evening in the Campus Center – does its part to enable a safer way of socializing.

When the program first began in the early '90s, stand-up comedians and live band performances entertained students. However, due to budget cuts, the program had to drop them as well as their matinee shows.

The program is funded by the Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life, with a small budget of $20,000 per semester used for renting films, a popping machine to provide 200-plus students with free popcorn and soda every Friday and Sunday night in the Cape Cod Lounge. Booking an auditorium week after week, though, is out of the program's price range.

Even the student staff has been cut from eight to three members, according to Henley. The staff includes Rudy Guerine, Maria Gutanova and Adrianna Rodriguez. Their jobs are to set up the film on both Fridays at 9 p.m. and Sundays at 8 p.m. They are also in charge of pushing the program's marketing – hanging up posters and promoting the shows through the UMass Web site and dormitory TV channel.

But despite these slashes, the program has become part of hundreds of students' Friday night routine after over ten years of running.

"It's a great program, and it has become a regular thing for students to do on the weekend," said Henley.

After a two-week delay, the Academy Award winning film, Happy Feet, was finally shown Friday night to a full crowd in the Student Union.

According to Lloyd Henley, Assistant Director of the Center for Student Development, Warner Bros. pulled Happy Feet's initial release two weeks ago, and last-minute changes resulted in the showing of The Fountain instead. Despite occasional studio postponements, Henley went on to describe Something Every Friday as a growing success.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

Fans of pi create own holiday

By Erin McClam
Associated Press

This is a story about love. About inscrutable complexity and remarkable simplicity, about the promise of forever. It is about obsession and devotion, and grand gestures and 4,000-word love letters.

It is about a curious group of people with an almost religious zeal for a mind-numbing string of numbers. Actually one number, made up of a chain that is known — so far — to be more than one trillion digits long.

They are the acolytes of the church of pi.

And once a year many of them gather to talk about pi, rhapsodize about it, eat pi-themed foods, have pi recitation contests and, just maybe, feel a little less sheepish about their unusual passion.

That day falls on Wednesday this year: March 14. Or 3.14. Obviously.

The question is why, of course. And if you ask the fans of pi why, a startling number of them will come back with the same question: "Why climb Mount Everest?" Because it's there.

This is how Akira Haraguchi, a 60-year-old mental health counselor in Japan, puts it: "What I am aiming at is not just memorizing figures. I am thrilled by seeking a story in pi."

He said this one day last fall after accurately reciting pi to 100,000 decimal places. It took him 16 hours. He does not hold the Guinness world record, only because he has not submitted the required documentation to Guinness. But he has his story.

A brief math refresher: Pi, a simple concept, the relationship between a circle's circumference and diameter. Multiply the diameter by pi — 3.14159, to use a crude approximation that would make many of the people in this story blanch — and you get the circumference.

Supercomputers have computed pi to more than a trillion decimal places, looking always for a pattern to unlock its mystery. And for centuries, the number has fascinated mathematicians.

And then there are people like Mothers are less shy about their fixation.

A software engineer in Virginia named Mike Keith wrote a poem to pi, a "piem." A love letter, in a way. To say that it is a something to behold is an

See PI on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 98

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Adam Saigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Herrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydnee Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolsanits
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Bissonnaukaul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Ivan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY'S MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LEE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PURCHASED BY SPAN 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN RE-INCORPORATED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADDITIONAL RATE AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500. RETURNS $.30 A.M. ONE 3.30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt O'Rourke

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Sorority shake up puts focus on image obsession

By Martha Irvine
Associated Press

CHICAGO — With a reputation for emphasizing brains over conventional beauty, the women of the Delta Zeta sorority at Indiana's DePauw University endured the jokes and unkind nicknames: their chapter was widely known among students as the "dog house."

"As a sorority, they had a different image on campus," says Cindy Babington, the university's dean of students. "Student culture was not kind to them."

Obsessing about looks has long been a rite of passage for young people — well before the days, nearly two decades ago, when tennis star Andre Agassi hrashly proclaimed that "image is everything" in an advertising campaign.

Today, though, some worry that the fixation on outward appearance has gotten out of control — with young people's ever-increasing focus on everything from celebrity and skinny jeans to marketing themselves on MySpace.com, Facebook.com and YouTube.com.

The women of Delta Zeta know all about the pressure. With chapter membership dwindling, sorority leaders recently took drastic measures. They kicked out 23 members from the stately brick mansion near campus, drawing accusations that the women's weight, looks and race didn't fit the image the sorority was going for.

COURTESY OF THEASTC.ORG

The Delta Zeta sorority, whose seal is shown above, has often been criticized for its obsession with outer looks as a rite of passage into the sorority.

Sorority leaders insist that those who left weren't committed to recruiting. "It was not a beauty contest," says Casey Jolley, the chapter's interim president and one of only five members who remain at the house.

But Rachel Pappas, a DePauw junior who was among several other members who left in protest, finds that hard to believe—and calls discrimination based on image "the new racism."

"When you look at all these things and see that all of them have been eliminated, you wonder what it could be other than the image issue," Pappas says.

That the evictions happened so publicly, she adds, now provides the chance to address the larger issue —and a newfound brazenness that cultural trend-watchers say is prompting more people to freely voice their biases.

These days, "American Idol" dedicates hours of airtime to auditions in which judges openly chortle and make fun of would-be contestants' looks, style and personality quirks. Taking a cue from the grocery tabloids, entertainment magazines and TV shows now regularly pick apart celebrities' appearance and attire.

It's no wonder, one professor says, that students feel free to mock those who don't fit their image ideal.

"It's out from under the rocks. They're saying what so many people think and believe," says Thomas Cottle, an education professor at Boston University who has studied the way appearance affects public affirmation. "It's tragic."

There have been a few successful attempts to broaden the beauty ideal.

TV viewers have embraced the bushy-browed, braces-wearing "Ugly Betty," while advertiser Dove has successfully launched a "Campaign for Real Beauty" that includes women with tummy rolls and wrinkles.

But, Cottle says, those examples go against the flow.

Recent studies have found that a growing number of young adults are more narcissistic and materialistic than their predecessors. And more of them are seeking spa treatments, plastic surgery and anti-aging remedies at younger and younger ages.

It's gotten to the point that image is the "currency" on which youth culture runs, says Jessica Weiner, a Los Angeles-based author and public speaker who specializes in young people and self-esteem.

"We have flung so far out of control in this society based on appearances," Weiner says. "We're incredibly more focussed on image than we were even 10 years ago."

Denise Fedewa, an executive vice president and planning director at ad agency Leo Burnett USA, also has noticed an obsession with image in her work in other countries, such as Japan and India, where more career opportunities are opening up for women.

"It's interesting how much they rely on designer brands and having certain accessories that say certain things about them – to say, 'I'm a woman on the rise and doing well,'" Fedewa says.

Not that focussing on image is always a bad thing. Many young people who are starting careers, for instance, work at looking more professional.

"My appearance is not only important, but crucial," says Tyler Barnett, a 23-year-old Los Angeles resident who started a public relations firm and often works with clients over 40 who ask how old he is.

He tells him he's "not quite 30" – and says he's able to earn their respect partly because he dresses the part of a seasoned professional.

That's fine, Weiner says.

The problems come when people get so wrapped up in image that they lose themselves. "They're trying to emulate an image given to them that's really not encouraging them to discover who they are, truthfully," Weiner says.

It's that much worse, she adds, when discrimination based on image becomes a "very public hazing," as she believes it did at DePauw.

Young people elsewhere concede that they often can be one another's worst enemy.

Joelle Epps, an 18-year-old New Yorker, sees it all the time at her Bronx high school – particularly pressure for girls to "wear piles of makeup" and sexy clothing.

Phil Lawson, a senior at Centre College in Danville, Ky., says he and his fraternity buddies often comment on people's looks and weight.

"We jokingly do that stuff –and it often goes unchecked," he says. "But in the back of my mind, I think about it."

Once an overweight kid, Lawson knows what it's like to be teased – and yet, he doesn't always feel comfortable calling his friends on their comments. "I think we could all be more sympathetic," he says.

Casey Jolley is interim president of the Delta Zeta sorority of DePauw University, which recently kicked out 23 members because of their image.

CORRECTION

In the News section of Friday's edition of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, there was an error in the article titled, "Tempers flare at ROTC Rally." The article stated, "...a list of prospective recruits was taken off a ROTC table by members of the Radical Student Union." The incident cited was alleged and should not have been stated as a fact.

Mom charged with kids' murder

A San Antonio police officer walks around the home where the decomposing bodies of two young children, between the ages of six months and two years, were found wrapped in plastic bags and placed under a house.

SAN ANTONIO — The mother of two young children whose decomposing bodies were found wrapped in plastic bags beneath a house this week was arrested Saturday and charged with capital murder.

Valerie Lopez, 19, was arrested early Saturday along with her boyfriend, authorities said.

Lopez confessed to beating to death Sariyah Garcia, her 18-month-old daughter, and hiding her body beneath her home, Police Chief William McManus said. Garcia died Christmas Eve.

Lopez told investigators she killed Sebastian Lopez, her 5-month-old son, when she accidentally rolled over him about two months later, District Attorney Susan Reed said. Lopez also hid his body under the house.

The boyfriend, Jerry Salazar, faces a charge of injury to a child by omission. He was aware Lopez was abusing her children, police said.

Police had been searching for the couple since Tuesday night when the children's bodies were found by residents of a triplex who were trying to locate the source of a foul odor they had been smelling for as long as two weeks.

Family members had little contact with Lopez since she had started living with Salazar, but friends reported seeing her looking as if she had been beaten up, her sister said.

An official at the Bexar County Jail said she did not know if Lopez had an attorney. She said Lopez's bail had been set at $10 million.

—Associated Press

Kidnapped infant found in N.M.

By Betsy Blaney
Associated Press

LUBBOCK, Texas — A newborn kidnapped from a Lubbock hospital by a woman wearing hospital scrubs was found safe Sunday about 100 miles away in New Mexico, and police had a suspect under arrest.

Four-day-old Mychael Darthard-Dawodu was found in a home in Clovis, N.M., by police following up on tips, a day after she was taken from Covenant Lakeside Hospital. She was later reunited with her parents.

"It's a joyous time," Gwen Stafford, senior vice president of Covenant Health System, said at a news conference Sunday. "This has been a roller coaster of emotions. Today there's not many happy stories; this is certainly one in Lubbock, Texas."

Rayshaun Parson, 21, of Clovis, was arrested on suspicion of kidnapping and jailed in Curry County, N.M., where she had been interviewed by Lubbock and FBI investigators, authorities said. Federal charges also could be pursued, Lubbock police Lt. Scott Hudgens said.

Before being flown back to Texas and her parents, Caisha Darthard and Michael A. Dawodu, Mychael was checked at Plains Regional Medical Center in Clovis and found to be in good condition, Clovis police Lt. James Schoeffel said. She had earlier been reported to be suffering from jaundice, a common complication in newborns in which a buildup of pigment in the blood causes a yellowing of the skin.

The infant was kidnapped early Saturday by a woman posing as a medical worker who walked out of Covenant Lakeside with the five-pound baby hidden in her purse, police said.

Law enforcement officials had received information from more than one source that the baby was in Clovis, about 100 miles northwest of Lubbock, said FBI spokeswoman Lori Bailey in Dallas. Bailey declined to elaborate because the investigation was continuing.

Police in Clovis conducted surveillance on an area pinpointed by at least one of the tips and found the baby in a home with an adult female early Sunday, Hudgens said. The suspect was found at another residence in Clovis, he said.

An extradition hearing was scheduled for Monday in Clovis. Phone numbers at Parson's address had been disconnected Sunday.

Hospital surveillance footage showed a woman wearing blue and flower-print hospital scrubs and a gray, puffy jacket with a hood walking out of the hospital around 1:20 a.m. Saturday. She fled in a red pickup truck, possibly with a male accomplice, police said.

The abductor had gone into Mychael's mother's room several times before the baby was taken, telling her the baby needed tests, Stafford said.

"As soon as the baby and this security piece were separated we were alarmed and knew," Stafford said. "That's what enabled us to be able to get the visual of the pickup."

Susanne Moore, a former Covenant nurse who had a baby Friday at the same hospital, told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal that the hospital placed an electronic band on her newborn girl's ankle. She said she was told that if the baby were taken too close to a door or elevator, a sensor would cause the door to lock or the elevator to shut down.

SNOE.DOWN
Winter Music Festival
MARCH 23-25, 2007 LAKE PLACID, NEW YORK

moe. The Disco Biscuits Little Feat
Brazilian Girls The SLIP Tea Leaf Green
The Brew Brothers Past Casual Fiasco Gordon Stone Band
Hot Day at the Zoo Lucy Vincent Peter Prince
Sam Kininger Band Vorcza
Gratefully Deadicated Sound System

On Sale Now!
All Ages Show
Lift Ticket Packages Available!

Jägermeister Ketel One Vodka Yuengling

Tickets: Olympic Center Box Office
By Phone: (518) 523-3330 Online: www.tickets.com www.snoedown.com

ATTENTION: SKI CLUBS, FRATS & SORORITIES
FOR SPECIAL GROUP RATES CALL 518-523-3330

Earth Foods Café supports campus vegetarian lifestyle

CAFE from page 1

"Freshman 15" and serves new solutions to eating a balanced meal.

"It's a nice atmosphere and a beautiful place to hang out. You don't have to be a vegetarian to eat here. I'm not," said co-manager John A. Sivel.

The café also gives students a taste of running a business. Employees at Earth Foods enjoy a piece of the action, in a co-management collective run business that has been working on campus since 1976. Each student employee is a co-owner of Earth Foods; they learn how to prepare, cook, balance the books, serve new innovative vegetarian meals and enhance some of the classic favorites.

"It's inexpensive for the quality of food. I would recommend a diet low in fat, high in vegetables, but one does not necessarily have to be a vegetarian to lose weight," said St. Jean.

Eating a vegetarian diet can cut cholesterol. Only animal products like dairy and eggs contain cholesterol. Vegetable products do not contain cholesterol.

St. Jean showed the soybean margarine they use at Earth Foods. It had no hydrogenated oil, no trans fatty acids and good HDL cholesterol.

Traditionally, vegetarians do not eat meat, fish or poultry. Vegans are highly disciplined vegetarians that do not eat or use animal products, which include milk, cheese, eggs, wool and leather.

Earth Foods answers the question, what about protein? Through a combination of alternate sources of proteins can be met with a vegetarian diet. A mixture of proteins daily can provide enough essential amino acids, according to "Position of the American Dietetic Association: Vegetarian Diets" JADA, June 2003.

The ADA confirmed that all known nutritional needs can be met with a vegetarian diet. A healthy vegetarian diet includes eating a variety of fruits, vegetables, leafy greens, whole grain products, nuts, seeds and legumes.

Common protein sources served up at this café includes beans, lentils, tempen, chickpeas and peas. Iron can found in dried fruits, baked potatoes, mushrooms, cashews, dried beans, spinach, chard, tofu, tempeh and bulgur.

Meals on the menu include veggie lasagna and gingerbread, tofu pot pie and oatmeal surprise cookies, pasta with walnut ricotta sauce and cornbread, Mexican corn bean pie and lemon squares and tofu nut hurgers and coconut bars.

"We don't open a hunch of cans and dump it into a bowl. It's all fresh, clean, prepared each day with care. We take the time to taste everything," said Sivel.

"It's all homemade. I like that it is a collectively run business. I have the power to interact with members serving food made with love," said co-worker Zachary A. Grey.

A few paychecks ago, Earth Foods Café managers chipped in half their tips amounting to over $400. They donated it to Grassroots Community Development program that assisted people in New Orleans. They understood by dishing out a few dollars, they could help others sustain a normal life in the wake of uprooting of Hurricane Katrina.

"We are trying to spend time on ecological issues. We try to buy local products that support local farmers. We use many USDA organic products that does not negatively impact the environment and supports the soil," said Sivel, chef at Earth Foods.

Earth Foods Café continues to grow its legacy at UMass as a student run establishment that cares about the environment and the student body.

Felicia Whatley can be reached at destinyfel a gmail.com

Comedian Jeni dies in apparent suicide

By Ana Beatriz Cholo
Associated Press

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — Richard Jeni, a standup comedian who played to sold-out crowds, was a regular on the "Tonight Show" and appeared in movies, died of a gunshot wound in an apparent suicide, police said Sunday.

Police found the 45-year-old comedian alive but gravely injured in a West Hollywood home when they responded to a call Saturday morning from Jeni's girlfriend, Los Angeles Police Officer Norma Eisenman said.

Eisenman said the caller told police: "My boyfriend shot himself in the face."

Jeni died at a nearby hospital.

Eisenman said suicide had not been officially confirmed and the investigation was continuing.

Jeni regularly toured the country with a standup act and had starred in several HBO comedy specials, most recently "A Big Steaming Pile of Me" during the 2005-06 season.

Another HBO special, "Platypus Man," won a Cable ACE award for best standup comedy special, and formed the basis for his UPN sitcom of the same name, which ran for one season.

Jeni's movie credits included The Mask, in which he played Jim Carrey's best friend, The Aristocrats, National Lampoon's Dad's Week Off and An Alan Smithee Film: Burn, Hollywood, Burn.

He had guest appearances in the TV shows "Everybody Hates Chris," "Married: With Children," and updated versions of the game shows "Hollywood Squares" and "Match Game."

The Brooklyn-born comic first received national attention in 1990 with the Showtime special "Richard Jeni: Boy From New York City." Two years later, his "Crazy From the Heat" special attracted the highest ratings in Showtime's history.

Jeni became a frequent guest on "The Tonight Show" during Johnny Carson's reign and continued to appear after Jay Leno took over as host.

He also wrote comic material for the 2005 Academy Awards, which was hosted by his friend Chris Rock.

Richard Jeni poses with Chris Rock. Jeni, who was a regular on the "Tonight Show," died from a gunshot wound to the face in an apparent suicide.

Pi fans celebrate

PI from page 1

understatement: It is nearly 4,000 words long — and the length in letters of each word corresponds to pi's digits.

In other words, if you can remember the poem — which riffs on T.S. Eliot's "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock," Act V of "Hamlet" and Edgar Allan Poe's "The Raven," among other texts — you too can recite pi.

"One: A Poem: A Raven," it begins (3-1-4-1-5): "Midnights so dreary, tired and weary, silently pondering volumes extolling all by-now obsolete lore. During my rather long nap — the weirdest tap! An ominous vibrating sound disturbing my chamber's antedoor."

Keith says he thinks of himself only as "an average pi nut." He figures he knows maybe 100 pi digits off the top of his head. "My daughter knows about 50," he adds. "She's 15."

There are logical gathering places for people like this, and one of them is the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where, on March 14, students have been known to wish each other — out loud — a happy Pi Day.

The school plays a role in encouraging this: In the past it has tried to mail its acceptance letters on March 14. (It didn't work out this year. And last year, when an MIT official wrote on an admissions blog that it probably wouldn't work out then either, he was greeted with disappointment. "Pi Day seems so romantic," one prospective student wrote.)

There's a popular chant, an MIT rallying cry, that includes "3.14159." (It rhymes with "Cosine, secant, tan and Bryan Owens, an MIT senior, says the ability to recite pi is a sort of bragging right, a coin of the realm.

And that is why, like the Irish on St. Patrick's Day or Italians on Columbus Day, this Wednesday, 3-14, in many cases at 1:59 p.m., pi enthusiasts will have their moment in the sun.

At the Exploratorium in San Francisco, there will be pies to eat, people wearing pi jewelry, more beads — color-coded by digit — added to the pi string. And the celebrants will gather at a sort of pi shrine, a brass plaque engraved with pi's first 100 digits.

It may be a stretch to say that pi has achieved a kind of cultural cachet, but it is true that, as an obsession, it's not just for math geeks anymore. Given by makes a Pi perfume. Kate Bush sings out its digits in a song.

UMass is not a smoke-free campus

SMOKE from page 1

2002 from the University Health Council.

"Secondhand smoke causes approximately 3,400 lung cancer deaths and 22,700- 69,600 heart disease deaths in adult non-smokers in the United States each year," according to Phillipmorrisusa.com. The Web site also claims that companies with newly instituted clean air regulations have seen a decrease in absenteeism and more productivity – both areas important to college students.

"25-30 percent of students start off as social smokers and start in college," the site says. "They plan to quit at graduation but get hooked. We offer stop-smoking and prevention programs to help these people because as they enter the workforce, they find that they have to pay higher premiums on health and life insurance."

While this may be true, some students still wish to have the decision be theirs. Student smokers argue that while non-smokers have the right to clean air, smokers should have the right to smoke where they live. Those in residence halls would not only have to leave their rooms to smoke, but also leave the building and go for a walk if UMass were to go smoke free.

Indiana University's newspaper, the Indiana Daily Student, says that the smoking prohibition is a violation of personal liberties, and the Facebook group, "Preserve our Rights... Say no to Smoke-Free Campus," says, "Banning smoking indoors is both smart and logical, however asking for an entire smoke-free campus is a clear example of stepping past our boundaries and restricting rights."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn a gmail.com

Colombia protests as Bush arrives

A demonstrator hooded in a United States flag kneels in front of riot police during protests against the visit of U.S. President George W. Bush in Bogota Sunday.

By Tom Mosk
Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia — About 150 protesters attacked riot police with rocks and metal barriers and ripped down lamposts in Colombia's capital on Sunday, just moments after President Bush landed for a six-hour visit.

Some 200 helmeted police in full body armor responded with water cannon and tear gas and reclaimed the street, about a mile from the presidential palace, hanging their batons against riot shields as they marched forward.

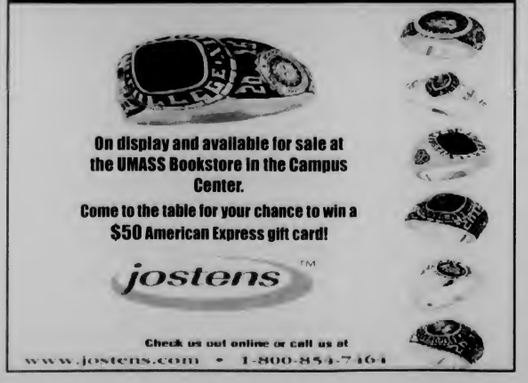
Some of the rioters later rampaged on Bogota's main avenue, breaking shop windows and ripping computers from bank offices. The rioters had broken away from a larger group of 2,000 protesters. At least one police officer was injured and 35 people arrested, said a city police spokesman who insisted he not be further identified.

The country was otherwise unusually peaceful.

A small bomb exploded Sunday morning in the lawless Pacific port of Buenaventura, injuring two civilians. The police blamed the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, or FARC, which has been fighting the government for 42 years but which President Alvaro Uribe has put on the defensive.

Anti-Bush protesters say that $700 million in mostly military U.S. aid to Colombia fuels the country's 50-year conflict and encourages human rights abuses by this country's armed forces.

UMASS CLASS RINGS



On display and available for sale at the UMASS Bookstore in the Campus Center.
Come to the table for your chance to win a $50 American Express gift card!
jostens™
Check us out online or call us at www.jostens.com • 1-800-854-7464

SPRING SPECIAL

SUPERCUTS®
every time
AMHERST
Amherst Plaza Shopping Center
(next to Big Y Supermarket)
181 University Drive, Rte. 9
(413) 259-1135
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
Call Ahead Service available
Ask about our COLOR and WAXING SERVICES

$10
Super Haircut
(reg. $13.95)
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSHC

15% OFF
Hair Products
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSCS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 12, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Scoot'-ing aside Libby

Melissa Garber

In July 2003, Valerie Plame's name and status were leaked in Robert Novak's Washington Post column. Plame was a CIA operative who had held non-official cover status and was forced to resign when her name was leaked.

But under the Intelligence Identities Protection Act, CIA agents are supposed to be protected from people leaking their names for political reasons. Apparently, top ranking White House officials are not held accountable when they breach the act. White House Deputy Chief of Staff Karl Rove reportedly told Chris Matthews, host of MSNBC's "Hardball" that Plame's name was "fair game."

Consider, also, the following.

In February 2002, Plame's husband, former Ambassador, Joseph C. Wilson, was sent to Niger to investigate whether or not Saddam Hussein had purchased uranium yellowcake from the African nation. Wilson reported, "It was highly doubtful that any such transaction had ever taken place."

George W. Bush dismissed Wilson's findings in his 2003 State of the Union address, claiming, "The British government has learned that Saddam Hussein recently sought significant quantities of uranium from Africa."

The reports claiming the uranium transaction between Iraq and Niger were determined to be forgeries by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) a month after the U.S. invaded Iraq.

Then, in July of that year, the New York Times published an op-ed written by Wilson titled, "What I didn't find in Africa." In the article, Wilson alleged that the Bush administration exaggerated the Iraqi threat to justify the war.

Eight days later, Novak revealed that Plame was a CIA operative in a column questioning the White House's choice of using Wilson for the Niger mission. Novak wrote: "Wilson never worked for the CIA, but his wife, Valerie Plame, is an agency operative on weapons of mass destruction. Two senior administration officials told me that Wilson's wife suggested sending him to Niger to investigate the Italian report. The CIA says its counter proliferation officials selected Wilson and asked his wife to contact him. 'I will not answer any question about my wife,' Wilson told me."

That act was an obvious attempt to undermine Wilson's report on the situation in Iraq.

On March 6, I. Lewis (Scooter) Libby, Vice President Dick Cheney's former Chief of Staff was indicted on five felony counts and was charged with four. Libby leaked

Why did these White House officials feel it was necessary to disclose Plame's CIA status to so many members of the media?

Plame's name to several members of the press and then lied when question about it. Libby claimed that Tim Russert, host of MSNBC's "Meet the Press," had told him that Plame worked for the CIA and that he had forgotten that Cheney had informed him of it months earlier.

Libby was charged as the lone criminal in a convoluted scandal. Cheney, Karl Rove and Richard Armitage should have been charged with violating the Intelligence Identities Protection Act along with Libby.

Conveniently, Libby was not charged with violating that act and the aforementioned high-ranking White House officials got away with maliciously leaking Plame's name and putting her, and the other CIA agents she worked with, in danger.

A statement released by the Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington in response to the verdict in the Libby trial, Plame and Wilson noted that they will continue to pursue their civil suit against the aforementioned players. The statement said the civil suit was contingent upon whether or not the defendants violated the constitutional rights of Valerie and Joe Wilson by making those disclosures "in a concerted effort to retaliate against Joe Wilson for revealing the falsity of the president's rationale for the Iraq war."

Looking at the aforementioned facts, if Wilson had not dismantled, the White House's case for war in Iraq with the information he had gathered regarding Iraq's lack of uranium purchasing, would Plame's name have been disclosed to the media? Plame's name was leaked in Novak's column, just eight days after Wilson's op-ed.

Novak was not the only member of the media to receive the information, either. Judith Miller, Bob Woodward and Matthew Cooper were also informed of Plame's status.

Why did these White House officials feel it was necessary to disclose Plame's CIA status to so many members of the media?

Wilson had decades of experience in Iraq and Niger and was sent to Niger in 2002 to determine whether or not Iraq had been purchasing uranium yellowcakes to make weapons of mass destruction. Wilson reported that he found no evidence supporting that claim and the White House ignored him.

When Wilson's op-ed disputing the White House's justifications for the war in Iraq was published, the White House retaliated. It is no coincidence that Novak's column appeared a little over a week later.

The leak was clearly politically motivated. So who is the Intelligence Identities Protection Act supposed to protect if not Plame?

Melissa Garber can be reached at mlgarber@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CORRECTING CANNABIS CONCEPTIONS

By the way, in Mr. Pascucci's column he mentions marijuana being "legal" in Amsterdam. This is a big misconception, it may be decriminalized, but it certainly is not legal. The cafe's are allowed to keep from 30 to 500 grams on hand to sell in small quantities, but the Catch-22 is they are not allowed to legally grow or transport anywhere near that amount. There is much more detail to this very grey area

Louis Santiago
Freehold, N.J.

In support of UMass' ROTC, Republicans

Brad DeFlumeri

Last Thursday, the University of Massachusetts Republican Club staged a rally in support of ROTC and in support of the right of military recruiters to recruit on public college campuses. ROTC and military recruitment are, apparently, political issues to many at this campus.

Our seemingly innocuous words about the importance of the military were met by an onslaught of character-defaming and highly offensive insults that do not need repeating. Such childish and unproductive antics are counterproductive and highly damaging to the incisive debate so badly needed at many college campuses, including the ones out here in Western Mass that are sheltered and hidden from the realities of the real world.

As one highly vocal military, not war, protester, told a local television station, these (meaning the Republican students) fringe students in support of the military in no way represent the overwhelming majority of the students at UMass. Indeed he is correct and I applaud his honesty for forthrightly admitting his disdain for the military. What we need are more students like this one to stop hiding behind opposition to the War in Iraq as a front to their open hatred of the military. Such flimsy arguments about the uselessness of the military, about how the military eats up a disproportionate portion of the national budget and about how the military is just a tool for American imperialism, however intellectually indefensible they may be, are not only welcome but badly needed.

Not only do these lies actually bolster the case for why the military is indeed vital to our very survival and defense, but so too do they reveal the true agenda of the "war" protesters: virulent anti-Americanism. America does indeed possess many characteristics that would invite hatred from around the globe; principally, rampant acceptance of homosexuality, over-sexualization, abortion and a disregard for the fundamental tenets of a tradition family. So maybe I, too, can be labeled anti-American for thinking that our enemies abroad have a viable argument against our support for the aforementioned.

However, one reason why America should never be hated, either externally or domestically, is its military. What our military indisputably does is protect the right of the anti-war protestors to bask in the cover of the First Amendment, openly profess their hatred for their country and not be shot by a patriotic American. Additionally, the military protects the right of leading Hollywood moguls and actors and actresses to travel abroad and trample on our flag and scream obscenities about our President.

One reason why America should never be hated, either externally or domestically, is its military.

You may be wondering why or how the military is responsible for preserving the rights of the aforementioned. The answer is simple, if not for the military's valiant defense of our interests and rights abroad, then we would not enjoy the comfort and security within which we exercise these rights at home. That is, if our brave sailors, soldiers, airmen and marines were not laying it on the line in the defense of America on foreign soil, then none of us in the United States would be privy to the protections of free speech, protest and assembly as spelled out so eloquently by the framers of the Constitution.

Interestingly, many of the hypocritical protesters chanted "fund Walter Reed" as I illuminated the merits of ROTC. Indeed, Congress should mandate more funding for the Walter Reed hospital very quickly. However, to blame a lack of funding for the military on the military is to misunderstand the role of Congress, the Constitution and the premise of civilian control of the armed forces.

Maybe the hippie-protesters didn't realize that Congress controls funding for the military precisely because Congress doesn't understand that they control funding for the military, as the Democratic Congressional majority has clearly proven in their oversight of the war. As a result, I can't blame the hippies for their confusion on this point. However, that is not to say that the anti-America coalition is absolved of all blame. You see, ignorance may be bliss, but coupled with stupidity, it can be formidably dangerous.

On that note, I would ask the ROTC rally protesters if their disdain for the military was this persistent immediately after 9/11 when everyone on both sides of the political was calling for immediate and swift retaliation against the attackers. The answer may reveal their hypocrisy and encourage them to actually acknowledge that the protections provided for us by the military do entitle them to a little respect. However, I would not at all be surprised if my question was met with snickers and chants of "fascist, bigot," it sure wouldn't be the first time.

Finally, the matter at hand at the rally was indeed ROTC and military recruiters. Despite bold efforts by the protestors to pervert our real message and hide the facts, any college that takes public (government) money to run their school or provide financial aid to students, should indeed be required to field ROTC programs and allow the presence of military recruiters. This has been a staple of public and land-grant colleges for over a hundred years and a few vocal, but pitifully misguided, protestors will not change this fact nor will it increase or decrease funding for Walter Reed.

In short, support our troops, because they support the rights of many to disparage them and hide behind the First Amendment afterwards.

Brad DeFlumeri is a UMass student. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

YES, INDEED... SAD SO SAD... BUT I DON'T SEEM TO RECALL WHO THIS 'LIBBY' GUY IS. HOW ABOUT YOU, KARL?
'LIBBY,' YOU SAY? NOPE. CAN'T RECALL. CAN'T RECALL... sniffle SO SAD...
The Examiner
LIBBY FOUND GUILTY
BARRY
The Houston Chronicle

Considering the candidates

Dan Nicastro

As I'm sure a few of you are aware, today is March 12, 2007. The next election is on Nov. 4, 2008, a difference of roughly 19 months, but with the amount of press the presidential candidates are receiving, you'd think the election is tomorrow.

Of course, if the election were tomorrow, there would be some interesting results. It's amazing to see the shift in tone from 2004, where the Democrats proudly proclaimed "anyone but Bush" (a policy which did not work out so well) to the 2008 election, where the Democrats have a plethora of strong candidates, and the Republicans have a bunch of "meh" candidates. This is not to take away from Rudy Giuliani, Mitt Romney or John McCain, it's just that even Republicans aren't particularly happy with these choices.

Seriously though, go find a Republican (all six of them at UMass are probably sitting at the "Republican Club" table in the Campus Center) and ask who they want to win their party nomination. My guess is they're not particularly excited about any of them.

The Republican problem in this election is that they're trying to run on an "anti-Bush" platform without actually acknowledging this.

Giuliani is definitely a social moderate. He's too far to the left for traditional conservatives. He also has questionable leadership skills although he handled 9/11 well, his tenure as mayor of pre-9/11 New York did not receive stellar reviews – and has almost as many personal problems as Britney Spears.

Romney has similar problems. He's a moving target, as many conservatives think him to be too socially moderate, and he has "flip-flopped" on several different issues, making him the John Kerry of 2008. Oh, and in case you haven't heard, he's Mormon, a religion feared by devout Christians everywhere.

McCain is really the next great white hope for the Republican Party. He is extremely conservative, votes his conscience and has supported Bush through his most recent call for more troops in Iraq. Unfortunately for the Republicans, voting his conscience means that he sometimes aligns himself with extreme liberals like Wisconsin Senator Russ Feingold, and it also seems as if the American people don't want someone who supported Bush through his most recent call for troops in Iraq. Instead, they just want our troops to get the hell out of that country. Also, McCain is, in some polls, losing by double-digits to Giuliani.

So, how about the Democrats? Well, there's Barack Obama, one of the most popular and recognizable politicians today, whose charm and charisma evokes comparisons to former President John F. Kennedy. While I've talked to dozens of Democrats and moderates who are a little worried about his lack of experience, they quickly say that they would fully support him were he to receive the party's nomination.

Next is John Edwards, who is the Democratic "dark horse" of the 2008 race. The "dark horse" beats out both McCain and Romney in the latest Newsweek poll. His big problem: he's moving too far to the left, something which will be interesting to follow as the primaries near.

Finally, there's Hillary Clinton, public enemy number one for the right. Her only problem is the fact that she's one of the most polarizing figures in American politics. Contrary to Romney's "flip-flopping," Clinton has been vilified for her refusal to say her initial vote on the Iraq War was a mistake, which could pose problems for her down the road. Despite these reasons, she is neck-and-neck with Giuliani in almost every single recent poll and she remains the Democratic frontrunner.

Look at how much can change in three years. The Democrats, after campaigning in 2004 on the platform that none of their candidates were named Bush, have matured and now have three very skilled, and very well-liked candidates. The Republican problem in this election is that they're trying to run on an "anti-Bush" platform without actually acknowledging this. The Republicans are trying to quietly move away from Bush, while still trying to please his Christian Conservative base, a group which wields a great deal of political power.

You can see this problem in McCain. He's moved much closer to the President in the last year because he knows he needs the endorsement of Christian conservatives to succeed in this election. The Republican candidates are much more moderate than those of elections past, showing that either the American people are moving to the left, or they are being pushed there by the Bush Presidency. However, Christian conservatives, who have held significant power over the GOP for the last 15 years, are not willing to cede political power. This does not bode well for Republicans, as the internal bickering going on about the candidates could foreshadow an attempt to move the party to a place where the Christian Conservatives do not want to go.

Unfortunately, time is running out. There are a scant 19 months remaining for election speculation.

Dan Nicastro can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu.

How to right Sudan

Matt Giancola

In 1945, we said "Never Again." In 1994, we said "Never Again." Now, in the year 2007, we must yet again say those words that should have rang true 60 years ago.

In Sudan, hundreds of thousands of people are being slaughtered with the support of the government by the militant Janjaweed and the rest of the world isn't doing a thing about it. So far, the United Nations places the death toll at 400,000, while another 2.5 million have been displaced into refugee camps.

While the world sits around thinking about what to do about it, people die. There is something, though, that the University of Massachusetts and other schools throughout the country can do to help. It's been done before at UMass, and must happen again – divestment.

A school divests from a country when it refuses to invest in any company that has resources in that nation and provides little support to its people. Taking our money out of Sudan is just the first step towards strangling this unjust government. Since we are a public university, our state cannot be shown to support this regime.

Fortunately, MASSPIRG has been doing a lot of work on this issue, and with the help of the Sudan Divestment Task Force – a national group ran mostly by college students – we have uncovered many of the companies that UMass must refuse to support. Companies like Rolls-Royce, PetroChina and Sinopec Corp. of China, CHC Helicopter of Canada and many more have continued to invest in Sudan – with little care for the people.

According to Stephanie Aines of MASSPIRG, the University's investments change day-to-day. We could be investing our money in Sudan today, and not tomorrow. If divestment is ratified by the Board of Trustees and signed by President Wilson, UMass accountants will either take all money out of the blacklisted companies or cease from investing in them in the future. Currently, all five UMass student government associations are considering a resolution in support of divestment.

Taking our money out of Sudan is just the first step towards strangling this unjust government.

In 1986, at the height of South African apartheid policies which denied blacks their civil rights, UMass and many other universities throughout the United States did the right thing and divested from that country. The campaign not only took money out, it shed important light and rallied students to the defense of the helpless. Today, one UMass campus cannot divest alone; the policy must be state-wide. Students, parents, legislators and citizens should make it known that Massachusetts will no longer support an evil regime.

In his second inaugural address, President Bush stated, "All who live in tyranny and hopelessness can know: the United States will not ignore your oppression, or excuse your oppressors. When you stand for your liberty, we will stand with you." If the President truly believes these words, and that all people are afforded the right to live- not just the ones whose interests align with the United States', he must stand up for the victims of Darfur and take action.

If the U.S. government can declare the killings in Sudan genocide, how can he sit back and be idle? I have many problems with our current president; I believe he has weakened America's standing in the world. But it is never too late to do the right thing. We have a moral obligation to work with the rest of the world to end the killing now. Sending aid, commissioning studies and peacekeeping forces aren't enough. The Janjaweed's reign must be demolished.

Divestment alone won't stop the killing. But, everyday I see students yearning to do something substantive to alter the course of world events. We can rally around causes, but at the end of the day we must take action. Right now, we have the power to take our money out of the hands of militant thugs. It's a start. As we get more campuses to divest, the clamor of citizens demanding action will become too much for the world to continue to ignore.

The Board of Trustees, President Bush and you and I have work to do. Let's make sure the words "never again" can finally ring true at long last.

Matt Giancola can be reached at mgiancola@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 12, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Light/WAVE' features faculty cast

Bowker hosts unique dance show

By Kate Nocera
Collegian Correspondent

The audience that gathered in the Bowker Auditorium Saturday night was in for an educational experience as The Five College Dance Department (FCDD) held their faculty concert this past weekend. The show, titled "Light/Wave," featured the choreography and performance by the FCDD's distinguished group of faculty and showcased their unique interests and talents.

Students and members of the community alike seemed excited for the show to begin, many of them not knowing what to expect. The show went on to meet and exceed all expectations and by bringing the audience to various places around the world of dance. It was thought provoking and excitlng to witness.

The dance programs from each of the Five Colleges work closely together throughout the year, putting on workshops, coordinating class schedules and combining choreographic experiences. Some of the pieces performed were individual works. The show opened with Donna Mejia's piece, entitled "Homage Embodied." Mejia describes her form of dance as "Tribal Fusion," a unique genre with influences from Arab, North African and Asian traditions. Another unique individual work was from Cathy Nicoli, a visiting Assistant Professor of Dance at Hampshire College. "The Past is a Curtain I Sometimes Draw and Circle Behind," the name of Nicoli's modern piece, was set to Bach.

Billbob Brown, the creative director of "Light/Wave" and a professor of Dance at the University of Massachusetts, describes his work as a collaborative effort with the help of many people. Brown performed last night alongside Rebecca Nordstrom in a piece called "T.O.E. Dance." The dance was humorous and dramatic as the performers had a dialogue with the audience, and cracked jokes about science. The dancers used hula hoops, humor and a grainy screen reminiscent of silent films in the performance.

This piece was a discussion of the similarities between art and science. The piece was set to silent film

See DANCE on page 6

The faculty dance perfomance "Light/WAVE," directed by Prof. Billbob Brown, was showcased Thursday through Saturday nights at Bowker Auditorium.

MFA IN ACTION

The exhibit "Midway #2" displayed the work of MFA candidates who are midway through the studio arts program. The exhibit ran free of charge Monday through Friday of last week. Above is a work that was showcased.

'Circle' comes half-way 'round at AC

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Borderline Personality Disorder is a severe mental illness, and a heavy and difficult topic to tackle in an original play. It was, however, something Honora Talbott was willing to take on as her senior thesis for Theater and Dance at Amherst College. She wrote, helped cast and co-starred in the two person show with the assistance of advisor and director Peter Lobdell. "Halfway 'Round the Circle" ran this past weekend, March 8 through 10 at the Holden Theater at Amherst College.

Overall, the play was entertaining and it achieved the playwright's goal of wanting to raise awareness for Borderline Personality Disorder. Like any theatrical endeavor, this play had its highs and lows, which were evenly spread throughout.

Talbott, the playwright, played four roles, including Robin, the woman who is plagued with the illness. While her violent switches from calm to panicked or enraged were convincing, the times when Robin was simply Robin felt acted and was tiresome at points. Robin's psychiatrist once mentioned the character's sweet nature, but the audience never saw any of that. All they saw was Robin complaining and being annoyed. When an audience attends a play, they want to be taken into the illusion of a new world on the stage, but it's hard to be sucked in when it's obvious that one of the actors is only pretending to be part of that world. All of Talbott's characters were remnant of each other, with the same mannerisms, voice inflections, and facial expressions. The psychiatrist Betsy Sheffield, also played by Talbott, was her most convincing character, as excessive hand movements are expected of someone in that profession. In general, however, it was easy to see that Talbott was acting as four different people, rather than becoming those characters.

The character of the male lead role, Brian Lewis, on the other hand, was captivating in each of his six roles and pumped life back into the veins of the play each time he was onstage. He was, among other things, Robin's father, a nurse in the psychiatric ward and a patient in the psych ward. With each new character, it seems as though he was an entirely different person, using a new voice, new mannerisms and even knew postures. Robin's father was clearly an older man with a slightly stooped position and a distinct accent that never wavered. The character of Nate, the psych ward patient, was uneasy, shy and very endearing. Every cough, every clearing of the throat and every facial expression was perfectly natural and specific to each character. He physically and mentally transformed himself each character change, making the audience feel for him during whatever turmoil his character was going through.

Though the subject matter was intense, there were some lighter moments, eliciting a laugh from the audience. Banter between Robin and the psych ward nurse was enjoyable, and everything out of Nate's mouth was delightful.

The technical aspects of the show were unique and creative. The set, designed by director Peter Lobdell, was a simple white cube with three doors and two blocks with drawers, one acting as a bed for the majority of the time and the other, a chair or a chest. The set successfully reflected the trap in which Robin found herself. During scene changes, different lights of windows were used to represent location, as did the positioning of the furniture. The scene changes, however, were slightly awkward, with Talbott and Lewis acting as the stage crew, putting the pieces in place and, at times, changing their costumes onstage. They were long and at times uncomfortable, leaving the audience to sit in silence, which pulled them from the aforementioned illusion of the show.

Despite its flaws, it was an entertaining and enlightening show. It allowed audience members to delve deeper into the life of someone with Borderline Personality Disorder, and to find sympathy for those in real life who are similarly afflicted. Also, if for no other reason, it was worth seeing simply for the excellent performance of Lewis.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu.

Hook-ups kill dating

By Julie Halpin
Collegian Columnist

Dating is dead – and the hookup is accused of its murder.

If you disagree, just take a look around on a Friday or Saturday evening here at the University of Massachusetts. You'll see couples looking shy around each other, or drunken pairs stammering off to an undisclosed locale.

While this may be an exaggeration, it is being widely reported that dating is dying a quick death. So, is the hookup destroying dating?

"Oh my God, yes!" said Aaron Smith, a junior Political Science major. The hookup, he said, has "harmed our generation's ability to form lasting relationships."

According to Megan Hein, a health and sexuality columnist at the Cavalier Daily, the differences between hookups and dates are substantial.

"The definition of hookup is very ambiguous," Hein said in a column recently. "How is this different from dating? Dating requires the art of conversation and awkward, slow shifts from hugging to kissing and everything after. Hookups typically need only alcohol and a location. Even if both parties are seeking a hookup, alcohol is typically involved, as it helps explain away potential blunders or the entire event in general."

Although Smith, from a male perspective, seemed skeptical of hookups, some UMass women seem to have a negative view of dating. Cassandra Klimczuk, a junior Communications major, remembers exactly when she was last asked out. "November…the first Monday in November," she said, emphasizing the long period of time.

Klimczuk's sentiments are echoed by Samantha Brett of the Sydney Morning Herald who believes that traditional dating is a thing of the past.

"Girls are no longer being called up on a Wednesday for a Saturday night date. There are no roses, chocolates or polite kisses goodnight. Instead, it's a hookup at a club, pub or get-together near you, where the booze is strong and the raunch is hot."

Klimczuk wonders why dating has taken such a hit in her generation.

"Truthfully I wonder if it's because they don't like me or if it's part of our generation. Now guys just get girls by

See HOOK -UP on page 6

While the bar scene is hot at UMass Amherst, some people feel that hooking up might be brining real dating down.

Charming Chiara Q.

By Michael Hardman
Collegian Staff

Last Friday night, the Chiara String Quartet played for the packed Montague Bookmill. There were people sitting on the floors, and people were unsuccessfully attempting to sneak in just to hear a glimpse of the aromatic music. While the Bookmill and the quartet wanted everybody to hear the show, the already overfilled room was creating a hefty fire hazard.

"We loved the vibe," said viola player, Jonah Sirota. For a group that feeds off its surroundings, the Montague Bookmill on Friday night was the perfect place. The small, darkly lit room, that was over packed allowed for all styles of classical music. The shadows of the bookshelves seemed to come alive through the course of the night, rhythmically swaying with the quartet. While these types of concerts are generally proper, the Chiara String Quartet encouraged clapping and cheering at the end of every song. This loosened up the crowd and everybody was enjoying themselves.

The peak of the show was during the second set, when the Quartet played three parts of the "Icefield Sonnets," a peaceful set with overtones of panic. The sonnets were influenced by a scenic drive through glaciers in Canada. Violinist Rebecca Tischer recited each sonnet before playing in a beat poet manner. The first line of the first sonnet, "cold is a cell," was absolutely perfect for the slow, fantastic plunge that the music described.

The second sonnet, titled "Glass is a Place," had an immediate, edgy mood. The quartet began plucking their strings, creating a twisted popcorn sound. The audience was trapped in a wordless awe that resulted in a restrained standing ovation.

During the third sonnet, "North is a Notion," the quartet became sirens trying to swallow us whole. The jerking movements that the quartet created while playing seemed to strike their desires further.

"We can't always do the "Icefield Sonnets." It depends upon the intimacy of the crowd, so tonight was perfect," Nirota said.

The finale began with a full on, in-your-face noise that was fast paced. The quartet only slowed down to let us catch our breath, but that was short lived since they picked it back up with a fireworks ending.

The crowd was not pleased that the Chiara String Quartet was finished so the generally reserved crowd was up in verbal arms of cheers and clapping.

The quartet decided to play one final song, fittingly from the pages of Mozart. It was simply beautiful: the long, dramatic music that can make doves weep. The crowd knew that they had listened to a masterpiece show. Afterwards, the musicians hung around to talk with the audience as well.

While the Quartet played for less than two hours, the audience was fully satisfied by the stellar performance of which they were privileged to hear. The quartet finished its tour on Saturday night, but rest assured they will be wandering through the forests of New England again. Michael Hardman can be reached at mhardman@student.umass.edu

The Montague Bookmill hosted the Chiara String Quartet on Friday night, where they delivered a powerful instrumental set.

'300' attacks theaters with vengence

Two movie lovers debate film's highs and lows

BY KATE BAUER AND LEIGHANNE NOONAN COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENTS

Following the tradition of all epic battle movies, notably historical ones, 300 begins with a narrator, in this case the testament of Dilios, played by David Wenham (Faramir from the Lord Of The Rings franchise). Sitting around a campfire in what is perceived to be the prelude to some great battle, Dilios tells the tale of King Leonidas and his 300 soldiers. The descendants of Hercules are sent to defend the city of Thermopylae against the invading Persian army, led by the self-proclaimed God King Xerxes. Working with a flashback narrative, the film traces Leonidas and his wife Queen Gorgo, played by Lena Heady, in parallel storylines as they fight to uphold their honor, heritage and place in history. Here's our cinematic take on the flick.

KB: Ok, so maybe I need to go rent Sin City again, but I thought director Zack Snyder did a good job of capturing Frank Miller's style without straying too close to Robert Rodriguez's style in Sin City.

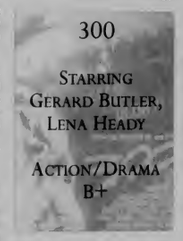
LN: I agree. Miller's style is graphically and artistically unique; Snyder did a good job at translating that voice to film. It is especially noteworthy that he was able to carry it across genres and time periods, translating it from the gritty city streets of Rodriguez's Sin City to the battlefields of ancient times.

KB: I find the cinematography and visual style to be the best part of the film. Sure, the scenes on and off the battlefield are graphic, but Larry Fong's camera work is amazing. I especially enjoyed the battle scenarios where Leonidas and his men would charge the enemy. The camera would start at a distance from the action then zoom in as one of the 300 would make a kill, splattering blood like something out of a Jackson Pollack painting. Did you find it too graphic, or did it work for the film? Even though the slow motion was used to the point of exaggeration, it worked well with the story and pace of the film. The gritty footage during the battle scenes certainly gave those scenes the edge they needed. But what was up with Leonidas and Gorgo's sex scene? I thought for a sec there we were on the verge of watching a porn flick.



COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Gerard Butler takes on the role of King Leonidas, a ferocious ancient warrior in the visual masterpiece "300," which brought in tons of money at the box-office over the weekend.

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Lena Headey plays the role of Gorgo in director Zach Snyder's newest adventure film, "300."

LN: I didn't have any qualms with the sex scene. I felt it was filmed quite similarly to the battle scenes: rapid camera cuts to movements that were slowed but full of energy. For me, it worked in the context of the characters and the film as a whole. Fong's camera work was stunning from scenes of passion to scenes of battle. The editing, the cuts to and from storylines, sequences and styles were also especially intriguing. As for the graphics, they do fit the action and scope of the film. The exaggerated slow motion, however, did get on my nerves at some points.

KB: Well, I'll have to agree with you on that. They were done more tastefully in contrast to the battle scenes, but the sniggering of some of the young males in the audience made me question whether it was a bit too much.

They did an excellent job on the graphics – at some points it's hard to tell everything was shot on a soundstage in front of a green screen. But, unfortunately, there were some points where the sound gave away that it wasn't filmed on location.

The makeup department, which was headed by Scott Wheeler, deserves an Oscar for their work on this film. Some of the out-there characters were amazing, especially the discarded monster who betrays Leonidas to the Persian army.

LN: I thought the make-up was very accurate for the times while, at the same time, being aesthetically interesting. Xerxes, his forces, and his women were all done in a very complicated manner, which spoke to the culture of the time. Depicting this foreign leader as a demi-god, the way that he was dressed and decorated, was pleasing and amusing at the same time. His attire and presentation fit with his personality, and lent to some humorous jabs at his hubris.

KB: Yes, the fact that he was literally "larger than life" came off a bit more comical than perhaps the filmmakers intended. It's also hard to believe that's Rodrigo Santoro under all those piercings and perfectly lined brows, but then, it's all part of the fantastical elements of the film.

Besides Santoro, the actors did an impressive job on their physiques for the film. Forced to wear nothing more than a He-Man version of a Speedo, Butler's Leonidas certainly looked the part of the king, even if his beard was in danger of looking like an Egyptian pharaoh's.

It also didn't hurt to have a little eye candy for the women in the audience, and I have to say, I think we were part of only a handful of girls who attended the screening. Perhaps the film was too strongly catered to the young male demographic? I found the story well structured, if a little on the bland side, and the music moving, which suggests to me that this film could be appealing to anyone within the 18-49 age demographic – not just male high school and college students.

LN: The man candy was a definite plus for women who get little thrills out of shrilling cries and sputtering blood of battle. Although, at times, it seemed their rippling abs and buff biceps had to be a bit enhanced, it didn't detract from the fun.

Overall, I agree that the film has a lot to offer. In its advertisement, it definitely catered to the male demographic. However, with the dual story lines, the politics, the history, in addition to the stunning visuals, brilliant filming and unique artistic style viewers of many categories could find something to like about 300.

KB: It's true the story's got all the ingredients – fierce and honorable warriors, a bad guy with a massive army, a traitor, a love story, political corruption – but it's the execution I feel leaves the story a bit flat. It's lacking that larger-than-life heroic part, the emotional hook that gets you sucked in to the story. Sure, there's this epically styled story of corruption, honor and justice, but the film didn't hit home emotionally the way I thought it would. Wenham certainly succeeds at delivering the deep and emotional monologue of the story, but the film, with exception to the sweeping musical score, doesn't run parallel. That's why I'd have to give the film an A for style, but a B for the overall result.

LN: I'd have to agree about the story. It works many elements but doesn't combine them in a way that leaves you amazed. I would give the film an A- for style in lieu of the over dramatization in a few parts and a B for overall effect. Kate can be reached at kbauer@student.umass.edu, and Leighanne at lnoonan@email.smith.edu.

Some are in love with hook ups despite the death of dating drinking and hooking up with them. I would like to film how nasty guys are," said Klimczuk.

HOOK – UPS from page 5

But clearly not all males are guilty of being "nasty." Travis Shultz, a senior Landscape Contracting major, believes that hookups "often objectify one of the people involved."

Others have a different perspective. Jon Young, a junior English major, had a response reported by several men when asked why he doesn't ask girls out. "Why don't girls ask me out on dates?"

Erica Simpson of The Varsity Online, the University of Toronto's student newspaper, cites three historical steps to dating.

1. Pick up the girl.
2. Take her out.
3. Drop her off.

Simpson said, "It's time to erect the old-time pleasures of just wanting to spend time with someone. The emphasis on sexual gratification now overshadows all the wonderful aspects of dating."

Rachel Kelly, a UMass student, agrees, saying that hookups set "a weird tone for the rest of the relationship before anything was even started: it's awkward when it doesn't need to be. Why hook up first when you could get to know each other?"

Simpson drives her point home by asking, "Wouldn't it be nice to look back and remember a series of wonderful nights, than just that one when you 'got lucky'? It's time to erect the old-time pleasures of just wanting to spend time with someone."

Julie Halpin can be reached at JhalpinA@student.umass.edu

Faculty show a success

DANCE from page 5

music, and the familiar music of Queen's Freddy Mercury.

According to Brown, he and Nordstrom began dancing together 13 years ago when they saw a common sense of humor in each other. The development of "T.O.E. Dance" began with this common sense of humor and their interest in silent movie music. The process, Brown says, took many people and research to develop into the dance that was performed over the weekend.

The collaboration between Sam Kenney, a UMass jazz professor, and Tom Vacanti, a UMass ballet professor, resulted in the piece "Purpure." The piece was set to a classical score by Mendelssohn and combined elements of both ballet and jazz dance techniques to produce a piece that was both technically difficult and emotionally stirring.

"Words Between Words" choreographed by Christian Burns was the result of a nine day improvisational workshop that included 12 dancers. "These Things I do with My Hands" choreographed by Peter Schmitz concluded the show.

The idea for "Light/Wave" originated in meetings with members of the Art department, the Science department and the Fine Arts center headed by Shawn Farly. In conjunction with the faculty concert, there was a symposium held, called "Light and Color with Science and Art."

The idea was to see if we could coordinate and broaden the ways these ideas could be realized," said Brown.

An interesting part of the performance was the video interludes in between pieces. The videos were done by Jim Coleman, an artist-in-residence at Mount Holyoke College. The images were projected onto the walls, ceilings and balcony railings of the auditorium. The videos furthered the idea of dance as a collaborative art incorporating different mediums and different elements of light and sound.

Of the Five Colleges, UMass is the only one that offers a BFA in dance. There is rigorous audition process for entrance into the program. The level of technique and skill required for the major classes tends be quite high. Smith does offer an MFA in dance and it is the only graduate level dance program in the valley. Students interested in taking dance classes must re-audition for the more advanced classes.

According to Brown, dance is something not many of us know too much about. "We appreciate any dialogue at all. Dance tends to get smaller audiences than say, hockey or big musicals, because many people are unfamiliar with it, and it's not something you see on commercial television," said Brown. During the show, however, those of us in the audience who were unfamiliar with dance as an art could still appreciate the expression and amazing talents of our faculty. Kate Nocera can be reached at Knocera@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PHOTO

The Five College Dance Dept. held a faculty-produced performance over the weekend.

Write for Arts!
arts@dailycollegian.com

Need Advice?

The Daily Collegian is looking for topics for next week's advice column. Email Arts@dailycollegian.com or Vgarrett@student.umass.edu if you are seeking advice about anything.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

From Your Dorm To The Airport And Back!
*Central Campus pick ups during heavy travel time.
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter
The Easy Way to the Airport!

OUR TOP 10 GRADUATE MAJORS:
MBA
Physician Assistant
Interactive Communications
Teaching
Biomedical Sciences
Molecular/Cell Biology
Journalism
Nursing
Accounting
Computer Information Systems

MASTERING THE ART OF TEACHING
Extensive internship programs, real-world experience and dynamic faculty have made the Quinnipiac Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT) program among the most respected in the country. Now our MAT program is more affordable than ever, thanks to new incentives that, in exchange for participation in our internships, can waive tuition for most of the program.

QUINNIPIAC U:
RAVE REVIEWS FOR OUR MBA
The Quinnipiac University School of Business MBA program continues to prepare business professionals for the realities of management in global, technology-driven work environments in specializations such as:
• MBA WITH CONCENTRATIONS IN ACCOUNTING, CIS, FINANCE, INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS, MANAGEMENT, MARKETING
• MBA – CHARTERED FINANCIAL ANALYST® TRACK
• MBA IN HEALTHCARE MANAGEMENT
>>YOUR NEXT MOVE
Quinnipiac University offers graduate programs in 17 distinct disciplines. Whether you are interested in our AACSB nationally accredited business program, the master of arts in teaching (MAT) program or one of the Northeast's most highly regarded journalism and interactive communications programs, all have been designed to thoroughly prepare you for a professional career. For more information, call 1-800-462-1944 or visit www.quinnipiac.edu
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
Hamden, Connecticut

Mass Attack moves on

HOCKEY from page 1

He slid a nice pass to Quirk in the middle, who then turned and fired right away. The puck beat Wilson five-hole.

Braun's nice pass was one of a few for the Minutemen on the night.

But Chris Davis' tripping penalty just 12 seconds after Quirk's score gave some of the momentum back to Maine. It was the second penalty of the period for Davis. He was called for hooking at the 5:43 mark as well.

It didn't take long for freshman Teddy Purcell to capitalize on the opportunity that Davis gave the Black Bears. He took a pass at the point from Brent Shepheard and skated to the top of the right faceoff circle. From there he ripped a wrist shot that put Maine on the board. It was his 16th of the season.

Overall, the Minutemen were pleased with their efforts in the first. They did what was intended – put the Black Bears in an early hole.

"It's key in any game to get the first blow," Capraro said. "You never really want to start from behind. We knew that they were going to come to play. They're a well established program and we knew they weren't going to go down without a fight."

The second period was all Minutemen as they posted two more goals and took a decisive 4-1 lead into the dressing room for the second intermission. UMass's first goal was set up by some more of the pretty passing mentioned above.

Kostka controlled the puck in the high slot and sent it down to Capraro at the near post. Instead of shooting from there, Capraro spotted Burto streaking into the slot from the left side and fed him the puck. Somehow it made it through the Maine defense and Burto shot it in. It was one of the nicest plays the Minutemen have converted this season.

"We've been working on moving the puck and we want to move the puck and we want to get more shots on net," Capraro said. "You see some guys showing some good poise out there and held onto it and made some great plays."

Then, UMass's second score of the period, at the 12:54 mark, went to Matt Anderson – playing in his final game at the Mullins Center as the Minutemen's senior captain.

Wilson left a long rebound out front off a Mark Matheson try. The puck trickled to the right circle where Anderson chased it down and shot it into a wide open net. Wilson was not in position to make the save because two other UMass players had crashed the net on the rebound, freezing the goaltender.

Maine was well aware its season was on the line in the third. The Black Bears took a total of 38 shots in the final period – 15 of which reached the net. There were so many that there was barely enough room for them all on the postgame shot chart.

Quick was more than stellar in the last period, turning away 14 shots while fighting off two penalties and allowing just one shot to get behind him. The netminder said he prepared himself for the onslaught of Maine shots before the third even began.

"I knew they were going to come out flying and I kind of got myself ready to see a lot of shots," he said. "I knew a majority of the plays they had been running and the ones that they like, so I got focused [and] just thought about those plays. Between intermissions I just got ready to play."

Friday's affair was sloppy for both squads. UMass took seven penalties on the night, allowing Maine to go two-for-six on the power play.

Billy Ryan took the early lead for the Black Bears with Capraro in the box for slashing. Brett Tyler controlled the puck at the point and sent it down to Ryan, who was camped out at the right post. He used hockey's equivalent of the chip shot to redirect the puck over Quick.

UMass didn't respond until seven minutes in the second period expired and came on a Kevin Jarman power-play goal. Five minutes into the period, referee Conrad Hache's arm went up signaling an upcoming Maine penalty. Before the Black Bears could stop play, UMass peppered Wilson with shots, ultimately setting up the momentum for Jarman's score.

P.J. Fenton put the puck on the net and Jarman was behind Wilson to the netminder's left, poking several times at the rebound. It appeared the Minuteman's efforts were all for not until he got one such try to ricochet off Wilson's left arm and go into the net. Afterwards, Maine coach Tim Whitehead said it was a "great effort" by Jarman.

There were a total of three goals scored in the final period of regulation Friday – two of them went to the Minutemen, sealing the win. Sophomore Alex Berry scored the first off a Quirk rebound. The latter carried the puck in on Wilson and shot from up close. Berry collected the rebound, deked to his forehand and stuffed it home.

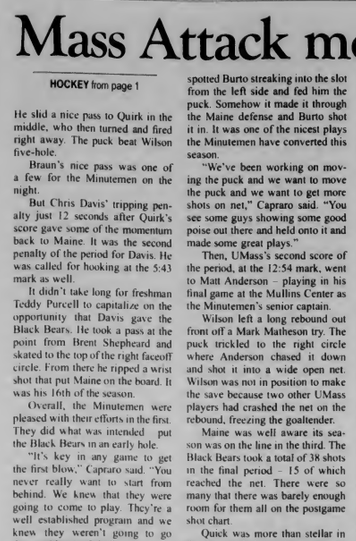
Six minutes later, John Wessbecker scored what was eventually the game-winner – not a bad time to record the first goal of your collegiate career. Will Ortiz skated into the attacking zone on a two-on-one with Wessbecker and held the puck until the last possible moment. Ortiz held it until he reached Wilson's crease before sliding it across to Wessbecker.

Shepheard added a power-play goal for Maine, but it was not enough.

The two wins give UMass seven of its last eight contests. And the four wins over Maine improves the Minutemen in the PairWise Ranking – the method in which college hockey selects participants in the NCAA Tournament – but Cahoon said his team is not focused on all that right now.

"We're not worried about he NCAAs right now, we're worried about the Hockey East Championships and we're worried about specifically the semifinal game," he said. "If we take care of business the NCAA thing will take care of itself, but the Hockey East Championship is what we've got to bear down and try to go after."

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.



COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

UMass' two wins this weekend gives it six in a row, four of which came over the Maine Black Bears. Sophomore Cory Quirk scored two goals in the two victories in the Hockey East quarterfinals.

TOM FRENCH/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen killed off 13 penalties this weekend (seven Friday and six Saturday) to defeat Maine in the Hockey East quarterfinals.

UMass fends off numerous penalties

Cahoon disappointed with lack of discipline against Maine

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team put itself in front of a bullet in its opening round playoff win over Maine, and walked away unscathed.

Entering the weekend rematch against the Black Bears, one of the biggest questions the Mass Attack faced was how it would handle the best power-play unit in the nation.

The Minutemen had two choices going into their second straight weekend with the Black Bears: stay out of the penalty box, or find a way to shut down Maine during the penalty kill. UMass chose the more difficult path, and came out on its feet.

The Mass Attack was called for 13 minor penalties over the weekend (seven on Friday and six on Saturday). Usually, that would spell doom for any team facing the vaunted Black Bears power play – which registered a 25.4 percent success rate with the man-advantage before facing the Maroon and White.

However, the Minutemen stood their ground with the Black Bears, despite the excess of penalties.

UMass coach Don Cahoon was far from pleased after a sloppy game Friday night. The Black Bears scored both its goals on the power play, going two-for-seven on the man advantage in the game (28.5 percent), but it could have been worse.

"Part of my displeasure is about our inability to walk away and our inability to keep our sticks on the floor," Cahoon said Friday night. "So we end up taking infractions that, given that type of power play, is just asking for trouble."

Not everyone on the UMass squad participates on penalty kills, so when the team gets backed up into its own end – for instance, the three minor penalties it incurred in the course of six minutes during the third period Saturday (two slashing calls and a roughing after the whistle) – it drains the players' energy quickly.

"It shrinks our bench to about 50 percent of its capacity, and that's asking an awful lot from too few people," Cahoon said of the penalty kill. "It wasn't a positive side of the night, that's for sure."

Despite putting themselves at the mercy of the Black Bears' sharpshooters, the Minutemen survived night-after-night with strong defense on the penalty kill, anchored by goaltender Jon Quick.

"The kills were great, and Quick was great," Cahoon said. "They had lots of good looks and we took a couple of penalties again tonight, to my dismay, that put us in a tough situation, but we got great kills for the most part in crucial situations. Jon made some big saves and we got through that."

Senior captain Matt Anderson is out on the ice for just about every phase of the game, from even-strength to both the power play and penalty kill. He expressed how valuable a solid, consistent goaltender is to bail out the team when it makes a potentially game-altering mistake.

"I think in playoff hockey you start with the goalie and special teams," Anderson said. "Obviously, Jonny has been unbelievable in both those areas. He's our No. 1 penalty killer and he's standing on his head in the goal. It's really impressive. I think that we feed off his energy as a team.

"At the end of every period we go to Jonny and when Jonny's up and going, we're going. There is no other feeling like that, knowing you have a superb goaltender back there and someone that just cares for every other guy in the room."

For most of the weekend, it seemed like the Minutemen knew they would be leaning on their netminder to make key plays – like the eye-catching glove save from his back Quick made in the first period on Friday.

Quick finished the weekend with an unreal 73 saves in two nights, giving up just a pair of goals in each game. That translates to a .918 save percentage against one of the top offensive teams in hockey.

"I knew they were going to come out flying and I kind of got myself ready to see a lot of shots," Quick said. "I knew a majority of the plays they had been running and the ones that they like, so I got focused just thought about those plays. Between intermissions I just got ready to play."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jerice@student.umass.edu.

Inconsistency haunts Minutewomen

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino didn't know which Minutewoman team would show up for this weekend's tournament. She hoped it would be the squad that defeated the No. 10 California Golden Bears, but knew it could very well be the group that dropped an 8-6 decision to UC-Santa Barbara to open the season.

In the end, the Minutewomen's struggles with consistency continued. UMass advanced to the final game of the USF adidas Spring Break Invitational – losing the final game to Ohio State, 4-1, on Sunday.

The matchup featured a battle of second-year aces in Ohio State's Kim Reeder and UMass' Brandice Balschmiter. Reeder outdueled Balschmiter in the end, but Balschmiter pitched well – walking no one and yielding just four hits in seven innings.

"It was a disappointing loss but the fact that we could mount the offense that we did was good and I thought the team showed a lot of character," Sortino said. "I thought they showed a lot of tenacity and that they really have what it takes to compete mentally. I think it's hard to come back in this sport, but we came back late in the game and we almost pulled it off again."

In the bottom of the seventh inning, the Maroon and White faced a 4-0 deficit with the middle of its order due up.

Earlier in the tournament UMass' five-run ninth inning lifted it to an 8-5 win over Indiana – junior second baseman Stacy Cullington's grand slam being the decisive blow.

In this instance, clean-up hitter senior Amanda Acampora led the inning off with a walk after working the count full. Reader struck senior Lauren Proctor out after the walk to Acampora, but the rally kept on.

Sophomore Whitney Mollica lined a 1-0 fastball into right field and advanced to second on an overthrow. Senior Jackie Teman, who pinch ran for Acampora, wound up on third.

On a 3-2 count, freshman Whitney Williams pulled the payoff pitch to right field scoring Teman and moving freshman Jill Andrews, who pinch ran for Mollica, over to third. After sophomore catcher Emily Wehr walked, OSU head coach Linda Kalafatis had seen enough and removed Reader from the game. Senior Jamee Juarez, who had been playing third base, replaced Reader.

The move worked well for the Buckeyes, Juarez struck out freshman Carly Normandin on four pitches before drawing a line out to left field from senior Amanda Morin to close out the game.

While Morin failed to keep the game going in this case, she did improve her performance over the weekend. Early in the season, the leadoff hitter struggled to consistently get on base for the Minutewomen.

Although Morin's numbers appear the same as they were before the weekend's games, she lived up to her role as a leadoff hitter, running up pitch counts and providing her teammates looks at Reeder's offerings.

"She gave us great leadoff at-bats and that's what you want from her," Sortino said. "She's exactly what you want in a leadoff hitter. Your leadoff hitter and your No. 2 hitter are probably going to come to bat more than any other players on the season and you want them to be good to people."

Morin proved how vital she is to the success of the Minutewomen in the final five games of the weekend. In the three games UMass won, she went 6-for-12 and scored four runs, but in UMass' two losses, Morin was 2-for-8, scoring once. On the season, Morin's batting average sits as .258 and her on-base percentage is at .324.

Her best offensive performance of the weekend came in the Minutewomen's most productive offensive game – a 10-5 win over Illinois-Chicago. Morin's three-hit performance paced the Maroon and White attack.

UMass' offensive explosion coincided with Sortino tampering with the lineup. Normally, Preseason All-American third baseman Whitney Mollica occupies the three hole in UMass' lineup but Sortino dropped her star down in the order, moving Cullington into that spot.

"In different parts of the order people pitch to you differently and some people were struggling and other people weren't," Sortino said. "I wanted to put them in a position to see some different pitches. Fortunately, I think it kind of worked out for us."

The Minutewomen defeated Northern Illinois, 2-0, and Jacksonville, 5-3, on Saturday to advance the final against Ohio State. Balschmiter won both of these games for UMass on the weekend before losing in the final. Her record now sits at 6-6 on the season.

"I don't think she was very good," said Sortino about Balschmiter. "But I think it was more that no one felt very good physically. Everyday, we left the hotel at 7:15 a.m. and didn't get back until 9:30-10 [o'clock] at night. But I have to say that she showed durability to be able to come back [Sunday]."

Senior Candice Molinari continued her excellence in UMass' two hole, she currently leads the team in batting average, runs, hits, on-base percentage and stolen bases. The captain went 7-for-20 on the weekend scoring four runs while going 3-for-4 in stolen-base attempts.

"Candice came up huge," Sortino said. "She gets on base, she's been able to make things happen for us in our small ball game."

Late in UMass' win over Jacksonville, Molinari lined a 3-2 pitch into centerfield driving in two runs and putting the Minutewomen ahead 5-3. These runs would prove to be the difference after Balschmiter closed the door on the Dolphins.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Second baseman Stacy Cullington went 0-for-2 with a walk in the Minutewomen's 4-1 loss to Ohio State on Sunday.

Give your brain a $10 coffee break.
Get a $10 coffeehouse gift card when you have your student taxes prepared at H&R Block.
Have H&R Block prepare your 1040 EZ and state tax returns, and get a $10 coffeehouse gift card. All for just $49 with valid college student ID.
Offer valid 1/15/07 - 3/10/07 at this location only
Campus Plaza
458-10 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
413-256-2101
hrblock.com
H&R BLOCK

Minutemen selected for NIT

M. BASKETBALL from page 1

and focus on winning a basketball game.

While the UMass basketball program hasn't been to the postseason in seven years – Bruiser Flint's Minutemen went to the NIT in 2000 and lost to Siena – falling short of the NCAA Tournament, Ford said, was a disappointment.

Senior captain Rashaun Freeman had one of his worst games of the year against the Billikens with just six points and two rebounds, and battled illness during the week leading into the matchup with the Billikens.

Sophomore center Luke Bonner and senior captain Stephane Lasme also battled the illness, and Ford wasn't able to bring the entire team together for one practice before the quarterfinal game because of the team's sudden sickness.

But the coach has that dreadful week in the rearview mirror.

"I think [the players] knew that we were still going to have basketball to play after we lost last week," Ford said. "I will say that we were all very disappointed [after the loss to Saint Louis]. There's no question about that.

"But we've had a great year, an incredible year, and we are excited that we still get to play basketball."

The last time UMass faced Alabama was in the 1965-66 season, when the Crimson Tide edged UMass, 79-73. This year, the Crimson Tide fell from grace after a ranking inside the Top 10 in the country early in the season.

All-American point guard Ronald Steele will be a stiff challenge for the guard tandem of sophomore Chris Lowe and freshman Tiki Mayben defensively.

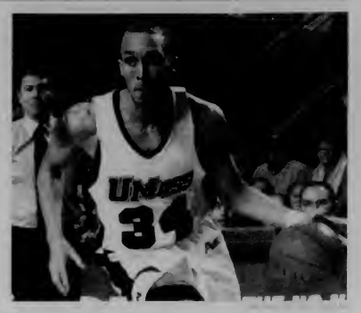
"Ronald Steele is athletic and as good a guard as there is in the country," Ford said.

The Minutemen are 5-10 all-time in the NIT and haven't hosted an NIT game since the 1991 season when UMass defeated La Salle at the Curry Hicks Cage, 93-90. UMass finished fourth in the NIT in the 1991 season, making it to the Final Four before losing to Stanford in the semifinal game and then to Colorado in the consolation game.

The first round of this year's NIT will be tomorrow and Wednesday. The winner of the UMass-Alabama game tomorrow will play the winner of No. 1 West Virginia and No. 8 Delaware State on Thursday at 9 p.m. – that game will be televised on ESPNU.

Students will have to pay a fee of $5 to get into tomorrow's home game, and the usual flash of the student ID will not be enough to get students into the Mullins Center tomorrow night due to NIT regulations.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu. Check out more coverage of UMass sports on the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com.



Senior James Life scored 12 points on 4-for-10 shooting in the Minutemen's overtime loss to Saint Louis in the A-10 Tournament.

Connolly matches career-high goals

M. LACROSSE from page 10

board.

Harvard took a 3-1 lead in the first quarter with Mahler's second goal of the game, but UMass went on a four-goal run to make it 5-3.

Connolly scored four out of the Minutemen's six first-half goals, including his second and third of the game at 13:15 and 8:58 marks of the second quarter, respectively. Connolly's goals sandwiched senior Andrew Recchione's second goal of the season at the 12:03 mark of the second quarter in the first man-up situation of the afternoon.

The Minutemen never relinquished their second-quarter lead, and despite the first two games of the season going the other team's way, the Minutemen held on for the close victory this time around.

UMass coach Greg Cannella attributes Saturday's win to a combination of his team's sense of urgency heading into the game, combined with the Minutemen's scoring prowess in the fourth quarter.

"Our guys fought pretty hard and I thought that was the difference," he said. "We came out with the attitude that they weren't going to be denied. Whether it was Harvard, the refs or me, they weren't going to walk out of here without a win."

UMass has been on the wrong end of two tight games this season – the season opener, an 8-6 loss at Hofstra, and a unusual loss to Yale at Garber Field last weekend. This time, the Minutemen came out on top with some clutch scoring late in the game.

Senior Brian Jacovina scored UMass's final goal with 2:34 left in the game, giving the Minutemen an 11-9 cushion. Harvard cut the lead down to one with five seconds left in the game, but Jacovina's second goal of the season proved to be the game-winner.

"We scored today," Cannella stated. "We scored in the fourth quarter. We scored when we needed to, got timely saves, played real good defense the entire game. The difference between winning and losing a game like that is minimal.

"And it's hard to think that way because when you lose 7-6, everything went wrong. And if you win 11-10, everything went right. Well, it didn't all go right. And when you lose, it doesn't [all go wrong]."

The Minutemen did a lot of things right on Saturday. They killed all seven man-down situations, thanks to some significant efforts by senior midfielder Brett Garber and Jacovina, and scored a season-high 11 goals – one less than the first two games combined.

"Anytime you win, you feel good," Cannella said. "Hopefully the guys will gain a little bit of confidence. Confidence is the biggest thing. After last week we felt like we were never going to win a game. So you come back this week, you work hard and you win."

The Minutemen haven't started a season with two straight losses since 1977 and an 0-3 start would've put UMass in a bind heading into Tuesday's contest against a ranked Albany squad on the road. Connolly believes that the Minutemen knew the importance of avoiding the 0-3 mark.

"We really needed this one," Connolly said. "This was a big game for us. An 0-3 [record] would be a big hole to climb out of going into Albany. It's a good team we're going to be playing against. We're going to have to bring the same intensity on Tuesday."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

UMass doomed by struggles in all areas single by catcher Bryan Garrity.

BASEBALL from page 10

UCF first baseman Kiko Vazquez reached base in all four plate appearances, continuing to wreak havoc on UMass pitching. Vazquez only recorded two outs in the entire series, registering four hits – including a three-run shot in the opener – and drawing four walks and two hit by pitches.

"I thought their hitters were real comfortable in the box, and they showed it," Stone said. "Our pitching staff is stronger this year and I think we'll be fine. First time out is different. It's a lot different going from Boyden Gym to playing on the baseball field."

UMass put together its best effort of the series in Saturday's contest, but were unable to come back from an early 3-0 deficit. Freshman pitcher Jared Frent settled down after the second inning, and shut down the opposition for the next four frames. Frent was a bit erratic, but he showed his poise by inducing a double play in the fifth to escape a big jam.

The Minutemen bats appeared dead – only mustering three hits in the first seven innings – but came alive in the eighth inning of a 4-1 ballgame. UMass started a rally without the benefit of a hit – after Francezek led off with a walk and centerfielder Bill Rankin reached on an error.

With runners on the corners and nobody out, second baseman Adam Tempesta grounded into an untimely double play. Francezek scored on the play, but the rally appeared over with two outs and the bases empty. But consecutive singles by Brian Adamski and Protetti, followed by a Garrity walk, loaded the bases for third baseman Jim MacDonald. UCF went to the bullpen and new pitcher Justin Weiss induced a ground-out to squash the late comeback.

"Saturday was definitely our best game," Stone said, following Sunday's contest. "We had a realistic chance to win the game, but we didn't make it happen there. We just need to keep playing and get comfortable in the batters box. Situationally, I think we're a mature team and I think defensively we'll be ok."

The Golden Knights were again paced by superb pitching, this time by sophomore Mitch Houck. The left-hander was dominant in his first win of the year, allowing just three hits and one run in seven innings, while striking out 10.

UCF scored one run in the first and two in the second inning to get the early lead. Despite getting two singles, a walk, a hit batsmen and inducing a throwing error on a pickoff attempt, the Golden Knights only scored once in the first frame. Frent escaped with the bases loaded and only one out after striking out Matt Horwath and getting Richardson to line out to center.

UMass also struggled in the early innings in the season opener on Friday. The Minuten and White surrendered seven hits, four walks, four hit batsmen and committed two errors en route to the 6-1 defeat. Vazquez effectively put the game away in the third with his three-run bomb to left off starter Chris Lloyd. UMass only had six hits in the contest. Much like Sunday, the Minutemen scored their only run in the ninth inning with a Garrity RBI single.

"I thought we had more, honestly," Stone said regarding the frustrations with the offense over the weekend. "We spent a lot of time preparing and I thought we'd be more successful. But we faced some quality pitching and good pitching stops good hitting anytime early. We just need to get adjusted."

Even after a tough weekend, Stone is upbeat – but is worried about his team's confidence level heading into next week's home opener against Boston College.

"Some guys got down on themselves a little bit because of the struggles this weekend," he said. "Expectations are high when you come out and play in your first set of games, so we need to get back and regroup and get a little grit and come out staying as positive as possible. Baseball is a crazy game and you certainly can't be successful if you're going to be negative."

Ed Rosenthal can be reached at erosenth@umass.edu.

First baseman Bryan Adamski is batting .364 to start the season with four hits in 11 at-bats in three games against Central Florida.

Minutewomen overpower Great Danes

Typadis leads way with career high six goals, placing her eighth

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior attack Kathleen Typadis scored a career-high six goals to give the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team a 15-7 victory over Albany.

The Minutewomen (4-2) started the game slow, with Albany holding them scoreless until halfway through the opening half when Typadis notched her first goal. While it struggled to find the net in the first half, the University of Massachusetts defense only allowed two goals. Senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy kept the Minutewomen out of an early hole.

Down 1-0, McCarthy made two straight saves to keep the Great Danes (1-4) from building an early lead. The offense responded by scoring six unanswered goals from Typadis (two), sophomore midfielder Holly Drown (two) and junior attack Melynda Zwick (two).

In the first half, both teams played sloppy, combining for 29 turnovers. UMass had 12 while Albany committed 17.

The Minutewomen went into halftime with a 6-2 lead.

UMass came out aggressive in the second half. Drown built the Minutewomen's lead to 7-2. 18 seconds into the half. They scored three goals in the first six minutes to go ahead, 9-2.

The Great Danes made one attempt at a comeback as they scored three unanswered goals to cut the lead to 9-5, but never got any closer. After the Albany run, the Minutewomen called timeout to reassemble.

"I just told them we needed to get possession of the ball, it's very crucial on the draw controls," coach Alexis Venechanos said. The Maroon and White listened to its coach, winning the draw-control battle 13-11.

UMass scored five straight goals after the timeout, two coming from Typadis.

"It was very exciting," Typadis said. "We just really spread the field and it opened up. We found the open player and kept hitting the back of the net. We were whipping the ball around pretty fast so I think it got them tired and we capitalized on that."

UMass	15
Albany	7

Albany responded with two goals after the 8-9 UMass run, but it proved to not to be enough as UMass ran down the clock. Typadis scored the game's final goal with 18 seconds left.

"I'm very proud of how our team kept their composure. It was definitely a 'battle out there,'" Venechanos said. "It was a game of some runs, when they had a couple goals right after the half we came back and responded with a couple goals of our own and I think that was the turning point of the game.

"When a team comes back on us we need to keep going, kick it up a step."

The Minutewomen's offensive strategy was to keep the ball moving and score goals in the passing game. Junior attack Kristina Twichell led the UMass passing assault. She had a team high three assists and she scored one goal. UMass recorded a season-high 10 assists by finding the holes in the Albany defense.

"Attacking did a good job of just looking for each other and taking what the defense gave us," Venechanos said. "They played a defense where it's conducive to passing and we took advantage of that by using ... as a passing team."

Zwick took full advantage of what the defense gave her. The Great Danes collapsed around the field, putting pressure on the stick handler when Zwick found holes in the defense. She scored four goals by moving without the ball, cutting and cashing on feed-and-go passes.

"She works really hard, she knows the game and understands it," Venechanos said. "Sometimes the stars receive well-made plays and that was the case for her. She's been putting them away."

Typadis, scoring a career-high at 80 goals. Her 98 career goals moved her to 11th all-time at UMass. She said she knew with 19 goals to go, she was in control on the team with five records.

"She's been doing a lot of things on, coming to practice and she's able to adapt to what they give her," Typadis said of her coach's confidence in her. "I just wanted to go out and be aggressive and I'm definitely happy with my records."

Five of Typadis' six goals came in the second half. She also had one assist to finish out a career high in points with seven. She needs four more points to crack the top 10 all-time points leader board.

Albany was led by senior midfielder Sarah Spitler and freshman midfielder Kayla Best each scored two goals. The Great Dane offense had trouble running their plays but they were able to score goals by attacking the UMass defense with one-on-one moves.

"They go really strong to the goal, we know that going in and if we didn't stop them they went," Venechanos said. "They don't really have to execute anything different. If we didn't stop them they went straight for the goals. "We worked on playing body defense and tried to make them be more of passers."

UMass out-shot the Great Danes 30-20. McCarthy made nine saves on the day and sophomore Claire Marston made her first career start recording two assists. The Minutewomen have a 10-day layoff before traveling to New Hampshire on March 20.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

UMass broke out of a scoring slump against Harvard. It scored nearly as many goals Saturday (11) as it did the previous two weeks (12).

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10PM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN

★Swimming ★Tennis
★Basketball ★Fitness

COMPETITIVE BASKETBALL GAMES w/JERRY Mon/Thurs 6-8pm
OVER 30 FREE CLASSES WEEKLY

HAMPFIT.COM for Rates & Info

Join Now
Spring Special
$149/ 10 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

Attention First-Year Students:
The deadline to pass MyStudentBody is TODAY!
To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course by the end of the day. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Ferrets totally dig sudoku!

Thats the smartest member of the weasel family that I've ever seen.

Send us more pictures of odd creatures completing the sudoku at: collegiancomics@yahoo.com

P.S. Check out the claw action on this critter.

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andlamo.cc

4				8				1
		3		2		6		9
	5
	6			3	5
	4	1	7		9	3	5
			1	8			6
							9
8		6	4			7
9			8					3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Capp and Gore
4 A/C measure
7 Distress signal
10 Mach+ jet
13 Sioux
14 Dr. Dre's genre
15 Blast letters
18 Top pilot
17 Constitution writers
19 LAX posting
20 Lon ... of Cambodia
21 Expansion test lee
22 Plaintive
24 Bandleader Puente
25 Wok sauce
27 Arrest record
28 Manipulators
30 Argentine aunt
32 Hold contents
33 Scare tactic
35 'Our Miss Brooks' star
37 Pills or pads
39 Yelled
43 Population count
46 Effective use
49 Lawn moisture
51 Cruz, CA
52 Thaw twice
54 Lake maker
56 Obligation
57 Advance showing
59 Brazilian port
61 Abdul Aziz Saud
62 Refrain syllable
63 Cook in a wok
65 Take a chair
66 Sea eagle
67 Knack
68 Director Spike
69 6-pointers

DOWN
1 Kennel sound
2 Somewhat big
3 Employee at the test lee
4 Concoct
5 Topless little pies
6 Outcome
7 Goulash or stumgution
8 Scheduled to follow
9 Flights
10 Koulax formally
11 Chastise severely
12 Informs against
18 Mary Tyler or Roger
23 Stretcher of the truth
24 Boy king of Egypt
26 Gave in
29 Earth orbiters
31 Caesar's hail
34 Old seafarer
36 List-ending abbr
38 Flower garden
39 Heavenly musician?
40 Excessively otter perhaps
41 Mourns
42 Schreiber of "HKD 281"
44 Lowest point
45 Breathe noisily
46 Spoke
47 Speak
50 Polish capital
53 ... cotta
55 French subway system
58 Magician's baton
60 Refer to in a footnote
64 Sure enough!

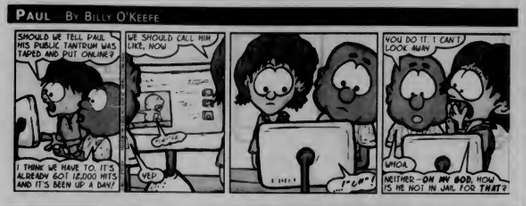
DELANO'S
$5 PITCHERS
$2 VODKA WELL DRINKS
GET YOUR BUTT DOWNTOWN!
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"All I need is one mic to spread my voice to the whole world."

-Nas

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



SHOULD WE TELL PAUL HIS PUBLIC TANTRUM WAS TAPED AND PUT ONLINE?
I THINK WE HAVE TO. IT'S ALREADY GOT 12,000 HITS AND IT'S BEEN UP A DAY!
WE SHOULD CALL HIM LIKE, NOW
YEP.
YOU DO IT. I CAN'T LOOK AWAY
WHOA.
NEITHER—OH MY GOD, HOW IS ME NOT IN JAIL FOR THAT?

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

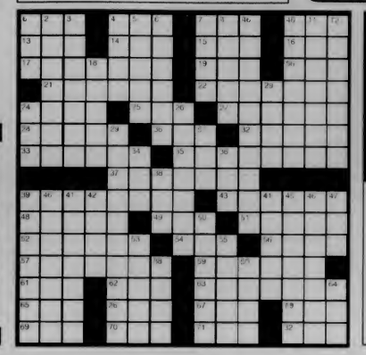
Must people use their trucks to get groceries and drop off dry cleaning
I have more ambitious plans
Felons, miscreants or ne'er-do-wells: look out!
I'll patrol the streets of this desert town
Me and my truck
You're not lacking purpose
No, but I am lacking a fourth tire

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

DUDE, YOU DON'T LOOK SO GOOD.
I'M REALLY BEAT, DUDE.
I HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO TAKE A BREAK SINCE I STARTED THIS MORNING.
WELL, WHAT HAVE YOU BEEN DOING ALL DAY?
TRYING TO TAKE A NAP.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

I'd rather be back at that oasis
We were defending the orphaned animals
We could have eaten the orphaned animals
Everybody Melissa, you can't eat your way through all your problems
Be wary my dear, raisins doesn't make any sense
I took the day off because of stress and you know what I still never get it



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Be more hospitable to newcomers. AKA stop screaming everytime you see a baby.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Just be happy you're not from Trenton, NJ and if you are...sorry.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You are turning into your mother. It is scarier than alligators in your toilet.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Do not be swayed by the seductiveness of Big League Chew bubble gum.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Pour a few ounces on the curb for Pluto, it's in a better solar system now.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If your whole building loses power, you're probably at UMASS.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Always apply alliteration and ample use of A's.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Make sure that hunger is not the only reason you get out of bed in the morning.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Completely give up on sleeping. And eating. And brushing, wiping and bathing.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You are a tiger and it is imperative that you grab life by the jugular if you want to eat.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
The world is a kaleidoscope of color but you're more blind than newborn mole.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Some people can actually floss their nose with noodles. Now that is talent!

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Join the wave of your generation's willingness to serve our country No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Offering new online GenEds and more. Plan now by visiting our summer sneak preview website: www.UMassUlearn.net

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/ day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/ office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/ hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

HOUSE FOR RENT

Northampton Cathedral ceiling, sky-lites, hardwood floors, 4-5 bdrms. 9/1 $1950. 413-730-6660

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst

SERVICES

Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Advertise in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace.

Submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 12, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Junior forward Gary Forbes and the Minutemen made the NCAA postseason for the first time since 2000, also making the NIT.

Minutemen not done playing just yet

UMass draws fourth seed in NIT, squares off with Alabama

By Ron Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball has some more basketball to play.

Last night, the Minutemen were selected as a No. 4 seed in the National Invitation Tournament (NIT) and will play fifth-seeded Alabama at the Mullins Center on Tuesday night at 9:30 p.m. on ESPN.

It is the 10th appearance for the UMass basketball program in the NIT.

"We're excited that we're able to play against such a great team like Alabama," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "It's a great name team to come into the Mullins Center and it's an honor to be in the NIT. We're kind of rejuvenated a little bit and are excited to keep playing."

Ford learned of his team's fate right before taping "The Travis Ford Show" last night, and after the show Ford headed back to Amherst to get in touch with his team. The Minutemen will practice this afternoon at the Mullins Center in preparation for tomorrow's game.

It will be the first practice for the Minutemen in over a week, thanks to the acute illness that spread through the roster before their Atlantic 10 Tournament game last Thursday.

Ford hasn't seen much of Alabama this year, and will be watching film tomorrow to prepare for some of Alabama's sets.

"This is going to be a first," Ford said about playing the Crimson Tide. "I just know that Alabama is a very talented basketball team. They are very talented and very deep."

After the Saint Louis Billikens pulled off a stunning 74-71 upset over the Minutemen in the quarterfinals of the A-10 Tournament in Atlantic City, the arduous road to 23 wins seemed not worth taking.

However, the Minutemen know now that there is another game on their schedule, and they can stop wondering what could have been

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

(Black) Bear trappers

Mass Attack reaches Hockey East semis with sweep of Maine

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

The final field of four in the Hockey East Tournament is set, and the Massachusetts hockey team will be one of those still competing come Friday at the TD Banknorth Garden.

UMass (20-11-5, 15-9-3 HEA) swept Maine in the pair's best-of-three quarterfinal matchup this weekend, 3-2 and 5-2. Friday night's game was witnessed by 7,119 fans, while 8,062 were in attendance on Saturday at the Mullins Center. The two wins give the Minutemen six in a row four over Maine (21-14-2, 14-12-1 HEA) alone.

UMass	3
Maine	2

UMass	5
Maine	2

New Hampshire, Boston College and Boston University will be the other three teams in Boston this weekend. UNH and BC decisively swept their opponents Providence and Northeastern, respectively while it took the Terriers three games to dispose of Vermont.

As the No. 4 seed in the playoffs, UMass will take on the Wildcats in the semifinals. The Minutemen won the season series between the two, 2-1, taking games in both Amherst and Durham.

Leading into the weekend against the Black Bears, UMass coach Don Cahoon said it was imperative for his team to not get overwhelmed by the hype of hosting a playoff series for the first time since 2004. When it was all said and done, Cahoon was proud the Mass Attack stayed within itself.

"We really just spent more time preparing for the things that they do and bearing down the execution, the attention to detail and, believe it or not, discipline," he said. "To the most part we had a pretty good time of it. Obviously it starts with Jon [Quick] in the net, making critical saves and being so consistent for so long."

Quick was amazing for the Minutemen this weekend. He stopped 73 shots in the games combined 38 came Friday and 35 Saturday.

With Maine trying to avoid elimination, UMass came out firing in the first period Saturday night. The Minutemen said they wanted to come out and show Maine they were ready. Senior Chris Capraro helped that out, putting UMass on the scoreboard at 8:21 of the opening period.

Defenseman Mike Kostka dumped the puck in the attacking zone, sending it to boards behind Maine goaltender Dave Wilson. Both Capraro and junior Matt Burto, along with a Black Bear defender, crashed into the boards going after the puck.

Capraro fished it out and broke for the net. He deked twice and stuffed in past Wilson's left leg. The goal was huge for a team trying to calm a charged up opponent.

Sophomore Cory Quirk then added to UMass's already building momentum some eight minutes later. Defenseman Justin Braun had control just inside the blue line on the on the left side of the offensive zone

See HOCKEY on page 7

UMass sophomore forward Will Ortiz watches as Maine goaltender Dave Wilson tries to make a save on one of the Minutemen's 28 shots Saturday night at the Mullins Center. The Mass Attack swept the best-of-three series from the Black Bears, and now advances to Boston Friday for the Hockey East semifinals.

UM notches first win in '07

Offensive outburst outlasts Crimson rally in fourth

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE After a magical 2006 season that took the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team all the way to the National Championship, the Minutemen began a new campaign with two losses by a combined three goals.

On Saturday, Harvard could have saddled UMass with a third loss and dug a mighty hole for this year's Minutemen, but the men in maroon held on for their first victory of the 2007 season, 11-10, over the Crimson (0-3) at Jordan Field.

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly led the Minutemen (1-2) with five goals, three more than he totaled in the first two games combined.

UMass	11
Harvard	10

"I think today was our best performance of the year so far as a whole," Connolly said. "We tried to put all of the aspects we worked on all week into today's effort. I think we did a good job of accomplishing that."

UMass went down 2-0 early thanks to goals by Harvard's Carle Steinmark (12:26) and Brian Mahler (10:07), but Connolly responded with his first goal of the game and third on the season with 7:56 left in the first quarter to get the Minutemen on the

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

Rory Pedrick (above) assisted on goals by Jim Connolly and Andrew Recchione in the Minutemen's win over Harvard on Saturday.

Struggles lead to UCF sweep

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

A struggle with all facets of the game resulted in a 7-1 loss for the Massachusetts baseball team on Sunday against Central Florida. The victory gave the Golden Knights a three-game sweep over the Minutemen on their home field in Orlando, Fla.

Sunday's setback for UMass (0-3) followed Friday's 6-1 defeat and a 5-2 loss on Saturday in a game that the Minutemen fell short, after threatening UCF (11-9) in the eighth inning.

UMass had a tough time defensively on Sunday, committing four errors two each by shortstop Lou Proietti and third baseman Ryan Franczek. Although all but one run was earned, UMass errors in the second, fourth and fifth innings helped UCF score in each of those frames.

Sophomore starter Mike DiCato only lasted four innings for UMass, surrendering four runs (three earned) on four hits and three walks. Four Minutemen pitchers combined to allow 10 hits and six walks while Golden Knight hurler Jaager Good more than lived up to his last name, shutting UMass down for seven strong innings of work.

It was kind of an uphill battle today," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We had four errors and gave up 10 hits, and we didn't hit much ourselves."

The Golden Knights led off the second inning with a home run by designated hitter Chris Duffy and added an unearned run after Ryan Richardson who reached base on a throwing error by Franczek scored on a Dwayne Bailey single. Those two runs were all UCF needed, as UMass scored its only run in the ninth inning on an RBI

See BASEBALL on page 8

Check out the Collegian's new sports blog at:
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.SPORTS.BLOGSPOT.COM

UMASS HOSTS ALABAMA IN NIT PAGE 10 | STROKE'S GUITARIST MISSES WITH SOLO ALBUM PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 57 LO: 42 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 2007

SOM ranked top business school

Survey says SOM is best in Northeast

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

It may not take a business major to know the value of getting the most bang for one's buck, but the 3,131 undergraduate students enrolled at the University of Massachusetts' Isenberg School of Management are doing just that, as the school has been ranked highest overall among undergraduate, public business schools in the Northeast.

In BusinessWeek magazine's annual survey, "The Best Undergraduate Business Schools," the Isenberg School of Management was listed above all northeastern public business schools and 58th in a comprehensive, nationwide poll.

The college's Web site, www.isenberg.umass.edu, makes known that the school has issued more than 30,000 degrees since its first graduating class in 1949 and offers these degrees in concentrations from six departments. These include accounting and information systems, finance and operations management, hospitality and tourism management, management and sport management.

According to Isenberg School of Management Communications Director Lou Wigdor, the survey was not only based on statistical data, but also responses from the graduating seniors of each respective school and answers from corporate recruiters. Students answered questions about but not limited to quality of faculty, curriculum and extracurricular activities, which accounted for 30 percent of the rating process. Twenty percent was aimed at corporate recruiters who answered inquiries pertaining to quality of graduates, curricula innovation and career services.

"This milestone reflects our concerted efforts to prepare our students for success in the global economy," says Dean Soren Bisgaard. "I am extremely proud of our faculty, staff and especially our students."

"A major part of my decision to come here was the high ranking of the business school," senior Adam Holmes adds.

BusinessWeek based much of its sta-

See SOM on page 3

BusinessWeek Magazine conducted its annual survey, "The Best Undergraduate Business Schools," placing UMass' Isenberg School of Management above all northeastern public business schools, ranking it 58th nationwide.

UM under close watch

471 security cameras watch UMass students

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts are being on watched daily through the lenses of 471 operating security cameras at various locations throughout campus, 70 percent of which are located in residence halls.

These cameras go unnoticed by most people who walk by, but they're there when anyone exits or enters the Campus Center, Student Union, any of the dining commons, Isenberg School of Management and all of the residence halls on campus.

In fall 2006, each residence hall building was required to have a security camera at each of its exits and entrances, according to a July 2006 newsletter from the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences. A total of 325 cameras were added as a result, costing a total of $500,000.

This heightened campus security comes after the 2005 ABC Primetime special labeling UMass as "a campus with highest levels of violent crime in the nation."

According to the UMass Police Department's Web site, which contains a list of camera locations on campus, the use of video cameras "seek to enhance public safety and security, in a professional and ethical manner, consistent with accepted legal rights of privacy."

Most residence halls now have about seven or eight cameras per building. But eight dorm buildings on campus have five cameras the fewest number of cameras in a hall including three of the five Southwest Towers, John Adams, Kennedy and Washington.

"I'm surprised to hear that one of the most populated buildings has only a small number of cameras when smaller dorms have more," said Kristen Healy, a freshman John Adams resident. "I've never felt unsafe living here, but more cameras could be helpful to prevent theft in the building."

Smaller, less occupied residence halls, like Cance and Baker, have 11 cameras, a number more than high-occupancy halls. Butterfield Hall in Central has the most cameras, with 13 in the building. Students living in Butterfield found it strange that the building, which holds about 140 students compared to about 700 in the Southwest towers, has more security cameras than any other residence hall.

"I honestly had no idea that we had so many cameras," said Katelyn Breen, a freshman living in Butterfield. "Thirteen cameras seems a bit ridiculous, especially since Central is so quiet, and our dorm is a first-year dorm and is pretty isolated from the rest of campus at the top of the hill."

Another Butterfield resident believes that thirteen cameras are excessive but don't create any problems in the quiet building.

"I've lived here the last two years, and Butterfield is undoubtedly one of the most hospitable and amiable dorms on campus, not to mention one of the safest," said sophomore Russell Bonfils. "Although having the lounge (which

See SECURITY on page 3

After an ABC Primetime special labeled UMass as "the most violent campus in the nation," campus security heightened with the addition of 325 cameras.

Stop & Shop settles contract dispute

New contract ends talk of employee strike

By Debbie Friedman
Collegian Staff

After weeks of negotiations, the Stop & Shop company and local union leaders have agreed to settle on a new, three-year contract, ending the possibility of over 43,000 workers going on strike.

The decision to accept the company's newly drafted proposal happened on Sunday, when the five local unions involved in the dispute met throughout locations in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

Local Union 1459, who supports employees working in Western Massachusetts, met at the Holyoke Holiday Inn at 9 a.m. on Sunday, to hear the proposal and vote on whether or not to accept it. Six hundred members were in attendance and voted overwhelmingly in favor of a settlement, with a count of 597 to 4.

A letter to union members posted on the Web site, www.ufcw1459.com states that the unions' bargaining team spent 36 continuous hours working out a fair contract with Stop & Shop company executives. All five unions worked together to negotiate the contract.

The letter on the Web site also attributed the threat of a strike as the main way in which, "the unions were able to wrangle major last-minute concessions on health and pension benefit packages and achieved modest gains in hourly compensation from the company."

Scott Macey, president of Local Union 1459 in Western Mass.

President of Local Union 1459, Scott Macey, went on to say, "We're very satisfied with the outcome of these negotiations.

"Stop & Shop tried to play hard ball with us. But our members stood strong and so instead of losing significant benefits, we came out on top," Macey said.

The contract dispute stemmed from proposed cuts to retirement and healthcare packages, which Stop & Shop initially proposed to employees in December 2006. Talks between the unions and the company followed into February, when tensions intensified, and the former contract expired. Both sides stood strong and prepared for the possibility of a strike, with the company hiring temporary employees and union members going door to door to gain support.

For Stop & Shop employees, executives and customers alike, the crisis has been averted, and the 231 stores which would have been affected by the strike will continue to stay open and operate normally.

Debbie Friedman can be reached at dkfriedm@student.umass.edu

On Sunday, about 600 members of Local Union 1459 voted overwhelmingly in favor of the contract draft proposal, 597 to 4, for Stop & Shop employees.

Pictionary with a sexy twist

To promote sex education, Health Education, Community and Marketing Division at University Health Services has created a workshop, similar to the board game Pictionary, which includes demonstrations and explanations that help players improve their ability to practice smart, safer sex.

Technology rises, wrist watch trends fall

By Lauren Bonner
Collegian Staff

Timing is everything, or so the saying goes. Every second counts in daily situations making it to work on time, using every second of a lunch break, counting down the minutes until an employee can punch out and go home or how many minutes a teenager has left until curfew is broken. People revolve around the clock.

Telling time started off by using the sun. If the sun was high in the sky, it was close to mid-day. Then came the sun dial, and after that, the pocket watch. Now, people rely on their cell phones. Each time technology outdoes itself, people seem to forget about the old and make room for the new. Now, as a result, wrist watches are disappearing.

"I used to wear a watch, but the batteries died, and I never replaced them," said senior Kim Hong. "When I did wear one I felt like I was always checking the time because it was right there."

Many watch companies believe that the decrease in trend of wrist watches is due to its lack of multi-tasking. The cell phone has a number of features at ones fingertips an Mp3 player, a calendar, an address book, a clock, a camera, a hand-held instant messenger and a phone. An alarm clock can be used as a radio, a CD

See WATCH on page 3

Watch companies believe the decline in wrist watch trends are due to its lack of multi-tasking, compared to the many available features of cell phones.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 99

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Atha
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherol Wolnik
ADMEDITING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADMEDITING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Dustin Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADMEDITING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolaniuiu
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. WITH THE COLLEGE SIGNS IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Cockfighting banned in New Mexico, LA keeps it legal

BY TIM KORTE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Gov. Bill Richardson signed a measure Monday that outlaws cockfighting in New Mexico, leaving Louisiana as the only state where the centuries-old bloodsport remains legal.

State Sen. Mary Jane Garcia, who has introduced legislation to ban cockfighting over the past 18 years, thanked Richardson, who until this legislative session had declined to take a stance on the issue. The prohibition takes effect June 15.

"Today, New Mexico joins 48 other states in affirming that the deliberate killing of animals for entertainment and profit is no longer acceptable," said Garcia, D-Dona Ana.

Richardson signed the bill at a ceremony at the state Capitol in Santa Fe.

Cockfighting fans have accused Richardson of taking a sudden interest in cockfighting now that he is seeking the Democratic nomination for president. They also defend cockfighting as a family activity and said opponents were meddling.

"I'm so upset that it's damn near ruining my life," said Ronald Barron, president of the New Mexico Game Fowl Association. "I've got 38 years doing this. I don't know if I should hatch off some baby chicks right now. This isn't a business. It's my pleasure. It's my right, or rather it was my right."

Barron said the association planned a legal challenge.

During a cockfight, two roosters fitted with blades or gaffs on their legs are placed into a pit and fight until one is dead or badly wounded. Although gambling on the fights is illegal, spectators openly wager on the outcome.

Wayne Pacelle, president of The Humane Society, called the law's passage "a major moment in the effort to rid our nation of this barbaric and reprehensible practice."

"New Mexico removed an ugly blemish today, and it is a proud moment for the state," Pacelle said.

Louisiana Gov. Kathleen Blanco, who took no position on a cockfighting ban last year, said Monday she now supports making the practice illegal.

"I support banning cockfighting," Blanco said in a one-sentence e-mail from her press office.

In 2006 a state senator's bill to criminalize rooster fights failed in Louisiana Legislature.

New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson smiles after signing a bill that bans cockfighting in New Mexico at the Capitol in Santa Fe, N.M. on Monday.

Georgia first state to allow Bible classes in public schools

BY DOUG GROSS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Georgia is poised to introduce two literature classes on the Bible in public schools next year, a move some critics say would make the state the first to take an explicit stance endorsing and funding biblical teachings.

The Bible already is incorporated into some classes in Georgia and other states, but some critics say the board's move, which makes the Bible the classes' main text, treads into dangerous turf.

On a list of classes approved Thursday by the Georgia Board of Education are Literature and History of the Old Testament Era, and Literature and History of the New Testament Era. The classes, approved last year by the Legislature, will not be required, and the state's 180 school systems can decide for themselves whether to offer them.

The school board's unanimous vote set up a 30-day public comment period, after which it is expected to give final approval.

Senate Majority Leader Tommie Williams, the Republican who sponsored the plan, said the Bible plays a major role in history and is important in understanding many classic literary works.

"It's not just 'The Good Book,'" Williams said. "It's a good book."

Charles Haynes of the First Amendment Center, a nonpartisan civil liberties group, has said the Georgia policy is the nation's first to endorse and fund Bible classes on a statewide level.

The bill approved overwhelmingly in the Legislature was tailored to make it clear the courses would not stray into religious teaching, Williams said.

The measure calls for the courses to be taught "in an objective and nondevotional manner with no attempt made to indoctrinate students."

But critics say that while the language may pass constitutional muster, that could change in the classroom if instructors stray.

Maggie Garrett, legislative counsel for the Georgia branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, said the curriculum approved Tuesday like the Legislation itself is vague.

"They didn't put in any outlines describing what they can and can't do constitutionally," she said. "The same traps are there for teachers who decide to teach the class."

Some teachers might seek to include their own beliefs or be pushed by students into conversations that include religious proselytizing, Garrett said.

During last year's campaign-period legislative session, Democrats surprised majority Republicans by introducing a plan to teach the Bible in public schools. Republicans, who control both chambers, quickly responded with their own version, which passed and was signed into law by Gov. Sonny Perdue.

The Georgia Board of Education approved the use of the Bible in literature classes Thursday, making Georgia the first state to allow biblical teachings.

Mass. wants immigrants freed

BY MELISSA TRUJILLO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The head of Massachusetts' social services on Monday called for the release of 20 factory workers arrested in an immigration raid, saying many have children with no one else to care for them.

They were among the 361 people taken into custody following the raid March 6 at a Michael Bianco Inc. factory that makes equipment and apparel for the U.S. military.

Many of the suspected illegal immigrants were shipped to detention centers in Texas before a federal judge ordered the rest to remain in Massachusetts because advocates said the raid created a "humanitarian crisis."

Commissioner Harry Spence was among three-dozen state Department of Social Services workers who traveled to Texas during the weekend to interview more than 200 detainees.

The department workers returned to Massachusetts on Monday after recommending the return of 21 detainees the day before, Spence said. One has since been released, he said.

Meanwhile, U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., sent a letter Monday to Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff asking that all detainees be returned to Massachusetts for supervised release.

In response to Kennedy's request, Russ Knocke, spokesman for the Department of Homeland Security in Washington, D.C., said the department has to enforce the law and added that at least 20 percent of the immigrants snared in the raid had already received deportation orders.

"We have to enforce the law and we will continue to do so in an aggressive and sensible way," Knocke said. "Not enforcing the law is not an option."

Spence said the detainees he wants released have children ages 2 to 16, and a few of the children had medical conditions that required special care, including one child that required a feeding tube. All were believed to be born in the United States and therefore are U.S. citizens.

Along with the mothers being held, Spence said the group of 20 included a woman suffering from cancer and a 17-year-old boy.

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement spokesman Marc Raimondi said the agency would review the requests.

He said federal authorities already had released at least 60 suspected illegal immigrants, mostly because they needed to care for their children.

"My information is there's still not a child left in a risky or inappropriate situation," Raimondi said.

In the days following the raid in New Bedford, a 7-month-old child was hospitalized for dehydration because the breast-feeding infant refused to drink formula and the mother was in custody for two nights. Another mother was located in Texas after her 7-year-old child called a hot line state officials created to reunite families.

But Spence said worries that some children may still fall through the cracks have diminished.

U.S. District Judge Richard Stearns set a Tuesday deadline for DSS and immigration authorities to report the status of any unresolved cases involving children. Stearns also said he would consider whether he has jurisdiction over the detainees being held outside Massachusetts.

Kevin Gonzalez, 9, and his sister Estrella, 6, hold signs during a rally near the federal courthouse to protest local government action against immigrants.

SPRING SPECIAL

SUPERCUTS
every time

AMHERST

Amherst Plaza Shopping Center
(next to Big Y Supermarket)
181 University Drive, Rte. 9
(413) 259-1135

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
Call Ahead Service available

Ask about our COLOR and WAXING SERVICES

$10
Super Haircut
(reg. $13.95)
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSHC

15% OFF
Hair Products
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSCS

Students: Give your brain a $10 coffee break.

Get a $10 coffeehouse gift card when you have your student taxes prepared at H&R Block.
Have H&R Block prepare your 1040 EZ and state tax returns, and get a $10 coffeehouse gift card. All for just $49 with valid college student ID.

Offer valid 1/15/07–3/30/07 at this location only:
Campus Plaza, 458-10 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
413.256.2100
hrblock.com

H&R BLOCK®
You get people®

Students watched through security cameras

SECURITY from page 1

includes two exits) under constant surveillance has been somewhat disconcerting, the cameras haven't been the topic of any real controversy within the dormitory and among its residents. They're just there."

According to Jim Meade, the Residence Hall Security Manager at UMass, the number of security cameras in a building is usually based on how many entrances there are.

"Our baseline standard for security cameras is to cover every entrance into the building, plus the security desk," said Meade. "Butterfield has more exterior doors so it has more cameras. Other buildings with fewer doors have fewer cameras."

The dining commons have somewhere between 14 and 23 cameras, totaling 83 cameras, while the Student Union and the Campus Center together have 55 cameras.

The UMPD states on their Web site, "They are committed to enhancing the community's quality of life by the responsible use of technology." In order to do so, the police department has set up security cameras in listed locations to prevent or deter crime, reduce the fear of crime and identify suspects of criminal activity.

One example of this use of cameras is the recent December riots that took place in Southwest. With the advantage of 113 security cameras in Southwest and the 23 cameras in Berkshire Dining Commons, UMass Police were able to identify about 70 students involved in the riots. Last month, the police department found images from video surveillance to arrest an additional 12 students two months after the riots took place.

According to UMass Housing Services, these cameras are put to good use. Not only do students and their parents feel safer, the cameras help lessen crime, for "people will think twice before acting violently against a person or property."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

About 470 surveillance cameras have been placed at every entrance and exit of all residence and dining halls, Student Union, and the Campus Center.

Magazine survey places SOM on top

SOM from page 1

tistical data on class size, starting median salary of recently graduated alumni [$46,500], and faculty-student ratio [29:5]. The survey also graded the quality of the school's students in categories such as average SAT [1186], ACT and average time spent on school work.

The magazine commented that it holds the sports management program in especially high regard, yet critiques, "internships outside of accounting and finance are difficult to find." Senior sports management major Eric Whisman agrees with this assessment.

"We get e-mails about internships, but most seem to be in finance. The sports management program is great, but it's hard to find internships or get valuable advising," Whisman says.

Undergraduate Dean Carol Barr says, "Our achievement represents a total team effort by an exceptionally talented and engaged faculty, staff and student body. Our undergraduates are exceptional both academically and as leaders in a vibrant learning community.

"The BusinessWeek survey is a welcome acknowledgement of the many things that we are doing well, but is also valuable because it gives us strategic information that will allow us to continue our quest for continuous improvement," Barr says.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Saturn moon's heated from decay

BY ALICIA CHANG
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Scientists believe heat from radioactive decay inside a tiny, icy Saturn moon shortly after it formed billions of years ago may explain why geysers are erupting from the surface today. The Cassini spacecraft last year beamed back dazzling images of Yellowstone-like geysers spewing from a warm section on Enceladus, raising the possibility that the moon, which has an overall surface temperature of about minus-330 degrees, may have an internal environment suitable for primitive life.

A new model suggests ancient radioactive decay played a key role in shaping the moon's warm south pole region, where plumes of water vapor and ice crystals periodically vent.

According to the theory, Enceladus formed some 4.5 billion years ago by the mixing of ice and rock containing radioactive isotopes of aluminum and iron. Over a period of several million years, the rapid decay of the isotopes produced a burst of heat that resulted in a rocky core enclosed by an ice sheet. Over time, the remaining decomposition in the core further warmed and melted the moon's interior.

Results were presented Monday at the annual Lunar and Planetary Science Conference in Texas.

Scientists believe radioactive decay inside the tiny Saturn moon, formed billions of years ago, may explain why geysers are erupting from the surface.

The Cassini team previously theorized that the geysers likely came from underground reservoirs of water close to the surface, indicating a lasting heat source inside. Matson said the latest model helps explain where the interior heat might have come from.

Cassini scientists plan to measure the composition of the gas rising from the plume during an Enceladus flyby in 2008.

Eco-drive watches on the rise

WATCH from page 1

player, an iPod dock or even a night light. But a wrist watch is just a watch. Every time a power outage or daylight savings takes place, the computer, the cellular phone and the iPod automatically adjust. The watch, however, does not.

"I don't wear any jewelry on my wrist," said senior Dan Gamache. "Plus, I have my cell phone. I would wear one for running or swimming, or a nice watch for a formal occasion."

According to ABC News, watch sales, in the price range used by young adults and teens, decreased by 10 percent in 2004 and accelerated in 2005 during the Christmas shopping season.

The sales of Japanese watches in 2002 are presumed to have decreased in both value and number due to the deterioration competition in the watch market, according to a Japanese sales record.

The record also states that Time brand watches are making an attempt to revitalize their business with the Eco-drive, radio-controlled watch, equipped with a light-powered, Eco-drive system. The new product was launched on June 10, 2006, the anniversary of Time Company. So far, the product has been selling well. The company will continue to promote sales as they believe that "freeing users from the bother of renewing battery and adjusting the time and date, has been accepted by consumers."

Time is not the only company struggling to fight back by redesigning. At the recent Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas, some new watches carried ear buds and the ability to play music. Others gave the temperature of the air and water, according to ABC News.

"I think I wear a watch because I've been wearing one my whole life," said junior Brian Kane. "I like it being right there on my wrist and it looks nice."

Whether or not the watch fades out or comes back into style, watch-makers have faith that their time will come again.

Lorraine Burger can be reached at lburger@student.umass.edu.

Time brand watches, like Citizen, are trying to revitalize the wrist watch industry through their line of light-powered, Eco-drive watches.

It's no Blarney... Celebrate St. Patrick's Day lunch in all DC's

Wednesday, March 14, 2007
11:30 am to 2:00 pm
enjoy Irish music & a great menu!

Fish & Chips
Corned Beef
Steamed Cabbage
Boiled Potatoes
Boiled Carrots
Guiness Cake
Irish Soda Bread
from UMASS Bake Shop

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

www.umass.edu/diningservices

SOLVE THIS.

What pair of English words, with no letters in common, have the greatest product of their lengths?*

HAVE FUN WORKING HERE.

* Solve this puzzle for a chance to meet ITA Software's extraordinary engineers and interview at our Cambridge, MA office. For details, please visit www.itasoftware.com/careers/umass.

ita Software™

www.itasoftware.com/careers

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Got Xenophobia?

Safia Albaiti

I don't know how many people have ever checked out cafepress.com before, but, let me just say, it serves as proof that there are some pretty scary people out there. I was browsing the "immigration" section the other day, looking for a "No Human Being Is Illegal" shirt when I was bombarded with zealous nativist slogans instead, ranging from downright creepy Jim Crow-like "Keep Texas Beautiful: Build The Fence" to the ultra-racist Aryan "Deport Pedro."

Of course, not every slogan was like that. But it's really unsettling when, out of 5,770 shirt designs offered, only about 10 actually say something that gives you the idea that immigrants just might be human.

Apparently, lots of people don't think so. There are many genuinely frustrated individuals and families who have real problems like being uninsured and being unemployed and think that if they rush into the arms of Conservative vultures like the Heritage Foundation and Bill O'Reilly, all their problems will be solved. Because the likes of Bill O'Reilly claim to speak for working class America and indulge in scapegoating, it's probably harder to resist and focus on the government and the present administration for not guaranteeing universal health care and fixing broken schools.

Here's a thought, how about we make literacy the official language in the country?

After all, "illegal immigration" wasn't the source of the gross neglect of Hurricane Katrina victims. The Bush administration was and still is. Bill O'Reilly can rant on and on about how "illegals" are taking jobs that Americans could have had, but the man doesn't know what it's like to work two jobs to pay for school; he went to a private high school and college, so he can just climb off of that moral high-horse.

No use winning people over because being of Irish descent somehow gives someone the moral authority. If O'Reilly's audience knew that out of the 11 million undocumented immigrants in America, 25,000 of them are Irish, I wonder if they would think twice about things like deportation and denying amnesty. When I hear things like, "Oh, my parents came here legally," or read things like "Norwegian Pride: You Have to Be One to Understand," it makes my skin crawl.

What did you have to do to be considered legal back then? Have your name changed at Ellis Island because it was too German or Irish or Jewish, and just be thankful they allowed you to board ship? Is that the level of degradation we all have to go through to be American?

Should every child born of immigrant parents be called Michael instead of Mohammed? It's funny how nativists zealously call out against the "Hispanicization" of America, but not many of them would be able to form a sentence in Finnish or Slovenian to save their lives.

It's also funny that we're trying to make English the official language in the country, but we have a president who says things like "nucular" and "misunderestimated." Here's a thought, how about we make literacy the official language in the country?

I think we should just call a spade a spade and just say it; it's not about the law and it's not about heritage. It's about your skin color. Who determines who gets to be a hyphenated American? Who's American enough to just let that stand alone? Why are African-Americans and Asian-Americans hyphenated? Why don't we extend the hyphen to descendants of those who arrived in the Mayflower? It's because, although all Americans are American, some are more American than others. I could be wrong, but I think it's a white thing.

There, I said it. I'm no racist either. There was a time when the Irish were called the n-word, "turned inside out." There was also a time when Benjamin Franklin once wrote, in his 1751 pamphlet, Observations Concerning the Increase of Mankind, "Why should Pennsylvania, founded by the English, become a Colony of Aliens, who will shortly be so numerous as to Germanize us instead of our Anglifying them, and will never adopt our Languages or Customs, any more than they can acquire our Complexion?" It seems the Mexicans and Arabs of today are just the Germans, Irishmen, Chinese and Jews of the earlier centuries.

Last year, on May 1, 2 million immigrants, documented and undocumented, those harassed and those who were safe, marched for immigration reform. Although most Americans know September 4 to be the official labor day, historically, May 1 was that day and still is to the rest of the world. May 1 commemorates the struggle to establish the eight hour working day in the U.S. to protest against poor working conditions in the late 19th century.

Immigrants chose this day to continue this very American struggle for the right to live free of want. Does that make them more American? Maybe we should just ask the Native Americans who have to petition for the right to live on their land, albeit scraps of it, known as "reservations," through the "Bureau of Indian Affairs." To them, we're all illegal. Can you say immigrant in Navajo?

Safia Albaiti can be reached at salbaiti@student.umass.edu.

Rallying on deaf ears

Michael Dennis

There are few individuals who would argue against the notion that, by and large, the UMass campus is seen as a politically left-leaning community. In such a situation, one would think the main goal of those in the minority would be to try and sway others (especially those on the fence) to support their cause.

Not so, apparently, for the UMass Republican Club. The actions of this organization constitute a flawless case study on how not to win friends and influence people. This student-run group has repeatedly organized rallies and invited speakers whom, at best, can be described as blatantly antagonistic and non-constructive, and at worst, virulently hateful and loathsome of healthy debate. The themes of such events have ranged from anti-gay, anti-feminist, anti-women's rights, to anti-worker's rights, among other things. In many well-documented instances (such as last semester's event where anti-feminist Dr. Mike Adams spoke, was heckled, and then the heckler was mildly assaulted by a member of the Republican Club), audiences have, to say the least, not been swayed by the messages being pushed.

All too often, their rallies come off like bizarre performance art pieces, serving to warn against the pitfalls of extremism in a comical, over-the-top fashion.

Normally, I would say that spectators at such events should try to hold back their reactions until after the event has ended, or until they are asked to comment. What many neglect to recognize, of course, is that this standard is one that must be reciprocated by the spectators and the orators alike. As in the case of Thursday's pro-ROTC rally (at least, I think that's what the point of it originally was), the second a shout from the audience is met by an equally belligerent reaction from the speaker, all bets are off.

In fact, at each of the Republican Club rallies I've attended within the last school year (the aforementioned event as well as last semester's pro-Wal Mart rally), a member of the club, speaking into a microphone for all to hear, has shouted a four-letter expletive toward the audience (hint: it rhymes with duck) as a means of venting their frustrations. Admittedly, this is a word I normally do not hesitate to use, and on a college campus, it's not rare to hear it. But if one is staging a rally in which the intention is to have one's opinion taken seriously, could there be a more unprofessional and bull-headed reaction to crowd opposition?

I understand it must be frustrating for members of the Republican Club to be ridiculed and laughed at during their own events. This could easily be avoided, however, with smarter planning and a dose of humility. All too often, their rallies come off like bizarre performance art pieces, serving to warn against the pitfalls of extremism in a comical, over-the-top fashion. Speakers don't orate, they merely yell at the audience, throwing out accusatory phrases that serve only to insult those in attendance (phrases like "dirty hippie" and "terrorists" come to mind). They don't even pretend to respect their onlookers and even taunt them about their presence, as evidenced on Thursday when one member implored individuals to leave, declaring that "Ho Chi Minh is having a book signing in the Campus Center."

The caveats of insulting one's own audience are obvious. However, it can't be understated that the biggest factor in successful political discourse is reading the crowd, and subsequently shaping the presentation of one's opinions in order to make them likely to be well received. This isn't to say, for example, if you're pro-gun, you get up in front of a group of leftists and talk about how much you hate the NRA. Rather, it implies that, if you believe your audience to be full of people who may potentially disagree with you, you may want to try and skewer a bit less extreme. It's common sense. Otherwise, you're simply asking for chaos. If you don't want your event to turn into a circus, don't present it as a circus. It's not for the benefit of the spectators – it's for yours.

The point here is not to claim that the Republican Club should cease to exist just because the Pioneer Valley is a hotbed of progressive ideals. But rather, I question who their target audience is (other than themselves) – and rack my brain as I might, I can't come up with anything. It seems like they're simply engaging in antagonism for antagonism's sake, rather than earnestly trying to change the political atmosphere in a way that is both positive and conducive to their beliefs.

It's plain to see that any virulent disdain existing on campus towards this organization is completely self-inflicted. If Republican Club members want to rant and rave about how anyone who doesn't "support our troops" is a terrorist, or about how America won the Vietnam War or about how anyone who supports women's rights is a Nazi, then more power to them. But don't point the finger and cry foul at clear-minded individuals who laugh and jeer because they see such notions as nothing more than extremist propaganda. UMass Republican Club, we hear you loud and clear – but if you want to be taken at all seriously, you've got a bit of self-reflection to do.

Michael Dennis can be reached at mdennis@student.umass.edu.

Some juicy entertainment

Brad Leibowitz

To juice or not to juice, that is the question? In today's highly followed world of professional sports this is the basic argument. Leagues spend millions of dollars each year to test their players to make sure they are not using any chemical enhancing drugs so the playing field is level.

For the vast majority of the sporting world, the athletes as well as the viewers see the realm as a professional one. Being a professional sphere, just like in our desk job water cooler world, you can't go to work high on crack, and thus, athletes can't go to work all juiced up.

However, I am one of the rare few who views sports not as a professional activity, but as entertainment. As such I am of the opinion, for the sake of entertainment, players should not only take steroids of various types, but the leagues, wanting to drive up revenue, should supply these chemical enhancing drugs.

To go along with this, the leagues should also provide incentives for players: For a double, an amphetamine; for a first down, a shot of human growth hormone; for a homerun, an injection of anabolic steroids.

How pumped would you be, if when you went to the ballpark, you knew you would see a 500 pound muscled out behemoth hit a baseball 1,500 feet out of the arena onto the West Side Highway? If you knew you would see a man who could jump over two six foot athletes stacked on one another without a running start, could you say no?

There is a health risk factor here, but to be honest, I am paying for entertainment, and if a slow roller down the third base line just isn't doing it anymore, I say bring on the steroids.

If a slow roller down the third base line just isn't doing it anymore, I say bring on the steroids.

Now I know what you're saying, "But Brad, this is morally terrible. You're advocating that we as a culture let our athletes take steroids, which will destroy their bodies, and set a terrible example for our children." Let me explain something.

First off, if I am going to pay $600 for four tickets, I want to see something that I haven't seen on television for the past 100 years. I have seen the slow roller down the third base line time and time again. But I haven't seen a pitcher who can hurl a ball at 125 mph, run the 100 yard dash in 2.2 seconds, and hit a ball 1,500 feet onto the nearest freeway. That I would pay to see and so would you.

Physically, I am not even going to try to make a case for the validity of steroids. Although they seem to make the athlete stronger, in the end, all they are doing is building muscles without improving the strength of the user's tendons. However, for as bad as this might make the athlete's look and feel, on a positive note, think of the children.

Maybe just maybe if our kids see a bad example set by our current day "hero's & supermen," they might decide to get a doctorate instead of deciding putting a ball through a hoop is the best avenue in life. With the use of steroids, the effects our kids will see might drive them to become the scientist to cure AIDS or cancer. I don't know about you, but I would take a cure for AIDS over a home run or a Terrell Owens any day.

In all seriousness, our nation is too obsessed with sports. In the days following September 11th, our Congress, instead of searching for Osama Bin Laden or rejecting the presidents need to enter into Iraq, was debating the use of steroids in professional baseball. Worst part about this: No one said a thing. Our silence justified the stupidity of our government. At a time when Congress should have been taking care of business, they were learning how to chew bubble gum with Mark McGwire and Rafael Palmeiro.

At the end of the day though, I am in search of entertainment. When I come home from a long day of work and turn on the game, I want to see something which will make me laugh un-controllably. This is why I think once steroids are legalized, players should play the game in just their jock straps. I say this not because I find Derek Jeter attractive. On the contrary, if you came home from a long day of work, turned on the game, and the first thing you saw was a 350 pound man with the head the size of a bowling ball and testicles the size of raisins, you would laugh till your cried.

So for all my sarcasm, I will be crossing my fingers in the hope that the needle is legalized. Who knows, it could produce more doctors, end the war in Iraq and give us all something to laugh about.

Brad Leibowitz can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

GETTING THE FACTS STRAIGHT

In response to the Collegian article of Friday, March 9 ("Tempers flare at ROTC rally"), we would like to note the following:

The author of the article uncritically reprinted the UMass Republican Club's spurious allegation that a list of names was taken from the ROTC table at a college career fair on Feb. 15. The reporter failed to cite any evidence with respect to this baseless slander. Misrepresentations of the crowd's chants at the rally aside, nothing was stolen; anti-war students were simply exercising our First Amendment right to free speech during our peaceful protest against military recruiters on campus. We maintain that our university should not host military recruiters (ROTC or otherwise) whose sole aim is to provide more cannon fodder for illegal and unjust wars abroad. In addition, the article claimed that the Radical Student Union (RSU) was responsible for the alleged theft, and that RSU organized the March 8 rally. Both assertions are simply factually incorrect.

The rally sponsored by the UMass Republicans was not simply an opportunity for the club to dispassionately "get [their] voice out there." At numerous points during the programming, various Republican speakers repeatedly expressed sexist, homophobic ("the homosexual revolution" is undermining freedom and democracy), and viciously racist anti-Arab and Muslim sentiment from the podium. At one point, a speaker shrieked, "Islam is a non-Western ideology!" Implicit in this bigoted statement is the notion that Muslims are intrinsically inferior to "Westerners." Subsequent to the recent anti-gay hate crime assault on campus (an event one Republican callously dismissed out of hand as a "PC conspiracy"), a climate of fear and intimidation has been exposed here at UMass among minority students of color, the LGBT community, and Arab and Muslim students.

The inflammatory rhetoric of the UMass GOP directly contributes to an atmosphere highly conducive to violent attacks against oppressed student communities. Furthermore, the UMass College Republicans have a long and sordid institutional history of promoting hate and intolerance. The 'KKK 9' scandal and their club's sponsorship of right-wing extremist Mike Adams last semester ("all Muslims are terrorists") are but two examples of the College Republicans' "contributions" to "debate" and "discussion" on campus.

Despite the Republican Club's limpid protestations, over the past few weeks the real meaning of "Support the Troops" has become sharply clear. Injured veterans are left to fend for themselves at the cockroach-infested Walter Reed Medical Center, while politicians from both parties compete to outdo one another in waging a one-sided class war on workers and students at home. We want to see Veterans Affairs fully funded, and an immediate end to attacks on our living standards and Civil Rights. We stand in complete solidarity with active duty troops and veterans who bravely take a stand against war and occupation. Bring them ALL home NOW!

James Fiorentino, UMass Anti-War Coalition (AWC);
International Socialist Organization (ISO)

(This petition has been signed by additional members of Radical Student Union and the SGA.)

Some of the supporters involved in last week's pro-ROTC rally.

JOE WILSON'S CLAIMS

Ms. Melissa Garber's column regarding Joe Wilson is replete with the standard leftist tripe; most notably, that Joe Wilson "proved" that President Bush lied with his "sixteen words."

On the contrary. Wilson's report to the CIA was viewed by that agency as supporting the contention that Saddam had tried to purchase uranium from Niger. A Senate Intelligence committee confirmed this; indeed, simply reading Wilson's book, wherein he states that a Nigerien minister confirmed that he was approached by Iraqi delegates in what he viewed as a circumspect overture to purchase uranium.

I recognize that this is subtle and nuanced, but there is a significant difference between what Bush said, i.e., "attempted to purchase" and what Wilson said, i.e., "no purchase occurred." The latter does not rule out the former; if I tried to purchase cocaine – an illegal act – but failed to do so, a prosecutor would argue (correctly) that I attempted, whether I succeeded is irrelevant.

Arguing with the Left is like arguing with Creationists. No matter how many facts are presented, no matter how many arguments are won, the Left keeps recapitulating the same crap touting that, through sheer fatigue and Goebbel's like Big Lying, they will convince people they are right.

If you [illegible] interested in the matter, and getting a [illegible] instead of the Leftist mother's milk she's always feeding you, we should try some other news sources [illegible] .typepad.com/main/. She might also [illegible] .explainingarabiablog.com, or even [illegible] as well.

A [illegible] has chastised Joe Wilson. Fact: Iraq sent a [illegible] to Niger. Fact: Niger's main [illegible] and uranium.

[illegible] believes that Saddam, [illegible] purchased weapons [illegible] and centrifuge for his [illegible] in Niger's goats, peas, and uranium.

David Hunt
Billerica, MA

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

!!! lives up to potential with new album

Third time is the charm with dance music album from !!!

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

The band !!! uses the phrase Chk Chk Chk to pronounce the symbol they use as a band name. While their name might be confusing, their music is [illegible] for dance and with "Myth Takes" is successful in that goal.

!!! has been a consistently frustrating group. Both 2001's self-titled album and 2004's "Louden Up Now" were propellant dance-punk excursions that, while enjoyable, were aggravatingly inconsistent. For every breathtaking sing-along "Intensify," there was an odd, inappropriately angry "KooKooKa Tuk-U." For every nine-minute epic "Me and Giuliani Down By the Schoolyard," which remains the best dance anthem of the new millennium, there was a listless "Theme from Space Island."

With "Myth Takes," their Warp debut and third full-length, however, !!! has focused their sound and delivered their first album that rises above being merely "enjoyable" – it's an all-out dance floor assault delivered with an impressively lean and mature sound.

At its core, "Myth Takes" is a dance album filled to the brim with hooks. As such, lyrics are relatively unimportant when compared to the instrumental grooves laid down by the band. Nonetheless, they do play a part in the nature of the record and are worth examining. Lyricist Nic Offer decides to stay close to home and sing mostly about dancing and partying, the very activities !!! makes music to accompany. When he sticks to this, it all works perfectly.

"Must Be the Moon" is the first real attempt at narrative Offer has put forth. In it he tells the simple story of going to a party, dancing to some "pretty bad tunes," and hooking up with someone who just won't get off the phone. In another genre or even with another dance band, this would come off as tawdry and adolescent. But when the chorus explodes complete with hi-top, tambourine jangling and a bass line that evokes Bootsy Collins at double speed, !!! transforms Offer's tale into something thunderous and epic.

Not all Offer's lyrics are so effective, however. In "Sweet Life" he falls into an old habit of trying to convey political messages though dance songs. This isn't to say that it can't be done, but Offer is often too blatant in his preaching and ends up sounding awkwardly out of place with the funk his band lays down. "Elementary high, university low, after school it's up to you

See MYTH on page 6

Poor pairing of bands throws off concert

Ben Kweller's three-person band rocked Pearl Street in his Sunday night concert that also featured the band Gonzo.

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Ben Kweller wrapped up his [illegible] tour set at Pearl Street on Sunday, he made a plea to the audience: "I know MTV is passed its heyday, but maybe we can revive it a little," Kweller said.

Kweller had never believed he would have a chance to compete on the network's call and request show "Total Request Live," but with [illegible] bands in the past it appears rock'n'roll has a chance to make a comeback in this mark of today's popular culture.

Sunday's concert by Kweller and Gonzo could be a sign for a brighter future for rock fans; those who longed for a new generation of rock'n'rollers to take the country by storm.

The line up consisted only of [illegible] but that was all that was necessary for the evening to be a full rock'n'roll.

Kweller started the night off [illegible] performing with just an acoustic guitar. As he played, the [illegible] played along clearly [illegible] Kweller as the lead-[illegible] however, didn't remain [illegible] long.

[illegible] quickly sped up when [illegible] traded his acoustic guitar for an electric. Once electric, [illegible] channeled the soul of a [illegible] year old Neil Young. Rocking from one side of the stage to the other, his bassist and drummer followed and quickly caught [illegible] Kweller's speed.

For the next hour Kweller [illegible] back and forth from his [illegible] to the piano. "I'm a [illegible] at heart, but I love me a Stratocaster and a Marshall stack," Kweller said after performing his ballad "Thirteen."

Kweller did not always interact with the crowd. For most of his set he went from one song to the next with very little crowd interaction. But, when he did pay attention to the crowd Kweller was at ease making witty remarks about his songs.

Kweller's voice did not vary once during his entire set. His ballads, rock songs, and acoustic songs all contained the same vocal melodies as his albums. The only major difference between his albums and his live set was the occasional blues guitar solo Kweller improvised live. These solos were impressive and surprising. Kweller was by far the better act of the night.

Gomez, on the other hand, was very different from their tour mate. Gomez played a polished professional sounding rock'n'roll, coming more across as too rehearsed and stiff.

The band's music was softer compared to the louder songs of Kweller's set despite the fact the band had twice as many members. Their music was even quiet compared to Kweller's slower songs.

One member played the bongo's and shook maracas. Neither the maracas nor the bongos could be heard from the floor. It seemed clear by his blank stare that he knew he could not be heard.

Overall Gomez's set was simply too different from Kwellers. It appeared as if Kweller and Gomez were only assigned to play together because they are on the same record label. That pairing did no particular service to either band.

Tim McCall can be reached at Tim.McCall@gmail.com

Strokes guitarist strikes out on his own

Albert Hammond Jr. usually performs with his hugely popular rock band The Strokes. His latest project was a solo album titled "Yours To Keep." The album doesn't stray far from the formula of Strokes music.

By Robert Perry
Collegian Staff

Albert Hammond Jr., the well dressed rhythm guitarist of The Strokes, had the moxie to release an album of solo material. Arguably, he is the coolest member of a band that sometimes seem to be more concerned with how they look rather than sound.

If his credentials of playing with the New York based group are not enough to sway listeners into giving "Yours To Keep" a spin then consider his lineage. He is son of the semi-successful solo artist Albert Hammond, best known for his radio friendly 1970s hit "It Never Rains in Southern California," which should make Hammond Jr someone worth paying attention to.

This album starts out with Hammond Jr. doing his best interpretation of a glossy California pop tune in "Cartoon Music For Superheroes." The track is strikingly similar to "Sunday Morning," the opener off of The Velvet Underground's classic debut record, in that it is rough around the edges in a Lou Reed meets Brian Wilson way.

Immediately after "Cartoon Music" concludes Hammond Jr. throws the listener right back up to his familiar stomping grounds of the Big Apple with "In Transit." It could have easily been a Strokes track if he wanted it to.

One of the better tracks off of the album, "In Transit," sounds so much like a Strokes song that you have to remind yourself that you are indeed listening to one fifth of the band and not some group ripping them off. This is part of the problem with "Yours To Keep," the best songs tend to be the ones that The Strokes could have done just as well if not better Hammond Jr. even sounds like his band mate and lead singer of The Strokes, Julian Casablancas, on many cuts and leaves you wondering how Casablancas might have sung them.

Although the majority of the standout songs are nearly identical to The Strokes formula of straight on rock'n'roll, there are moments when Hammond Jr.

See HAMMOND on page 6

Earthfoods Café hosts workshop on obtaining inner peace

BY SANAM GHAI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Body and Brain Club held a student run presentation and workshop, on March 8 at Earthfoods Cafe. It gave students who think creating inner peace is a worthy objective a chance to connect with each other and share ideas.

Led by Julia Simonso, Michael Munson and Aaron Daniels the workshop started off with a simple writing exercise that asked students to elaborate on their college lives. What followed was a flurry of complaints about things ranging from the University Health Services to the Dining Commons.

This exercise in frustrations was followed by more soothing mind and body activities. There were mind games and even free dancercise. Apart from learning new techniques for breath, meditation and movement students learned how to strengthen their bodies through slow yet steady exercises.

Music for the soul created a calming ambience in the usually bustling Earthfoods Cafe. With the lights dimmed, participants continued to practice various methods of relaxation, breathing and stretching.

One of the highlights of the workshop was the super slow power walk. Using slow, steady and yet invigorating movements it took most students 30 minutes to walk from one end of the room to the other. In each activity there was a lesson to be learned.

An important question that came up during the workshop was-when your eyes are closed is your mind open? The workshop focused on creating inner peace using new and innovative techniques that were entertaining and yet also helped participants to discover their hidden confidences. Not only did participants get to stretch, dance, and yet invigorating movements it took most students 30 minutes to walk from one end of the room to the other. In each activity there was a lesson to be learned, laugh and meditate, but they also were treated to an energy martial art demonstration by the three organizers.

As a closing activity, participants were once again asked about their college lives. The answers were totally divergent from the ones that had been revealed before. One participant, who initially had described his college life as mundane and long, later said his life as a student had a lot of potential and that he just needed to slow down and think about what mattered to him at times. A number of people responded that they felt refreshed after the workshop and the energy they had accumulated made them feel confident, flexible, peaceful and self-assured.

Though the workshop did not have a spectacular turnout it gave the students who did show up and who were interested in their inner peace a place to articulate that desire. The Body and Brain Club aims to help UMass students and non-students to both cultivate their own inner growth and help others.

Their fee for the semester is $14 and participants are allowed to attend unlimited workshops on a variety of subjects. In addition to class, there will be several events for anyone interested in a deeper experience. Additionally the Body and Brain Club has summer programs and even some internships.

Sanam Ghai can be reached at sghai@student.umass.edu.

Hammond Jr. misses the beat

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO/ALEXIS TAM

Hammond Jr. tried to create a unique album, but the overtones from his band The Strokes kept the music from feeling new. "Call An Ambulance" is, however, an exception and the best song on "Yours to Keep."

HAMMOND from page 5

seems to find his own voice, if only for a minute or two. Around the middle of the album the songs seem to vary the most from one another and in turn are the most rewarding for the listener.

"Blue Skies" is a ballad that starts out with just an acoustic guitar and Albert singing before slowly adding a second guitar and a harmonica that hangs on a single note until it eventually gets drowned out by some nicely placed drums that send the song off in true ballad fashion.

The single off of the album "!!!" finds Hammond Jr. having the most fun. Although it leans towards the style of a Strokes song, it is the one song where Albert nails it perfectly and leaves no room for improvement. He even throws in a key change which shows that he's more than just a one trick pony when it comes to writing catchy little rock'n'roll songs.

The only way to follow a song like "!!!" is to switch it up and send the listener down a completely different path, which is exactly what "Call An Ambulance" does. That, in effect, results in the best song on the entire album. If Hammond Jr. ever makes another solo album "Ambulance" seems a likely example of what the future might hold for him, ukuleles, lots of 'oohs' and 'ahhs', and a solid bass hit to snare crack to drive it home.

The second half of "Yours To Keep" does not have the same kick as the songs that precede it. Even the two bonus tracks "Postal Blowfish" and "Well... All Right" lack any elements that would make them memorable. Hammond Jr. shows that there is intelligent life among one of the most overblown current rock acts, The Strokes. But as cool as Hammond Jr. is even he needs the safety of being a Stroke band member to fully extenuate his desire to single handedly save rock 'n' roll and to manage to do so successfully.

Robert Perry can be reached at rperry@student.umass.edu.

'Halfway House' halfway there, but new show's humor falls flat

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Five ex-cons living in a residential rehab facility does not make you think of classic laughs and "Halfway Home," Comedy Central's latest improv-style sitcom, similar to "Reno 911!," which premiers March 14 at 10:30 p.m., is not going to change that.

The show revolves around Crenshaw House, where the Los Angeles Bureau of Prisons houses some not so conventional parolees and the house supervisor who has his own problems.

Kevin Ruf of "Fun with Dick and Jane," headlines the cast as house supervisor Kenny Carlisle, who attempts to rehabilitate the parolees, despite having his fair share of awkward and even questionable behavior.

The ex-cons are a colorful group of misfits including Oscar Nunez ("The Office" and "Reno 911!"), as Eulogio Pla a gay male prostitute who uses sex to get what he wants; Jordan Black ("Punk'd" and "Mad TV"), as Muslim and wanna-be terrorist Sebastian "C-Bass" Yates, who is really a rich kid from the suburbs; Regan Burns ("Oblivious" and "The Movie Club"), as pyromaniac Alan Shepherd, who doubles as the house narc; Jessica Makinson ("Joe Schmo 2" and "Trigger Happy TV"), as drug trafficker Carly Barzac and Octavia Spencer ("Coach Carter" and "Spiderman"), as armed robber Serenity Johnson, who has anger management issues.

Ruf, Nunez and Burns stand out in their respective roles, but the rest of the cast comes off as simply boring. Ruf, who sports a comical 1970s style mustache and hair cut, and Burns play the supervisor/narc roles well and their on-screen relations is quite believable. Burns transitions between the two sides of his character, pyromaniac and cowardly narc, seamlessly.

Fans of "The Office" will be happy to see Nunez move from the background straight man role into a comedy lead, as he shows off his improv skills in a unique role. He provides some of the funnier moments in the series, but these are unfortunately too few and far apart.

At times the improvisation comes off as forced and unnatural for what is supposed to be everyday conversation. While the cast seems to gel and the back and forth between characters works in some instances, it fails in too many others.

The episodes are a combination of following the day-to-day antics of the parolees in the house and dropping in on one-on-one counseling between the supervisor and one of the ex-cons. As with most shows now, the show's Web site features exclusive material including extra footage from the Crenshaw House, but it's only more of the same.

While the show does deliver laughs, they are of the cheap, frat house variety. Early episodes range from the house narc smelling marijuana, causing everyone to take a drug test to the male members believing that the Prison Bureau has been posing their food to prevent them from getting erections. That leads to talk about erectile dysfunction and masturbation. Later a heat wave causes the parolees to act strange as the supervisor refuses to let the parolees in the only air-conditioned room in the house, his bedroom.

Jokes about sex and race can only take a series so far and are often redundant and juvenile as in "Halfway Home." The episode involving erectile dysfunction contains more masturbation jokes then a typical drunken night spent among college guys. For instance there is a 10-minute scene where the guys' watch from a window as one of the female house members tries to break the world record for the pogo stick. During this attempt she is soaked by a water hose and eating a sausage on a string, and yet the men are unable to become aroused. This scene lasts far too long and uses far too many cheap pops.

There are instances of higher-level comedy, like a scene where C-Bass decides to take care of the homes narc problem by becoming a suicide bomber with a homemade bomb made of cans of hair spray, clock and wires. C-Bass and Alan try to work out Alan's racism by playing chess where each move brings out a racist comment from both sides. Unfortunately, far too many scenes rely on cheap humor like Alan getting hit in the groin by a little kid rather than deal with intelligent topics.

Having the new episodes of "South Park" as a lead in should help "Halfway Home" draw an audience as the two shows share a comedy style, but "Halfway Home" falls short of sustainable laughter after the initial wave of low brow humor passes by.

All the cheap laughs cannot save "Halfway Home" from falling flat. Fans of "Reno 911!" will enjoy the comedic side of criminals, but overall you are not missing anything by skipping this only half decent comedy.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.com.

'Myth' fulfills hopes of !!! fans to fabricate all the lies" he sings. It's a respectable anti-establishment sentiment, but none the less sounds incongruous with the music.

MYTH from page 5

While Offer's lyrics do compromise the effectiveness of the band's music in a few instances, they're not nearly big enough missteps to throw off !!!'s seemingly endless groove. "Myth Takes" flows incredibly well; while the group's prior albums tend to sound like collections of dance singles, the songs here coalesce to form a cohesive, constantly exciting album.

First track "Myth Takes" is a relatively low-key number that serves as an introduction to the band's new sound. Just as the tracks fades out, "All My Heroes Are Weirdos" blasts to life with what sounds like the entire band playing five explosive beats in unison, making a sound that is louder than anything on the first track. It grabs the listener and refuses to let go until they're on the dance floor. Hooks like this pop up throughout the album and keep the audience thoroughly entranced.

Indeed, that's what really distinguishes "Myth Takes" from !!!'s previous albums – there's almost never a dull moment. On their self-titled and "Louden Up Now" albums the group's greatest weakness was not knowing when to stop a track. Most of those two albums' songs had good ideas behind them but petered out into extended jams that didn't go anywhere. Here, !!! seems to know that longer doesn't always mean better, which translates into a much more exciting experience for the listener. The only exception is "Bend Over Beethoven," an eight-minute song which feels like it could've been parsed down to half that time. When the song finally reaches its climax, however, the long build-up seems almost worth it.

"Myth Takes" ends on a surprisingly quiet note with "Infinifold." A forlorn-sounding Offer almost sighs his words over sparse piano and distant electronic rumblings. "And if it sounds stupid to say/That all the world needs is a little more love/ Then how come it's so hard to figure out?" After such a party of a record, "Infinifold" is an emotional punch to the gut. It's a song for the morning after the party, when you wonder why you did the things you did the night before. It's almost shocking to hear such touching eloquence from Offer as the album ends with "And no one talked the whole way home/ Everybody just stared at the road/ And I rolled down my window/And leaned out/leaned out/And watched the lights."

When all is said and done, !!! is a band that wants to get their audience up off their chairs and onto the dance floor. While their prior albums have offered a few songs that no doubt accomplished that goal, their newest is by far the most consistently exciting piece of work they've put out thus far. With "Myth Takes," !!! has finally produced an album that lives up to the potential shown in the best moments of their previous work.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbec@student.umass.edu.

SPRING BREAK
service to and from the airport
4 to BOS ~ $60 each
4 to NYC ~ $90 each
4 to BDL ~ $55 each
Exclusive Car Services
877 695 4665
LIMO SERVICE 24/7/365 - ANYWHERE - ANYTIME

Salon Divine
15 Pray St., Amherst Ma
413-549-0039
(behind the Pub)
Great Haircuts
Full Body Waxing
PHYTO
GET READY FOR SPRING BREAK!
ALFAPARF
REDKEN
$5 Off Any Waxing
All Botanical Products

22nd ANNUAL HENRY JACOB MATHEMATICS COMPETITION
March 27, 2007 @ 7:00 p.m. room 101-103 LGRT
Sponsors: Roy Purdue, Class of 1973 & James Francis, Class of 1986
FIRST PRIZE= $1500 CASH
SECOND PRIZE= $750 CASH
THIRD PRIZE= $250 CASH
- Sign-up in room 1623 LGRT by 3 p.m. March 27th and bring ID to competition.
- Competition is open to all Freshman and Sophomore degree students on the Amherst campus.
- Continuing Education students and students who are closely related to members of the Math/Stat department are not eligible
2007

M. BASKETBALL FILE PHOTO/ALEXIS TAM

Freshman Tiki Mayben failed to get on the scoreboard 10 minutes in the UMass' loss to Saint Louis. He and the rest of the team will look for better results in the opening round of the NIT against the Crimson Tide.

After A-10 letdown, UMass has new lease on life in NIT

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

guard Ronald Steele leads the way for Alabama, and has some potent interior weapons to work with in Jermareo Davidson and Richard Hendrix – both big men averaged just over 14 points per game and just over eight rebounds per game this season.

"I played against their big men at camp this year and they're real good," Freeman said. "Their guards are good as well and for them to come into our gym is a good opportunity for us to see where we stand and where we're at. It's another opportunity to extend our season and improve. We can't do any worse. We just need to improve from here and go out and give a good effort."

The Crimson Tide played in the Southeastern Conference, home to the top-ranked Florida Gators, who Alabama nearly beat in a matchup earlier this season. Alabama hasn't lived up to its preseason expectations, especially with Steele – widely regarded as one of the top point guards in the nation – returning for his senior season.

But the Crimson Tide still has many weapons and Ford knows it.

"I've watched three of their games and I've not seen many weaknesses," Ford said. "This is a powerful, explosive team."

Ford learned of his team's postseason placement on Sunday night and was admittedly energized by the idea of playing Alabama.

"I think when a name like Alabama pops up on the screen I think [the players] do get a little more of a jolt," Ford said. "That's human nature. It got me even a little excited.

"I just think it's exciting to be able to play against a great team like Alabama," he added. "I think it's something that our fans get to get excited about. We get to get on TV. But [the players] shouldn't need a lot of energizing. It's an honor to be a part of this and it's not a failure by any stretch of the imagination. I'm excited to play in this game."

Ford never had to worry about his team's NCAA status when he played at Kentucky, and he has taken a hard look at the selection process this season because his Minutemen lied softly on the bubble for a good part of the 2006-07 season.

But this year, Ford invested heavily in the selection process and was admittedly frustrated by the lack of clarity on the criteria for an NCAA Tournament at-large bid.

And while the Minutemen are still recovering from the emotional letdown after the loss to the Billikens last Thursday, to be playing in the college basketball postseason is a nice consolation prize.

"I'm more excited now then I was two to three days ago," Ford said. "This is something you can build on. This is definitely not failure. When you look at the NCAA you can't start judging. I realized that."

Ford didn't have much time to prepare the Minutemen for the Crimson Tide. UMass found out about its draw on Sunday night and had time yesterday to prepare for Alabama's sets and personnel.

Ford downloaded a lot of Alabama's game tapes from the internet and looked at three of them yesterday morning before practice. Ford will look at more game tapes today before the game in order to make the final preparations for the Minutemen's first playoff game since 2000.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Something to play for against Alabama

PICARD from page 10

the week leading up to the A-10 Tournament.

That ended up not being the case, leaving for plenty of disappointment in Amherst.

The respiratory illness that may have cost the Minutemen a Top-10 seed in the Big Dance seems to be passing over, and shouldn't play a factor in their NIT fate. UMass coach Travis Ford said the only setback now is getting his players back into game shape.

"We're doing better," Ford said. "We're still getting over it and trying to get our wind back, but I don't think any of the guys are actually sick anymore.

"It only takes about two or three days for players to lose their wind. We were literally laid up in bed for four days. But we're getting back. We're getting better Percentage-wise I'd say we're about 80-90 percent."

Alabama comes into Amherst as a team that was ranked No. 11 in the country during the preseason, and even moved as high as No. 4 during the year. The Crimson Tide started the season 13-1 in non-conference play, but posted a 7-9 record against SEC teams when it was all said and done.

So it's not as if there's nothing to play for. With plenty of solid teams in this year's NIT, the winner won't be the subject of Jerry Seinfeld jokes.

Especially in UMass' case.

Not only did the Minutemen lose in their first game of the conference tournament, but they lost because of an illness they had no control over. They were the victims of bad luck, and seeing both Xavier and George Washington in the field of 65 certainly didn't make sleeping any easier for UMass.

So while it may not mean anything on your brackets, there is still something to play for in this year's NIT. Respect.

After all, there's nothing wrong with being second best.

Danny Picard is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

No rest for Minutemen on road trip

M. LACROSSE from page 10

did on Saturday but you have to sharp mentally to be ready to play and not make any mistakes."

There won't be room for any against Albany. The Great Danes attack has a two-headed monster up front in Frank Resetarits and Merrick Thomson. Resetarits has 14 goals in just three games this season and Thomson is second on the team with seven.

The Great Danes score over 14 goals per game and if the Minutemen don't slow the attack down they could be in trouble in a hurry.

"[Resetarits and Thomson] are two of the top attack men that we'll face all year," Cannella said. "They are guys that can really finish the ball well and are really superb lacrosse players – great hands, great shooters, and they mean a lot to their team. They're both seniors now and they're strong leaders. When you watch these guys they're sort of matter-of-fact. They're all business. When they score there isn't any jumping up and down or swinging their stick or anything like that. They're like, 'Ok, next play. Let's go.'"

The Minutemen are still trying to find their own offensive identity after the loss of All-American Sean Morris and Clay Stabert to graduation at the end of last season. Sophomore Jim Connolly scored five goals in the win over Harvard Saturday and Cannella is looking for some other options to take some of the pressure off of his No. 1 guy.

Cannella moved midfielder Rory Pedrick up to attack on Saturday and Pedrick rewarded his coach with two assists. Connolly will need all the help he can get this afternoon. Albany is averaging over 14 goals per game and allowing just over seven per contest.

Cannella believes that his team needs to match the Great Danes on the offensive end.

"We have to score," he stated. "[Albany] is a team that let up just seven goals to Johns Hopkins, and gave up seven goals to Delaware that's been averaging 13 or 14. So we have to get our goals as well. We have to be able to match that, particularly early in the game to get some momentum, like we did against Harvard when we had our chances."

Hofstra is the only team in college lacrosse to beat the Minutemen in each of the last three seasons.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

M. LACROSSE FILE PHOTO/ALEXIS TAM

Sophomore goaltender Doc Schneider is 6-2 in three starts this season. He has allowed 25 goals on 111 shots and has a .569 save percentage.

M. BASKETBALL FILE PHOTO/ALEXIS TAM

Junior Gary Forbes and the Minutemen will be trying to keep their season alive against the Crimson Tide tonight in the NIT.

Connolly keeping it simple on offense

AGGRESSION from page 10

"I thought I had to be a little bit more aggressive on the individual end of it," Connolly said.

UMass coach Greg Cannella felt Connolly was not reaching his full potential in the weeks prior to the win over Harvard.

"I thought Jimmy was real aggressive coming in. It's great to see that," the coach said. "I just think that he came out with an attitude. He's a pretty proud kid and we felt he didn't play up to his potential the first couple of games, so he came out with an attitude."

He added that he hopes the entire team can replicate Connolly's aggressiveness in the weeks to come.

"And we hope everybody can come out aggressive if you take 35 shots and you finish seven of them, you're probably going to lose," Cannella said. "If you take 35 shots, I don't know how many we took, and you finish 11 of them, you're probably going to win."

The first half Saturday was more like Jim Connolly versus the Crimson than it was UMass versus Harvard. He scored his team's first three goals and four of its first five to take the lead over the Crimson entering the locker room at halftime.

Connolly's first three scores of the day came in a span of eight minutes in the first and second quarters. They also brought the Minutemen back from a pair of two-goal deficits, 2-0 and 3-1, respectively.

His fourth of the half was a spectacular effort, displaying the newfound aggressiveness mentioned above. Connolly took a pass from Brian Jacovina and controlled the ball at X – behind Harvard goalie Joe Pike. He wrapped around the cage to Pike's right and got himself directly in front of the goalie. From there he faked once and then fired the ball in.

That goal gave the Minutemen a two-score advantage, 5-3.

Moments later it appeared Connolly was going to extend the lead even further. Rory Pedrick gained control of the ball at midfield and raced to the offensive end on a breakaway. He dished the ball to Connolly at the left post while Pike remained frozen at the other side, but the sophomore's shot hit the post and bounced away.

Despite the fact that he failed to convert the try, it was another example Connolly's renewed willingness to shoot the ball.

His final goal also came unassisted and gave UMass its largest lead of the day, 9-5. Again he wrapped around the cage, but this time lost the ball out front. Somehow in the midst of traffic out front, he scooped the ball and shot it in – the commotion gave Pike little chance at making the save.

The five scores vaulted Connolly to the top of the UMass scoring charts. After being tied with Pedrick and senior Brett Garber entering the weekend, he now sits alone at the top. His seven tallies coupled with one assist against Hofstra, puts his eight points three ahead of Andrew Recchione's five (three goals and two assists).

Jon Pellard can be reached at jpellard@student.umass.edu. For more coverage of UMass sports, check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."
- headaches
- back pain
- auto injuries
- neck pain
- sports injuries
- and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500
Most insurance accepted

COME HEAR THE GREAT MASTERPIECE
Ein Deutsches Requiem
by Johannes Brahms
ENSEMBLES: UMass Amherst Chamber Choir, Chorale & Orchestra, Springfield Symphony Chorus & Smith College Chorus
ALUMNI SOLOISTS: Andrew Garland, baritone & Kristy Kelly, soprano
DIRECTORS: E. Wayne Abercrombie, Emiliano Marcelletti, Jr., Nikki Stout & Deanna Joseph
PREMIERE: Bestor: Horn Concerto, Laura Klock, horn
Thursday, March 15, 8 pm, Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Tickets: $18 $5 & $3 available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 413-545-2511
Sponsors- UMass Amherst Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life, Arts Council & Alumni Association
UMass Amherst Department of Music & Dance and Lively Arts

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

UMass can't stop undefeated Cornell

Senior Melissa Spiess led the Minutewomen to a 1-1 record over the weekend, defeating Binghamton before falling to undefeated Cornell. She won all four of her matches, with two singles and two doubles victories. She now has 61 career singles victories in just three years with UMass.

matches, the result of the match came down to the doubles point. UMass secured the victory by winning two of the three matches.

Maude Teeluyse and Ellen de Jong fell to the tandem of Eva Kushnirovich and Juliana Lincke at the No. 1 but the No. 2 and 3 pairs netted victories. Mattie Pozar and Michele Spiess overwhelmed Zeynep Mimay and Erica Rosenblum, 8-1 at No. 2. At the third position, Kristin DiPiero and Laura Murillo outclassed Jenn Naegeli and Nicole Scarangella.

"We had a little leeway because we won the doubles point," Dixon said. "That's been our achilles heel."

The Saturday match versus Cornell proved tougher for the Minutewomen. They were handed their fourth loss of the season.

Once again, the Minutewomen earned the doubles point, winning two out of three matches. This time it was the No. 1 and 2 pairs that came through with victories. Maude Teeluyse and two-time Atlantic 10 Women's Rookie of the Week, Ellen de Jong, knocked off the Big Red's Shayna Miller and Catherine Dubok, 9-8(3) at the No. 1 position. At the No. 2, Spiess and Pozar defeated Kasia Prenetta and Tamara John, 8-4.

Spiess and Pozar scored the only other victories for the Minutewomen. Spiess continued her dominance of opponents with a 6-4, 6-2 triumph. Pozar was outplayed in the first set, 1-6, but rallied to win the second and third sets 6-4, 1-9(2).

Spiess's singles victory against Cornell gives her 61 in her three-year career at UMass. This leaves her only three victories shy of getting Jackie Braunstein's record of 64 career victories.

Dixon said Spiess's ability to [illegible] is a testament to her work ethic.

"She has very good work ethic and great leadership qualities," Dixon said. "They're not just on the court."

The [illegible] the Minutewomen [illegible] fall [illegible] the bottom-four singles players could come up with a victory against the Big Red, and the Minutemen dropped the match 4-3.

After the match, Dixon said that she continues to be impressed with her top-three singles players but was still considering what to do with the bottom of the lineup and the doubles point. However, she was pleased with how Laura Murillo stepped in and competed at the No. 6 spot.

Next up for the Minutewomen is a winless Harvard squad that began the season ranked No. 25 nationally, but has been decimated by injuries, losing three players.

Spiess and Pozar will have their hands full, as Harvard's top two players are ranked in the top-50 in the country. However, the Crimson struggles with depth beyond its two stars, and it will be interesting to see how the bottom of the Minutewomen singles lineup responds.

"I am definitely going to make changes in my singles and doubles lineup," Dixon said of the pressure being put on her top-three singles players. Dixon is still undecided as to whether or not she will make these changes prior to the Harvard match, or before the team travels to Florida this weekend.

Michael Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

McGuirk not just for football anymore

[illegible] Papalexis (left) scored her first collegiate goal March 1 [illegible]. She has started 20 straight games in the defensive back.

W. LACROSSE [illegible] page 10

[illegible] the home of the lacrosse [illegible] further than the 120-yard [illegible] field, including [illegible] a closer look [illegible] The width [illegible] each side [illegible] the width [illegible] of the field [illegible]

Meanwhile, believes that the extra space [illegible] one of the team's [illegible] [illegible] by open [illegible] the field. The Maroon and White used [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] pass [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Custom Printed Tee SHIRTS
STUDENTS $20 OFF with this coupon
FAST Our 20th
Sunraise PRINTING Hadley, MA
586-7133

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

St. Patrick's
Holy Trinity Promo Party
Friday Night at
The Harp
(Guinness, Harp, & Smithwicks)
Come party like you're Irish!

7 Flat Screen TV's
16 Beers on Draft
Wings, Pizza
Burgers and more
TOASTED OWL
T A V E R N
www.toastedowl.com Downtown Northampton

Division I Men's Bracket

Opening Round Game - March 13

Florida A&M vs. Niagara

FIRST ROUND MARCH 15 - 16	SECOND ROUND MARCH 17 - 18	REGIONALS MARCH 22 - 23 / MARCH 24 - 25	SEMIFINALS MARCH 31	NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP	SEMIFINALS MARCH 31	REGIONALS MARCH 24 - 25 / MARCH 22 - 23	SECOND ROUND MARCH 17 - 18	FIRST ROUND MARCH 15 - 16
N. Orleans: Florida 1								1 North Carolina W.-Salem
Jackson St. 16								16 Eastern Ky.
Buffalo: Arizona 8								8 Marquette
Purdue 9								9 Michigan St.
Butler 5								5 Southern Cal Spokane
Old Dominion 12								12 Arkansas
Maryland 4								4 Texas
Davidson 13		Midwest St. Louis				East East Rutherford		13 New Mexico St.
Spokane: Notre Dame 6								6 Vanderbilt Sacramento
Winthrop 11								11 G. Washington
Oregon 3								3 Washington St.
Miami (Ohio) 14								14 Oral Roberts
Chicago: UNLV 7								7 Boston College W.-Salem
Georgia Tech 10								10 Texas Tech
Wisconsin 2								2 Georgetown
Tex A&M CC 15			Atlanta March 31	Atlanta April 2	Atlanta March 31			15 Belmont
Chicago: Kansas 1								1 Ohio St. Lexington
16				National Champion				16 C. Conn. St.
Kentucky 8								8 BYU
Villanova 9								9 Xavier
Columbus: Virginia Tech 5								5 Tennessee Columbus
Illinois 12								12 Long Beach
Southern Ill. 4								4 Virginia
Holy Cross 13		West San Jose				South San Antonio		13 Albany
Buffalo: Duke 6								6 Louisville Lexington
VCU 11								11 Stanford
Pittsburgh 3								3 Texas A&M
Wright St. 14								14 Penn
Sacramento: Indiana 7								7 Nevada N. Orleans
Gonzaga 10								10 Creighton
UCLA 2								2 Memphis
Weber St. 15								15 North Texas

2 out of 3 UMass students have 4 or fewer drinks when they party.
Campus and Community Coalition
University Health Services

Newman Cafe
A Great Place to Study, Relax and Eat!
* OVER 100 MENU ITEMS *
* BREAKFAST SERVED ALL DAY *
WWW.NEWMANCAFE.COM
ON UMass CAMPUS, NEXT TO SOM

Voted the Best Seafood Restaurant in the Valley
Famous Since 1988
Once you've tried us, you're hooked!
• Generous Portions
• Affordable Prices
• Baked, broiled, & grilled Cajun seafood
• BBQ St. Louis Style Ribs
586-3190
OPEN 7 DAYS
FOR LUNCH AND DINNER
Serving Beer and Wine Year-Round
Featuring Family-Style Service

MULLINS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
WWW.MULLINSCENTER.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS TUESDAY
TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 2007
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen host Alabama in NIT

Season carries on for Maroon and White

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The Mullins Center will host a National Invitation Tournament game for the first time in the building's 13-year history tonight when the No. 4-seed Massachusetts men's basketball team plays fifth-seeded Alabama at 9:30 on ESPN.

UMass coach Travis Ford and the Minutemen shook off the sting from their quarterfinal loss to Saint Louis in the Atlantic 10 Tournament last Thursday, and are looking forward to playing one of the best teams in the NIT tonight.

"We have another chance to prove ourselves and get out there and extend this season," senior captain Rashaun Freeman said.

"This is one of the bigger teams we've played against, one of the bigger, stronger, athletic teams," Ford said. "[Alabama's] personnel is almost identical to us as far as size, where their points are coming from and where their rebounds are coming from. On paper, it's almost identical."

The Crimson Tide were ranked as high as No. 4 in the country to start the season, but plummeted to a 20-11 record after a 14-1 start to the season. All-American point

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

After going one-and-out in the Atlantic 10 Tournament last Thursday, senior captain Rashaun Freeman and the Maroon and White look to bounce back at home in the National Invitational Tournament.

UM extends road trip at No. 2 Albany

By Ryan Greenfield
Collegian Staff

It's been less than 72 hours since the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team suited up in its game uniforms, but it will do so again this afternoon against the Albany Great Danes, the No. 2 team in the country, for its first weekday matchup.

This is the second-straight road game for the Minutemen, who grabbed their first win of the season against Harvard on Saturday in an 11-10 battle.

This time around, UMass had only one practice to prepare for the powerful attack of the Great Danes, and the first weekday game for this year's squad poses some different challenges for UMass coach Greg Cannella and his players.

"You need some mentally sharp kids for a couple of days," Cannella said. "It's hard because they have school and other things going on. You're trying to rest their bodies for a couple of days but then have to get back to work hard and do a couple of things for a few days.

"We do a lot of walk-through stuff to try and keep them fresh," he added. "Having the day off [Sunday] at least gives them some time. The challenge is, can you be mentally sharp? You play a big game Saturday. Albany played Delaware which was a big game for Albany. And you get up for it and when you're through you're pretty emotionally drained.

"Can you revitalize that in 48 hours? That's a hard thing to do. You're not relying as much on emotion as you

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

Connolly's big day leads offensive surge

By Jon Pellant
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE – It took just a matter of time before the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team broke out of its offensive slump.

The Minutemen scored 11 times against Harvard Saturday, nearly matching their total from the previous two games combined (12). Leading the charge for UMass was sophomore attack Jim Connolly. He matched his career high with five goals against the Crimson.

That now gives him seven on the young season. Entering the weekend he had scored once in each of the Minutemen's first two losses of the year. Connolly said he didn't do anything different against Harvard, it was one of those days where everything worked.

"You need some mentally sharp kids for a couple of days," Cannella said. "It's hard because they have school and other things going on. You're trying to rest their bodies for a couple of days but then have to get back to work hard and do a couple of things for a few days.

"We do a lot of walk-through stuff to try and keep them fresh," he added. "Having the day off [Sunday] at least gives them some time. The challenge is, can you be mentally sharp? You play a big game Saturday. Albany played Delaware which was a big game for Albany. And you get up for it and when you're through you're pretty emotionally drained.

"Can you revitalize that in 48 hours? That's a hard thing to do. You're not relying as much on emotion as you

See AGGRESSION on page 7

UMass coach Greg Cannella moved Rory Pedrick from the midfield to attack for the Minutemen's first win of the season against Harvard, and the junior matched a pair of assists in the 11-10 victory. The Minutemen continue their road trip in Albany against the second-ranked Great Danes.

Minutewomen find themselves at home in new venue

By Michael Kloc
Collegian Staff

Junior Kathleen Tripodis has been dominant no matter what surface UMass plays on, setting career highs for goals and assists on McGuirk's Field Turf.

For the first time in history, Garber Field will only host one UMass lacrosse team this season. Although the men will continue to play in the traditional lacrosse confines, the women will be shifting home for the remainder of the season. In fact, the team hopes that a change of venue will spark a special season.

"We're very happy to be a part of history right now," coach Alexis Venechanos said Saturday's game. "To play the first women's lacrosse game [in McGuirk] and we're hoping to continue the season undefeated here. It's a very special environment, a great venue and definitely has a great atmosphere."

The Minutewomen also hope to add to the rich history of McGuirk Stadium. However, they are leaving behind a facility that has a rich history of its own. Garber Field has been home to many successful women's and men's lacrosse teams. Most notably, UMass won the first-ever women's NCAA national title in 1982.

So far, the team is off to a good start with a 1-0 record at the new complex. However, the Minutewomen go nearly a month between home games, not returning to McGuirk until April 8. They have three other games at home that month before closing out the regular season.

The primary reason for shifting the games from Garber to McGuirk is the need for a larger playing surface. U.S. Lacrosse, the sport's governing body (in conjunction with the NCAA), instituted a rule change in 2006 to create hard boundary lines.

In the past, a player could theoretically run away from the field and the referees would not blow the play dead. This rule allows play to continue. The play would restart on the official's signal, but the team with the ball would retain possession.

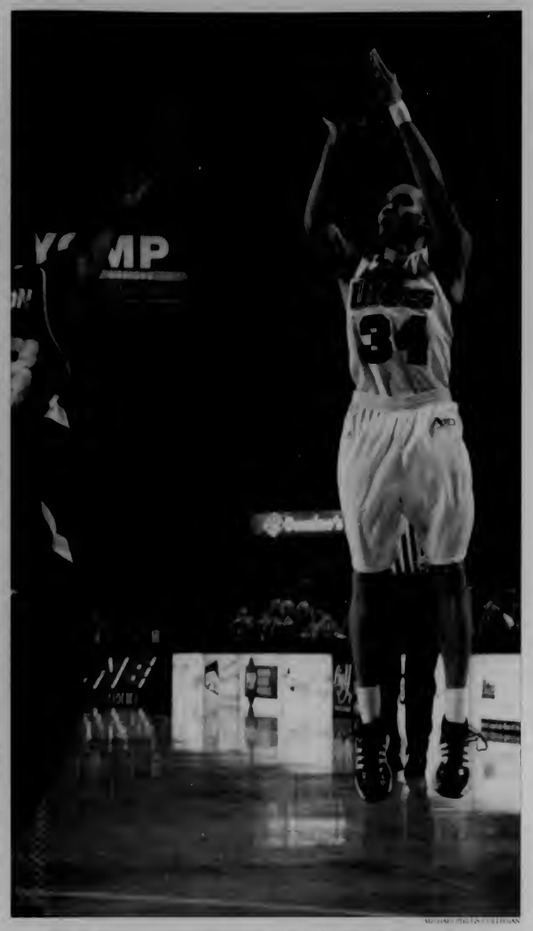
Under the new rule, if a player steps beyond the marked boundaries, that team forfeits possession of the ball. However, in a loose ball or errant shot on net situation, possession is awarded to the player who is closest to the ball when deemed to be out of play by the official.

But schools are still allowed flexibility in the dimensions of its field. According to U.S. Lacrosse rules, the minimum size is 110x60 yards and can vary up to 140x70 yards. There also must be 90-100 yards between the two end lines and an additional 10-20 yards behind each goal.

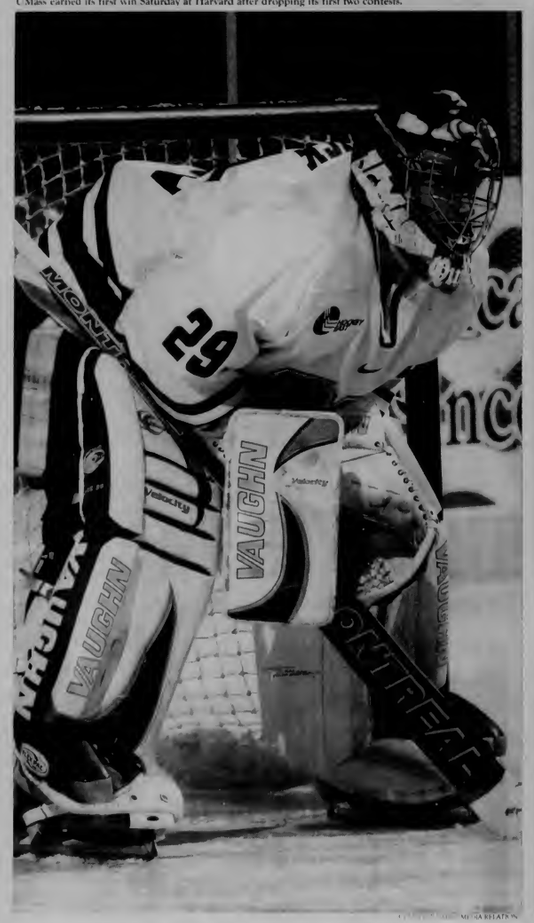
The dimensions of Garber Field are 100x60 yards, making the complex ideal for field hockey but not quite large enough for women's lacrosse. At

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Sophomore Brett Garber and the Minutemen take on the second-ranked Albany Great Danes today. UMass earned its first win Saturday at Harvard after dropping its first two contests.



Senior James Life and the fourth-seeded men's basketball team host Alabama tonight in the Mullins Center for the opening round of the NIT. UMass missed the NCAA Tournament after falling to Saint Louis last Thursday.



Sophomore goaltender Jon Quick leads the Mass Attack into Boston Friday night as one of four remaining Hockey East teams in the conference playoffs as they compete for their first-ever league title.

Last year's Atlantic 10 Rookie and Player of the Year, Whitney Mollica leads the Minutewomen into their final early-season tournament before conference play in Boca Raton, Fla. this weekend.

UMass advances in NIT Tourney Page 10

Nickelback rocks DCU Center Page 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

PM SHOWERS : HI: 68 LO: 48 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14, 2007

Local fraternity to file police complaint

Students claim recent arrest was excessive

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

The members of a University of Massachusetts fraternity are claiming their rights were violated when police officers entered their house and arrested the president and vice president last month.

Members of the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity said police went overboard when they entered their 118 Sunset Ave. house on the night of Saturday, Feb. 2. According to records, the Amherst Police Department was responding to a noise complaint.

"I'm just hanging out in my room with one person, and all of the sudden I hear all this commotion," said Jordan Finkelstein, a member of the fraternity. "I open up my bedroom door and the police officer's standing in our house. She's standing right in front of my bedroom door, and she goes, 'Get the fu outside.'"

Finkelstein said he was rushed out of the house, and was told by the officer he couldn't get his jacket from his room. Shortly after arriving to the house, police arrested 19-year-old Jeffrey Cezo, the president of the fraternity and 21-year-old Steven Miller, the vice president for unlawful noise, according to police records.

Finkelstein said one of the two officers then walked around inside the house, knocking on bedroom doors and telling people to leave. He said the officer was opening unlocked bedroom doors and telling anyone present to leave.

"I had no clue what was going on," said Finkelstein. "You feel like you're completely helpless in your own house and you just feel like you can't do anything, and you're just completely pinned against the wall. It just sucks when you get taken advantage of and bullied by people with power."

The fraternity members said they are planning to file a formal complaint with the Amherst Police Department in the near future. They also said they are considering filing a lawsuit against the Amherst Police Department, but are taking things one step at a time.

Amherst Police Department Captain Michael Kent said in an e-mail that he cannot comment on pending cases.

"I was arrested just because I was president and a noise complaint was called in," said Jeffrey Cezo. "The police came and I'm the one who's supposed to talk to them and handle it, but I was arrested and carted off."

According to Town of Amherst by-laws, "any person or persons who violate Section 1 (Unlawful Noise Prohibited) of this by-law may be arrested without a warrant, provided that the violation occurs in the presence or view of any officer authorized to serve criminal process."

Both Cezo and Finkelstein said the house that called in the complaint to police is several houses down the street. They said there is no way they were making too much noise.

See FRATS on page 1

Robert Paarlberg, a political science professor at Wellesley College, gave the second of four talks in the Environmental Institute's Spring 2007 Lecture Series yesterday. Paarlberg's talk, "Why Environmentalists Should Like Genetically Engineered Agricultural Crops," discussed evidence gathered over the past decade suggesting that genetically modified crops (GMOs) lessen the environmental impact of agriculture by reducing chemical use and the need for tilling.

UMass student arrested for possession of firearm, cocaine

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student was arrested on a number of drug possession charges along with another man on the night of Friday, March 2, after an investigation involving both local and state police.

UMass student Harrison J. Ogbunize, 21, of 69 Pelham Rd, Room C, Amherst, Mass., was charged along with Paul M. Fowler, 22, of 158 Pendleton Ave, Springfield, Mass., with possession of a class B substance with intent to distribute, trafficking in cocaine, a drug violation near a school or park, intent to distribute a counterfeit drug and larceny over $250.

The two were arrested by Massachusetts State Police at 9:00 p.m. inside the TJ Maxx store in Hadley after completing a drug transaction while under police observation.

Fowler had in his possession two firearms at the time of the arrest and was subsequently charged with two counts of possession of a firearm without a firearms identification card as well as carrying a firearm while intoxicated, according to Patrick Archbald, Deputy Chief of the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

Ogbunize had attempted to pass off baking powder as cocaine during the drug transaction leading to the charge of intent to distribute a counterfeit drug. Both men were found to be in possession of cocaine upon being placed under arrest.

"This [arrest] was the result of a lengthy investigation into drug use and drug dealing," Archbald said.

According to Archbald UMass police officers worked alongside other local police departments as part of the Hampshire Franklin Gang and Narcotics Task Force and state police during the investigation.

Ogbunize had been previously arrested last May for several of the same charges, including possession of class B substance with intent to distribute and trafficking in cocaine, following an earlier nine-month investigation led by the UMPD that resulted in a total of four arrests, according to a May 2006 article in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

According to Archbald, Ogbunize came back to the attention of the police after UMass officers observed him conducting a drug transaction at the Wendy's restaurant in Hadley on Feb. 9.

Derrick Perkins is a Collegian Staffwriter. He can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu

Trustees poised to increase tuition by 3.4 percent

Tuition and fees set to increase next semester

By Eric Athas &
Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will vote on President Jack Wilson's proposal for next year's student charges, which includes a 3.4 percent increase in tuition and mandatory fees.

Along with the 3.4 percent increase in tuition and fees, the proposal states a seven percent increase in room and board, equaling a total increase of 4.9 percent on the Amherst campus for the 2007-08 academic year.

The charges were approved by the UMass Administration and Finance Committee on Feb. 14.

While the proposed increase has sparked debate among students and student government members at UMass-Amherst, the president's office said the increase is below the current inflation rate of 3.6 percent, as measured by the Consumer Price Index for the Northeast Urban Region.

"President Wilson has maintained the increase will not be more than inflation and at 3.4 percent that is below it," said UMass spokesman William Wright. "With financial aid, the university trustees are working hard to make sure students who demonstrate need receive help."

If the charges are approved by the board, the total cost for a

See TRUSTEES on page 1

Exercise may boost brain IQ

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exercise boosts brainpower by building new brain cells in a brain region linked with memory and memory loss, U.S. researchers reported on Monday.

Tests on mice showed they grew new brain cells in a brain region called the dentate gyrus, a part of the hippocampus that is known to be affected in the age-related memory decline that begins around age 30 for most humans.

The researchers used magnetic resonance imaging scans to help document the process in mice -- and then used MRIs to look at the brains of people before and after exercise.

See EXERCISE on page 1

UMass may create stem cell research institute

By Ryan Richardson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will discuss on a proposal to create a stem cell research institute at their meeting today. The proposal entails a $66 million contribution over six years to help gear the Commonwealth's research base toward the cutting edge of biomedical research.

According to the University President's Office, the proposal was drafted by a working group made up of faculty and administrators from the University of Massachusetts Medical School and UMass Amherst. Their goal was to keep in mind the expertise at each campus as well as UMass President Jack Wilson's desire to take a system-wide approach to this research.

Although elements from the entire University system will be involved, the bulk of the investment will be concentrated on the campuses of the UMMS and UMass where most of the research is expected to occur. The proposal cites four key tasks to keep Massachusetts's campuses on top of this developing area of the life sciences; first is the need to hire new faculty in the areas of stem cell research and regenerative medicine, second is the development of core facilities at the medical school and UMass, the money will also be used to create a grant pool for researchers across the University system to draw from and other funds would be used to renovate and expand existing facilities to accommodate new infrastructure.

Samuel Black, the head of the Veterinary Science Department and one of the authors of the report, said that UMass will be working on a lot of the fundamental science behind the research thanks to its broad base of expertise. However, the primary beneficiary on campus will be the life sciences.

"[We] aim to get state support to keep our campuses competitive in this area of the life sciences," said Black.

UMass will concentrate primarily on stem cells from non-primate sources as part of an effort to understand the basics of stem cell science without knocking up against the moral debate about the use of human embryos in stem cell research.

Human embryos have been the source of a lot of the controversy surrounding stem cell research that came to a head last year when congress banned the creation of new lines of embryonic stem cells. Universities and private industry are able to sidestep this ban if they compartmentalize stem cell research away from any sources of federal funding, that includes everything from laboratories to trash barrels that were purchased with federal funds. This means that states and universities with larger research budgets have been able to pull ahead in the field, threatening to leave universities that are more reliant on federal research funding in their dust.

Scientists argue that being forced to only study existing lines of embryonic stem cells and adult stem cells limits their avenues of research, which could potential stymie life-saving cures for diseases like Parkinson's and Alzheimer's. The reason is because embryonic stem cells poses more potential for development than their adult counter-

See STEM CELL on page 1

Samuel Black, head of UMass' Veterinary Science Department

UMass Police log

Investigation leads to two arrests on marijuana possession

Friday March 2

12:47 am
Alejandro N. Coombs, of 44 Morningside Dr. #23, New York, New York, was placed under arrested by UMPD officers in his room at Crampton Dormitory after state and national warrant databases listed Coombs as having an outstanding warrant for his arrest. The warrant had been issued for a failure to appear in court on the original charge of leaving the scene of an accident. Coombs was bailed and appeared in court on March 2.

8:34 pm
Gabriel Clark, 19, of 210 Old County Rd, Wells, Maine, was placed under arrest for being a minor in possession of alcohol. UMPD officers observed 3 males, none of which appeared to be 21 years of age, exit a blue sedan in lot 32 in possession of a 30 pack of Miller Lite. The police officers verified Clark's age, placed him under arrest and transported him back to the station.

9:00 pm
Harrison J. Ogbunize, of 69 Pelham Rd, Room C, Amherst, Massachusetts, and Paul M. Fowler, of 158 Pendleton Ave, Springfield, Massachusetts were both placed under arrest for possession and intent to distribute a class B drug, trafficking in cocaine, a drug violation near a school or park, distribution of a counterfeit drug, larceny over $250, possession of a firearm without a firearms identification card, and possession of a firearm while intoxicated. The arrest was made as the result of a lengthy investigation of drug use and distribution carried out by the UMPD, the Hampshire-Franklin Narcotics Task Force, and the Massachusetts State Police. The pair was arrested after officers observed a drug transaction take place at the Hampshire Mall in Hadley, MA. Officers found 2 firearms and an amount of drugs, including cocaine, on the suspects.

Friday March 2

1:13 am
John J. Maguire, 19, of 7 Lantern Lane, Norfolk, MA was placed under arrest for not wearing a seatbelt, operating a motor vehicle under the influence, being a minor in possession of liquor, and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute. Officers observed the vehicle he was operating cross over a white road line while traveling westbound on Massachusetts Avenue. The vehicle was pulled over and stopped in Lot 71 and the operator was offered a field sobriety test, which he subsequently failed. Officers found a significant amount of marijuana as well as sandwich bags and a digital scale. Maguire was arrested and transported back to the station.

2:04 am
Christopher William Brooks, of 138 Crescent Dr., Chicopee, Massachusetts, was arrested for trespassing on university grounds. UMPD officers had observed the vehicle traveling in Lot 24 with a defective headlight and a flat tire and pulled the vehicle over on North Pleasant Street. Brooks had previously been issued a trespass order by the UMPD in connection with an armed assault. He had been deemed by police to be a risk to the community.

3:42 pm
Amy E. Moggio, of 27 Phelps St., Easthampton, Massachusetts, was placed under arrest for offering sexual contact for a fee. UMPD detectives initiated the investigation after discovering Moggio soliciting college aged males from the five college area over the internet. Moggio was subsequently arrested after agreeing to perform a massage and oral sex for a price of $250.

Sunday March 4

7:50 pm
Stephen Baker, of 287 Davis Rd, Bedford, Massachusetts, and Yevgeniy Levin, of 18 Ranger Rd, Natick, Massachusetts, were placed under arrest in Brown Dormitory for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute. The arrests came as a result of an ongoing investigation that culminated with the controlled purchase of the class D substance by the UMPD. Officers found and confiscated pipes, sandwich bags, a scale, an amount of money and marijuana in the room.

Compiled by Derrick Perkins

Liquid discovered on Saturn's moon, Titan

By Alicia Chang
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES—Scientists for the first time have discovered what appear to be sea-size bodies of liquid on the surface of Saturn's largest moon, including one about as big as the Caspian Sea on Earth.

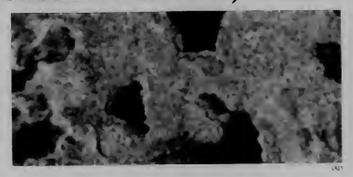
The discovery by the international Cassini spacecraft was welcomed by researchers, who have long theorized that Titan possessed hydrocarbon seas because of methane and other organic compounds in its thick, largely nitrogen atmosphere. Until now, Cassini had only spotted clusters of small lakes on the planet-size moon.

"They're very obvious. There's nothing subtle about them," said Cassini scientist Jonathan Lunine of the University of Arizona, Tucson. Researchers using visual and radar imaging uncovered evidence of at least two seas on Titan's hazy North Pole.

Cassini's camera last month imaged a large, irregular feature stretching 680 miles long with a surface area similar to the landlocked Caspian Sea. Its radar instrument swept over the feature's northern tip and determined it likely contains liquid methane or ethane because of its smooth appearance. However, scientists don't know whether the entire area is filled with liquid.

The spacecraft also discerned another body one-fifth the size of Titan's "Caspian Sea." With a surface area of about 46,000 square miles, it is larger than Lakes Superior and Ontario combined, scientists said.

While there's no scientific definition of what constitutes a lake or sea on Titan, the newly found features are significantly larger than previously discovered bodies of liquid on the frigid moon and should be considered seas, Lunine said.



An image from NASA's Cassini shows evidence of seas, likely filled with liquid methane or ethane, in the high northern latitudes of Saturn's moon Titan.

Results were presented Tuesday at the annual Lunar and Planetary Science Conference in Texas.

Titan is one of the few objects in the outer solar system that possesses a significant atmosphere and scientists have long puzzled over its source. Methane is a flammable gas on Earth but liquid on Titan because of the moon's intense atmospheric pressure and cold.

'300' sparks political outrage in Iran

By Nasser Karimi
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran—The hit American movie 300 has angered Iranians who say the Greeks-vs-Persians action flick insults their ancient culture and provokes animosity against Iran.

"Hollywood declares war on Iranians," blared a headline in Tuesday's edition of the independent Ayende-No newspaper.

The movie, which raked in $70 million in its opening weekend, is based on a comic-book fantasy version of the battle of Thermopylae in 480 B.C., in which a force of 300 Spartans held off a massive Persian army at a mountain pass in Greece for three days.

Even some American reviewers noted the political overtones of the West-against-Iran story line and the way Persians are depicted as decadent, sexually flamboyant and evil in contrast to the noble Greeks.

In Iran, the movie hasn't opened and probably never will, given the government's restrictions on Western films, though one paper said bootleg DVDs were already available.

Still, it touched a sensitive nerve. Javad Shamghadri, cultural adviser to Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, said the United States tries to "humiliate" Iran in order to reverse historical reality and "compensate for its wrongdoings in order to provoke American soldiers and warmongers" against Iran.

The movie comes at a time of increased tensions between the United States and Iran over the Persian nation's nuclear program and the Iraq war.

But aside from politics, the film was seen as an attack on Persian history, a source of pride for Iranians across the political spectrum, including critics of the current Islamic regime.

State-run television has run several commentaries the past two days calling the film insulting and has brought on Iranian film directors to point out its historical inaccuracies.

"The film depicts Iranians as demons, without culture, feeling or humanity, who think of nothing except attacking other nations and killing people," Ayende-No said in its article Tuesday.

"It is a new effort to slander the Iranian people and civilization before world public opinion at a time of increasing American threats against Iran," it said.

Iran's biggest circulation newspaper, Hamshahri, said 300 is "serving the policy of the U.S. leadership" and predicted it will "prompt a wave of protest in the world ... Iranians living in the U.S. and Europe will not be indifferent about this obvious insult."

Get 300 free text messages a month for one year.

Sign up for new service and show a valid college ID at the Sprint store. After 12 months, pay the regular monthly fee.

POWER(RED) TO MAKE A STATEMENT.

RED MOTORAZR™ V3m
Motorola and Sprint are collaborating with (PRODUCT) RED™ to help eliminate AIDS in Africa.
JOINRED.COM
This feature-packed phone is the only RED MOTORAZR that lets you download music wirelessly from the Sprint Music Store™
$59.99
$109.99 2 year price
Plus $50 mail-in rebate with new line activation and 2 year agreement

CALL 1-800-Sprint-1
CLICK sprint.com/powered
GO to the nearest Sprint or Nextel store
Operadores en Español disponibles

Sprint POWER UP

Sprint stores

◆ Hablamos Español
■ Nextel Store with Sprint products

AUBURN
Auburn Mall ■
508 832-8183◆

BOSTON
296 Washington St. ■
617 482 3274◆
39 Winter Street
617 542 3777◆
130 Newbury Street
617 262 2900◆

BRAINTREE
South Shore Plaza
781-794-2500◆

BROCKTON
Westgate Mall ■
508-580-2096

BROOKLINE
301 Harvard Street
617 277-0600◆

BURLINGTON
91 Middlesex Turnpike
781 221 1447

CAMBRIDGE
Cambridgeside Galleria ■
617-374-9936◆

DANVERS
Liberty Tree Mall
978-774-4325

FRAMINGHAM
215 Worcester Road
508-628-0600◆

HINGHAM
92 Derby Street; Ste 127
781-749-7727

HOLYOKE
Holyoke Mall ■
413-534-6074◆

HYANNIS
Cape Cod Mall
508 775-3834

KINGSTON
Independence Mall ■
781 585-5637

LAWRENCE
160 Winthrop Ave
978-975-5650◆

LEOMINSTER
14 Commercial Way
978 840 4273

MARLBOROUGH
Solomon Pond Mall ■
508 786-0696◆

MILLBURY
Shoppes at Blackstone Valley
508 865-8126◆

NATICK
Natick Mall ■
508-651-2955◆
Natick Mall
508 647-0461

NEWTON
210 Needham St. ■
617 244 2898

NORTH ATTLEBORO
Emerald Square ■
508-699-3656◆
1400 S. Washington St. (Rte. 1)
508-695-3451◆

NORTH DARTMOUTH
127 Faunce Corner Road
508 997-6205◆

NORWOOD
1337 Boston
Providence Highway (Rte. 1)
781 255-5566

PEABODY
232 Andover St. ■
978-977-7346◆
North Shore Mall
978-532-0250
9 Sylvan Street
978-573-3500◆

SAUGUS
Square One Mall ■
781-233-3302◆
114 Broadway Turnpike Rte 1 N.
781 233-7676

SHREWSBURY
196 Boston Turnpike Rd.
508 798-3300◆

SWANSEA
Swansea Mall
508-675-3647

TAUNTON
Silver City Galleria ■
508 822-5452◆

WEST SPRINGFIELD
1102 Riverdale St.
413-733-8262◆

PREFERRED DEALERS

AUBURN
Online Communications
508 832-9886

CHICOPEE
Focal Point Communications
413-552-4110◆

FITCHBURG
The Cell Phone Store
800-NEXTCALL

HOPEDALE
Online Communications
508-473-8805

MARLBOROUGH
Online Communications
508-480-0055

MEDWAY
Online Communications
508-533-5565

MILFORD
Nextgen Wireless
508-473-6996◆

SPRINGFIELD
Focal Point Communications
413-730-4442◆

TOWNSEND
Datalink Communications
978-597-9300

WORCESTER
Nextgen Wireless
Greendale Mall
7 Neponset Street
508 852 3299

Coverage not available everywhere. Available features and services will vary by phone and network. The Nationwide Sprint PCS Network reaches over 250 million people. Voice calling area reaches over 165 million people in the U.S., Puerto Rico, U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam. Offers not available in all markets. Additional terms and restrictions apply. Subject to credit approval. See store or sprint.com for details. Phone Offer. Offer ends 03/31/07 or while supplies last. Requires a new line of service with a new two-year subscriber agreement. Taxes excluded. Service Plan. Up to $36 activation and $200 early termination fees apply per line. Deposit may be required. Instant Savings. Activation at time of purchase required. No cash back. Mail-in Rebate. Requires purchase by 03/31/07 and activation by 04/14/07. Rebates cannot exceed purchase price. Taxes excluded. Line must be active 30 consecutive days. Allow 8 to 12 weeks for rebate. Free Text Messaging. Text message overage is $0.10 per message. To avoid charges, you must contact us prior to the billing end date of the 12th plan month. Risk Free Guarantee. Call us to deactivate and return (to place of purchase) complete, undamaged phone with receipt within 30 days of activation. You are responsible for all charges based on actual usage (partial monthly service charges, taxes, Sprint fees, etc.). Project RED. Motorola and Sprint will collectively make a $17 contribution on the sale of each RED MOTORAZR V3m phone to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria. See www.motorola.com/red, JOINRED.com, or www.theglobalfund.org/en for more details. ©2007 Sprint Nextel. All rights reserved. SPRINT, the logos and other trademarks are trademarks of Sprint Nextel. All third-party product or service names are property of their respective owners. All rights reserved.

FOCUS on driving

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Write for news!
news@dailycollegian.com

From Your Dorm To The Airport And Back!
■ VIP Exclusive Service ■ Professional Drivers
■ Door-to-Door Service ■ New, Well Maintained Vans
■ Charter & Group Service ■ Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

On the Rocks School of Bartending®
- Get certified in one weekend
- Anyone 18+ may bartend
- The course is held on campus
- Great paying & fun job!

Sat. & Sun. March, 31st & April 1st
or
Sat. & Sun. April 28th & 29th

1-800-MIX-0094
www.OnTheRocksBartending.com

Noise complaint leads to arrests

FRATS from page 1

According to Finkelstein, there were no more than 40 people in the house when the police arrived, and the building houses 20 fraternity members.

"The noise complaints are coming from four or five houses down, where there's no way possible they could hear noise coming from our house specifically," said Cezo. "They just know AEPi is right down the street, so when they call, that's what they're going to reference."

Cezo said this incident is part of a trend he's been noticing lately. He said his fraternity has clashed with residents of Sunset Avenue before. The fraternity has made efforts to reach out to the Amherst community and to avoid conflict, Cezo said.

Michael Wiseman, Director of Fraternities and Sororities at UMass could not comment on this specific occurrence or the arrests of Cezo and Miller, but said there is constant communication between Alpha Epsilon Pi and neighbors.

"It is an ongoing challenge and effort," said Wiseman. "Specifically in regards to their group, there's been an ongoing dialog between them and neighbors on Sunset Avenue."

Cezo said that many times, noise complaints are caused by random students walking down Sunset Avenue late at night making a lot of noise. He said once residents of houses on Sunset Avenue hear a lot of noise, they assume it is caused by his fraternity.

"The major issue is people come down to our house looking for a party or something and they get upset that there's not, and on the way back they're not respectful," said Cezo. "It's easy for them to point their fingers at us, because we're an organized group that they can come at and voice their opinions at."

The Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity members moved into the house at 118 Sunset Avenue at the beginning of the 2006-07 academic year. The fraternity was previously located at 401 North Pleasant St., and was part of a strip of five houses formerly known to many students as "Frat Row."

They were forced out of their house at the end of the Spring 2006 semester when the owners of the five houses agreed to eventually sell the land to UMass. The University signed a purchase-and-sales agreement last summer, and the five houses on North Pleasant Street, including 401, were demolished.

"It's always been an issue with our neighbors, ever since we moved into this location," said Cezo. "The people around here, I don't really see what they expect living literally just a few houses down from a huge university like this."

Eric Athas can be reached at editor@dailycollegian.com.

UMass set to fund new research parts.

STEM CELL from page 1

Embryonic stem cells are called totipotent, which means that they have the ability to become any kind of cell in the body, a lot like how an undeclared freshman could graduate with just about any major. Adult stem cells are only pluripotent, which is like a senior in their last semester, they've already used up all their credits to finish up a B.A. in English so they can't get an engineering degree.

With this funding UMass researchers are hoping that they'll find a way to make adult stem cells totipotent, but it won't be as easy as tacking another few years onto your college career.

Steps have already been made in this direction with mouse clones being created from genetic material removed from adult stem cells and inserted into unfertilized eggs, a process similar to what was used to clone the sheep Dolly.

Black thinks that finding alternatives to embryonic stem cells are a realizable goal and a good investment.

"Something exists in the egg cytosol that allows it to change the genetic destiny of a fully matures cell," Black said. He hopes that researchers at UMass will be able to isolate the tools inside of an egg cell that help it to refresh the genetic code of a nucleus.

"It baffles me to some extent that this [alternative] is not a part of the public debate," Black said. While Black and his colleagues don't want to duck the moral questions that come up as part of the debate over this research, they hope that they can get more of their side of the story out to help garner greater public support.

Students upset about fee increase

TRUSTEES from page 1

Massachusetts resident to attend UMass-Amherst next year will be $17,399. The cost for a non-resident will be $27,977. According to a report, President Wilson moved forward with this proposal after consulting with the chancellors on all five UMass campuses, all of whom favor this proposal.

"I'm an out of state student, and it's already expensive as it is," said Jen Iaconetti, a freshman at UMass. "I think that if the price were to go up much more, out of state students would be forced to stay in their own states to save money."

The revenue raised by the proposed increase will support numerous aspects of the university, including "utilities and energy, debt service and capital improvements, need-based financial and, student-life programming, salaries and fringe benefits and new faculty," according to the president's office.

"I don't like that they're spending my new buildings while neglecting the older ones," said Emily Largey, a freshman.

Some of the revenue gained by the increases will also be used to provide more aid for students, according to a report.

"The main thing is, costs do go up and we do have to find a way to pay the bills," said Wright.

According to the president's office, other reasons for the increases include an overall lack of state funding and cuts earlier in the decade. The last highest state appropriation the university received was in 2000 when it received $454 million. In FY 2007, UMass received $443 million.

"If we see visual results from there increases than I don't think students would mind," said Shari Warden, a senior.

Eric Athas can be reached at editor@dailycollegian.com

World population on the rise

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS—The world's population will likely reach 9.2 billion in 2050, with virtually all new growth occurring in the developing world, a U.N. report said Tuesday.

According to the U.N. Population Division's 2006 estimate, the world's population will likely increase by 2.5 billion people over the next 43 years from the current 6.7 billion — a rise equivalent to the number of people in the world in 1950.

Hania Zlotnik, the division's director, said an important change in the new population estimate is a decrease in expected deaths from AIDS because of the rising use of anti-retroviral drugs and a downward revision of the prevalence of the disease in some countries.

The new report estimates 32 million fewer deaths from AIDS during the 2005-2020 period in the 62 most affected countries, compared with the previous U.N. estimate in 2004.

This change contributed to the slightly higher world population estimate of 9.2 billion in 2050 than the 9.1 billion figure in the 2004 estimate, the report said.

The report also said most population growth will take place in less developed countries, whose numbers are projected to rise from 5.4 billion in 2007 to 7.9 billion in 2050. The populations of poor countries like Afghanistan, Burundi, Congo, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Niger, East Timor and Uganda are projected to at least triple by mid-century.

By contrast, the total population of richer countries is expected to remain largely unchanged at 1.2 billion. The report said the figure would be lower without expected migration of people from poorer countries, averaging 2.3 million annually.

According to the report, 46 countries are expected to lose population by mid-century, including Germany, Italy, Japan, South Korea and most of the former Soviet republics.

Zlotnik said most countries in Asia and Latin America have reached the "relatively beneficial stage" of having more working-age adults than children or elderly in their populations, "and they will remain in that stage for at least two more decades."

Study: Exercise may boost brain power

EXERCISE from page 1

They found the same patterns, which suggests that people also grow new brain cells when they exercise.

"No previous research has systematically examined the different regions of the hippocampus and identified which region is most affected by exercise," Dr. Scott Small, a neurologist at Columbia University Medical Center in New York who led the study, said in a statement.

Writing in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, the researchers said they first tested mice.

Brain expert Fred Gage, of the Salk Institute in La Jolla, California, had shown that exercise can cause the development of new brain cells in the mouse equivalent of the dentate gyrus.

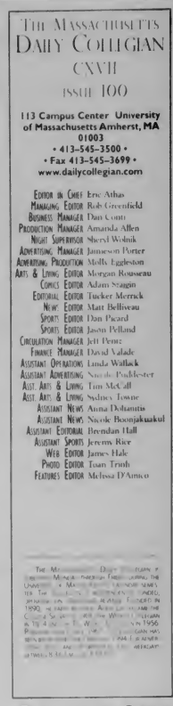
The teams worked together to find a way to measure this using MRI, by tracking cerebral blood volume.

"Once these findings were established in mice, we were interested in determining how exercise affects the hippocampal cerebral blood volume maps of humans," they wrote

Associated Press

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
ISSUE 100
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conte
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jameson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Seagin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Dan Picard
Sports Editor Jason Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Perez
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Pendleton
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dobaniis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Evan Trish
Features Editor Melissa D'Arrigo



Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

SPRING SPECIAL

SUPERCUTS every time

AMHERST

Amherst Plaza Shopping Center
(next to Big Y Supermarket)
181 University Drive, Rte. 9
(413) 259-1135

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
Call Ahead Service available

Ask about our COLOR and WAXING SERVICES

$10
Super Haircut
(reg $13.95)
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSHC

15% OFF
Hair Products
www.supercuts.com
Coupon valid only at participating stores. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Please present coupon prior to payment of services. © 2007 Supercuts Inc. Printed U.S.A. Expires 06/01/07 SSCS

It's no Blarney... Celebrate St. Patrick's Day lunch in all 'oc's

Wednesday, March 14, 2007
11:30 am to 2:00 pm
enjoy Irish music & a great menu!

Fish & Chips
Corned Beef
Steamed Cabbage
Boiled Potatoes
Boiled Carrots
Guiness Cake
Irish Soda Bread
from UMASS Bake Shop

DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst

www.umass.edu/diningservices

Building UMass

The Past, Present, and FUTURE: A three part series.

Today is the conclusion of a three part series discussing the history of our university's physical development. You can find all of them online at www.dailycollegian.com

James Mathews

Nearly 100 years ago, when the University of Massachusetts was in its first incarnation as the land-grant Massachusetts Agricultural College, University President Kenyon Butterfield offered a vision for its future. He imagined an agricultural education "so vast...[it] belongs to the educated man." These day's, that's not the way things look.

UMass, as we know it today, is a massive state university, a growing research institution with hardly much time or attention to devote to the average student. The administration seems distant, Professors are often busy with work and at times good academic advising can be very hard to find. Even for students that go the extra mile to attend office hours, meet with advisors and keep track of administrative issues, another obstacle appears at UMass, nothing is centralized.

It can be seen in the buildings. Aside from dry-erase markers and rickety Columbia desks, there's not much to be found in common between the Graduate Research Center, Bartlett Hall and the Isenberg School of Management, to name a few. Like a term paper without a thesis statement, our University lacks any organizing principle, a fact that affects every aspect of the UMass life.

Academic departments are mostly out of touch with each other, each locked away its respective hallway. Communication between the Student Government and the student body has broken down to a whisper. Chancellor Mike Gargano's tamed "Abercrombie and Fitch" recruitment initiative has created two paralleled and often isolated student groups. At times, it seems as though every student at the University of Massachusetts is a major in the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration department (BIDC) – the resources are here, but it's up to you to make your plan, set your sights, design your own education and coax it out of the system.

Despite all of this, potential abounds on the Amherst campus. Students at UMass that put in the extra effort to take their college years into their own hands are, by virtue of their mammoth task, one of the most energetic and original groups of undergraduates in the country. In the student Union, clubs and organizations founded in the heyday of college activism provide boundless opportunities for involvement, influence, and change. In Thompson and Machmer, the Economics and Anthropology departments, two of UMass' most nontraditional institutions, are doing their part to push the envelope of the Western arts and sciences. Over the course of its long and often confusing past, our University has gained its share of resources such as these. To build a better and brighter future, all that is needed is to bring them together.

No educational policy at any university has ever been implemented in a lasting way without the assent of students.

Efforts at this are already being made. In the Fine Arts Center lobby this week, the Ventures in Science Using Art Laboratory (VISUAL), an educational outreach program of the Polymer Research Center, is showing an exhibit of scientific imagery specifically designed to "serve as an effective means to stimulate, educate and promote materials science research." As unlikely as a coalition effort between the Polymer & Fine Arts centers may seem, this and other programs like it are the potential beginnings of a new era of integrated education, innovative ideas and academic cooperation.

Such a future, however, will not be built without student participation. Although official University histories may concern themselves solely with the tenures of presidents and the stratagems of administrations, no educational policy at any university has ever been implemented in a lasting way without the assent of students. If we remain apathetic, UMass may well wind up going down the road of reckless construction, corporate finance and vocational management education. If we take responsibility, its future will be in our hands.

On the Blue Wall side of the Campus Center concourse, above the rows of maroon-cushioned couches, a painting shows the University of Massachusetts as it was just over 40 years ago. Painted in 1962, it shows the rush to class outside of the Student Union on what seems a sunny day. With spring coming in this week, it doesn't take much of a stretch to imagine – a couple walks arm in arm, students stand on the Union's steps and in the center of the frame, a trio of figures has stopped for an afternoon's chat. The description mounted next to the painting describes them as "the student (who has enthusiasm and vision,) the faculty person (who advises, weighing and balancing proposals) and the architect (who presents options and technical information.)" Utopian as this vision may seem, there is no better metaphor for the role of the student, faculty and staff within a properly functioning university.

At UMass, students, like the ones shown in the painting, are in no short supply. They are energetic, they are brimming with ideas and they are young. Nor is our University suffering from any lack of interested faculty members. Professors, when they have the time, are usually more than happy to provide both academic advice and personal counsel to the student who asks. As for the architect, the buildings now going up at UMass are impressive – far more than any in the years since the tenure of John W. Lederle – and this can only be for the better.

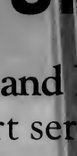
On the basement balcony of Tobin Hall, where the west end of the UMass campus disappears into the hilly New England horizon, one can see the construction of the new Central Heating plant pushing forward daily. Its arced roof gleams in the sun. Cranes move back and forth. Trucks drive in and out of the site. It is an innovative project, aesthetically pleasing to look at and will power the UMass of the future.

With active involvement (and a little good luck,) UMass, in the years ahead, will be a place where education is more than just 120 credits and a leather-bound diploma. The cranes may lift and the trucks may drive, but the future is ours to build.

James Mathews can be reached at jmathews@student.umass.edu

Though often overlooked, this Campus Center mural functions as a perfect representative of the three factors presently shaping this university.

Abortion is not genocide



Andrew Freeman

Five years ago, I visited Auschwitz. I was struck by how normal the fields around it looked, how pretty the grass and the trees were. Take away the ruins of the crematoria, the reconstructed barracks and fences, and it could be an ordinary field in Poland. You would never know that over a million people were slaughtered at the death camp.

The horrors of the Holocaust prompted a Jewish lawyer, Raphael Lemkin, to coin the term "genocide." Lemkin created it as a legal standard to prohibit and punish such atrocities. His concept became law with the Genocide Convention of 1948, a treaty that required signing countries to oppose genocide. Today, stopping genocide is a moral imperative for many people, and some exploit this for cynical political gain.

A group called the Center for Bioethical Reform (CBR) claims that abortion is genocide. Greg Cunningham, its executive director, lays out the argument in his article "Why Abortion is Genocide," available at the group's Web site, www.abortionno.org.

By diluting the definition of genocide, Cunningham and other anti-abortionists strip the word of its usefulness.

What is genocide? According to Article II of the Genocide Convention, it is defined as acts "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group." These acts include killing, causing physically or mentally or preventing the reproduction of members of that group. This definition does not cover abortion. A woman seeking abortion is terminating a pregnancy, not an entire people.

Because abortion does not fit the legal definition of genocide, Cunningham redefines genocide. He argues for "the evolving nature of the criteria by which victim classes are defined," rather than the original intent of the law. By his definition, a fetus has personhood, and is part of a group – fetuses. A subset of this group – unwanted fetuses – is targeted for destruction.

Genocide is a crime above others because it poses an existential threat to a community. The European Jewish community was devastated by the Holocaust – the Nazis killed nearly all of Poland's Jews. Abortion does not endanger a group – it is directed against individuals. The Nazis intended to destroy all Jews, but women do not intend to destroy all fetuses. Fetuses, moreover, do not have a culture, a community or indeed any life outside of their mother's womb.

By diluting the definition of genocide, Cunningham and other anti-abortionists strip the word of its usefulness. They also distract from the undeniable genocide occurring in Darfur.

Since 2003, the Sudanese government has been carrying out genocide against the inhabitants of the province of Darfur. The Coalition for International Justice estimates that nearly 400,000 people had died by April 2005 – two years into the genocide. One can only speculate how many have been murdered in the two years since.

The whole abortion as genocide argument is disingenuous. If abortion really is genocide, then women seeking abortions are mass murderers. Cunningham tries to dodge this by claiming that women are coerced into having abortions by men or by abortionists. "Just following orders" was not a valid defense at Nuremberg, and "just blame the abortionist" won't suffice if abortion truly is genocide.

If abortion is genocide, then violence would be necessary to stop it. Military action has historically been the only way to stop genocide – the Nazis had to be defeated before the Holocaust could end, for example. If CBR were serious about stopping genocide it would not "condemn all abortion related violence," since such violence would presumably be necessary. Their goal is simply to make abortion illegal, but employing the word genocide encourages violence against abortionists and women.

The real debate is betrayed elsewhere on CBR's Web site: it is between, in their words, "the right to life" and "the right to not be pregnant." For them, the latter is "a far lesser right." Considering our society's high expectations for mothers, considering the possibility of losing time at work and career opportunities due to pregnancy, the right to not be pregnant is very important.

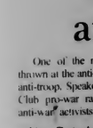
Moreover, the act of curtailing that right would oppress women. If all abortion is genocide, women who are raped would be forced to continue with the pregnancy – there can be no exemptions for something as immoral as genocide. There is no way of granting the unborn rights without attacking the rights of women.

In the end, genocide is simply a word – it has no intrinsic meaning. We can build whatever we like upon its foundation. The fields of Auschwitz-Birkenau did not have to be a museum to genocide; they could have become a strip mall.

Similarly, genocide does not have to be a legal mandate against the destruction of a religious, ethnic or national group. It can be an all-purpose political slander, extended from abortion to whatever else one disagrees with. We can cheapen the memory of the Holocaust and destroy its moral power; we can cry "genocide" to overturn laws and to oppress others. We can ignore the suffering in Darfur. But it just wouldn't be right.

Andrew Freeman writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at adfreema@student.umass.edu.

Combating the anti-troop myth



Alex Peterkin

Dan Keefe

One of the most frequent accusations thrown at the anti-war movement is that it is anti-troop. Speakers at a recent Republican Club pro-war rally repeatedly denounced anti-war activists as anti-troop. This anti-troop label is so common it has befallen not only obvious targets such as liberal ne'er-do-well John Kerry, but also the former Republican senate and even the Commander-in-Chief George W. Bush.

The fact of the matter is that no one is anti-troop. Those that support this war see our troops as defenders of freedom – as heroes. The anti-war movement also sees our troops overseas as heroes – but as heroes who don't need to die as the result of a failed war policy. The entire anti-troop spin is junk, only used to demonize opponents and push real debate about this war to the sidelines.

Recently, some have been connecting anti-war sentiment with Anti-Americanism. This is a flawed and highly tenuous argument.

There is a serious difference between "anti-troop" and "anti-war." We support the troops, therefore, we stand for immediate withdrawal. A flyer that was passed out amongst the counter-rallliers at the Republican Club's pro-war rally attests to the anti-war movement's support of the troops. It reads: "They say they support the troops. We say bring them home! Give returning GIs real healthcare and union jobs!" The fact sheet also highlights the controversially poor treatment of vets at the Walter Reed Hospital, the high rate of PTSD and unemployment amongst vets, and the overwhelming sentiment amongst active duty GIs to end the occupation.

A clear majority of active-duty United States' troops want the occupation to end, as a much-ignored Zogby International poll found in early 2005, with 72 percent saying they wanted to be out of Iraq by the end of 2006. Already, two UMass students have died in Iraq. We want to end the destruction and suffering wrought by this war. We stand firmly on the side of humanity, on the side of life, on the side of justice and on the side of the troops.

The pro-troop sentiment fueling the anti-war movement can be seen in the strong presence and leadership of Iraq war veterans and their families in the call to bring the troops home – like Cindy Sheehan, mother of a fallen American soldier, or Lt. Ehren Watada, the first officer to refuse redeployment to Iraq. On this campus there are over 300 Iraq War veterans, many of whom will approach the Anti-War Coalition's table in the Campus Center concourse to express their opposition to the war.

Recently, some have been connecting anti-war sentiment with anti-Americanism. This is a flawed and highly tenuous argument. There is certainly nothing anti-American about anti-war veterans who have bravely served their country. Nor is there anything remotely anti-American about activists who are voicing their beliefs, exercising their First Amendment rights and contributing to public discourse on the War on Iraq.

Our country is only made stronger by the variety of opinions that we experience everyday on campus. Nothing tears these strengths apart like reverting to applying labels like war monger, hippie, fascist or anti-troop. Very few of these fit the criteria of these counter-productive, stereotype-loaded buzzwords. Instead we need to focus on the realities of our situation, at the value of the life and at what will be best for the future of our world.

We, as Americans, have sent our troops to fight on our behalf. None of us are without friends or family who are in the military, many in Iraq. We now have a responsibility to bring them home quickly and safely. The anti-troop mudslinging we've seen recently, both nationally and on this campus, does nothing but distract from the real issues we need to face in order to bring them home.

Alex Peterkin and Dan Keefe are UMass students and members of the Radical Student Union.

'SEE, MY PRETTIES? THIS IS WHAT HAPPENS WHEN YOU GET CAUGHT!'

Give it a fair chance

Teresa Franco

Most coffee-crazed college students don't think twice about where their steaming cups of java originate. For coffee beans imported under traditional means of international trade, farmers in Central America are not even being paid half for what they deserve for the work they put into growing the plant on their own farms. A pound of eight-dollar coffee only earns a Central American farmer 80 cents. This not only affects the producers of the product, but the entire country as well. Smaller countries with high poverty rates depend on one specific product as a means of income for the entire country. If they are not properly paid, the whole country could suffer as a result. Outrageous, isn't it?

For those of you who are appalled by learning this and are about to spit out the coffee you're currently consuming while reading this, don't swear off the mocha just yet. There are means to humbly protest this unfairness right here at the University of Massachusetts.

If you haven't noticed already, some coffee pots in the numerous coffee venders on campus have a little black and white sticker located along the side. The logo features an outline of a person carrying two baskets in either of their hands. This inscription signifies it is a product of the International Federation for Alternative Trade (IFAT). IFAT consists of over 150 organizations worldwide who work together to promote fair wages and proper working conditions for smaller countries with high poverty rates. It's also their mission to spread awareness of the importance of fair trade throughout the United States.

Here at UMass students can fit in one small token of charity throughout their daily routine while enjoying a hot beverage in the process.

The affects of international trade may not appear to be a huge dent in the causes of world poverty as opposed to war and famines, but it is something that Americans have the actual power to slow down. Coffee is almost considered a necessity in the college world, especially amidst those never-ending nights of studying marathons right before finals. If every student switched half of their caffeine intake to fair-trade beverages, that would be a big step in the right direction.

But fair trade products are not only limited to coffee. Certain types of food such as bananas, chocolate and honey are fair-trade. Other non-food products include certain fashions and paper goods.

The countries that provide us with these materials benefit substantially from the fair trade cooperation. As IFAT progresses, these third world countries can have a reasonable grasp at privileges that we here in the United States see as commonplace – better education systems, quality healthcare and environmental improvements will be within their reach. In Oaxaca, Mexico a group of farmers called the Union of Indigenous Communities of the Isthmus Region (UCIRI) was the first group to distribute their products under fair trade. As a result, they have doubled the income of their families since the start of the program. The city has also established a bus line, built a secondary school and constructed a family health clinic. Every little bit can amount to significant differences.

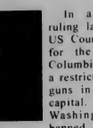
Here at UMass students can fit in one small token of charity throughout their daily routine while enjoying a hot beverage in the process. There are a good amount of coffee distributors within campus that provide certified, fair trade coffee. The Worcester dining hall has fair trade as an option, along with all of the coffee at Pure Vida (located at the Blue Wall) and the People's Market in the student union – just to name a few. There are plenty of local independent coffee shops that serve fair trade coffee as well. Take Amherst Coffee as a quick example. Big name corporations are starting to catch on too. Starbucks just recently began serving fair trade beverages – though only three percent of their coffee is a product of IFAT, it is a step in the right direction.

It is not a hard task to take part in the process to create fair treatment of workers all across the globe. The next time you're running off to class in a hurry, be sure to scan for the little black and white sticker on the container of your morning cup of Joe before pouring it. The taste and quality of the coffee imported through IFAT is equal to any other, so why not chose fair trade? Choosing the fair trade route is sending a little "thank you" to the farmer who put his hard efforts into producing the hot beverage.

Teresa Franco can be reached at tfranco@student.umass.edu

This logo can be seen around campus, if one is looking for it.

A second opinion



Ben Duffy

In a momentous ruling last week, the US Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia overturned a restriction on handguns in the nation's capital. Since 1976, Washington has banned handguns for nearly all private citizens. That ban has now been declared unconstitutional.

What makes this decision so groundbreaking is that it went right to the heart of the Second Amendment, addressing the scope of its protections. The pro-gun control and anti-gun control campaigns have long since differed on the meaning of the Second Amendment and the Supreme Court has largely avoided the debate. For better or for worse, the judiciary has the last word on what the Constitution actually means, and until recently, it hadn't even been addressing the issue. D.C. plans to appeal to the Supreme Court to defend its gun control statute.

The last major Supreme Court ruling concerning Second Amendment rights was U.S. v. Miller (1939). The Miller case concerned a federal law regulating shotguns with barrels shorter than 18 inches. The court ruled that the law was not a violation of the Second Amendment. The recent ruling in Washington seems to conflict with the Miller case because it declared Second Amendment rights to be individual rights, not simply rights belonging to "militias." "We conclude that the Second Amendment protects an individual right to keep and bear arms," wrote Judge Laurence Silberman in his majority opinion.

The Second Amendment to our Constitution states that, "A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed." The pro-gun control groups focus on the words "well regulated militia," while the anti-gun control groups zero in on the clause "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." The pro-gun control groups argue that the Second Amendment guarantees a group-right to militias, not an individual right to citizens. Anti-gun control advocates note that the amendment clearly specifies that this right belongs to "the people," and find the reference to "a well regulated militia" to be inconsequential.

I feel torn between the constitutional arguments of both sides because I believe that every word of the Constitution has meaning. The Second Amendment was drawn up in 1789 against a backdrop of fierce debate. Delegates from across the young nation gathered to battle it out over the exact language of the first 10 amendments. Every word was belabored, and no phrase is incidental. When the framers included the phrase "a well regulated militia," they had something in mind. On the other hand, they also declared that this right belongs "to the people." Neither phrase can be ignored.

If Washingtonians thought that they could magically pacify their violent city by banning handguns, they thought wrong.

Regardless of its constitutionality, gun control has been a flop in Washington, D.C. In fact, our nation's capital may be the best argument against gun control. Although it has had a virtual ban on handguns since 1976, Washington is awash with violent crime. If Washingtonians thought that they could magically pacify their violent city by banning handguns, they thought wrong. Compared to the nation at large, Washington is practically a war zone.

In 2003, its murder rate was 5.75 times the national average, its rate of aggravated assault was 2.19 times the national average and its overall rate of violent crime was 2.63 times the national average. According to the National Association to Restore Pride in America's Capital, Washington ranks as almost the most violent city in the country. In a 1998 study of America's 207 largest cities, Washington ranked 199th in violent crime, with 207 being the most violent. While violent crime in Washington had been on the decline in recent years, so too has violent crime across the country. If Washington has recently become less violent, it's difficult to correlate that trend to its 1976 gun control legislation.

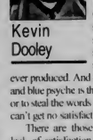
Comparing Washington's crime rates to those of the entire nation may be problematic because Washington suffers from significant urban blight. Of course Washington has higher violent crime rates than the Heartland, because Washington has ghettoes, gangs, drugs and all of the other problems that beleaguer modern American cities. That's exactly the point.

Washington's problem with violence was never related to guns. Its problems stemmed from larger social issues which were not magically cured with the banning of handguns in 1976. Those problems will not disappear with the recent overturning of that ban either. Nonetheless, law-abiding citizens of Washington will now be able to carry handguns to protect themselves from the violent criminals that plague our capital.

To put it simply, guns don't kill people, people kill people. Although I'd rather not speak in clichés, this particular one is true. Simply banning handguns in Washington didn't transform it overnight into a relatively violence-free Scandinavian society. Washington does not have a problem with guns, it has a problem with violence. That violence has many impetuses, but the legality of firearms is not one of them. I can see both interpretations of the Second Amendment, but I can also see that Washington's gun policies are a dismal failure. Handgun prohibition has not made Washington a safe zone.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesday. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

Consequences of the picket fence



Kevin Dooley

Even though they were technically part of the "British Invasion," Mick Jagger and the Rolling Stones could easily have been the official spokesmen of the United States with their hit song, "Satisfaction."

Since I've called this country home for over 20 years now, I would like to think I have at least a fundamental understanding about the culture. I can safely say I have become assimilated into the shared attitudes that people share in the most powerful nation planet Earth has ever produced. And one of the cornerstones of the red, white and blue psyche is that we are a country that is never fulfilled, or to steal the words from a disgruntled and fed up Jagger, we can't get no satisfaction.

There are those who argue that a lack of satisfaction is the catalyst for progress and is healthy for the country. It's only natural for the United States to be pioneers in every global endeavor and to be the greatest at everything we attempt. Competition is something to embrace and relish in.

But many of us never attain this goal no matter our acheivements, and this engrained struggle to achieve the American Dream becomes our downfall.

These people may have a point, but, in reality, if you adopt this unsatisfied state of mind, you will endure life in a state of constant insanity. Comedian Jerry Seinfeld summed up it well. When you arrive at your destination, it's immediately time to go.

We were told in Kindergarten to pursue the American Dream to its fullest. But what if we were to take the American Dream slogan literally? That would mean we are supposed to fight, scratch and claw for what we desire and never be satisfied until we are so tired that we succumb to sleep. Hence, the "Dream" portion of the phrase. In effect, the end goal is to take a nap on one of the Campus Center couches. Only then will we have taken a giant bite out of the American experience which awaits each and every one of us.

But many of us never attain this goal no matter our achievements, and this engrained struggle to achieve the American Dream becomes our downfall.

Look at what happens when we reach the satisfaction saturation point with our celebrities. It's then time to throw them off American Celebrity Mountain and laugh in pure delight at their fall from the top. Case in point is the current Britney Spears saga. Eight years ago, she was the sex symbol and hot conversational topic of every kid in junior high at the lunch table. She was a force to be reckoned with. Today, she is the object of ridicule and scorn, and the subject of intense and fierce debates on the cable news channels. But America's modern Frankenstein should have seen it coming since tearing down celebrities is as American as apple pie.

And if you're a sports fanatic, just watch the immediate aftermath of the championship game of any professional sport to get a glimpse of this American paradox.

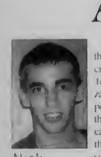
Often, you will find the very first question out of the interviewer's mouth at the podium or in the locker room for a member of the championship team is, "Do you guys think you can repeat and win it again next season?"

You're asking a person who has reached the pinnacle of their sport or even their life whether they're ready to do it again? Can't you just relax and let the person enjoy the moment they will, in all likelihood, never experience again? You can't point to anything but insanity or a serious illness for questions like these.

So what's to be done about this paradox America has sitting in front of it? On the one side, productivity and chasing down dreams – or maybe just the yearning for a time when we can take a nap has put the U.S. on top of the global food chain. But is it natural to be in a constant state of desire and never truly at peace with yourself? Is the theory "kill or be killed" a healthy one for our nation or any nation to subscribe to? I say it isn't, and I believe Britney Spears would have my back on this one. That is, if she could only find the time to stop trying to be America's No. 1 rehab patient. The American Dream never involves resting.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu.

A grassroots gambit



Nick Milano

With the advent of new technology, the methods used by campaigning politicians change to reach a wider audience. To date, political candidates and organizations have the television and radio ads perfected, however, the internet age has thrown them a curveball. Presidential candidates are beginning to maximize the Internet's potential. In particular, some candidates have recently created Facebook.com pages in hopes of tapping the 18-year-old age group and making them more active in politics.

The two Democratic frontrunners, Barack Obama and Hillary [illegible] considered to have the [illegible] of winning the presidential nomination. In a fight for the [illegible] college students, they have [illegible] Facebook profiles. John Edwards, another candidate [illegible] shot at the nomination does not have his own [illegible].com page.

Obama is the candidate in the best position to benefit from Facebook due to the way he is campaigning.

On Obama's profile, there are links to short videos of appearances in Austin, Texas and Cleveland, Ohio. The [illegible] goal is readily apparent: attract the younger [illegible]. Seemingly everyone interviewed for an opinion [illegible] a college student. This tactic made the entire [illegible] appear to be young and energetic. Obama is going [illegible] to draw people of this age together across the [illegible].

The posted video of his speech in Cleveland was not [illegible] directed at the younger generation but also at African-Americans. He has been criticized for his inability to draw [illegible] despite being the first black man to have a legitimate [illegible] of winning the nomination. You can be sure he is [illegible] to win them over as well. In addition to these films, a campaign worker posts a note to provide updates on where Obama will be stopping next and how to contribute to his campaign.

Clinton's profile is stark by contrast. There is a collection of photographs of her, but nothing regarding where she will be next or her positions on certain issues. It feels as though no effort has been put in to keep people informed of her activities. Anti-Clinton sentiment is widespread among the groups created about her. The clear and almost overwhelming majority of them are very offensive.

This opportunity to reach out to an often lost voting base has been lost on John Edwards who does not have a readily available profile, but one must wonder what good will it actually do for Senators Clinton and Obama. The people they, especially Obama, are courting, are the least likely to vote of all the voting age people in this country. A best-case scenario has them making their name and issues known to everyone on Facebook, but they already have widespread name recognition. What matters more is their ability to get these people off their couches for just five minutes to vote.

Motivating the Facebook population will prove to be even more important for Obama because he is refusing money from "Washington lobbyists or political action committees." While this shows his commitment to changing the way politicians do business, one must wonder what he is expecting from the 18-24 year olds. He must be hoping he can change their apathetic nature and encourage them to donate money, no small task for those already spending thousands on tuition.

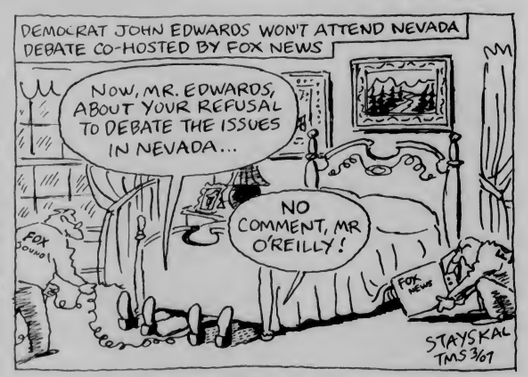
Obama is the candidate in the best position to benefit from Facebook due to the way he is campaigning. It will help him to connect to the younger generation adding to his already rock star-like following. Candidates this early in the race usually eat brunch in the houses of neighborhood activists in front of very small crowds; Obama drew 20,000 people to a rally in Austin, Texas in February. His ability to transcend differences and his spectacular fame may carry him to the White House.

For Edwards who does not have an Election 2006 page, he could be missing out on his chance to stir interest among this block of voters. The more he moves to the left, the more he will need the help of very liberal people among whom young college students are a healthy audience.

Clinton, on the other hand, does not need to win the hearts of college students everywhere. She already has war chest that dwarfs that of the other candidates. Clinton just needs to just sit back, stay in the race and wait for the primaries so she can start launching TV ad after TV ad. Both Obama and Edwards could be dead in the water.

This is the first campaign where Facebook will play a large role. Obama's grassroots style could not only shatter the way campaigns are waged, but also make the 18-24-year-old demographic crucial to the outcome of future elections. From 2000 to 2004, the percentage of college-aged students who voted grew by 11 percent. Surprising as it may be, Facebook may be able to keep this trend going.

Nick Milano can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu



DEMOCRAT JOHN EDWARDS WON'T ATTEND NEVADA DEBATE CO-HOSTED BY FOX NEWS
NOW, MR. EDWARDS, ABOUT YOUR REFUSAL TO DEBATE THE ISSUES IN NEVADA...
NO COMMENT, MR O'REILLY!
FOX SOUND
FOX NEWS
STAYSKAL TMS 3/07

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

QUESTIONS ABOUT CANNABIS

Regarding Kevin Pascucci's Mar. 9th op-ed, the drug war is in large part a war on marijuana, by far the most popular illicit drug. Punitive marijuana laws have little, if any, deterrent value.

The University of Michigan's Monitoring the Future Study reports that lifetime use of marijuana is higher in the United States than any European country, yet America is one of the few Western countries that use its criminal justice system to punish citizens who prefer marijuana to martinis.

Unlike alcohol, marijuana has never been shown to cause an overdose death, nor does it share the addictive properties of tobacco. The short-term health effects of marijuana are inconsequential compared to the long-term effects of criminal records. Unfortunately, marijuana represents the counterculture to many Americans.

In subsidizing the prejudices of culture warriors, the U.S. government is subsidizing organized crime. The drug war's distortion of immutable laws of supply and demand makes an easily grown weed literally worth its weight in gold. The only clear winners in the war on marijuana are drug cartels and shameless tough-on-drugs politicians who've built careers confusing drug prohibition's collateral damage with a relatively harmless plant.

The big losers in this battle are the taxpayers deluded into believing big government is the appropriate response to non-traditional consensual vices.

Robert Sharpe
Arlington, Va.

POLITICAL CIVILITY ON CAMPUS

I am as liberal as they come. However, regarding free speech, I have not had a lobotomy, as apparently have some troglodytes toting themselves as leftists on University of Massachusetts campus.

While I probably agree with these liberals more than the Republican Club, it is utterly counterproductive and completely repulsive to disrupt a rally of someone you don't agree with. It just illustrates how the far left-wing is just as guilty as the far right when it comes to violations of free speech. Mindless left-wingers, as we saw Thursday, will, in the name of "peace," "social justice" and puppies, or whatever utopias these idealists hold in their minds, provoke participants in Republican rallies.

Meanwhile, those who disagree with the war are labeled traitors and worse by our right-wing federal administration and their lackeys. I think back to several years ago, when the Republican Club brought the controversial David Horowitz to speak on campus regarding reparations for slavery. The responses of such groups as the RSU and STPEC students were equally puerile. Instead of respectfully allowing a differing viewpoint to be heard, mindless empty epithets ending in '-ism' and '-ist' were hurled, and his talk disrupted.

My point is that the radical left community here, if its members want to be taken seriously, must refrain from such idiocy as occurred last Thursday and respond to differing views with calm, reasoned, respectful arguments.

Let the other side be heard! You can't really claim any moral high ground when you use the same anti-constitutional tactics as those you despise. Possibly stealing lists of ROTC recruits, and provoking conflicts when called on it are ridiculous transgressions against civility. I find my liberal conscience siding with the Republican Club on this one. Grow up!

Andrew Bentley
UMass Graduate Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Viva Las Vegas

New guide for men's weekend

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

There are few places that guys can get together for a weekend filled with masculine debauchery and no regrets, but there is only one location that has it all: Las Vegas. Planning a Vegas trip with the guys is much more difficult then you may think, especially with so much to do in so little time.

The "Las Vegas Little Black Book: A Guy's Guide to the Perfect Vegas Weekend," is the best way to ensure the ultimate guy's weekend in the daunting mecca that is Vegas. While getting to Las Vegas, finding accommodations, gambling, dining and finding the rights gentlemen's club may seem like something that can easily be done on the fly, doing so will cost you and your guy cohorts valuable time and energy and cause headaches that are not the result of liquor.

While "Little Black Book" is filled with laughs and solid advice for a guy's weekend, it is obviously not for everyone. This book was written for a very specific target audience and those outside of it will not have much use for the "Little Black Book."

According to the authors Hiram Todd Norman and David deMontmollin, "Our purpose in writing the "Little Black Book" is to make it easy for you to create the ultimate guy's weekend, to help you avoid the traps that will soak up your time and eat up your wallet, and to ensure you'll leave Vegas with a smile on your face and tales to tell for years to come."

With over 240 pages of advice, stories, classic Las Vegas mistakes, recommendations, unscientific rating systems, maps, sample itineraries and reference guides with phone numbers and Web sites, their purpose is easily met and then some.

Norman and deMontmollin bring a unique style to the book that is not seen in a typical travel guide. Written like a conversation between Vegas veterans, "Little Black Book" is a quick read that disperses valuable nuggets of advice for maximizing debauchery and minimizing the headache of directionless wondering that can ruin a night.

Shelling out advice like Las Vegas insiders, Norman and deMontmollin, prove they know what they are talking about. The Vegas strip is home to deMontmollin. He was the marketing manager for Vegas's Green Valley Ranch and Casino and was featured on the Travel Channel's reality TV show "American Casino." Currently he is the marketing manager of the new Hooters Hotel and Casino.

"This book has changed many people's view of Vegas," deMontmollin said.

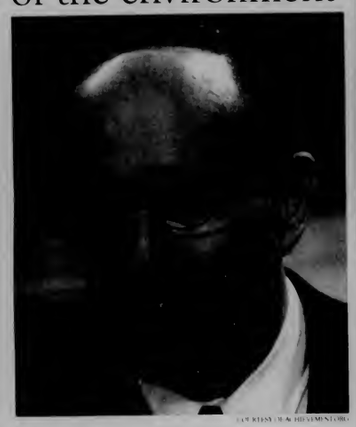
"Little Black Book," is broken into three sections which focus on "the three phase of your trip: planning, executing and remembering."

Starting right where you and your mates start, pre-Vegas, the book explains why preparation is key to upgrading your Vegas trip from good to great. Even before

See VEGAS on page 7

Las Vegas has been a vacation spot for over 50 years, but with "Las Vegas Little Black Book: A Guy's Guide to the Perfect Vegas Weekend," Sin City can now be experienced without missing a thing in just one weekend.

The political side of the environment



Former New York City Mayor Rudy Guliani has not publicly addressed many of the country's environmental issues.

BY KATIE MAGINNIS
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

I don't know about you, but I like to do my research before I cast a vote in an election. Though we still have ample time before the 2008 Presidential election comes around, it may be a good idea to start poking into the platforms of the nominees. One of the major issues facing our global wellbeing is that of climate change and the environment, so this looks like a good place to start.

According to polls by ABC News, the three most popular candidates for the Democratic Party so far are Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama and John Edwards. I found that all three of these candidates had similar views of environmental issues. They all assert that America needs to become less dependent upon foreign oil and that we need to increase our use of alternative energy methods.

Senator of New York and former First Lady of the United States, Clinton took what seems to be the most liberal stance among the three candidates, saying that "we can fix these problems together by changing to a clean energy future fueled by innovation and efficiency." She plans to create a Strategic Energy Fund, which will receive much of its financial support from oil companies. This fund will invest $9 billion in alternative energy research. Clinton's stance gives tax breaks will be increased for hybrid car owners and alternative energy providers.

Obama, Junior Senator of Illinois, seems to be focusing his environmental concerns on developing more fuel-efficient cars. Referring to oil as "the Achilles heel of our country," Obama has mentioned plans to give extra health care benefits to domestic automakers who agree to invest 50 percent of their savings from these benefits into producing more fuel-efficient and hybrid cars. Additionally, Obama wants to offer tax cuts to gas stations that install E85 ethanol refueling pumps as well as to people who invest in biofuels according to his campaign Web site.

Edwards, who was once a Senator in North Carolina and the Democratic nominee for Vice President in 2004, stresses the idea that America needs to set a better example of efficient energy use for the rest of the world and regain the respect we lost when we failed to sign onto the Kyoto Protocol. He believes that we need to invest in more clean and renewable energy sources such as solar power, wind power and biofuels. Furthermore, Edwards mentioned the idea of mandating hybrid cars as well as putting a national cap on CO_2 emissions that will decrease each year at a recent campaign rally in New Hampshire.

The top three candidates for the Republican Party include Rudy Giuliani, John McCain and Mitt Romney, as shown by a recent Time Magazine poll. As opposed to the candidates in the Democratic Party, I found that the Republicans seem to be a bit more divided on their thoughts about the environment.

On Giuliani's official Web site, there was very little information about this former Mayor of New York City's stance on environmental issues. However, I did find that he supported the idea of opening the country's Strategic Petroleum Reserve in order to cut gas prices in the year 2000.

McCain, the Senior Senator of Arizona, seemed to be the most liberal on environmental issues

See ENVIRONMENT on page 7

Nickelback rocks DCU Center

Nickelback performed to a sold out DCU Center this past Sunday in Worcester. The Canadian band is currently on tour with Three Days Grace and Breaking Benjamin, promoting their latest album "Animals."

Band brings rock to masses

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Walking out of Worcester's DCU center, the ringing in my ears drown out the noise of traffic, the smell of sulfur still lingers in my nose and my pulse beats to the tempo of "Animals." Nickelback's Winter '07 tour was a phenomenal display of what the right bands and the right atmosphere can do to make a concert truly great.

As the opening act, Breaking Benjamin started strong enough to almost steal the entire show. Somehow melding insanely pounding guitar licks with thumping bass and the deep shouting vocals of lead singer Benjamin Burnley, Breaking Benjamin pulled off a live show veteran performers would have been proud of. Although about a quarter of the crowd was missing, most everyone in the stadium was getting into the heavy bass riffs and crashing symbols.

At one point, four songs into their set, Three Days Grace singer Adam Gontier joined Burnley on stage. The crowd ate up every minute of this and demanded Three Days Grace. Fortunately for them, Breaking Benjamin was not done yet. Turning out another handful of thunderous songs and ending with "So Cold," Breaking Benjamin set the tone for the rest of the concert. It would rock hard.

As the last chord, somehow sustained for an inordinate amount of time, resonated long after Breaking Benjamin exited, the house lights came up. The live hard rock was replaced over the speakers by much a mellower ZZ Top number, the once teeming mass became a well organized pack of polo clad college students, children adorned in newly purchased Nickelback shirts and nine-to-five parents wearing leather pants and vests. They went to buy snow cones and hotdogs and beer and wait for the next set to come on.

And come on they did. Three Days Grace rocked even louder than Breaking Benjamin. Playing songs more familiar with the crowd, Gontier urged the crowd to get out of their chairs and "get those devil horns in the air." Although they had a great start, the energy and excitement waned about half way through; the listeners lost focus and become anxious for Nickelback.

Toward the end of their set, as the audience really started to fill in, Three Days Grace picked up where they had started from and ended with a couple great numbers, redeeming themselves, before exiting the stage.

After Three Days Grace, the drastic change in demeanor of the audience did not happen. Although there were subtle differences, the air still buzzed with anticipation of the main act and the crowd accepted that they did not have to be themselves anymore. Nickelback was tonight's drug of choice and the audience was frenzied.

Boom. Out of nowhere a cannon blast echoed through the arena, causing the entire audience to simultaneously flinch and clap. With ringing still in our ears, another cannon shot boomed, a curtain fell and the heavy opening riff of "Animals" ripped though the air. Halfway though the song, lead singer Chad Kroeger stopped and introduced, to thunderous applause, Nickelback.

Although the show was billed as promoting "All the Right Reasons," Nickelback's new album, the set of songs resembled a greatest hits CD or even what might be played at a reunion tour. By playing all the highlights of their career, Nickelback urged the crowd to sing every verse and chorus. The band fed on the crowd's response.

And, if the song choice was not enough, the pyrotechnics were amazing. Using towering

See NICKELBACK on page 7

Environment an important issue for 08'

ENVIRONMENT from page 6

out of the three Republican candidates. Although he opposed the Kyoto Protocol, he does support the strengthening of the Clean Air Act and Clean Water Act. Also, he agrees with the ideas of the Republican Main Street Partnership, which states that companies should be rewarded for reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

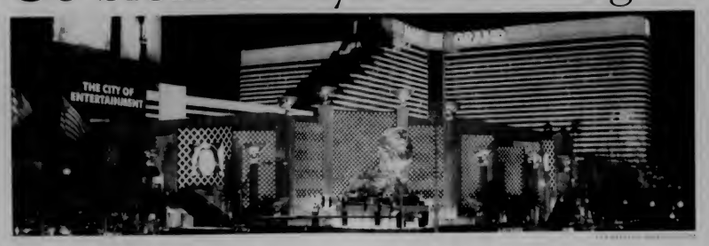
The former Governor of Massachusetts, Romney, has dedicated a portion of his official Web site to a list of campaign issues, one of which is called "energy." In this section, he stresses that America must become independent from foreign sources of oil. To quell our dependence on foreign oil, Romney suggests that we work on developing alternative energy methods such as nuclear power and coal gasification. In addition, he believes that we should find more oil domestically by drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska..

From observing these candidates' views on environmental issues, it is clear that our nation's energy consumption is going to be a hot topic in the Presidential Election of 2008. While the Democratic candidates put forth more detailed plans for solving the problem of oil dependency, the Republicans are also showing interest in addressing this issue.

Katie Maginnis can be reached at cemaginn@student.umass.edu.

Senator John McCain (above) and Senator Hilary Clinton (below) have the two most progressive environmental views in the 08' presidential race.

Go broke in style in Las Vegas



MGM Grand is one of the most popular hotel and casinos on the Las Vegas strip. The MGM arena has been hosted many famous sporting events in the past 25 years, the latest event held in the arena was the 2007 NBA All Star Game this past January.

VEGAS from page 6

entering Vegas, "Little Black Book" tackles 10 of the most common Vegas myths including "Getting Around: It's Easy to Get There from Here," "Hotels. You Just Need a Room, It Doesn't Matter Where" and "Comps: Everyone Gets 'Em."

With so many options, it is nearly impossible for a Vegas newcomer to go into planning without a solid game plan, which is why the meat of "Little Black Book" is part two, "Viva Las Vegas." With six chapters and 176 pages dedicated to accommodations, dining, gambling, daytime, nighttime and gentlemen's clubs, no aspect of a guy's weekend is left unexamined.

Each chapter gives numerous recommendations and ratings based on what you and your crew may be looking for. Every decision can become disastrous if not properly researched.

There are a variety of smaller things that most guys don't think about when they decide to head to Vegas.

Are you looking for an adrenaline rush of a weekend or do you want to experience old-school Vegas Rat Pack style? Do you plan on doing your fair share of sports betting? Why should a group of guys avoid the nightclubs and stick to the bars? How much time will you really spend in your hotel room? How important is sleep and the daytime hours? Are all lap dances created equal? Each of these questions and many more are tackled and discussed.

The mystique of Vegas lays with the Vegas stories that you are sure to have after returning home. "Little Black Book" even has advice to make your tale the best it can possible be, ensuring your jealous friends will be hanging on every word.

As with any book regarding a travel destination, there is the problem that it can become outdated. Since its release in 2005, some of the bars and gentlemen's clubs have closed or been renamed. Not to fear, however, as the inside Vegas help goes far beyond the pages of "Little Black Book."

Sporting both a Web site and a Myspace.com page, fans are kept up-to-date with changes to make the ultimate guy's weekend even more enjoyable.

The help doesn't stop there either, on the website deMontmollin left this post on the blog when he changes jobs to the Hooters Hotel, "Now that I am in charge of marketing, I am offering all 'Little Black Book' readers my power to get you good deals. If you are planning a trip, or already have a trip planned and want to stay at Hooters, I will do my very best to hook you up with good rates, comps, bikini contests, what ever. E-mail me at work deMontmollin@hootersly.com. Let me know how many rooms you are looking for, what dates and anything special you are trying to plan."

"Little Black Book" is written, as the title suggests, as a weekend guide for guys. Those looking to have a romantic getaway with a significant other or a family vacation should not pick up this book. In fact if you are a guy planning a Vegas weekend with the boys, whatever you do, do not let your girlfriend get a hold of it. Don't feel left out ladies as the "Las Vegas Little Red Book: A Girl's Guide to the Perfect Vegas Weekend," is in stores now.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

Nickelback performance thrills audience

NICKELBACK from page 6

flames, fireworks and sparklers, Nickelback impressed even the cynics in the audience. The ambience of their set, rough and dangerous, fit perfectly with the Breaking Benjamin and Three Days Grace lead-up.

At one point, all of Nickelback, except drummer Daniel Adair, left the stage. Adair's drum set was brought to the stage-front for one of the more spectacular drum solos I have ever seen. Starting slow, a lot of the audience sat in their seats to rest legs tired from standing for the past hour.

As he warmed up, Adair incorporated stick spins and louder bass thumps into his routine. Soon he was using both ends of his drum sticks to create a high intensity roll effect. With the audience getting impatient, Adair slowed the speed and started juggling his sticks while still playing with both ends. Slowly the tempo crept up past dizzying and into the upper stratosphere. The audience stood shouting and cheering, impressed with his percussive prowess. When the solo ended, the crowd erupted into applause.

After their last song, Nickelback left the stage to a massive amount of applause. The applause, though, did not go away. Instead, it crescendoed into an avalanche of sound, rivaling even Nickelback's deafening bass. The crowd demanded more music and more music they would get. Nickelback walked back onstage and blasted out two more numbers, ending with their new "Rockstar." The audience erupted at the final chord, cheering for more as Kroeger wished everyone a good night.

I was left in awe. Images of the last blast of fireworks danced around my seared retinas. Smoke hung 15 feet deep in the air. I was out of breath and impressed at Nickelback's tenacious intensity. I tried to shake the stuffy bells out of my ears and pushed my way outside to a crisp night.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."

- headaches
- neck pain
- back pain
- sports injuries
- auto injuries
- and more...

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor

Participating provider for HMO s
Student Insurance Blue Cross GIC
Car Insurance & most others

www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health

Most insurance accepted.

228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)

549-1500

COME HEAR THE GREAT MASTERPIECE

Ein Deutsches Requiem
by Johannes Brahms

ENSEMBLES: UMass Amherst Chamber Choir, Chorale & Orchestra, Springfield Symphony Chorus & Smith College Chorus

ALUMNI SOLOISTS: Andrew Garland, baritone & Kristi Kelly, soprano

DIRECTORS: F. Wayne Abercrombie, Lanfranco Marcelletti, Jr., Nikki Stone & Deanna Joseph

PREMIERE: Bester Hon Cm. '07, Laura Klock, horn

Thursday, March 15, 8 pm
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

Tickets: $10, $5 & $3 available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 413-545-2511
Sponsors- UMass Amherst: Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life, Arts Council & Alumni Association

UMass Amherst Department of Music & Dance and Lively Arts

Take on Break

1 sunglasses
2 great tanks
3 flip-flops

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

UMASS CLASS RINGS

On display and available for sale at the UMASS Bookstore in the Campus Center.

Come to the table for your chance to win a $50 American Express gift card!

jostens

Check us out online or call us at www.jostens.com • 1-800-854-7464

George Washington takes A-10 Championship

Colonials, Xavier to represent conference in NCAA Tourney

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The George Washington Colonials (23-8, 11-5) are making an unlikely invasion of California's state capitol tomorrow.

As the regular season Atlantic 10 co-champion, the Xavier Musketeers (24-8, 13-3 A-10), garnered most of the highlights the conference had on the national scene prior to the A-10 Tourney, it was the third-seeded Colonials who came away with the crown Saturday night at Boardwalk Hall in Atlantic City, N.J. with a 78-69 win over the Rhode Island Rams. The win marked the second straight year the regular season champion did not go on to win the A-10 Championship.

As a result, George Washington earned an automatic bid into the NCAA Tournament field of 65 for the second time in three seasons. The Colonials enter as the 11th seed in the East Regional and will square off with Vanderbilt (20-11, 10-6 SEC) of the Southeastern Conference, who earned an at-large bid, at ARCO Arena in Sacramento, Calif. Game-time is slated for 5 p.m. George Washington is 3-6 all-time in the opening round.

Senior guard Carl Elliot led GW with 17 points in the title game. Rhode Island's Will Daniels turned in a career-high 29 points in the losing effort in what was the Rams' first tournament final appearance since 1999.

George Washington brought out its defensive A-game throughout the A-10 Tourney, holding the usually prolific Rhode Island offense to just 41 percent shooting from the field and forced 21 turnovers in the contest. In fact, in their three conference postseason wins, the Colonials forced opponents to commit 62 turnovers. George Washington also held their first two postseason opponents, Saint Joseph's and Saint Louis, to a dismal 27 percent shooting from the field combined.

The Colonials have made nine NCAA Tournament appearances and are 4-9 all-time in postseason play. Their best run came in 1993 with a trip to the Sweet 16. In last year's tournament, the Colonials advanced to the second round before losing to the Duke Blue Devils.

Vanderbilt undoubtedly has the more impressive resume of the two teams, including a win over then-No. 1 Florida on back on Feb. 17, 83-70. In fact, the Commodores scored four wins over nationally ranked opponents during the course of the regular season. The Colonials out-of-conference schedule was highlighted by a win over the Atlantic Coast Conference's Virginia Tech Hokies, who are the fifth seed in the tournament's West region.

George Washington is riding an eight-game winning streak heading into Thursday's game. Prior to the winning streak, the Colonials had dropped four-straight contests to teams with a .500 record or better, including a 87-58 beat down on their home court vs. Xavier. The Commodores closed out the season with two straight losses to Arkansas.

Xavier, which despite being knocked out in the A-10 semifinals with a loss to Rhode Island last Friday, impressed the Selection Committee enough with its play in the regular season to earn one of the 34 coveted at large-bids.

The Musketeers enter as the ninth seed in the South Regional and will face off with the Mountain West Conference's regular-season champions, the Brigham Young Cougars (25-8, 13-3 MWC) at Rupp Arena in Lexington, Ky. on Thursday. Tip-off is slated for 9:40 p.m.

It would have been tough for the Selection Committee not to allow the Musketeers' entrance into the field of 65. The A-10 preseason favorites had out-of-conference wins over Illinois, Villanova, Kansas State and VCU. Xavier also won nine of their last 10 conference match-ups and outscored opponents in those nine wins by an average margin of 19.2 points.

Xavier is 11-17 all-time in postseason play has and has made a total of 17 tournament appearances, including seven trips to the Field of 65 in the last eight seasons. Its most success came in 2004 when it advanced to the Regional Finals or Elite 8 before being dispatched by the Duke Blue Devils. The Musketeers last NCAA Tournament appearance came last season when they entered as the 14th seed and lost in the opening round to the Gonzaga Bulldogs.

Both the Musketeers and the Cougars come in as two of the most efficient offensive attacks in the NCAA Tournament. Xavier shot 48 percent from the field this season, while the Cougars shot 49 percent. BYU and Xavier were also a threat from beyond the 3-point line. Xavier shot close to 40 percent from downtown and averaged eight 3-pointers a contest, while the Cougars shot 41 percent from beyond the arc.

The difference in the game may come at the charity stripe, as the Cougars shot just 65 percent from the free-throw line, compared to 74 percent for the Musketeers.

Xavier had four players average in double-figures in the regular season, including senior forward Justin Doellman, who averaged 13.4 points per game and shot nearly 50 percent from the field

George Washington senior Carl Elliot (left) scored a team-high 17 points in the Atlantic 10 championship, leading the Colonials to a 78-69 victory over the Rhode Island Rams in Atlantic City.

FINAL LEADER BOARD

The A-10 scoring title went to the Temple Owls' Dionte Christmas, who led the league in points per game (20.0). Christmas had just seven points in Temple's first round A-10 Tourney exit to St. Joe's, which was his second lowest point total in one game. Fellow teammate Mark Tyndale ranked second in scoring (19.4). St. Joe's Ahmad Nivins led the league in field goal percentage, shooting 62 percent for the season. Massachusetts Minutemen senior forward Rashuan Freemen was third in field goal percentage behind teammate Stephane Lasme and first in field goals made (202)...Lasme averaged five blocks a game, which was tops in the A-10 and was good for second in the entire nation. The senior forward also had a historic four-triple doubles to his credit...Charlotte's Leemire Goldwire converted on 90 percent of his free-throw shots, good for first place in the conference. Rhode Island guard Jimmy Baron shot close to 48 percent from beyond the arc and made 97 shots from beyond the arc, ranking first in both categories. Baron was 3-8 from the 3-point line in Rhode Island's loss to GW in the A-10 Championship... GW's Carl Elliot ranked first in assists, averaging just below five a contest.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu.

UMass advances to next round in NIT

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

halftime.

The final few minutes of the first half went in favor of the Minutemen, thanks to Lasme's unwillingness to be stopped under the basket. Lasme scored nine of his 13 first-half points in the final seven minutes.

Back-to-back dunks by UMass' big man with 2:30 left gave the Minutemen a 31-30 lead, which they held onto until five minutes into the second half.

When all the drama was over, the Minutemen looked like a team that isn't just trying to get respect in the NIT, they're trying to win the whole thing.

"We had hopes of going to the NCAA Tournament, but things happen," Lowe said. "We moved on, and now we're in the NIT and we're going to make a run at it."

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

Senior Stephane Lasme recorded a team-high 21 points against Alabama. He was one block shy of a double-double with his nine steps.

Junior Gary Forbes hugs the hero of the day, Chris Lowe. Forbes scored 11 points in the win to go with Lowe's 19.

Lowe outduels Riley with last-second shot their own rather than trying to put them in position to make a play.""

OVERTIME from page 10

It worked. The clock ran after the Jemison basket and the ball came in to Lowe, who dribbled up the court with time winding down.

Lowe kept the ball and dribbled to his right before pulling up for a jumpshot. He floated away from the basket and threw up a rainbow that nestled in the nylon with 1.6 seconds left.

Ford chimed in about the last play with a lighthearted jab at Lowe.

"That wouldn't have been exactly what I'd drawn up but it worked," he joked. "I thought he was going to take it to the hole. I didn't expect a fadeaway jumpshot from 5-foot-6."

Lowe had missed the back end of the two free throws earlier, and had he made the second one he could have saved his team the overtime frame. He felt good about his redemption.

"It felt really great," Lowe said. "I was upset that I missed the free throw. But I just made a shot and it helped us go toward another victory and go on to play again."

Lowe tied a career-high with 19 points last night and with his buzzer-beater, the Minutemen have life in the NIT.

It was a crazy night at the Mullins Center. An enthusiastic crowd showed up with a loud-and-proud student section, and UMass and Alabama provided some spirited basketball with the best game seen at the Mullins Center since the Minutemen's upset win over UConn in 2004.

An overtime game, two buzzer-beaters and a UMass win – looks like the fans got their money's worth.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

Minutemen make it interesting in Albany

M. LACROSSE from page 10

broke out with two goals in the span of a minute.

Connolly's ninth of the season, seventh in the past two games, came with just 2:10 remaining in regulation. His scores in the final minutes covered all areas of the cage. His first beat Albany goaltender Brett Queener inside the right post while the second hit the net on the left side.

However, it didn't take long for the Great Danes to quell the Minutemen's rally – 12 seconds to be precise – with Merrick Thomson notching the game-winner. It was the first of the afternoon for Thomson and beat Schneider directly off a faceoff won by Jordan Levine.

The Albany defense, along with the stellar play of Queener, held the Minutemen scoreless for more than a minute and a half of play to start the game. Queener finished the game with 12 saves (Schneider made eight). The netminder also added his first goal of the season.

When they did finally get on the scoreboard, all the momentum went to the Minutemen. It started with freshman Bobby Hayes's fourth goal of the season with 2:34 remaining in the half. UMass put heavy pressure on Queener from then until the end of the half.

Albany's first of three penalties came with 1:23 to go in the second. On the extra-man opportunity, Connolly pegged Queener in the helmet with a shot and then Rory Pedrick intercepted a clear, but the goalie made the save on a low shot.

Then the Great Danes had another man sent off, putting the Minutemen on the two-man advantage for seven seconds. UMass didn't capitalize with that advantage, but did score just as the first infraction expired. Garber scored his first of the afternoon with 20 seconds left in the half, giving the Minutemen some confidence entering the break.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Check the Daily Collegian Sports blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of UMass sports opponents much of a struggle.

UM struggles at lowly Harvard

TENNIS from page 10

Harvard's Lena Litvak made quick work of Spiess at the top singles spot, 6-2, 6-0. Spiess, the reigning A-10 Player of the Week, was looking for her 62nd singles victory at UMass, but still remains two wins short of tying Jackie Braunstein's singles record at the school.

Pozar had no easy task at the second singles position. She was up against the No. 48 singles player in the country, Beier Ko. Pozar put up a valiant effort against Harvard's highest ranked player, but ultimately ended up losing in straight sets, 6-3, 6-2.

The Minutewomen had one of the top rookies in the Atlantic 10 at the No. 3, but de Jong fell victim to the Crimson's more experienced senior captain, Mukundan, 6-2, 6-2.

Stanimirovic, who has been struggling lately, suffered the same fate as the rest of her singles teammates. She was swept in straight sets by Elizabeth Brook, and Dixon is strongly considering removing her from the singles lineup.

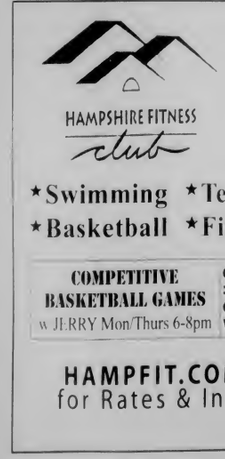
Seventeen-year-old freshman Maude Lecluyse posted the most inspirational singles performance at the No. 5. Harvard senior Forgie narrowly escaped with a score of 6-4, 7-5.

The last singles match of the frustrating Minutewomen's afternoon involved Murillo and Harvard's Vilsa Curto. Murillo is just beginning to see game action and ended up losing, 6-2, 6-4.

The Minutewomen will try to put consecutive losses behind them and reverse their fortunes down south next week. In addition to playing the 10-1 Lynn Fighting Knights in Boca Raton, Fla. on Monday, they will face the Florida Atlantic Owls on Tuesday in the same city. The Owls own a 5-4 record on the season.

Coach Dixon is eager to see how the team performs on this trip. Her team has yet to play outdoors.

Michael Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu



HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10PM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN

★Swimming ★Tennis
★Basketball ★Fitness

COMPETITIVE BASKETBALL GAMES w/ JERRY Mon/Thurs 6-8pm
OVER 30 FREE CLASSES WEEKLY

HAMPFIT.COM for Rates & Info

Join Now
Spring Special
$149/ 10 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

BOCCHIOS on the go
Specials of the Week
Buy 2 Calzones GET 1 FREE
5 FREE WINGS With Purchase of any Large Pizza
(413) 256-4110 Call Now!
Sun-Wed. Open 'til 1am
Thur. Open 'til 2am
Fri-Sat. Open 'til 3am

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		6						1
1				9	5		6
		3	2			8	4
6					7			4
		5				3
3				6				7
		9		2			7	4
	2				8	5		9
4							8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Legendary chalice
6 Hyped up
10 Skin woe
14 Main artery
15 '20s art style
16 Buddy
17 Swift-footed
18 Table scraps
19 Energy food, for short
20 Olympic symbol
21 Chick's call
22 Scottish Gaelic
23 Mach+ jet
25 Strongly disposed
27 Keep up
32 Parking area
33 Fairy-tale baddie
34 Indigent
36 Fables
40 Tie
41 Villain's expression
43 Portend
44 Became less intense
46 Blackthorn
47 Theater section
48 Bird's beak
50 Male astronauts
52 Curl up closely
56 Lilly or Wallach
57 Rising ground
58 Merit
60 Active starter?
65 Sicilian volcano
66 Actor Morales
67 Do domestic duty
68 Low fat
69 Laura or Bruce
70 Accepted practice
71 Mr. Flintstone
72 Smeltery waste
73 Marketing figure

DOWN
1 Angler's hook
2 Dice toss
3 Field of study
4 News piece
5 Most recent
6 Orphan placements
7 Richard of "Chicago"
8 Two quartets together
9 Spiritual music
10 Good enough
11 Map
12 RN part
13 Fix firmly
24 Dupes
26 Incisive comment
27 Pie a la
28 Taj Mahal site
29 Pension $$
30 Home of the Patriots
31 Christmas carols
35 Starting business again
37 Weaver's machine
38 Lip
39 Noticed
42 Not imaginary
45 Make holes
49 Isn't colorfast
51 Three-ring event
52 Ledge
53 Saltpeter
54 Bones in forearms
55 Painter's tripod
59 ___ divis
61 Lohengrin's love
62 Freshwater duck
63 Latest thing
64 Washington bills

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY - Spancil Hill
SATURDAY - St. Patty's Day! (Live Irish Music)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMP & All credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Well diamonds they fade..."

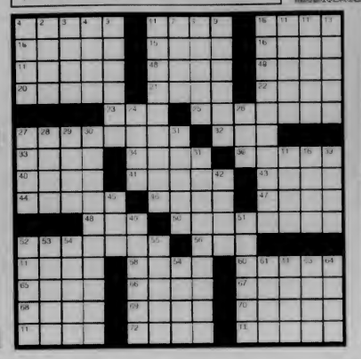
-Citizen Cope

PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE
OKAY, ENOUGH! YOU'VE BEEN WALKING AROUND FOR EIGHT DAYS WITH ALL THESE DOGS. I ASK A SIMPLE QUESTION— WHY— AND YOU KEEP NOT ANSWERING.
AND IT'S TOTALLY DRIVING YOU MAD, WHICH IS HILARIOUS.
I KNOW! SO STOP IT! JUST TELL ME WHAT'S GOING ON!
ALL RIGHT, I'LL TELL YOU. BUT FIRST, YOU NEED TO GO THIRTY DEGREES NORTH AND RETRIEVE THE JEWEL KEY FROM THE ORC. YOU CAN BARTER WITH HIM USING THESE SPECIAL STONES.
THESE ARE PUPPY TRAINING BITES, AND I HATE YOU RIGHT NOW.

TWO DUDES BY AARON WARNER
DUDE, YOUR GIRLFRIEND IS A REAL FIND!
THANKS, DUDE!
SHE REALLY KNOWS HOW TO IMPRESS A GUY.
GUESS HOW MANY GRAPES I STUFFED UP MY NOSE LAST NIGHT AT DAVE'S.

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE BY AARON WARNER
DID YOU SEE RYAN AT THE WEDDING?
OH, MY GOSH! YOU WON'T BELIEVE IT! IT WAS AWESOME.
DID YOU GUYS LIKE MAKE-OUT? ARE YOU BACK TOGETHER?
NAH!
SORRY, IS THAT TOO PERSONAL?
NO, JUST SLOW DOWN SO I CAN GIVE YOU THE DETAILS.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK
I've created a machine that measures beauty
That's funny! It's ugly
How can this ugly machine measure beauty



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Stand up straight, you've got the posture of a walrus.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Sponge paint all over your dorm room. The maintenance guys will love the new decor.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Why can't you just admit to yourself that Savage Garden is your favorite band?

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Spring has sprung and all around you various animals will be mating quite vigorously.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Draw a self portrait and base your self image on it. Hopefully you're a good artist.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If you enjoy looking like you slept in a wind tunnel, keep slicking your hair back.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your smile shines more brightly than King Triton's trident.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Polka music is the primary absence in your life, your lack of a soul is secondary.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
The term Hump Day refers to the day itself, not what you are supposed to do all day.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Forget about fair trade coffee. Life isn't fair and neither are caffeinated beverages.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Try to name all of the freckles on the person next to you. Moles included.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The point of sunglasses is merely to block sunlight, not shield you from society.

Visit The Amherst Brewing Company
mount snow
Promo Wednesday Nights
Win Lift Passes, Equipment & Merchandise.
Join This ABC Bartender at... mount snow
Get more info about our menu and calendar events at amherstbrewing.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Learn, Lead and Succeed Be and do something bigger than yourself. Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Umass Amherst Summer 2007 Offering new online GenEds and more. Plan now by visiting our summer sneak preview website: www.UMassUlearn.net

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AUTO FOR SALE

1999 Honda Civic 5-speed $4600. Original owner, 113,000 miles, great condition, 38 mpg. 587-0426

2001 Honda Civic $6999 5 speed, 64,000 miles, 413-222-8774

EMPLOYMENT

Direct Sales – Eyewear Specialists Sell an exclusive line of high quality sunglasses and reading glasses direct to consumer. Make 40% on each sale. Build a sales team and make additional commissions and bonuses. Small investment for samples required, fully refundable at any time. Call John at 1-800-322-6748

EMPLOYMENT

EARN UP TO $10.45 PER HOUR on MARCH 27 and/or MAY 1 The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) needs Amherst registered voters to staff elections between the hours of 6AM and 8PM. No experience is necessary. Training will be provided. If you are not registered to vote anywhere, you may register to vote in Amherst to be eligible to work at the polls. For more information please email ccarvalo@stuaf.umass.edu or slittlecrowrussell@stuaf.umass.edu or call 545-0355.

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positons available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Looking for a great summer job? Become an Academic Peer Advisor for the fall 2007 incoming students with Undergraduate Advising. Application deadline is April 4th. For more information or to print an application visit our website at www.umass.edu/advising/

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street. Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

GET TESTED – Know your status before spring break FREE HIV RAPID TESTING March 14th & 15th UMass Campus Center 9am – 3pm Questions: Call Bob at 413-747-5144 www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons Apartment June-August 15th. $2050/month includes everything. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

www.daily collegian .com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lowe tide

Guard Chris Lowe hit the game-winning shot in overtime to give UMass the 89-87 victory over the Alabama Crimson Tide. He set a career-high with 19 points, adding seven rebounds, six assists, and five steals in a memorable game for the sophomore.

Chris Lowe wins it in OT, UMass survives buzzer-beater

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe hit his signature floater in the lane with 1.6 seconds remaining in overtime to give the Massachusetts men's basketball team an 89-87 win over Alabama in the first round of the NIT last night at the Mullins Center.

Alabama's Demetrius Jemison tied the game at 87 with just under 10 seconds left in overtime. UMass didn't call a timeout, and Lowe drove the ball to the net and pulled up for a fadeaway floater that dropped through basket.

"I just saw that there were nine seconds on the clock, so I just said, 'I'm going to just take this shot,'" Lowe said after the win.

"That wouldn't have been exactly what I had drawn up," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "But it worked."

Lowe tied his career high of 19 points, but his clutch shot to end Tuesday night's game made the difference.

"UMass made the plays when they needed to make them," ALA coach Mark Gottfried said. "We just came up one play short."

The Minutemen travel to West Virginia to face the No. 1 seeded Mountaineers tomorrow night at 9 p.m. in the second round of the tournament.

It looked as though UMass had the game won in the final seconds of the second half, but Alabama guard Mykal Riley hit a deep 3-pointer at the buzzer to send the game into overtime tied at 83.

"That was just a slugfest," Ford said. "A lot of teams would wilt after seeing a 3-pointer go in like that at home. We thought we had the game, and a lot of teams would just give up, but we learned from our last outing versus Saint Louis."

The Billikens knocked the Minutemen out of the Atlantic 10 Tournament on Thursday in overtime, taking advantage of UMass' mysterious illness and eliminating its hopes at an NCAA Tournament bid.

"When we're healthy, we're not bad," Ford said. "It feels good to be healthy. It wasn't the prettiest game, but we made big defensive plays when we needed it, and we made big offensive plays when we needed it."

Alabama took its largest lead of the game when point guard Brandon Hollinger made a tip-in with 11:37 remaining in the second half. UMass battled back to tie it at 65 with eight minutes left after Lowe made a 3-pointer and another floater in consecutive possessions.

"We don't go into games planning to have him score 19 points," Ford said on Lowe's performance. "He wasn't looking to score. We get in trouble when Chris is looking to score. Every shot he took tonight was a good shot, it was an open shot."

UMass ended the first half with plenty of momentum, but it was Alabama's Justin Tubbs that got the last laugh. Tubbs answered a Lasme block by knocking down a 3-pointer at the buzzer, cutting UMass' lead down to 41-40 at

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Late rally falls short against Great Danes

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team receives partial credit for its second test of the season against No. 2 Albany the first came in 2007's opening weekend against Hofstra.

UMass lost yesterday, 10-9 in overtime, after fighting back from a 7-0 deficit in the first half. The Great Danes (4-0) were dominant in the first period of play at John Fallon Field, winning five of six faceoffs in the first quarter and outshooting the visitors 11-5.

The Minutemen (1-3) have now dropped games to the Great Danes in four consecutive seasons. UMass returns home to Garber Field this weekend in a matchup against Brown. The game rounds out the Mass Attack's annual swing through the Ivy League.

A run of five straight goals in the third and fourth quarters brought the Minutemen within one goal at 8-7 that included three straight goals by sophomore attack Tim Balise. He scored UMass' fourth, fifth and sixth goals, recording one of two Minuteman hat tricks on the afternoon the other belonged to senior captain Brett Garber.

UMass enjoyed that offensive onslaught without the help of faceoffs in the third quarter. It lost four of five in the third after dominating that category just before halftime (the Minutemen went 4-of-5 in the second quarter).

Frank Resetarits capped his four-goal performance with 9:53 left in the game to pad Albany's lead, 9-7. He now has 14 goals on the young season in just four games played.

But the Minutemen refused to let the contest slip away and kept it tied for the next seven minutes. That's when sophomore attack Jim Connolly continued his hot scoring streak. Albany held him scoreless on the afternoon to that point, but

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

Senior Brett Garber registered one of two hat tricks for the Minutemen in the loss against Albany. Sophomore Tim Balise notched the other.

Plenty of drama inside Mullins Center

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You don't see two buzzer-beaters in the same game very often.

But last night, in the first-round NIT game between the Massachusetts men's basketball team and the Alabama Crimson Tide, it happened.

The Minutemen won, 89-87, but not before the two teams gave the fans some near heart attacks.

Down 83-80, Alabama called timeout after sophomore guard Chris Lowe missed the back end of a one-and-one, and the Crimson Tide had 4.5 seconds to inbound the ball and make a 3-pointer to send the game to overtime.

And that's exactly what they did.

The ball was inbounded to sophomore guard Brandon Hollinger on the run, and he sprinted up the left sideline with the dribble. At about the 3-point line, he stopped and used his body to screen for Mykal Riley, who took the handoff from Hollinger and buried a three from the left wing to tie it at 83.

You could hear a pin drop in the Mullins Center.

"We had to have a three," Alabama coach Mark Gottfried said. "We wanted dribble penetration and the handoff and I think we executed it perfectly. We got a three-point shot with our best 3-point shooter."

UMass didn't fold, however.

"A lot of teams would wilt after seeing a three go in like that at home," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "We thought we had the game and a lot of teams would just give up after seeing a three go down like that.

"But I think our guys learned from our last outing against Saint Louis. We just made big plays."

The Minutemen held an 87-85 edge over the Crimson Tide and with 24 seconds left in the overtime period, Gottfriend called a timeout to set up a play. Alabama's Demetrius Jemison put in the tying bucket after the timeout with a layup on the interior, and nine seconds remained on the game clock.

Ford considered calling a timeout but chose otherwise thanks to a quick history lesson.

"There have been a lot of situational things over the last two games," Ford said. "And every time I called a timeout we've gotten nothing out of the timeout. Some of the coaches were saying, 'Call timeout,' but in my mind I was saying, 'We have not scored out of the timeout, let's just play. Let's try something a little bit different here and let our guys make plays on

See OVERTIME on page 8

Junior Gary Forbes celebrates after Lowe's game-winner. Coach Travis Ford tried something new at the end of the game, passing on a chance to call a timeout and letting his players respond on the fly.

Crimson wins first of season against UM

BY MIKE CONNORS
CONTRIBUTING CORRESPONDENT

The Harvard women's tennis team (1-7) out-dueled the Massachusetts tennis team 7-0 in Cambridge on Tuesday afternoon.

The Minutewomen (7-5, 1-0 Atlantic 10) will look to rebound Monday against Lynn University.

UMass coach Judy Dixon planned to make changes for the match, and she began by altering the doubles lineup.

Rather than Maude Lecluyse and Ellen de Jong playing at the top spot, it was Lecluyse and Masha Pozar. They were defeated by Harvard's duo of Beier Ko and Lena Litvak, 8-4.

The No. 2 doubles team of Jong and Dasa Stanimirovic faired no better, losing 8-3 to the Crimson's Preethi Mukundan and Elizabeth Brook. They were replacing Michele Spiess and Pozar at the second spot.

These two matches ensured UMass would lose the doubles point, but its lone bright spot of the day came at the third doubles slot from Spiess and sophomore Laura Murillo. Harvard's duo of Julia Forgie and Vilsa Curto lost to the Minutewomen's No. 3 pair, 8-2.

Each of the singles matches of the day went to Harvard. With the exception of Maude Lecluyse at the fifth spot, none of the other Minutewomen gave their

See TENNIS on page 8

Sophomore Laura Murillo teamed with Senior Michele Spiess to earn the only doubles victory for UMass yesterday against the Crimson.

UMASS TRAVELS TO WEST VIRGINIA PAGE 10

GARY GULMAN : LAST COMIC STANDING PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 50 LO: 30 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 2007

UMass dorms burglarized

Suspects may have falsely solicited money for cancer fund

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two suspects who allegedly broke into three University of Massachusetts dormitories and stole thousands of dollars worth of electronics Tuesday, reportedly have been falsely soliciting funds for a cancer foundation, according to the UMass Police Department.

Three parties reported to police Tuesday that someone had entered their dormitory rooms in the Central and Orchard Hill Residential Areas and stole electronics. The alleged larcenies occurred at the Brooks, Baker and Webster Residence Halls.

The two suspects began their alleged stealing spree in Brooks Hall and worked their way to Webster Hall, according to police. A camera in Brooks Hall captured photos of the suspects entering the dormitory.

Around 4:30 p.m. Tuesday, the UMPD reported these suspects may have been soliciting cash funds for The Avon Breast Cancer Foundation – an organization that does not solicit cash, according to police.

In one of the images posted by the UMPD, one of the suspects is wearing a white tee shirt with the word "AVON" clearly visible on the front side of the shirt.

In a public safety alert, the UMPD urged anyone approached by a person(s) "soliciting cash donations for [The Avon Breast Cancer Foundation] or any other agency – please contact UMPD immediately."

By posting the photos online, UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald said he hopes people will come forward with information.

"We're fairly confident that

See THEFT on page 3

The images above are of two men who allegedly stole electronics from UMass dorm rooms. They were posted on the UMPD Web site in an effort to obtain information about Tuesday's break-in.

SGA discusses meal plans, upcoming Amherst elections

BY AMBER VAILLANCOURT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Elections were in the air last night at the Student Government Association's 1,520th regular meeting. With 24 Senators present, discussion moved from the upcoming SGA elections and town of Amherst elections, to the recent vote by the Board of Trustees to hike the tuition price for University of Massachusetts students.

Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum reported to the Student Senate that today, the UMass Board of Trustees voted to increase the tuition of UMass. Tuition and mandatory fees will now be increased by 3.4 percent.

Leiblum brought up the fact that two of the Trustees on the Board voted against the increase. Leiblum passed around the SGA slips of paper that listed the e-mail addresses of the two trustees who voted against the increase, Trustees Jennifer Braceras and Larry Boyle. Leiblum urged Senators to send 'thank you' e-mails to those trustees for voting with the students.

Leiblum then relayed to the SGA that the Board of Trustees consistently explains that the reason for the student charges is "the steady de-investment of public funding in the University."

However, Leiblum explained that the Board of Trustees did pass Resolution 107-021, in which "the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees encourages the University system at large to make all suitable allowances for broad-based participation in civic engagement, including but not limited to such activities and events as: lobby day for public higher education advocacy..."

The resolution passed was the first motion in years brought by a trustee to the board from the Amherst campus in "literally years," Leiblum stated. Leiblum also added that PHENOM (Public Higher Education Network Of Massachusetts) is sponsoring a Lobby Day which will take place in Boston on April 25.

President Elvis Mendez also reminded the SGA that Amherst town elections will take place on March 27 and that a voting station will be set up in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union available for students to use.

The upcoming town election is concerning the Amherst School Committee and the Select Board. "There are 18,000 students on campus, and if we decided to support a candidate, vote a certain way, we could certainly influence town politics," Mendez said.

President Mendez introduced Eduardo Suarez, a community organizer who helped to organize the successful immigration rally which took place in downtown Amherst last spring, as well as Robie Hubley, who currently serves on Amherst's Select Board and is seeking re-election.

Mendez said that this was the first time in his SGA experience that a town member showed up to the SGA meetings or had "showed any interest or had seen students as citizens of this community, not

See SGA on page 3

Robie Hubley, who currently serves on Amherst's Select Board and is seeking re-election, spoke at last night's SGA meeting.

Space historian speaks in lecture series

Dr. Robert D. Launius, chairman of the Division of Space History at the Smithsonian's National Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C.

BY JAEGUN LEE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts History department hosted this year's Five College History Lecture yesterday at Memorial Hall.

Dr. Roger D. Launius, chairman of the Division of Space History at the Smithsonian Institute's National Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C. spoke to a crowd of students and faculty members from UMass and the other five Colleges.

In his speech, entitled "American Memory and the Challenges of Presenting the Past to a Diverse Public," Launius addressed a number of issues contemporary historians face in presenting history to the American public.

He explained that human memories are mostly constructed by personal experience of an individual and those whom they associate with.

"Most Americans," he said, "don't necessarily have a great deal of connections to great historical events.

"Mostly what they have is connections to personal things at the local level, at the family level, the inner relationships which intersect with national themes," he explained.

He pushed on the issue by stating that such people cannot differentiate between wars, such as the Civil War, the American Revolution and the Crusades.

"At some level, like politics," he argued, "history is local, too."

He elaborated on how the construction of memories and the creation of national identities act as barriers for contemporary historians to deliver alternative views to the official history.

Launius said that with such restrictions applied, museums are not likely to present exhibitions

See SPACE on page 3

UMass players and fans celebrate after sophomore point guard Chris Lowe hit the game-winning shot in Tuesday night's 89-87 overtime win over Alabama. The Minutemen travel to West Virginia to face the Mountaineers this evening at 9 p.m. in the second round of the NIT.

Bracketing madness sweeps UM campus

BY CHRIS HYNES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the most part, March indicates the first warm days of spring, the last fresh snow of ski season and the green beer of St. Patrick's Day.

A growing number of students are beginning to realize the true madness of March: filling out a bracket for the NCAA men's basketball tournament.

The tournament, better known as "March Madness," or the "Big Dance," is composed of 65 teams (including the two teams that compete in the play-in game) seeded one through 16 and split into four regionals across the nation. The opportunity to predict the winners of all 63 games piques the interest of thousands – not strictly sports fans.

The days of prospective winners tediously filling out brackets by hand have gone by the wayside. Now popular Web sites like Yahoo, CBS Sportsline, and ESPN allow users to create their own pools, inviting friends and co-workers via e-mail who then click their favorite teams and Cinderella stories all the way to the Final Four if they please.

Yet another floodgate has been opened to expose a larger spectrum of students with the inclusion of March Madness pools on the college networking site Facebook.com. In addition to the multitude of personal groups, Facebook is also running a site-wide contest where the winning bracket is worth $25,000.

Everyone has their own methods for predicting the future. Some fans fill their entire bracket after only one look through.

"I try to know as much about the field as I can before the tournament then just go and fill out the entire thing in five minutes. Avoid second guessing myself at all," UMass student Will Fogerty said.

Others decide to do some background work.

"I go through the first round putting down the obvious games first with no second guessing the No. 1 seeds and the No. 2 seeds, the no-brainers," explained sophomore Mike Porciello. "For the games with more uncertainty I'll usually go online to see how certain teams play. I always make sure to put in some upsets too. It's mainly all about the gut-instincts."

"I try to listen to who other

See BRACKETS on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 101

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherd Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Seaign
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellisear
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Penz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sidney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAWL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING, RATES, AND INFORMATION, CALL (413)545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 AM AND 3:30 PM.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Young adults more likely to battle eating disorders

By Kaci Hasson
Wartburg Trumpet (Wartburg College)

WAVERLY, Iowa — The frequent trips to the bathroom, locking the door and turning up the radio. The skipped dinners. The excessive workouts.

Mandy Kakac saw all these signs, which sparked concern that her friend was in trouble. It wasn't until college that her friend was diagnosed with anorexia nervosa, an eating disorder that affects one in every five women.

Ninety percent of those suffering with an eating disorder are women between the ages of 12 and 25, Kakac's friend began her battle at a young age, joining the estimated 11 percent of high school students diagnosed with an eating disorder.

Sophomores Cory Miner and Stacy Berns believe eating disorders are most common in college freshmen.

"I think first year students suffer from (eating disorders) the most," Berns said. "I think it's most common in girls, too, because girls care more about their appearance."

"They're scared of the 'Freshman 15,'" Miner said. He adds that society has influences on self-image. "Overweight girls are looked down upon more than overweight guys, I think," he said.

According to a recent study, over half of females between the ages of 18-25 would prefer to be run over by a truck than be fat, and two-thirds surveyed would rather be mean or stupid.

Stephanie Newsom, director of counseling services at Wartburg College, acknowledges that statistics are apt to be inaccurate

"It's hard because there are so many more on campus than we know about," she said. "It's such a private disorder, surrounded by lies and secrets."

Newsom estimates that there are about 20 cases per year, with only about one male case per year.

"The male is usually an athlete, like a distance runner or wrestler, where cutting weight is part of the sport."

A study conducted by Cornell University found that 40 percent of male football players surveyed engaged in some sort of disordered eating behavior.

An increasing number of homosexual males are suffering from eating disorders for reasons such as body image, self-esteem and coping mechanisms.

Kakac and Newsom agree with Miner and Berns that women outnumber men with eating disorders.

Ninety percent of those suffering from an eating disorder are women between the ages of 12 and 25.

"It's definitely more common in women because there's more pressure to look a certain way," Kakac said. "The most common eating disorder in guys is probably bulimia."

"I think it has to do with the media and messages we get about what celebrities are doing," she said. "I think some gender stereotypes get engraved in us from the time we're little girls."

The average woman is 5-foot-4 and weighs 140 pounds, but the average model is 5-foot-11 and weighs 117 pounds. Most fashion models are thinner than 98 percent of American women.

The Wartburg counseling services is planning numerous events during National Eating Disorder Awareness Week. An eating disorder questionnaire will be available online and in the counseling center all week from 8 to 4:30 p.m.

The screening is scored and interpreted by counselors immediately, diagnosing symptoms and suggesting full counseling sessions if needed.

A life-size Barbie will be hung from the Student Center balcony to highlight her unrealistic proportions. If brought to life, Barbie would be over 7 feet tall with size 3 feet.

Barbie isn't the only model leading females to eating disorders. Newsom thinks society has created an aggressive dating field

"We know that women between the ages 18 and 22 in college are more susceptible than women [of the same ages] not in college," she said. "I think it's due to the competitiveness of dating and perfectionism."

Binge-eating is an often unrecognized eating disorder.

"I think we think it's about self-control," Newsom said. "We're not very forgiving of overweight people, and we don't recognize that they have the same emotional issues as anorexics and bulimics."

Kakac's friend has since been hospitalized and undergone help for the disorder. Newsom suggests approaching someone suspected of having an eating disorder with specific examples of suspicious behavior. Be armed with resources, such as brochures, the name of a counselor or informative Web sites like www.something-fishy.org.

"Be prepared to be up against anger and denial. Be OK with that, because it's not you. They're just not ready to receive help at that time," Newsom said.

"Even more students may not have full-blown eating disorders, but have disordered eating that may lead to something else," she warns. The average length of recovery is five to seven years.

"A lot of clients ready to make the change will find that once they finally let someone know, it makes the road to recovery easier."

Amherst Police log

13-year-old calls police on pregnant mother

Tuesday
March 13

11:11 a.m.

A larceny was reported by a female living on Hobart Lane. The party reported having $180 in cash and all credit/debit cards taken out of her purse.

1:53 p.m.

The owner of a 1999 Subaru Legacy reported a hit and run on Mattoon Street. The owner noticed the left front fender was broken; there are no suspects.

4:10 p.m.

A hit and run occurred on East Pleasant Street. The owner of a 2000 Toyota 4Runner reported a large dent in the back driver's side fender and called the police. The bumper and the tail light of the 4Runner were also damaged.

5:27 p.m.

A 20-year-old male was hit while jogging on Lincoln Avenue by a female operating a 1999 Honda Accord. The driver of the vehicle claimed that the jogger had suddenly run into the street without looking. The jogger was down and had difficulty breathing and may have been seizing on location. Medical assistance was called.

5:42 p.m.

Jennifer Billieux, 32, of Amherst was summoned and later arrested for possession of a class D substance. Billieux's 13-year-old son called police reporting that he had found marijuana in his mother's possession and was worried that it would affect his mother's pregnancy. The son called the police to get rid of the contraband and Billieux was later arrested.

9:46 p.m.

A student living on Main Street forged a family member's signature to secure $37,000 of student loans. The family noticed and reported the fraud to police.

Wednesday
March 14

1:05 a.m.

Kevin Patrick Broderick, 22, of Belchertown was arrested for falling to stop for police. Broderick was pulled over on Triangle Street for not having his headlights turned on. As the police officer approached his car, Broderick accelerated and sped off, later parking his car on Kellogg Street and turning off the lights in his Oldsmobile Cutlas. Broderick then decided to exit the vehicle and run on foot; he was eventually caught by police and arrested.

Compiled by Holly Seabury

Two bodies found at Lynn fire scene

LYNN, Mass. — The bodies of a man and a woman were found Wednesday at the scene of an explosion and fire in a commercial building, the district attorney said.

Essex District Attorney Jonathan Blodgett said the deaths appear to be a "domestic violence situation by use of an incendiary device."

He said investigators were working to identify the dead and their relationship and to determine if the two died before or as a result of the fire. He said investigators were trying to determine if anyone else was injured.

He said investigators also were checking a car near the building that may have been booby trapped.

"This is a domestic violence situation — once again we have an ugly specter of domestic violence here in Massachusetts," Blodgett said.

—Associated Press

Porn interrupts news broadcast

Viewers of a news show broadcast on a Phoenix-area cable television station received a lot more than news: hard-core pornography started streaming into their living rooms, replacing a health show featuring former NBC News anchor Tom Brokaw.

The incident on KPPX-TV Monday night prompted a flood of calls to local news media outlets and cable provider Cox Communications, including one from Chandler resident Brenda Schodt, who said she was shocked to look up and see graphic sex acts on her television screen.

"Maybe five or 10 minutes into the show there was no volume," Schodt said. "I thought it was the TV, but when I looked up, there were these images."

Cox spokeswoman Andrea Katsenes said that the unexpected clips were a "source issue" with the broadcaster.

ION Television, which operates KPPX, called the problem "an act of human sabotage" at its station.

—Associated Press

Study suggests women value clothes more than sex

By Janice McDuffee
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — A closet filled with a brand new wardrobe, or spending over a year without sex. Would the average woman actually choose fashion over a man?

According to a pre-Valentine poll taken by consumer products company Unilever, the average woman would prefer to abstain from sex for up to 15 months in exchange for a closet full of new clothes. Two percent of those women were willing to abstain for three years.

The poll was taken by 1,000 women in 10 U.S. cities, was unscientific and conducted via the Internet. However, the response to the results was covered by companies from Yahoo! to the New York Post with headlines revealing the news: Women prefer clothes over sex.

While there may have been a more accurate way to conduct this study, the media embraced these results as the truth, and others remain unsurprised by the results.

"A woman's wardrobe reflects her personality, and they see it as a big part of themselves," said Joey Sula, freshman in LAS.

Sula also said that he believes the results would be very different if the survey questioned 1,000 men, because they would definitely choose sex over clothes.

On the other hand, more than half of the women, or 61 percent, responded that they would rather go without sex for a month than lose their favorite piece of clothing.

Carson Kressley, fashion designer and TV personality from the reality show Queer Eye for the Straight Guy, released a statement with the poll results, which said "some people say clothes make the man, but the right clothes can even replace him."

While only 54 percent of these women believe in love at first sight when it comes to a man, 70 percent believe they can instantly fall in love with an article of clothing. Also, almost half of the women, or 48 percent, responded that their clothing made them feel more confident than their partner.

Pat Gill, interim director of media studies and associate professor in gender studies, understood the results to have several meanings.

"This is an extraordinary testimony to the idea that feeling sexy is very different than having sex," Gill said. "Or that even sexiness, and the sexual act can be totally unrelated."

Reshmi Mukherjee, teaching assistant in gender and women studies and graduate student in comparative and world literature, also agrees that the pressure of making a good appearance at work could be the determining factor to many of these women's responses.

"It would be really stupid to say, 'oh look women don't like sex.' Clothes are important for not just women, but also men [at work]," Mukherjee said. "It's not so much a personal choice, it's a political, economic choice."

Mukherjee, like Gill, believes that whether or not these women were in relationships or had regular sexual partners is a major factor in their responses. However, she said she also thinks there are several other contributing elements.

"It depends on where you are coming from as in what social background, your economic background, your political background," she said.

Regardless of these attributes, Mukherjee said that a very important reason some women may prefer clothes to sex lies in how clothes can help define one's identity.

"How many of us actually define ourselves in terms of our sexual preference?" Mukherjee said.

There are numerous reasons as to why these women responded with a preference to clothes over sex. Whether women find that their clothes boost their confidence and therefore make the idea of feeling sexy more appealing than sex itself, or that they simply aren't satisfied, remains unknown. Gill acknowledges all of these reasons and is not surprised that women would choose clothes over sex.

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
TA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD
Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"
WANTED: HIP YOUNG PROMOTERS/HOSTS • Earn $$$$
Calling all DJ's
Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us
18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass
10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

Give your brain a $10 coffee break.
Get a $10 coffeehouse gift card when you have your student taxes prepared at H&R Block.
Have H&R Block prepare your 1040 EZ and state tax returns, and get a $10 coffeehouse gift card. All for just $49 with valid college student ID
Offer valid 1/15/07–3/30/07 at this location only:
Campus Plaza, 458-10 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
413-256-2100
hrblock.com
H&R BLOCK
You got people

Speaker addresses conspiracy theories, American values which would promote diversity and historically important speculations.

SPACE from page 1

"The passing of the cultural debates early in the first part of the 21st century has made it exceptionally difficult to present the past in all complexity in a national museum, such as the one that I am in, to the broad diverse public that it serves," he said.

Launius listed 10 exhibitions not likely to be seen in America. Among them were musicians dying in plane crashes, speculation on the moon landing conspiracy and the existence of extraterrestrial life.

Such issues, according to Launius, challenge authoritative and prominent beliefs and values among the American public and are likely to be shut down eventually.

Launius served as chief historian of NASA between 1990 and 2002, has been a guest commentator on major television networks and is frequently consulted by the media for his insights on space issues.

He has also served as a consultant to the Columbia Accident Investigation Board in 2003 and presented the Harmon Memorial Lecture in Military History at the United States Air Force Academy in 2006.

He has written or edited over 20 books on aerospace and on a variety of historical topics, including American politics during the Mexican-American War, and the relationship of baseball to American culture.

The annual Five College History Lecture series is funded by the Five Colleges Incorporated.

Jaegun Lee can be reached at jaegun@student.umass.edu.

Students discuss strategies for March Madness bracket picks people think are the best, but mine is almost just by chance," Anna Dynarski said. "I don't know much about the tournament but I got pretty far last year, so I tried to remember those teams and pick them again. I very once in a while I'll throw in one of those schools with the weird names, like Oral Roberts."

BRACKETS from page 1

"I pick my winner of the whole tournament first," said Andrew King. "After that, I'll take a look at ESPN to see what the experts have to say, but I don't really have a whole lot of rhyme or reason."

A lot of students treat March Madness as their only exposure to college basketball all year.

"Intuition is the key for me. I don't really look up any information at all," admitted sophomore novice Andy Reed. "If I recognize any of the team names, or if I randomly heard something about a team that day, I'll usually have them winning a couple of games."

Bracketologists occasionally play favorites as well. Kelvin Chan, diehard Kentucky Wildcats fan, explained his process.

"I spend some time on ESPN, looking at what other people are picking, but there are always four or five teams I like and always put them above the rest. It's the same couple of teams I root for year after year," said Chan.

All these different strategies are what make the Big Dance one of the greatest sporting events of the year. So for the next few weeks enjoy the games, watch out for the bracket busters and try not to do any serious damage when one of your Final Four teams gets bounced in the first rounds.

Chris Hynes can be reached at CHynes@student.umass.edu.

Parents want to continue electric shock treatment on autistic son

By Lindsay Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Bradley Bernstein's parents say an electric cattle prod is the only thing that stops him from banging his head and violently punching his eyes, nearly blinding himself.

The Illinois couple's fight to continue shock treatment on their severely autistic 48-year-old son and the uproar over a Massachusetts school that uses similar treatment have pulled back the curtain on this extreme form of behavior modification. Critics call it outmoded, barbaric and unethical.

I'm a leading supporter of the technique, Harvard-educated psychologist Matthew Israel, acknowledges. "The natural reaction is to be horrified."

"It always has been very controversial and is not politically correct, and if you want to advance your career, you try to stay away from it," said Israel, founder and director of the Judge Rotenberg Center, a residential school in Canton, Mass. The institution houses children and adults with autism, mental retardation and other behavioral and psychiatric disorders.

The school is under legislative and regulatory scrutiny for routinely using skin shocks on about half its 230 students to stop serious behavior problems, including self-injury.

Electric shocks and other painful or unpleasant treatments known as "aversive conditioning" were accepted more a generation ago. But mainstream psychiatry relies on new drugs and other methods that have proven effective.

Using this form of shock therapy is "cruel and unusual punishment," said Dr. Louis Kraus, an associate professor of psychiatry at Chicago's Rush University Medical Center. "The concept of doing that is frightening."

Some states, including Illinois last year, have banned or severely restricted use of electric shocks in mental health treatment.

But Israel favors the technique over psychiatric drugs that he says make students too drowsy to learn and says most critics "have never seen children who have blinded themselves, or banged their head to the point of brain injury, or bit a hole in their cheek."

Israel developed a device he calls a graduated electronic decelerator. It's carried in backpacks students at his school wear, and elicits shocks through electrodes strapped on their arms and legs.

"The beauty of it is there's no side effects," Israel said. "It's a temporary painful experience for two seconds."

His school's techniques are the subject of a bill pending in the Massachusetts Legislature and complaints including a lawsuit by a New York mother who says the shocks traumatized her now 18-year-old son.

The device used on Bradley Bernstein is a cattle prod. It used to be a long electrified rod, but the newer model is a handheld shocker about the size of a portable phone, with two short metal prongs.

Fran Bernstein, his mother, says it delivers a shock about as painful as a bee sting. Critics say it's considerably stronger, akin to sticking a finger in an electric socket.

Often just seeing the device was enough to make Bradley stop hurting himself, Mrs. Bernstein said.

Bradley Bernstein only says a few words and sometimes hurts himself in frustration or opposition to his caretakers' demands, his mother said. He is allergic to several drugs that could calm his behavior, she said.

The Bernsteins are fighting a Cook County judge's March 2 ruling that said Bradley's shock treatment violates an amendment to state law passed last May.

"Now we're not going to be able to control him and we don't know what's going to happen," said Mrs. Bernstein, of suburban Lincolnshire, Ill.

A therapist recommended the shocks when Bradley was a boy and he got the treatment routinely in group homes where he lived until the state law was enacted last year, his mother said.

Specialists at Trinity Services Inc., which took over the agency that used to care for Bradley, oppose shock treatment and helped change the law so it and other painful techniques are banned from group homes.

"This is something that our professional staff doesn't believe is ethical," said Trinity's president, Art Dykstra.

Bradley Bernstein is the only group home patient in Illinois known to have received shock treatment in recent years. His parents agreed to a compromise to gradually stop the treatment, but sued when Trinity officials abruptly stopped it after the law changed, according to the their attorney, Robert O'Donnell.

The judge's recent ruling said the change in Illinois law makes the Bernsteins' complaint moot. O'Donnell is appealing and has enlisted Matthew Israel to help evaluate Bradley and determine whether his shock treatment should resume.

"Anything that causes pain isn't necessarily cruel and inhumane," Israel said. "If you go to a dentist or a surgeon, you're going to be involved in temporary pain but have long-term hope of improvement."

Trinity officials dispute the Bernsteins' claim that their son's behavior has grown worse without the shocks.

Bradley looked away and did not respond to questions during an attempt to interview him this week at his group home in suburban Des Plaines. Wearing a maroon sweat shirt and khaki pants, the gray-haired man wasn't violent during the half-hour visit and had no visible bruises.

His mother said he started "beating himself up" during a recent visit home, however, and that his eye doctor worries he'll do permanent damage.

"The judge and the legislature are taking my son's life away," Mrs. Bernstein said. "If he doesn't stop hitting his head he's going to go blind."

Senators urge voter turnout

SGA from page 1

just kids that need to be trivialized."

Suarez spoke to the Senators about how important it was for them to have a voting presence on March 27.

"I started here [UMass-Amherst] in 1957 as a freshman ...This is a good place to take your first lessons and experiences as adults in municipal politics and municipal affairs ... You can make this your first adult hometown, that's what I did. This is lively, animated, intellectual, knock-'em-down, drag-'em-out politics," Hubley told the SGA.

Matt Giancola, the chair of the Committee for University Policy announced that his committee is currently discussing a petition revolving around the new housing policy in which students cannot reserve the same rooms, North Area meal plans and Safe Rides.

Safe Rides is a program for which there is currently no funding, but in essence is vans on campus that would be available to drive students to their living areas late at night from the library.

Giancola also presented Resolution 2007-S33 regarding freshman and sophomore North residents and the on-campus meal plans that the University requires them to have.

The resolution stated "WHEREAS, students currently living in the North Residential Area Apartments pay a significantly higher room and board fee to have a full functioning kitchen ... BE IT RESOLVED, the University offer the option to freshman and sophomore students living in the North Residential Area Apartments to exempt from purchasing a meal plan."

In campus election news, official campaign period begins March 15 after the Election Commission validates the nomination forms. During the SGA meeting, the Associate Chief Justice swore in the Elections Commissioners. Elections Commissioners are responsible to run the voting booth during elections.

Karina Martinez, the chair of the Finance Committee presented to the SGA Resolution 2007-S31 in which $10,450.49 will be allocated to North Area Government for its budget this semester as well as its large spring event, which will be a semi-formal outdoor dance.

The resolution was passed unanimously, and Martinez noted that the current budget of the Finance Committee as of the most recent allocation to North Area Government stood at about $20,000, which, she said, did not include loans which she added should be coming back very soon.

Amber Vaillancourt can be reached at availlan at student.umass.edu

UMass dorms burglarized

THEFT from page 1

someone's going to come forward with some more information," said Archbald. "If not identifying them, then giving us information about having seen them or having a conversation with them or saw a car they were driving."

The UMPD received the first report of larceny at 4:47 p.m. on Tuesday. The suspects entered Brooks Hall and allegedly opened the unlocked door of a student's room and proceeded to steal an Apple Powerbook G4 laptop worth about $2,000 and a camera.

About an hour later at 5:44 p.m., the second incident was reported to police. The suspects allegedly opened an unlocked door in Baker Hall and stole a laptop and an iPod from the two students who live in the room.

Several hours later at 8:49 p.m., a student in Baker Hall reported someone had entered into a room and stolen a wallet with cash and credit cards. This dorm room door was allegedly unlocked as well, and the rooms were empty at the time of the supposed larceny.

"The students are obviously trusting their floormates, but not aware of others in the dorm and access gained through the front door," said Archbald, who added that even opening an unlocked door without the occupant's permission is considered breaking and entering.

Archbald said his department was able to make the connection between the three incidents by speaking to witnesses and watching the video footage. He said digital surveillance cameras set up at the exits and entrances of dormitories have been effective in cases like this one.

"Now we can access these digital photographs so quickly, real-time," said Archbald. "We can pull up archives very quickly and we can start to tie cases together much quicker."

An e-mail sent to all UMass undergraduates around 1 p.m. yesterday provided information on the larcenies and two photos of the suspects entering Brooks Hall.

Eric Athas can be reached at editor@dailycollegian.com.

UMPD'S DESCRIPTION OF SUSPECTS

• Suspect No. 1 is male, white, mid 40s with dark hair, approximately 5-foot-8, wearing a button down shirt, khaki pants and carrying a backpack.
• Suspect No. 2 is male, white, in his 20s, skinny, wearing a grey jacket and baseball hat with a sports team logo, possibly a New England Patriots hat.

Bush's proposal may be beneficial

By Molly McCabe
The BG News (Bowling Green State U.)

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio — President George W. Bush's recent budget proposal for 2008 could help more needy college students than ever before.

Included in President Bush's $2.9 trillion budget proposal is an increase in the Pell Grant, according to the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

The Pell Grant, in simple terms, is free money for very low income students, according to Laura Emch, director of financial aid for the University.

President Bush does not have budget authority, so his budget is only a proposal, said Chuck Knepfle, assistant provost and director of financial aid assistance at Miami University.

If passed by Congress, the Pell Grant will have a $1,350 increase over the next five years.

President Bush has already signed legislation for the remainder of the 2007 fiscal year. The legislation will include an increase in the maximum Pell Grant given to a student to $4,310. This rise in maximum Pell Grant award is effective on July 1, 2007, according to NASFAA.

And according to the NASFAA Web site, the organization has endorsed the Pell Grant Increase.

"An increase hasn't been done in a while, it's not keeping up with inflation," Emch said.

Students who receive the grant is based off of the Expected Family Contribution, part of the Free Application for Federal Student Aid form each student seeking aid is required to fill out.

With the proposed budget, the awarded amount of the grant given will increase along with the range of students eligible to receive the award.

Along with the proposed changes in dollar amount, President Bush's budget also aims to make the following changes in the Pell Grant program according to NASFAA:

• Make Pell Grants available year-round at two and four-year institutions.

• Limit Pell Grant eligibility to the equivalent of 16 semesters to encourage students to complete their educations in the standard time.

• Eliminate the Pell Grant award rule which limits the amount of support students attending low-cost institutions receive versus high-cost institutions. But there are some concerns with the proposed eliminations within the budget.

Speculation had been building among college lobbyists that a proposal would include a Pell Grant increase, but would pay for it largely with money taken by ending other student-aid programs, including the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program, which provides about $770 million a year to low-income students, according to the Inside Higher Ed Web site.

Emch said jokes have been spreading around about the proposal, such as "Robbing Peter to pay Pell."

Overall educators are pleased with the proposal to increase the Pell Grant, both Emch and Knepfle said. At both BGSU and Miami, the departments of financial aid anticipate an increase in money received from the Pell Grant.

In 2006, 4,700 students received over $12 million from the Pell Grant at BGSU. Close to 3,000 students at Miami University received over $7million from the Pell Grant.

For updates on the Pell Grant visit www.nasfaa.org.

'Bum hunting' trend sweeps country

By Tara Summers
The Daily Reveille (LSU)

BATON ROUGE, La. — A trend called "bum hunting" is on the rise. Teenagers and young adults have been committing acts of violence against homeless people across the nation.

On Dec. 1, 2006, "60 Minutes" reported that two teenagers in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., were captured on a video surveillance tape beating a homeless man.

Another incident occurred in Milwaukee where a 15-year-old and his friends had beers with a homeless man, and then began throwing sticks and leaves at him.

A National Coalition for the Homeless report stated, "There were 122 attacks and 20 murders against the homeless" in 2006. This has been the most attacks in almost a decade, according to the report.

Johnny Lee Austin, a frequenter of the Bishop Ott homeless shelter, said he is aware of the incidences that have occurred in Florida and said he knows it can happen to him.

"Well you know something, I know it can happen to me," he said. "I hope it doesn't happen [to me]."

Austin also said he uses his faith to help him get through his life.

"The Lord Jesus Christ takes care of me. I pray and read everyday," he said. "God is the answer to all our problems."

Although bum hunting has become a national issue, some city officials said the trend has not affected the Baton Rouge homeless.

Sgt. Don Kelly, Baton Rouge Police Department spokesperson, said homeless people are more likely to become crime victims, but because no reports are being made, there is no way to accurately gauge the problem.

"It's not something that's a huge problem here, or at least a reported one," he said. "They don't report crimes to the police, which increases their attractiveness."

Kelly said homeless people are often hard to find and are constantly changing locations, which makes it hard to take someone to court.

Michael Acaldo, chief executive director of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, a charity organization, said he has heard that bum hunting has become a problem throughout the United States.

Acaldo said he does not think the violence is as widespread in Baton Rouge as in other parts of the nation.

Acaldo said the homeless people that are being attacked are the ones that have mental illnesses or addictions.

"Well, what I have seen nationally, from the TV and news reports, these [young people] take the most vulnerable to attack," he said.

Major Lawrence Rabalais, Louisiana State University Police Department spokesperson, said he was also unaware of bum hunting in the Baton Rouge area. He said homeless people have not been a problem "in that respect" on the University campus. Kelly said while there is no doubt homeless people are victims of crimes he thinks bum hunting for entertainment is debatable.

Acaldo said there are many people that will not go to homeless shelters, making them more likely to be attacked than men and women who attend shelters.

"There are a lot of people who are vulnerable living out on the street. They may not want to stay at the shelters," Acaldo said. "They have an addiction or mental illness or being scared of being in a setting with four walls and a roof."

Garrett Galjour, mass communication sophomore at LSU, said he thinks this new trend is sick and will eventually stop when the wrong homeless person is attacked.

"For this trend or fad to stop, what's going to happen is the homeless person will retaliate against the people [attacking]," he said.

Other students were unaware of the bum hunting trends, but said they think it is wrong.

"I didn't know what bum hunting was until yesterday," said Sarah Kaufman, English junior "But [the people bum hunting] need to grow up and get over it."

COME HEAR THE GREAT MASTERPIECE
Ein Deutsches Requiem
by Johannes Brahms
ENSEMBLES: UMass Amherst Chamber Choir, Chorale & Orchestra, Springfield Symphony Chorus & Smith College Chorus
ALUMNI SOLOISTS: Andrew Garland, baritone & Kristi Kelly, soprano
DIRECTORS: F. Wayne Abercrombie, Lambrino Marcellino, Jr., Nikki Stou & Deanna Joseph
PREMIERE: Boston Horn Concerto, Laura Klock, horn
Thursday March 15, 8 pm Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Tickets: $10, $5 & $3 available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, 413-545-2511
Sponsors - UMass Amherst: Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life, Arts Council & Alumni Association
UMass Amherst Department of Music & Dance and Lively Arts

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Captain's 'death' reflects sign of the times

S.P. Sullivan

Across the United States, from comic book stores to internet cafés and all other ateliers of nerd-dom, flags are flying at half-mast. No, they haven't canceled Battlestar Galactica; the bad news I bear is a little more taxing on the American spirit.

Captain America, superhero and patriot extraordinaire, is dead. A sniper struck him down, quite unceremoniously, as he entered the courthouse in which he was to be tried for several criminal charges.

Cap (Steve Rogers by day) became an enemy of a fictional United States government when he began to fight to defend his own civil liberties. In a classic example of art imitating life, Marvel's fantasy-federal-government had started overstepping its authority and required all superheroes to register their secret identities. Rogers, ever the ardent defender of constitutionality, decided to fight against this mutant Patriot Act. His last enemy in a 60-year struggle to uphold American ideals was his own government. If O. Henry were a comic book nerd, he would be incredibly pleased with the irony of Rogers' downfall.

Popular comic book superhero Captain America is assassinated in the most recent issue.

The American public, understandably, was only mildly shocked.

Putting aside the hot-button issue of Anna Nicole Smith's funeral for just a minute, Fox News raised the question of whether Marvel was wise to kill off the star-spangled superhero "while we are at war." I guess these days killing anything emblazoned with old glory sends the terrorists the wrong message.

Much like Ronald Reagan misguidedly adopted Bruce Springsteen's anti-war tune "Born in the USA" as his campaign song, Fox News cried anti-Americanism when Marvel killed off Cap. Fox obviously didn't delve into the nitty-gritty of the issue too much, or they would've discovered that the Captain America of late hasn't been the beacon of conservative ideals he once was considered.

A serious telltale sign that something has gone awry is when Captain America raises a genetically-engineered fist against the Capitol.

The truth is, if Captain America existed not only on the pages of Marvel comics but in the real world, Fox News and the conservative right wouldn't be very big fans. In fact, he'd probably be criticized for nonsupport of the War on Terror; Rush Limbaugh might even raise suspicions that it was Al Franken or Cindy Sheehan under that red, white and blue costume. "We're at war, Cap," they'd chide. "Lose the mask – or at least slap a Support Our Troops magnet on that shield of yours."

Marvel's Captain America understood that being a patriot meant loving and defending the United States of America, but not necessarily the United States government. So, when the fictional U.S. government started infringing on the rights of its superpowered citizenry, Cap fought the law, and the law won.

Staking Captain America against the federal government isn't a particularly outrageous thing for Marvel to do. Marvel has often been applauded for reflecting the attitudes of the American people in the Captain America series. He was created in 1941 to fight the Nazis – whose anti-Semitic fascism was antithetic to the American way. Resurrected during the Korean War, Cap fought communism, which threatened American democracy. In the 1980's, the Captain America comic book series stirred the melting pot by introducing a homosexual character in the form of one of Cap's childhood friends. It follows then that Captain America's sense of civic duty would behoove him to take on one of the newest threats to the American people – their own federal government.

Say what you will about the legitimacy of Gallop polls and the Bush Administration's plummeting approval ratings; a serious telltale sign that something has gone awry is when Captain America raises a genetically-engineered fist against the Capitol.

But the question still remains as to whether is it appropriate to kill off Captain America – ranking somewhere between apple pie and corporate outsourcing on the list of all things American – while we are at war. I'd say so. Cap's last act of fictitious patriotism was to turn against a government that had turned against its citizenry. The message, hidden within the pages of a comic book, is a biting one.

The Marvel Universe, despite its superpowers and dramatics, contains many parallels to our own. The fictional federal government – faced with the issue of how to deal with several thousand walking weapons of mass destruction – took the easy way out, ignoring the constitution and enacting legislation that impinged civil liberties. Marvel created a thinly-veiled allegory for our own present situation and turned Captain America into a comic book martyr for democracy.

He might not have gone down in a blaze of glory as is befitting the man who fought valiantly against the Nazis, North Korea and the Red Skull. But Cap's death sent a message to his fictitious government that perhaps our own should heed: nobody can subversively infringe on the American Spirit and the rights of its people, expecting to get away with it – not even you.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@student.umass.edu

A 'Notorious' America

Greg Collins

In commemorating the 10th anniversary of the death of rapper Notorious B.I.G. (Christopher Wallace), many have honored his rags-to-riches life story from growing up poor in Brooklyn, in a fatherless household to becoming one of the most well-known, wealthy rappers of all time.

But few have acknowledged that the rap industry, of which he played a big part in expanding to a mainstream audience, has had a devastating effect on contemporary black America, especially among black youths.

First overlooked by the music industry is the actions he undertook on his way to becoming a prominent rapper. Originally an exemplary student in middle school, he began selling drugs at the age of 12, then dropped out of high school and became a criminal – life patterns unfortunately not uncommon among rappers today.

This is not an attack on his personal character, for one can truly judge someone else's character only after talking with them and observing their actions on a consistent basis. But his life underscores a larger issue – the impact of rap music on black America today.

What would ordinarily be considered an American success story could just as easily be interpreted as symbolizing one of this country's darker realities.

This is the breakup of the two-parent family unit into single-parent households, trends which started in the 1960s and have continued through today (though recent patterns suggest they are subsiding slightly). According to Save America Ministries, more than two-thirds of black children are born out of wedlock – an astounding number considering that the percentage was significantly lower at the turn of the 20th century when blacks were just a couple generations removed from slavery.

In the 1960s, liberal social programs implemented by the federal government and multiple cultural changes contributed to this transformation. For instance, the explosion of rock 'n' roll music in the 1960s occurred around the same time that sexually transmitted diseases, violent crime and drug use increased substantially in America. This is not to assert a direct correlation between rock 'n' roll and immorality but to highlight the different ways a society responds to changing cultural circumstances.

The introduction of mainstream rap music in the 1980s did very little to contribute to reversing these trends. What has been continually been brushed aside by liberals and libertarians, and mainstream music publications like Rolling Stone, is if we can learn anything about the connection between rap music and Wallace's life and death, whose circumstances are still under investigation but allegedly involved a dispute with another hip-hop artist.

Biggie's life underscores the larger issue of the impact of rap music on America, and specifically on black America, today.

We often hear about how white America exploits black America, but rarely about how both black and white rappers make money off of impressionable children who listen to rap lyrics with sexually explicit, homophobic and misogynistic messages. While there are undoubtedly rappers who are known to transmit more upbeat messages, like Common or Jadakiss, for the most part rap lyrics are overwhelmingly dominated by this negative form of communication.

We hardly ever hear the argument that black adults exploit black youths by glorifying crime and promiscuity in the lyrics and music videos teenagers view regularly. Additionally, female hip-hop artists make millions of dollars off of manipulating young girls into buying their products and embracing the sexually explicit messages they convey.

Liberals and libertarians rightfully recognize that it is important for parents to teach impressionable children right from wrong. Yet, they refuse to accept the proposition that even more of a moral responsibility lies in the hands of rappers, and celebrities in general, to express more positive messages to their audience.

Of course, the First Amendment protects the right for musicians to say whatever they want however they want. But this does not mean those who abuse this privilege are immune from criticism.

The anniversary of Notorious B.I.G.'s death was a day of mourning for Wallace. But it also should have been a day of mourning for young black children, and impressionable youth in general, whose minds are exploited by wealthy celebrities and by the low expectations of liberal politicians and libertarians who turn a blind eye to the wanton cultural practices encouraged by many rappers and other musicians.

It is easy to dismiss this issue as just another case of liberty versus sanctimonious moral righteousness when guilty liberals are not directly affected by the impact of the crude messages expressed by Notorious B.I.G. and other rappers.

However, it does a great disservice to black youths when liberals deny the connection between the messages of having unprotected sex and objectifying women, for instance, and the patterns of crime and fatherless homes in black America today.

Unfortunately, this issue was not brought up on the 10th anniversary of Notorious B.I.G.'s death when it should have been.

Greg Collins can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

IN REACTION TO UMASS' ROTC, REPUBLICANS

Brad DeFlumeri's Monday editorial, "In support of UMass' ROTC, Republicans," is full of falsities and distortions. DeFlumeri says about last Friday's pro-war rally that the Republicans' "seemingly innocuous words about the importance of the military were met by an onslaught of character-defaming and highly offensive insults.

Such childish and unproductive antics are counter-productive and highly damaging to the incisive debate." The speeches were highly offensive, hateful, and racist. Making anti-gay and Muslim remarks and calling the bystanders laughing at their absurdity "terrorists" is not innocuous. It is "intellectually indefensible" to argue that the war in Iraq is for national defense instead of for economic and imperial gains, as DeFlumeri claims, which is why these right-wing arguments come down to anti-Arab and Muslim racism, mindless nationalism, hate-filled (and fueled) speech and empty rhetoric.

In fact, a friend of mine told me that he was tabling the other day in the Campus Center concourse. After yelling out, "Shut down Guantanamo Bay! End racism against Arabs and Muslims!" to passers by, a member of the Republican Club, also tabled in the concourse, yelled back, "They deserve it!" This is why I agree with DeFlumeri that "ignorance may be bliss, but coupled with stupidity, it can be formidably dangerous."

Students must fight the College Republicans' ability they spew this mindless hate because it creates an atmosphere ripe for hate crimes.

Matt Constanti
UMass Student

This is with regards to the March 12 article, "In support of UMass ROTC, Republicans." I found the article completely biased, and it contained zero credible content for the allegations made. Calling the RSU and AWC members "a group of hippies" and saying that they hide behind opposition to the war in Iraq to express their hatred towards the military, shows complete lack of understanding for what these organizations stand for.

Further, the manner in which the author mentions homosexuality and abortion has a very negative connotation and sounds discriminatory. The article also asks, "if the disdain of the protesters was as persistent immediately after 9/11, then in my opinion and through my association with the AWC and the RSU, the answer is 'absolutely yes.'" In fact, to me it seems that the Republicans are the ones who should stop being ignorant and stop hiding behind 9/11 to blindly support the war and the military, and open their eyes to reality.

No doubt 9/11 is a very say day in American history, but the answer to that cannot be forced occupation and creating a total mess. In a country that has no links to that attack. I also hope the Collegian will be democratic and provide the AWC/RSU with an equal opportunity to publish their rebuttals.

Pula Kulkarni
Mumbai, India

I am disappointed in Brad DeFlumeri's generalization of liberals based on one person's supposed remarks that war protesters are actually military protesters to a television station from the March 12 column, "In support of UMass' ROTC, Republicans." First off, I do not even know what this "military protester" said. He was not directly quoted, and I did not happen to catch his comments on this unidentified television station. Secondly, it is preposterous to assume that there is a group of liberals out there who are against the military and are hiding behind the mask of a "war protester."

The overwhelming majority of Americans knows that our military is vital to the preservation of democracy in this great country, and as much as you may hate to admit it, liberals agree with this as well. If you're going to take one person's words, please lay them out on the table for us all to see and criticize that person. If you disagree with him. Do not, however, quote a person without actually quoting him and make an outlandish generalization about an entire group of people.

Mike Lasky
UMass Student

Reality check for television

I was sitting down to watch some TV the other night and was flipping through the channels. I happen to see a new episode of "Viva La Bam," or so I thought it was. The more I watched it, the less it looked like "Viva La Bam," and the more it looked like the other reality TV shows that have taken over channels like MTV, MTV2 and VH1.

George Kennedy

The show's actual name was "Bam's Unholy Union," and was about Bam Margera engagement to marriage process. It lacked the elements of previous MTV shows that I use to able to stomach watching. Since the many spin-offs and variations of "The Real World" or "Road Rules" have replaced any decent music videos, I only watch MTV for shows like "Viva La Bam," "Wildboyz" and "Jackass" fulfilling my guilty pleasure of a little slapstick comedy.

These channels used to be a source of music, but now the only sound that emanates is the combined whining of "reality" characters squabbling over lovers, complaining about who gets to marry "New York" who generally boring intelligible viewing to death.

How can these channels call themselves "Music" television anymore?

How can these channels still call themselves "Music" television anymore? They are filled with shows that are completely pointless – from following the lives of B-list actors, to girls trying to compete over Hasselhoff, to a retired professional wrestler and his less-than-genius family. I mean I know that "Viva La Bam" is not the most intelligent show, but it managed to entertain in lieu of the equally slapstick "Jackass." I thought that MTV would at least leave a show or two for people to watch that was not the pointless drivel of wannabe divas bickering on camera, but I was clearly wrong. It seems like the show is simply about the fiance planning the wedding, with occasional antics on Bam's part, with no plot or bearing to the plot. For those who used to watch "Viva La Bam", the antics have no bearing to the plot in any way and just seem to be filler in an attempt to keep male viewers watching.

For someone that grew out of "The Real World" when I was still in high school, it's a wonder that people are still watching these shows. As I say this there are still plenty of girls (and a few boys) who obsess over "Laguna Beach," and "The Hills."

These shows are incredibly easy to produce, since they don't have to pay for big name actors. They have a willing cast of 18-to-25-year-olds who are lining up for their 15 minutes of fame. The will work for almost nothing (they actually do get paid for the hours of work they miss, but the cameras are on 24 hours a day), except for the chance to be followed around with cameras everywhere. They are fixed on these people running around in a posh apartment, only to have it edited down to a few minutes a week of their most bizarre behavior.

Is this really how other students entertain themselves? People, there is a man who play's the drums on a five-gallon bucket and sings songs to my friends and me on our way home from the bars. You can see this guy any given night of the week, and you're going to tell me you have to watch the lives of a spoiled Orange County child to be entertained? I am not knocking the Bucketman at all – in fact the guy makes some decent money. He makes house calls and actually has someone who manages his events.

I am aware that many of these shows are quite popular to girls in an almost weekly ritual fashion, the way families used to huddle around televisions back in the 50's to watch variety shows. I also say "girls", because there is no way that a woman is watching this. There is no way that anyone who has any appreciation for music or even halfway-decent entertainment is watching the incessant drool of some washed-up entertainers trying to make a comeback.

The point is, you have to spend less time watching shows that have little meaning in our lives and do something productive and meaningful. Go for a run or learn to play the guitar or something – it doesn't matter. Know that while you are waiting to see if Stephen and Lauren stay together, people are playing basketball, heading to Northampton for a show, or hell, even going uptown for a drink.

That's actually being more social than staying in and watching a spoiled brat whine about getting an Acura instead of a Lamborghini for her sixteenth birthday. MTV no longer possesses the credible musical content to actually be called "Music Television." Maybe they should try calling themselves "Bickering B-List Celebrities Television." Nah, BBCTV is a little long, how about "Whining Teenage Queen Television?" WTQTV is shorter, but sounds like a radio station.

Maybe they should just concede that they have no standing to have "Music" anywhere in their name and think up one on their own. While they are doing that, and you are waiting for the next so-called 'reality' show, I will be in Northampton seeing a concert.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR. MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.

WE ART LOOKING FOR YOU. THE COLLEGIAN IS ALWAYS LOOKING TO IMPROVE ITS COVERAGE. PART OF THAT MISSION EMANATES FROM TAKING THE PULSE OF YOU, THE MEMBER OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY.

TELL US WHAT YOU THINK. SPEAK YOUR MIND.

Send an e-mail to
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COURTESY OF BRYN GORMLEY

Gary Gulman began his career as a comedian after graduating from Boston College. He has since released two comic albums and toured the nation with fellow Massachusetts native Dane Cook.

Last comic standing

Gary Gulman comes home

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Correspondent

Whether it's his hatred for the grapefruit, Pepsi and alarm clocks, or his discussion of the hierarchy of cookies, comedian Gary Gulman brings a unique perspective to his comedy. He will be performing Saturday night, March 17, at 5:30 p.m. at the Comedy Connection Hokelau in Chicopee, Mass.

In a phone conversation Wednesday, Gulman spoke about his comedy, college years at Boston College, connection to the University of Massachusetts, "Tourgasm" and "Last Comic Standing."

Ryan McAskill: You were a three sport athlete in high school, in the National Honor Society, and won scholarship to play football at Boston College...where did stand-up come from?

Gary Gulman: I was always excited about comedy growing up. As a kid I would come home from school and watch Mike Douglas in the afternoon, and he always had great comedians on. My mom would let me stay up to watch [Johnny] Carson and Saturday Night Live, and laughter is always a great way to get attention.

RM: When did you decide to actually try your hand at stand-up comedy?

GG: I never understood how one becomes a comedian until I heard about open mic nights when I was in college. After I graduated from BC I called up Nick's Comedy Stop in Boston and was told all I needed to do was bring three friends, and I got a five spot on a Monday night. I wrote down some horrible jokes and was able to get enough of a laugh to realize that I could do this for a living.

RM: When you found out about the open mic nights while in college, did you join any of the comedy troupes on campus?

GG: No. I didn't have the confidence to do that. There wasn't much encouragement from my family to do things in the arts.

RM: As a BC alum and a sports guy, do you still follow Boston College sports?

GG: I'm a big sports guy. I actually watched the UMass overtime game the other night, and I'm following BC in the tournament.

RM: I only ask because UMass and BC could play for the Hockey East Championship on Saturday.

GG: Really? I love college hockey. It should be interesting. Both of my brothers and their wives when to UMass.

RM: As someone who graduated from college with an accounting degree and is now doing something completely different, do you have any advice for college students?

GG: I think people are too consumed with finding a job and making money and end up regretting it down the road. I wish I had done what interested me in college. I believe in the saying 'do what you love and the money will follow,' and a healthy obsession is a good thing. Doing what I love gives me peace of mind. Even when I was performing for $25 cash and driving three hours, I loved it.

RM: Recently you did "Tourgasm" on HBO, what was that like?

GG: That was fun. It was great just hanging with my friends, but it was exhausting. After each show we would sign autographs for two hours, then climb on the bus and head out to the next college. With my size it was tough to fit in the beds on the bus, I had to sleep in the fetal position for a month.

RM: You also appeared on "Last Comic Standing" on NBC. How was that different than "Tourgasm?"

GG: I knew "Last Comic Standing" was on NBC and when it was going to air so I was able to adjust my behavior accordingly because I knew my friends and family would be watching. Dane [Cook] shot "Tourgasm" on his own. I didn't think anyone other than Dane's fans were going to see it, and I had no idea it was going to be on HBO. I drank, smoked and was more myself. I had to convince my mom that the cigarette was

See GULMAN on page 6

Family inspires art

Father's passion unites brothers

By Sydney Towne
Collegian Staff

What truly impacts a child's development? Is it the television they watch or the food they eat? Is it the sports they play or the vaccines they receive?

Bryn Gormley, a first-year graduate student at University of Massachusetts, believes it is the child's parents, specifically fathers, that play a vital role in the lives of their children. To support that thought he created a show titled, "The Role of the Father" held in the Student Union Gallery, which opened Tuesday night.

Gormley brought together three male artists and their work – both in still images and video form – to explore their interpretations of their fathers. The result was a glimpse of men as sons, men as workers, and men as fathers.

Ben Caras, Frank Menair, and Tom Whitton seemed to be explorers of their own lineage and of their father's place within their own lives through this series of curious and poignant images and films.

The entirety of still images is from Menair. An artist who works with both digitized super-8 film and traditional cameras, Menair began his exploration of the father before Gormely suggested it.

When Menair declined an invitation to go on a cross-country road trip with his father because he believed he'd have another opportunity, his father died before he could find space in his calendar for another trip. Within 10 months he headed to Texas to pick up his two brothers and they drove out west traveling the path their father had suggested before he passed away. The resulting film was simply Menair's way of "documenting the journey I wish I had taken." It has yet to be completed but nevertheless, is a touching monument to the legacy his father.

Menair's father was a "railroading man," and he instilled a love for and a respect of railroads in his son. The trip out west was to see a railroad, and the film follows the sons as they wind through America accompanied by train tracks. The visuals in the seven-minute selection, shown at the Student Union Gallery, traced a path through carved rock down long stretches of road that seemed to have no real ending. The destination in fact was avoided as a topic, as if the journey was the real purpose all along.

Long grainy shots that scanned the blue green hills and plains were accompanied by a vivid soundtrack and sparse commentary on the man, the father who inspired the journey and his son. Menair said he chose to use the super-8 film because the texture was, according to Menair, "sort of somewhat romantic."

The photographs Menair and Gormley chose to accompany the three films had two distinct purposes. One selection is a series of older black and white photos that Menair had either shot himself or taken from his childhood and refreshed. These simple images are pictures of trains, his father, and himself. They are presented in light frames made of what looks like recycled wood Menair made himself.

The second sequence of photos requires more attention and more thought to truly appreciate them. Each picture is a series of images projected onto a moving train and photographed again. The end product is haunted by the frailty of the projected image. They are a translucency that seems odd to apply to these people and objects that matter so much to the artist.

The most striking of these pictures is, as Menair said, of "My father, his two bad habits, and the end result." That result is death, and the final image projected onto the dark, speeding train is his father's urn. "When you see the urn it's like the punctuation point," Menair said.

Just to the left in the gallery hangs a more diverse picture. Against the same background of a train at night are the projections of Menair's fiance – a still shot from his movie – and once again the urn. Menair said, "This is like a page from a diary."

The concept of putting still images on trains and photographing them evolved from a project Menair was assigned while at Maine College of Art. The assignment was to put pictures on something other than simply white paper. Menair incorporated his father's passion for trains into

See GALLERY on page 6

University of Massachusetts Amherst graduate student Bryn Gormley crossed the country with his two brothers to follow the passion of their late father. His photographs from the trip are now on display at the Student Union Gallery.

Relationships change when you get older

By Jasmine Monteiro
Collegian Columnist

There are many different kinds of relationships we get ourselves into when we're young. If we're not hooking up, we're screwing up, and sometimes it feels like we're just catching up.

But it's okay because everyone wants something different. Yet, in a campus full of thousands of hormone-driven teens and young adults, it still seems like there's no one who wants the same thing as you do.

Fortunately, there are many pros and cons to every physical relationship you decide to get into (this is where you play catch up). This isn't really the hard part though, it's figuring out what you really want that is.

Remember in high school when we imagined being with our high school sweetheart forever? The days of happily ever after, 2.3 children and a house with a picket fence seem so far behind us. Now it's back to reality. The commitment of forever comes and goes quicker than a bad television series. However, I believe this time is as good as time as ever to start over.

An important aspect of relationships is understanding yourself and realizing what you can or cannot handle. Relationships aren't about what other people are doing, or what other people think you should be doing, anymore. They're about what you are comfortable with.

Some people are comfortable with having a "friends with benefits" relationship. This kind of relationship is usually found between people who don't want to be alone, but don't know how to commit; may be they don't want to commit, or they may be afraid to commit. Well, whatever the

See ROMANCE on page 6

'Live and Become' tells dramatic tale

Jewish faith inspires film

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Operation Moses was the attempt to remove Ethiopian Jews, known as Falashas, from famine and persecution in Sudanese refugee camps in the 1980's.

Many people died during the trip to Sudan, and many more experienced the same persecution from which they were fleeing once they reached their Holy Land.

This is only one of the many intertwining plots in the incredible story that is Va, vis et deviens, a French film that chronicles a boy's journey through life while harboring a secret that could threaten his safety. Starring Yael Abecassis, Roschdy Zem, and Sirak M. Sabahat, it is mainly in French and Hebrew, though the subtitles are no problem, as the story is so captivating.

Live and Become, as it is released in America, is an incredible and heartfelt story about a young, Christian-Ethiopian boy whose mother forces him to leave her in the refugee camp and pretend to be Jewish so he will be able to go away to Israel. Before sending him off, she presents him with a stern command to "go, live and become," and not to return until he has done so. This young boy, later renamed Solomon, or Schlomo, is given a Jewish identity and is adopted in Israel by a white family. Schlomo grows and learns in this new country and new life, all the while keeping his secret.

The touching and dramatic movie is not just a story about one boy's growth. It encompasses racial issues, family and romantic love, and the difficulties Schlomo has keeping a hold on his Ethiopian identity. It is a beautifully acted story with beautiful and poignant messages in every subplot. As critic Andrew J. Urban of Urban Cinefile says, "[Live and Become spans] some 20 years of Schlomo's life. A fine cast delivers complex characters and the screenplay speeds through years that are not central to its story of how indeed Schlomo went, lived and finally became."

Racial issues are expected in a movie in which a black boy is placed in a nearly all white community, but Live and Become doesn't make this the whole plot. It is just part of the wider picture of Schlomo growing up in a new and strange country. There is a scene in which the principal of Schlomo's school approaches his adoptive mother Yael with the news that people in the school are nervous that Schlomo will infect them all with Ethiopian diseases and that Schlomo's race will bring down the value of the school. Yael's reaction is intense and shows the power of

See FAITH on page 6

"Live and Become" was originally titled "Va, vis et Deviens," but after being released in America, the title was translated into English.

BC graduate turns to comedy

GARY GULMAN/COURTESY PHOTO

Comedian Gary Gulman has recently started to sell out clubs across the country after appearing on a season of NBC's "Last Comic Standing." His touring set is much different than his television appearances, off TV he is much more raw and relaxed.

GULMAN from page 5

CGI because she had never seen me smoke.

RM: How did "Last Comic Standing" change your career?

GG: It was a dramatic change. Clubs that wouldn't even return my calls before, I was now headlining and splitting the receipts. I was getting recognized much more, and I didn't need to prove myself at comedy clubs anymore. It gave me a national career. Before, no one outside of Boston knew who I was. Now I'm playing better venues, staying in better hotels and flying first class.

RM: You have a MySpace page. Do you use it, or is it just a way for you to get your tour dates and information out?

GG: I'm usually on everyday, and I try to answer all my fan mail. It's a real ego boost to see what young women say they are going to do to me. I love to read and hear from people that just went to a show. I was late to MySpace though. I didn't do one until "Tourgasm." They all had one, and I just ended up setting one up.

RM: Who makes you laugh?

GG: I think Brian Regan is one of the best today. Of course I love Dane, also David Cross and before he died, Mitch Hedberg. I also like the Boston comedy scene.

RM: I've read that you don't consider yourself as naturally funny as other comedians. What did you mean by that?

RM: As you can tell from this interview, I'm not really last-minute funny. I'm much more serious on stage. I need to work jokes out to get the words and rhythm just right. Dane never writes anything down. He re-tells jokes, but they don't come from a note pad, and they are never told the same. I can be witty, but if I'm hanging out with friends, I'm not the kind to take over a room. I think I work harder then some comedians.

RM: You have described writing down jokes and working them out as the Jerry Seinfeld School of joke telling.

GG: Yeah, he is all about word choice and prepares every word regardless of whether he is on stage or on a talk show. I'm working on stretching myself out and going on more tangents during my act.

RM: What do you have coming up?

GG: I just finished a new CD that I recorded during Christmas in Boston. It's more edgy than my last CD's. I don't usually listen to myself, but I'm very proud of my CD's.

RM: Your older albums are titled, "Conversations with inanimate objects" and "Boyish man." Have you titled the new disc yet?

GG: I have no idea what I'm going to call it. I'm confused.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu.

How to survive a new relationship case may be, we all know this type of relationship can be like a loaded cannon. One minute it's fine, the next minute someone lights a match and, you know the rest.

ROMANCE from page 5

Many people think beforehand that they can handle it. But the fact of the matter is developing feelings for someone is often well out of our control. This is especially true for people who develop a connection with someone when they get too friendly between the sheets. We can't always help that. So if you want to engage in this type of relationship, just be aware of your feelings. And always, always be honest with each other, because once one of you falls, it's going to be a hell of a lot harder get back up again.

Other people prefer a less risky approach – casual dating – or, as I like to call it, keeping your options open. This is a good way of getting to know different people on a more personal level without a lot of pressure for commitment. The biggest thing I would recommend about casual dating is always make sure the other people know your intentions – if you have any. And no that doesn't mean they want to hear about the other date you went on last night; just don't beat around the bush about it. No one wants to be a heartbreaker (although that one is still up for debate).

Although when it comes to the dating game, it's never a good idea to assume. We're all guilty of it from time to time, so instead of keeping your potential partner guessing, just lay your cards out on the table. This way, everything is out in the open, and it gives the relationship room to whither or blossom in the future. The great thing about dating is that you have the chance to learn about a variety of different people. And in the end you may find that you really like one of the girls/guys. In this case my advice would be if it could be a good thing, don't let it get away.

In between the casual dating and monogamous relationship is the post-dating limbo. This is the sort-of-almost-exclusive-we've-been-dating-for-a-while-what-do-you-call-this relationship. It's the one where you're not just dating, but you're not "official" as people like to call it. Many people have had one of these.

It makes you want to go back to the time when it was okay to slip them a note and circle yes or no (and then they write an arrow and write in 'maybe'). But either way, sometimes the post-dating limbo is meant to be just that – a crazy confusing limbo. Many people find themselves here because they really like someone, but they're not sure they're ready for something more. As frustrating as this time may be, just remember, it'll work out when you're ready. And if you're ready and they're not…three years later, you'd want to back off.

Just don't rush it. Enjoy spending time with them and getting to know them. You'll be surprised how much you can learn about someone if you take the time. And if they end up feeling the same way about you, you'll end up together without even realizing it.

The biggest thing you need to remember is trying to be on the same page with someone. No matter how casual or serious the relationship is, it's always good to communicate. So guys, don't always assume we're being annoying and pushy when we want to know what you're thinking. Sometimes we're just as scared as you are, and don't want to put ourselves in a bad situation. No one wants to get hurt – we've been there already. Just be true to yourself, and the best kind of relationship will find you, whatever that may be.

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir@student.umass.edu.

Exhibit features cross country photographs

GALLERY from page 5

his passion for art, and the end result is surprisingly cohesive.

Caras's and Whitton's videos are what begins the actual screening of films, and it is the addition of these two distinct pieces that provides a more even-handed and complete picture of the role of fathers. The first is by Caras and is seven minutes of a father and son working on a car together. There is not traditional film dialogue or clear cut images, as multiple shots overlap each other, but the fluid communication between father and son on this project speaks for itself. The interplay of the two men working together is simple and sweet.

Whitton's film takes a bit more thought as it explores not the role of the father through his children's eyes, but rather the father through his own. It follows him from infancy to adulthood with minimal dialogue and very distinct costumes. Each scene is a specific moment in time and the costuming, all made by Whitton, clues you in.

Curator Gormely's exhibit, "The Role of the Father" will be on display at the Student Union Gallery through Friday. The cost of admission is free, and the gallery is open to the public Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Friday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Sydney Towne can be reached at stowne@student.umass.edu.

"The Role of The Father" is on display at the Student Union Gallery. It is open from Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Fridays 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. The Gallery is free and open to the general public.

Amherst Cinema hosts award winner

FAITH from page 5

a mother's love, albeit an adopted one.

The opening shots show the suffering people in the refugee camps had to endure before being brought to the freedom of Israel. It also makes it clear that there are still people today living in these conditions. The sick children that are shown are heartbreaking and eye-opening. It shows why Schlomo's mother would force him to lie about his identity and make him promise not to return to her until he had made a life for himself.

After Schlomo is brought to Israel, there are a series of shots showing how the Ethiopian immigrants must adapt to this new world. Schlomo panics when he is bathed because the water is going down the drain. They all have to learn how to put on socks and how to use a fork. The children gather behind the TV to watch for the little people coming in and out of the back.

Along with serious issues of race and suffering, there is also a more lighthearted, though just as compelling, storyline of Schlomo growing from a child to an adult. Schlomo, just like everyone else, goes through awkward and at times embarrassing, moments – at one point dressing in a suit to go to a birthday party, only to have the door slammed in his face.

Live and Become, according to BoxOffice Magazine, "received a rare standing ovation at the Telluride Film Festival." It won the Audience Award at the European Film Festival 2005, the Ecumenical Award at the Berlin International Festival 2005, and the Golden Swan for Best Film at the Copenhagen Film Festival 2005. It is intense, uplifting, amusing, heartwarming, eye-opening, and a movie everyone should have on their must-see list. It opens March 16 at the Amherst Cinema Arts Center on Amity Street in downtown Amherst.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

LIVE AND BECOME

DIRECTED BY RADU MIHAILEANU

GRADE: A-

"Live and Become" tells the story about race and suffering through the eyes of Schlomo, an Ethiopian immigrant. According to Box Office Magazine the film received a rare standing ovation at the European Film Festival.

Write for Arts!!

E-mail us at

Arts@dailycollegian.com

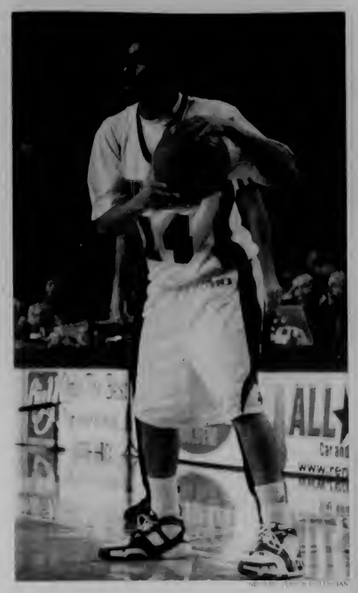
On the Rocks School of Bartending

- Get certified in one weekend
- Anyone 18+ may bartend
- The course is held on campus
- Great paying & fun job!

Sat. & Sun. March, 31st & April 1st
or
Sat. & Sun. April 28th & 29th

1-800-MIX-0094

www.OnTheRocksBartending.com



Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe scored the game-winning bucket in Tuesday's 89-87 win over Alabama in the first round of the NIT.

UM travels to West Virginia for NIT

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

figures in scoring. Young is joined by forward Joe Alexander (11.1 ppg) and guards Darris Nichols (10.6 ppg) and Alex Ruoff (10.3 ppg). Alexander also leads the team in rebounding with 4.7 boards per game.

Young (17) and Ruoff (14) combined for 31 points in the Mountaineers' 74-50 first round win over Delaware State on Tuesday night. West Virginia outscored Delaware State 39-13 in the first half, en route to its 23rd win of the season.

Now UMass comes into the WVU Coliseum after putting together one of its greatest performances of the year on Tuesday night. Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe hit a fade-away floater in the lane with 1.6 seconds remaining in overtime, giving the Minutemen an 89-87 win over Alabama.

Lowe tied his career-high with 19 points in the win, but A-10 Player of the Year Stephane Lasme carried the team on his back throughout the game. Lasme fouled out of the game with three minutes left in overtime, but he finished the game with a team-high 21 points and nine blocks.

His fifth and final foul led to two free throws made by Alabama's Jennareo Davidson, putting the Crimson Tide on top 85-84. But he wasn't done contributing.

"When [Stephane] fouled out, it was the best leadership I've ever seen from a player," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "He was getting after it, and maybe coaching more than I was. He wanted to win so bad."

Lasme was standing next to Ford for the remainder of the game, and had been more vocal than ever before, not wanting to end his last game at the Mullins Center with a loss.

There's still a chance to come home for one more. The only obstacle is West Virginia, a team that is also looking to prove something to the NCAA Selection Committee.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

Ford questions at-large bids

GREENFIELD from page 10

tion for the Kentuckian. He has never coached a college basketball team with a chance for an at-large bid to The Dance. Hindsight is 20-20, of course, and Ford learned some things about how to handle the at-large situation.

"You do whatever is best for your team," he said. "You can't put something together thinking, 'Alright, we're going to make this tournament.' You do it to whatever benefits your team. If you have a good team then yeah, you schedule it a little bit tougher like we thought we were doing this year. We had some teams that didn't turn out quite as good as we thought they were. It's a crazy deal when you're talking about if you should get more teams in. I don't know the criteria. I don't know what it is.

"You look at a team like Appalachian State," he added. "[The selection committee] said that the Southern Conference was going to get a team no matter what. If I was [the App. State coaches] I would go out and schedule the easiest schedule in the world and try and get 30 wins to make yourself look good, make your program look good, make your fans excited. That's what the [selection committee] is saying. The only people that can tell you were in that room. It changes every year. The best thing you can do every year – and I would tell this to coaches, fans – is to go out and try to have the best season that you can have."

The guidelines for getting into the tournament range from road victories to strength of schedule to opponent's winning percentage to opponent's winning percentage against other good teams and other complicated tidbits.

Higher-profile college basketball teams base their schedule around the at-large opportunity, but it is clear that coaches are becoming increasingly frustrated with what they think it a flawed process.

And it is. It's unlikely that the people deciding who gets into the most prestigious college basketball tournament on the planet have seen all of the eligible teams play during the season.

Ford, for one, believes that the NCAA should create jobs specifically for Selection Committee members. He said that they should assign each member to specific conferences and watch the teams that could be on the bubble throughout the year. That way, he argued, the committee would have a better grasp over which teams are more qualified to get the invitation.

Here's the consensus about the NCAA Tournament right now: yes, it is the most democratic tournament, but it doesn't, by any stretch of the imagination, invite the best 65 Division I college basketball teams in the country. There are weaker conferences getting automatic bids and bubble teams in better divisions that are ousted because of it.

"Are you picking the best teams or are you picking the best numbers?" Ford asked. "If you're looking at the best teams then you have to get a committee together where that's all they do. And you have to literally watch every team play in your region.

"I have never analyzed [the NCAA Tournament] as much as I have [this season]," he added. "And then I figured out that you can't analyze it because there's nothing that you can do. You're just going to beat your head against the wall."

I guess it really is March Madness.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

Junior Gary Forbes puts pressure on Saint Louis guard Tommie Liddell before making the game-saving steal back on Feb. 24. The Minutemen ended up losing to the same Billikens in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament last Thursday, eliminating their hopes of an NCAA bid.

Breaking down each bracket in 2007 NCAA Tournament

MARCH MADNESS from page 10

and No. 2 UCLA.

After dropping three of their final four games, the No. 5 Virginia Tech Hokies need to find that spark that led them to a 3-0 record versus North Carolina and Duke. The Hokies finished 10-6 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, one game behind North Carolina. They have looked great at times this year, but they have puzzling losses to North Carolina State twice, Marshall and Western Michigan.

Kansas has a tough task ahead of it to make it to the Sweet 16. Assuming it defeats Niagara, Kansas will draw the winner of the Kentucky-Villanova game. Kansas has won its last 11 games, including two victories over Texas.

EAST DIVISION

Atlantic Coast Conference Champion UNC holds the No. 1 seed in the East bracket and Big East Champion Georgetown owns the No. 2 seed. UNC plays a fast paced game with young talent in freshmen Ty Lawson and Wayne Ellington, and forwards Brandon Wright and Tyler Hansbrough.

UNC is one of the deepest teams in the nation and coach Roy Williams isn't afraid to play a 10-man rotation. The Tar Heels have the talent to make a run toward the Final Four, but they lack the experience. Senior forward Reyshawn Terry and Hansbrough are the only starters that played in the tournament last year when George Mason bounced the Tar Heels in the second round.

One of the top matchups of the first round is No. 10 Texas Tech against No. 7 Boston College. BC lost to UNC in the ACC semifinals, 71-56.

The Eagles have had their ups and downs this season. Sophomore center Sean Williams was kicked off the team in January by coach Al Skinner. With Williams, BC had the potential to be a No. 2 or 3 seed. Since his absence, it went 7-7 to finish the season. The Eagles still have ACC Player of the Year Jared Dudley, who is averaging 19 points and eight rebounds per game.

Texas Tech has also had an up and down year. In January, the Red Raiders lost five in a row and did not look like a tournament team with a 15-10 record. They were able to bounce back, finishing the season 21-12 with quality wins over Kansas and Texas A&M.

BC sophomore guard Tyrese Rice will have his hands full with senior guards Jarrius Jackson and junior guard Martin Zeno. Jackson and Zeno combine for an average of 36 points per contest.

SOUTH DIVISION

Perhaps Ohio State has drawn one of the weaker divisions in the bracket this year. The Buckeyes have a potential second round matchup against the winner of Xavier-BYU.

Not many teams match up well with freshman center Greg Oden and the fast paced play of freshman guard Mike Conley Jr. Conley is averaging 10 points and six assists, while Oden is averaging 15 points and close to 10 rebounds.

Oden's play on the defensive end will be crucial. If he gets in early foul trouble it will open up their opponents' ability to drive the lane. Oden is averaging 3.5 blocks per game.

The No. 2 seed Memphis finished the season 30-3, but is only 2-5 versus teams that are in the tournament. Memphis is often criticized for not playing a tough schedule, and many experts feel it could be out of the tournament before the Sweet 16. With a potential second round matchup against No. 7 Nevada or No. 10 Creighton, the Memphis Tigers will have to prove they can beat quality teams to advance to the Sweet 16.

TOP THREE PLAYERS TO WATCH FOR NOT NAMED ODEN OR DURANT

3. Kansas forward Julian Wright

Wright has to ability to be last year's Joakim Noah. The 6-foot-8 sophomore is shooting 55 percent from the field and averaging 12 points and eight rebounds. With so much talent around him, teams can't afford to double team him for the entire game.

2 Georgetown center Roy Hibbert

Maybe the only player in the tournament that can match up with Greg Oden in terms of his size, standing at 7-foot-2. As a freshman, Hibbert came in as a raw player, now he is establishing himself as one of the best centers in the country. Hibbert had 18 points on 8-for-10 shooting against Pittsburgh center Aaron Gray. He held Gray to a season-low three points on 1-for-13 shooting from the field.

1. Texas A&M guard Acie Law IV

If you missed Law's late-game heroics in the loss against Texas then you do not want to miss him in the tournament. Against Texas he hit a fade-away 3-pointer to put the game into overtime and then hit another 3-pointer to force double overtime. Law is averaging 18 points and 5.3 assists. He is one of the most clutch players on the line look for him to come through.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Junior Joakim Noah is fourth on Florida in scoring with 12.4 points per game. The No. 1 seeded Gators look to defend their National Championship tomorrow against No. 16 seed Jackson State in the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

From Your Dorm To The Airport And Back!
*central campus pick-ups during heavy travel time

VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service

Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

FACTORY DIRECT
DISCOUNT MATTRESS WAREHOUSE, INC.
LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY
VOTED #1
10 HOLYOKE RT. 9 | AMHERST CENTER | SOUTHAMPTON MART | 10 NORTHAMPTON
www.directdiscountmattress.com
(413) 253-BEDS (2337) RT. 9 Amherst
SUN-MON: 12-4 TUES-SAT: 10:30-6

ECAC Lacrosse has brand new sheriff in town

Georgetown Hoyas sit atop the conference while UM struggles

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Of the eight men's lacrosse teams that make up the Eastern College Athletic Conference, only two qualified for the NCAA tournament last season. Massachusetts' magical run to the finals aside, Georgetown won its first-round game against Navy, only to lose by 12 goals to eventual-champion Virginia in the next round.

This season, Georgetown (2-1) is head and shoulders above the rest of the conference. In their first game, the Hoyas defeated then No. 5 Maryland (3-2) at home, 8-6, on Feb. 24. Georgetown built up a five-goal, first-half lead, but took only a 6-5 lead into the fourth quarter. Freshman attack Andrew Brancaccio led all players in scoring with three goals.

With Virginia and Johns Hopkins losing to unranked teams, Georgetown took over the No. 2 ranking in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Men's Media Poll for the week of March 5. The Hoyas defeated St. John's (2-4) in their ECAC league opener in their next game. The Red Storm stayed within two goals at halftime, but the school failed to stop Georgetown's attack in the second, losing 12-6.

However, Georgetown could not keep its winning streak alive in its next game, falling to Syracuse (2-2). The Hoyas stayed close to the Orange in the early first half, when a goal from junior Brendan Cannon cut the deficit to 5-4. Syracuse then scored several quick goals to rebuild its lead to 10-5 at the half.

The third and fourth quarters were no better for Georgetown. The team held the Orange to only four second-half goals, but the Hoyas could do no better, falling 14-9. Georgetown had trouble establishing its attack, despite winning nine of 14 faceoffs.

ECAC Lacrosse

One of the team's promising young defenders, Chris Nixon, grabbed a game-high six groundballs. Nixon, a Massachusetts native, is one of two freshmen from Duxbury High School to make an immediate impact in collegiate lacrosse. The other, Max Quinzani, has four goals in five games for No. 5 Duke (4-1).

The highlight of the team's upcoming schedule will be a reunion for Nixon and Quinzani. On March 24, the Hoyas host Duke in a matchup that should have taken place last season. Georgetown was technically credited with the victory after Duke forfeited its season in the wake of rape allegations against several players.

Baltimore's Best?

With Johns Hopkins, Maryland, Towson and UMBC usually fielding nationally ranked teams, it's difficult for a school like Loyola (2-2) to dominate the Maryland lacrosse scene. But the school is ranked No. 12 in this week's NIL Poll, despite not having a winning record. Maryland is the only other of the group ranked higher at No. 10. However, Towson and UMBC lurk at No. 15 and 19, respectively.

Loyola earned its ranking on Saturday by defeating Duke in the 2007 First Four Lacrosse Tournament, hosted by the University of San Diego. The team scored the go ahead goal with less than 22 seconds remaining, after tallying the tying goal one minute earlier in the 8-7 victory. The Blue Devils were the No. 1 ranked team at the time.

In fact, the Duke upset was Loyola's second straight come-from-behind victory. The Greyhounds took the lead in the road victory with less than five seconds remaining. That goal capped off an eight-goal run during the last 16 minutes of regulation, erasing a five-goal deficit in the process.

Unfortunately for the Greyhounds, their previous two games were perhaps just as thrilling, except they came out on the opposite end of the result. On Feb. 17, the team lost to No. 16 Notre Dame (2-2) on the road, 9-7. Loyola failed to secure its two-goal second half lead by allowing the Irish to score the last four goals of the contest.

One week later, Loyola dropped another heartbreaking decision, this time losing to cross-town rival Towson (2-1). The Greyhounds maintained a first quarter lead, 4-2, with strong play from sophomore goalie Alex Peaty. Towson responded in the second half by scoring four consecutive times, putting itself up two with seven minutes left in the fourth quarter. The Tigers held on for the 9-8 win and sent Loyola to 0-2 at the time.

The schedule does not get any easier for the rest of the season. Not only does Loyola play the six other ECAC teams on its schedule, it also has matchups with perennial powers Syracuse and Johns Hopkins… UMass (1-3) and Fairfield (4-0) are on the outside of the poll, receiving enough votes to effectively be ranked No. 21 and No. 23 . Hobart (3-2) nearly upset Syracuse in its first game of the season. The team then earned victories over Binghamton, Marist and Hartford after losing to Bucknell in overtime.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly and the UMass Minutemen advanced to the NCAA Finals last season, but have struggled in the early stages of 2007 with a 1-3 record. Connolly leads the team in points with 11.

Junior Kathleen Typadis was named Atlantic 10 Co-Performer of the Week on Monday, sharing the honor with Richmond senior goalkeeper Jackie Swansburg. Typadis leads UMass in scoring with 24 points.

A-10 recognized in latest poll

Maroon and White ranked No. 20, Richmond No. 14

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 teams, Richmond Spiders and the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, have been ranked in the national Top 20 by the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches Association (IWLCA).

The Richmond Spiders are ranked No. 14. The Spiders have a 5-3 non-conference record so far this year. Their only loss came against Duke, Virginia and Maryland – all top 10 competitors. Richmond's next game is March 25 when it travels to Towson.

UMass is ranked 20th in its first ranking since 1999. The Minutewomen are 4-2 in non-conference play and face Seton Hall/Syracuse March 30.

All-American Sisters

Ashley and Mandy Friend began their play for Richmond, with named preseason All-Americans for the 2007 season.

Senior midfielder Ashley Friend has been a consistent starter for the Spiders since her freshman year. Last season she scored a career-high 47 goals and scored in all but three games.

A-10 Lacrosse

Her 47 goals granted her a fourth entry in Richmond's record book. She was named to the A-10 All Conference First Team, the A-10 Championship team, the IWLCA Division I All-Regional and VaSID second teams.

Sophomore Mandy Friend entered Richmond last season as a freshman, the only freshman to start in all 20 games. During her first season she was named Rookie of the Week five times, Invade Lacrosse Player of the Week and finished second on her team with 76 points, scoring 53 goals and 23 assists.

Players of the Week

Richmond Spiders senior goalkeeper Jackie Swansburg was named one of this week's Players of the Week. She ended the last two weeks with 47 saves, a .540 save percentage and a 9.89 goals-against average. Swansburg faced tough competition with two Top 10 teams, No. 9 Virginia and No. 3 Maryland.

In Richmond's 15-9 loss against Maryland on March 7, Swansburg had a season-high 15 saves and nine ground balls with a total of 45 shots.

Swansburg held strong during the Spider's overtime win against William and Mary on March 4 after facing a total of 40 shots.

UMass junior attack Kathleen Typadis was also named Player of the Week after scoring 14 goals and having four assists in two weeks. The Minutewomen defeated Vermont, Harvard and Albany, but failed to beat No. 7 Dartmouth on March 7.

Along with her 18 points she had eight draw controls, four groundballs and four caused turnovers. Typadis had three hat tricks in these four games. This gave her 17 total for her career.

Typadis had a career-high six goals and seven total points in the Minutewomen's 15-7 win against Albany. She also had two groundballs, two draw controls and a caused turnover.

Rookie of the Week

Duquesne freshman attack Janna Faulkner was named this week's Rookie of the Week with five goals and three assists for a total of eight points.

On March 2 when Duquesne beat Monmouth 20-15, Faulkner had a hat trick and an assist. She scored in overtime when Duquesne beat Davidson 10-9 on March 11. Duquesne's next game will be March 17 against Bucknell.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

UMass selected as favorite

Atlantic 10 coaches predict Minutewomen to finish first

By Joe Melgini
Collegian Staff

From 1995 to 2003, Atlantic 10 softball began and ended with Elaine Sortino and her Massachusetts Minutewomen. UMass won both the A-10 regular season title and the tournament championship in all nine of those seasons before Temple won the 2004 A-10 Tournament.

Since then, Fordham won the 2005 regular season A-10 crown and Charlotte split the regular season title with the Minutewomen last season. UMass has rebashed its dominance in the A-10 Tournament, winning it in 2005 and 2006.

If the Maroon and White plans to win the program's 19th conference championship then the Minutewomen will need to get past strong teams like Charlotte and Fordham.

The 14 coaches of the A-10 selected the Minutewomen as the preseason favorite to win the conference. Despite its youth, the Maroon and White return several starters with big time experience.

Fordham, like the Minutewomen, struggled early in the season against teams from the south and the west. The Rams dropped their first three games of the season to NC State, Florida and Marshall before taking two from Tennessee-Chattanooga.

Early in the season, Fordham's schedule featured a lot of games against weaker northern opponents and the Rams took advantage, defeating Vermont and Binghamton once, and Delaware twice.

Offensively, junior Allison Iwarowski leads the Rams with a .387 batting average, three home runs and 11 runs batted in – three other Fordham players have 11 RBI.

Iwarowski doubles as the pitching ace for FU. Her 4-2 record and 1.29 earned run average (ERA) both lead the Rams. Senior Sara Kinney has been good for the Rams in the pitching circle this season. Her 3-5 record should improve when Fordham begins conference play.

The Rams don't meet the Minutewomen until the beginning of May for two games in Amherst.

If Fordham hopes to establish itself as a legitimate contender in the A-10, it will have to become a good road team. Not only must it travel to UMass, it heads south to take on Charlotte (15-1) to open conference play.

A-10 Softball

The A-10 chose the 49ers to finish third in the conference this season after sharing the league's regular season crown with the Minutewomen last season.

As the only southern team in the A-10, the 49ers hold an advantage since they can begin practicing earlier than UMass.

The 49ers are hitting .291 as a team thus far and have scored 118 runs through their first 24 games.

Unlike Fordham, the 49ers play both of their games with the conference's other frontrunners at home. UMass heads to Charlotte for two games on the 49ers' Softball Diamond. Charlotte is 14-1 at home this season. By the time the Minutewomen and the 49ers play ball, both teams should be in midseason form and primed for a great matchup of A-10 powers.

Junior Kristi Killough leads the 49ers offensive assault. Her .339 batting average, three home runs and 15 RBI all lead the team. Last season, Killough was a First Team All A-10 selection for the 49ers.

On the mound, senior Christy Murray spearheads a pitching staff that finished second overall to UMass last season. The 49ers' earned run average of 3.65 as a team places them third behind the Minutewomen (2.52) and Fordham (3.27) so far this season.

Murray leads the staff with eight wins to four losses while senior Kristen Bown adds depth with five wins and a respectable 3.70 ERA.

The 49ers dropped their last seven games and eight of their last nine – including a two game sweep at the hands of in-state rival North Carolina by a combined score of 19-1.

Billikens Hire New King of Diamond

After 10 seasons at the helm of the Saint Louis softball program, Jim Molloy retired. The Billikens looked to the Division III ranks for their new skipper – hiring Lombonne University coach John Conway.

Conway led the D-III school to three NCAA Tournament berths in his four years there.

The Billikens limped through A-10 play last season with an 8-12 record. They showed signs of life at times though, defeating UMass 1-0 on April 23.

SLU pitchers have struggled this season. Its team ERA sits at 4.67 and they have surrendered 134 hits in 111 innings pitched.

While the Billikens record, 7-10, isn't terrible, they need to improve upon their pitching numbers if they hope to cause a stir in the A-10 this season. UMass, Fordham and Charlotte all boast pitchers capable of shutting down any lineup in country.

The Billikens' offense has been weak as well. While their .275 team batting average isn't terrible, the .338 team on-base percentage they've posted isn't going to impress anyone. Neither is their paltry .382 team slugging percentage.

SLU opens up A-10 play on March 24 at home against Dayton.

Hawks Swoop in for Rams' Allen

Hoping to build upon the success Fordham has had in recent years, the Saint Joseph's Hawks hired former Fordham assistant Terri Adams as their new head coach.

The Hawks finished toward the bottom of the A-10 last season – their .240 team batting average was good enough for 10th while their 3.87 team ERA was eighth.

Allen's influence has already paid dividends for the Hawks. Junior Lauren Cognini pitched a perfect game on March 7 against Robert Morris.

The Hawks begin the conference portion of their schedule against Charlotte on March 24. Last season, the 49ers defeated St. Joe's in an early May double-header, 4-1 and 5-4.

Joe Melgini can be reached at jmelgini@student.umass.edu.

Tired of the Dorms?
IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

SPRING BREAK
service to and from the airport
Exclusive Car Services
877 695 4665
4 to BOS – $60 each
4 to NYC – $90 each
4 to BDL – $55 each
Limo Service 24/7/365 – Anywhere – Anytime

Check out DAILYCOLLEGIANSPORTS.BLOGSPOT.COM to get the low-down on UMass sports.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
Auto & Truck Rental
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass – on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

You can always find us online at WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
Every Thursday:
♦ OPEN MIC ♦
LIVE BAND
HAPPY ST. PATRICK'S DAY!
Saturday, March 17th, 2007:
Mark Snow Band
♦ Student Band Wanted ♦
Need a place to play? Come to Seven O's!
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-8760
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Saturday
Next To Cumpian Arts.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	1					3
2				1	8	5
			2		4	1
	8			7	3
		4	1		3	6
		1	9			8
	5	3		6
9		7	5			6
8						3

Quote of the Day

"I am not going to fight about money. I'm not an adult."
-Scott Willard

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

SO ALL THIS TIME, IT'S DRIVING YOU MAD WITH CURIOSITY THAT I'M WALKING AROUND WITH A BUNCH OF DOGS.
AND IT NEVER OCCURRED TO YOU THAT I MIGHT'VE STARTED A DOG-WALKING BUSINESS?
SO THAT'S WHAT THIS IS? WOW!
WHA-YOU'RE STILL SURPRISED? WHAT ELSE COULD IT BE?
I'D JUST ASSUMED YOU'D GIVEN UP ON RELATING TO WOMEN. FINALLY MADE THE LEAP.
OH, OH, SO IT'S MORE LIKELY THAT I'D DATE A DOG THAN START MY OWN BUSINESS. SO GLAD WE'RE FRIENDS!
CAN I FINISH?
OH, THERE'S MORE? OH, DO CONTINUE!

The Family Monster By Josh Shalek

There are such different animals represented in your League of Anima Reparchies
We're friends out of convenience else would be friends with us
That's not true.
Brew is a personal member heh heh. Fiddling, buddy

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

PERHAPS YOU WILL REMEMBER AT THE BEGINNING OF THIS SEMESTER I TOLD ALL OF YOU THAT I NEVER MAKE MISTAKES.
WELL, I WAS WRONG.
AGREEING TO TEACH THIS CLASS WAS ONE.

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

the least-used letters ought to be tushed to the back of the alphabet.
Move Y up and demote Q and J
J is for John Lennon! Q is for Jammin'! Don't discriminate based on usage let letters integrate!
If I wanted this to die on committee, I'd have taken it to the UN

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES... LIKE NO OTHER!
Now open for lunch!
Hours
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

ACROSS
1 Wedding vow
4 Indian instruments
10 Mouse catcher
14 Jazzy reed
15 Black Sea peninsula
16 Medal recipient
17 Part of APB
18 Big name in cosmetics
20 Straighten up
22 Also
23 Exploiting
24 Licentious
26 AOL e.g.
28 Shaft of light
29 Bring out
32 Matter of regret
35 ISS partner
36 Some kin
39 L'chaim, e.g.
41 NBC classic
43 Second attempt
44 ___ borealis
46 Blackguard
48 Old Russian VIP
49 Paneling choice
52 Whiskey grain
54 According to
55 Oddballs
59 Painter Mabisse
61 Whitney known for his gin
63 Sacred poem
64 Desire provokers
67 Peak on Crete
68 Minute particle
69 Language
70 Knightly address
71 Compos mentis
72 David or Denise
73 To date

DOWN
1 Newton or Asimov
2 Waste time
3 Eurasian primrose
4 Naturally beautiful
5 Apr. addressee
6 Daughter of Gaea
7 Revived cry
8 Revise a revision
9 Mule of song
10 In this manner
11 Changes the course of 12 Sports venue
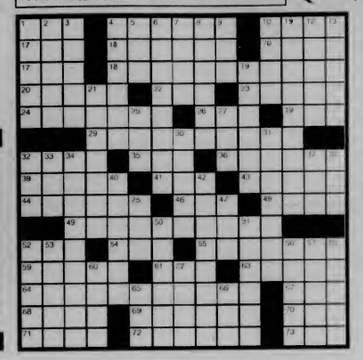
13 "___ and Bess"
19 Mother's helper
21 Dick ___ a.k.a Robin
25 Star pitcher
27 Daystar
30 City in NE France
31 Wobbles
32 After-sch. grp.
33 Debi chit
34 Giant/Viking QB Fran
37 Hurler's stat
38 Neighbor of Isr
40 Equatorial
42 Pewits
45 Grabbed a bite
47 Casino cube
50 Vibration
51 Russell of "The Wiz"
52 Large flightless birds
53 Gossiper
56 Henry James novel "___ Miller"
57 Hit from the past
58 Kind of card or bomb
60 Roarfrost
62 Jokester Jay
65 & so forth
66 Place for three men?

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



The Moan and Dove
make sure you save a few bucks for our $3 draught week.
week after spring break.
and... wear a condom...
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day

The Harp
Psst... The annual Harp open house St. Patrick's Day party is today, Thursday 3pm-6pm
(Don't say we didn't tell ya!)

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If all you need are tapestries and candles then shopping in NOHO makes sense.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Instead of watching Grey's Anatomy tonight, try making a helmet out of tuna.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Watch the movie scream and ponder what the heck happened to Neve Campbell.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your balance is terrible, I recommend getting a surgically implanted prehensile tale.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You may be unattractive but you have a nice voice. Radio is definately your thing.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You must take your place in the circle of life.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Consider a man named Custard, selling custard, at the last stand on a city block.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your fingernails are getting long. It's time to clip them and add to your collection.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Start referring to your pants as slacks. Then accuse them of not doing their work.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
For all intents and purposes, spring break begins tonight.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Cover your naked body in glue and then slowly peel it off. What joy!

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Get a pet beaver so you'll never have to buy a pencil sharpener again.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/ part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Umass Amherst Summer 2007 Offering new online GenEds and more. Plan now by visiting our summer sneak preview website: www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

Apartment for Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Apartment for Rent

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Automobiles for Sale

1999 Honda Civic 5-speed $4600. Original owner, 113,000 miles, great condition, 38 mpg, 587-0426

2001 Honda Civic $6999 5 speed, 64,000 miles, 413-222-8774

Employment

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Direct Sales – Eyewear Specialists Sell an exclusive line of high quality sunglasses and reading glasses direct to consumer. Make 40% on each sale. Build a sales team and make additional commissions and bonuses. Small investment for samples required, fully refundable at any time. Call John at 1-800-322-6748

Looking for a great summer job? Become an Academic Peer Advisor for the fall 2007 incoming students with Undergraduate Advising. Application deadline is April 4th. For more information or to print an application visit our website at www.umass.edu/advising/

Employment

EARN UP TO $10.45 PER HOUR on MARCH 27 and/or MAY 1 The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) needs Amherst registered voters to staff elections between the hours of 6AM and 8PM. No experience is necessary. Training will be provided. If you are not registered to vote anywhere, you may register to vote in Amherst to be eligible to work at the polls. For more information please email ccarvalo@stuaf.umass.edu or slittlecrowrussell@stuaf.umass.edu or call 545-0355.

Employment

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Services

GET TESTED – Know your status before spring break FREE HIV RAPID TESTING March 14th & 15th UMass Campus Center 9am – 3pm Questions: Call Bob at 413-747-5144 www.tapestryhealth.org

Services

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing. Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Summer Sublet

Alpine Commons Apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes everything. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Big East Territory

West Virginia hosts UMass in second round of NIT

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Less than 48 hours after winning its first postseason game since 1996, the Massachusetts men's basketball team travels to West Virginia to face the No. 1-seeded Mountaineers in the second round of the NIT this evening at 9 p.m.

UMass (24-8) defeated Alabama, 89-87, in overtime on Tuesday night at the Mullins Center. It was the team's first national playoff win since 1996 when the Minutemen went to the Final Four.

In perhaps one of the biggest tests for UMass this season, West Virginia (23-9) hosts the Minutemen at the WVU Coliseum, with the winner hosting the quarterfinals against either No. 6 NC State or No. 7 Marist next week.

UMass and West Virginia's paths to the NIT quarterfinals have been nearly identical. West Virginia finished the regular season in seventh place in the Big East. The Mountaineers defeated Providence in the first round of the Big East Tournament, but were eliminated by No. 12 Louisville, 82-71, in double overtime of last Thursday's quarterfinals – the exact same night UMass was ousted from the Atlantic 10 Tournament by Saint Louis in overtime.

The Mountaineers thought their resume was good enough for an NCAA Tournament at-large bid after the first-round win over the Friars, but they never got the call from the Selection Committee, just like the Minutemen.

Six Big East teams advanced to the Big Dance, with West Virginia and Syracuse being surprisingly shutout of the action and thrown into the NIT – Providence is the third Big East team in the tournament.

UMass will have to shut down the Mountaineers' prominent 3-point shooting, as West Virginia leads the Big East in 3-point field goals made, averaging 10.25 buckets from behind the arc per game.

West Virginia is led by senior Frank Young. The 6-foot-5 forward leads the team in scoring with 14.2 points per game. The Mountaineers have four players averaging in double

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard Ricky Harris scored seven points in UMass' 89-87 overtime win on Tuesday night over Alabama. The Minutemen travel to West Virginia to face the Mountaineers in the second round of the NIT tonight at 9 p.m at the WVU Coliseum.

Senior guard James Life dunks during Tuesday night's first-round win over the Alabama Crimson Tide. Life was one of five Minutemen to finish with double figures in scoring. He ended the game with 12 points on 5-for-10 shooting from the field and 2-for-6 shooting from behind the arc.

Ford questions criteria for NCAA bids

Travis Ford is confused. And so is the rest of the college basketball world.

The NCAA Tournament Selection Committee has coaches and fans scratching their heads trying to figure out the criteria for getting an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament.

How did Stanford get in? Why is Syracuse out? Why did Arkansas get in? Why did Drexel get kicked to the curb with 12 road wins, a 23-win season and road victories against Syracuse and Villanova?

Rob Greenfield

You know as much as anyone.

Not even the experts know what goes on in that room on Selection Sunday. And who are these people that are qualified to make all of these decisions? Have they even seen all of these teams play? How do you have neutral parties when there are athletic directors and conference commissioners on the committee?

All of these questions darted through the minds of the college basketball faithful over the last month, and no one has been able to come up with an answer to how things are done when it comes down to decision time.

Ford had plenty to say on the matter. The Minutemen went 23-8 with a 12-5 road record and a win over Louisville, a Top 20 team, at Louisville. UMass went down in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament to Saint Louis, but the Minutemen didn't even get mentioned in the teams that almost made it. Not even a sniff!

"There's not a formula anymore," Ford said the night before his team's NIT appearance against Alabama. "Any scenario that you can say to prepare yourself to make a tournament, I'll say 'Well, I'll show you a team that did that and they didn't make it.' They say that if you do this then you're going to make it. Well, I'll show you another team that did that and they didn't make it. We've done that. We've sat around looking at schedules and things like that. It's all out the door. It does not matter. You can sit and try to debate a thousand different reasons."

He's right. And this has been a unique situa-

See GREENFIELD on page 7

Let March Madness begin

First round of 2007 NCAA Tournament starts today

BY STEVE GAMS
COLLEGIAN

The NCAA tournament is around the corner. Everyone is putting together their brackets, making their ESPN or Facebook pools. Who will make it to the Final Four? Will there be another George Mason? Can Florida go back-to-back?

All these questions will be answered on April 2 when the nation's two best teams square off for a place in history. On the ESPN nationwide poll, the public has picked Ohio State over Florida in the National Championship game.

MIDWEST DIVISION

Florida received the top spot for the Midwest division and Wisconsin has the second seed. The Gators were ranked No. 1 in the nation for eight weeks and the Badgers only took the top spot for one week.

A team under the radar in the Midwest division is the third-seeded Oregon Ducks. With all the attention on Florida, Wisconsin and even No. 11 Winthrop, Oregon is peaking at the right time.

The Ducks put on a shooting clinic against USC in the Pac-10 Championship. Junior guard Bryce Taylor scored 32 points, going a perfect 11-for-11 from the field and 7 for 7 from behind the arc. Taylor and senior guard Aaron Brooks could help push the Ducks into the Final Four. Brooks is averaging 18 points and almost five assists per contest.

During the regular season, Oregon beat Georgetown, Arizona twice, Washington State on the road, Stanford and USC – all teams in the tournament.

Winthrop is being picked by most experts to be the next George Mason. The Eagles finished undefeated in the Big South and won their conference championship. If Winthrop makes it to the Sweet 16 it will have a potential matchup with Wisconsin.

These teams met on Dec. 4 and Winthrop took the game into overtime but lost, 82-79. The Eagles played UNC strong, losing by seven, and they haven't lost since Jan. 2 against Texas A&M. This might be Winthrop's strongest team, but it has bowed out of the first round in its last seven appearances.

WEST DIVISION

The West is one of the strongest divisions in the bracket with the likes of No. 1 Kansas, No. 2 UCLA and No. 3 Pittsburgh. The higher seeds all have the ability to make a Sweet 16 run with No. 4 Southern Illinois and No. 6 Duke. One of the best opening round matchups is No. 8 Kentucky against No. 9 Villanova. A potential rematch of last year's regional semifinal could happen in the second round with No. 10 Gonzaga

See MARCH MADNESS on page 7

Freshman Greg Oden leads Ohio State in scoring and rebounding with 15.5 points per game and 9.7 rebounds per game. The Buckeyes play No. 16 seed Central Connecticut State in the NCAA Tournament today.

WEST VIRGINIA ENDS UMASS' SEASON PAGE 10 | 'JOSEPH' DAZZLES AT MULLINS PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SNOW : HI: 31 LO: 25 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MARCH 16, 2007

UMPD confirms solicitation ploy

COURTESY MASSACHUSETTS DEPARTMENT OF

The suspects pictured above entered three UMass dormitories posing as cancer foundation fund raisers and stealing approximately $5,000 worth of property.

Students donating to 'cancer fund' deceived

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Police confirmed yesterday that the two suspects who allegedly burglarized three University of Massachusetts dormitories on Tuesday posed as volunteer fund raisers for a national cancer foundation in order to gain access to dormitory rooms.

According to Patrick Archbald, the Deputy Chief of the University of Massachusetts Police Department, the two male suspects under investigation allegedly went from door to door soliciting money for the Avon Breast Cancer Foundation in each of the dormitories. They allegedly broke into and entered three empty and unlocked dormitory rooms in Baker and Brooks Halls in the Central Residential Area and Webster Hall in the Orchard Hill Residential Area.

"That is what they were using as a ploy to make their way up and down the hallways in the dorm," Archbald said. "They were using that association as a way to avoid detection or suspicion."

Solicitation of money is not allowed within the dormitories at UMass without explicit approval from the University, Archbald said.

The Avon Breast Cancer Foundation was contacted by the UMPD following the reports of the crimes and it was corroborated that the foundation does not solicit cash, according to Archbald.

A public safety announcement was released by the UMPD at 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday asking campus residents and employees to report any individuals attempting to solicit money for the Avon Breast Cancer Foundation or any other organization, along with photographs and physical descriptions of the two suspects.

According to Archbald, approximately $5,000 worth of property and cash has been reported as being stolen from the dormitories. No complaints have been received by the UMPD from individuals who might have given the two suspects money for the Cancer foundation. Archbald could not say how much money, if any, had been collected by the two suspects posing as volunteers.

The two suspects currently remain at large, according to Archbald, but the UMPD continues to be confident that the pair will be caught.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins a student.umass.edu

Student witnesses react to burglary scam

BY ERIC ATIAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts junior said one of the suspects involved in Tuesday's burglaries and alleged cancer foundation scam confronted him and asked for money.

Around 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, junior Nicholas McKenzie said one of the suspects, pictured in a UMass Police Department security camera photo, knocked on his Field Hall dorm room door and requested cash for a cancer research organization.

"He knocked on the door, my door's always open anyways, so I just said come in," said McKenzie. "He said how they were raising money for Breast Cancer awareness. I asked what organization he was in, he said it was a non-profit group to raise money to support Breast Cancer research."

McKenzie said he immediately became suspicious because he knew non-profit organizations do not normally solicit cash funds. The suspect who McKenzie said spoke to him is one of two men accused of stealing laptops, a camera and a wallet from three dormitory halls in Central and Orchard Hill Residential Areas.

The alleged larcenies occurred at the Brooks, Baker and Webster Residence Halls. The two suspects began their alleged stealing spree in Brooks Hall and worked their way to Webster Hall, according to police. A camera in Brooks Hall captured photos of the suspects entering the dormitory. McKenzie said the man wearing a white tee shirt with the word "AVON" printed on it was the one who entered his room.

Around 4:30 p.m. Wednesday, the UMPD confirmed these suspects may have been soliciting cash funds for The Avon Breast Cancer Foundation an organization that does not solicit cash, according to police.

When McKenzie asked the suspect which organization he volunteered for, he responded it "was a non-profit group to raise money to support Breast Cancer research."

"I told him how I didn't actually have any money on me, he said, 'oh, OK, that's fine, we accept change, whatever you got.' I told him how I was flat broke," said McKenzie.

McKenzie also said the girlfriend of one of his floor mates

See WITNESSES on page 2

UMass Board of Trustees approves $46 million allocation

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees approved a plan Wednesday to allocate $46 million to existing and new campus projects.

According to the UMass Web site, the funding from UMass' five-year capital plan is allocated to five different projects:

- $24 million for a new building near Hasbrouck Hall. In the new building there will be a 500-seat auditorium, classrooms, and swing space. Swing space is extra rooms for offices and some classes, said UMass Director of News and Information Ed Blaguszewski.
- $10.3 million update of 35-year-old electrical, mechanical, and plumbing systems in Lederle Graduate Research Center.
- $6.7 million to move Plant, Soil, and Insect Sciences from Stockbridge, Hatch, French, and Fernald halls. Academic space in South College will also be moved due to safety concerns and to "provide adequate accommodations in other buildings," according to the Web site.
- $2.7 million to upgrade and replace electrical service in the Campus Center, in order to keep up with current building codes.
- $2.5 million to replace the electrical room in the Campus Center garage.
- $2.5 million increase in elevator and plumbing repairs to Du Bois library, raising the total amount to $8 million.

The money for these repairs and the new building come from a variety of sources. According to Ed Blaguszewski Director of News

See TRUSTEES on page 2

North Apartment students inconvenienced

BY STELLA CHINAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For some residents of the North apartments at the University of Massachusetts, the chaos caused by Saturday's power outage was not just a minor annoyance, but another addition to a series of inconvenient events.

The North Residential Area, which was built last year, distinguishes itself from other residential areas because of its new facilities and slice of independent living. However, not only is North the newest of UMass' residential areas, but it is also the most highly priced. It costs students $3,375 per semester to live in North compared to the $1,852 per semester that residents of other living areas pay. It is due to this fiscal fact that some residents, like junior Joe Najafi, find themselves aggravated with North's inconveniences.

"We pay more, therefore we should absolutely get better service," said Najafi, who has experienced frequent delays in receiving assistance with problems that have occurred in his apartment. Some of these problems, such as a malfunctioning heating system, have been widespread throughout all of North's four residence halls. Junior Joe Napoli has also experienced numerous problems throughout his year of residence in the North apartments.

"We've had a lot of Internet problems, a flood problem in our living room, and a problem with our shower. None of the problems were really handled as fast as they should have been," Napoli explained, although he mentioned that despite the problems he has faced, he is still satisfied with North overall. He also mentioned that he and most of his friends were lucky enough to miss the brunt of Saturday's chaos, only having to deal with a few blinking clocks and confused electronics. Some students however, were not so lucky.

Junior Matt Cross, who lives in North C, had to wait outside of his apartment for an hour until an Apartment Living Advisor checked his UCard and let him in. "I got back to my room around 1 a.m. We knew that there was a power outage, but no one really knew that they would be locked out," he said. Other students had shared Cross' experience,

See NORTH on page 2

COURTESY MASSACHUSETTS

Students living in the North Apartments were unable to gain card access into their buildings for hours after Saturday's power outage.

Al-Qaida chief admits to terrorist plotting

BY KATHRINE SHRADER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Khalid Sheikh Mohammed's claims that he was responsible for dozens of successful, foiled and imagined attacks in the past 15 years relies on a loose definition of the word "responsible." Officials say the 9/11 mastermind was key to some plots but a bit player in others.

The 31 on his list range from the stunningly vicious suicide hijackings of Sept. 11, 2001, to others that current and former government officials say were more talk than concrete plans, such as a plot to kill Jimmy Carter and other former U.S. presidents.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity, noting Mohammed's activities are likely to be the subject of an upcoming military tribunal.

His confession, his first public statement since his March 2003 capture in Pakistan, came in a closed-door hearing in the newly established U.S. tribunal process. A 26-page transcript of the Saturday session at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, was made public Wednesday night.

While there apparently is truth in much of the statement, several officials said, there's also an element of self-promotion. They view the claims as at least in part a rallying cry to bolster his image and that of al-Qaida in the only venue Mohammed has left: a military courtroom from which the public is barred.

"I have never known a criminal either terrorist or otherwise – that didn't exaggerate," said Michigan Rep. Mike Rogers, a former FBI agent and the top Republican on the terrorism panel of the House Intelligence Committee.

Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman said authorities would decide the credibility of Mohammed's claims if he is tried. "These are his words," Whitman said.

The United States linked Mohammed closely to the attacks of 9/11, and his statement said he was responsible "from A to Z." Officials don't doubt his claim that he beheaded

See AL-QAIDA on page 2

KHALID SHEIKH MOHAMMED

Khalid Sheikh Mohammed confessed to his involvement in dozens of terrorist attacks – both successful and unsuccessful – in the past 15 years.

Campus fires claim 100 lives since 2000

BY ALEXI COE
THE HEIGHTS (BOSTON COLLEGE)

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass. – It's the blaring siren that sounds in the middle of a lazy Sunday afternoon and forces you into the bitter Boston winter. It's the resident director declaring that decorative lighting can only be displayed from October to December.

With a strict fire safety policy come these small inconveniences that make many students grumble. Many complain that the administration's rules concerning fire hazards are stringent and arbitrary.

These students may want to rethink their flippant attitudes toward what is shaping up to be quite a serious situation. A recent investigation conducted by Fire Chief magazine and Campus Firewatch has revealed almost 100 campus-related fire deaths across the country since 2000.

If one reviews newspaper headlines from recent years, the prevalence of fires on and around university campuses can be shocking. College students, and those around the Boston area in particular, were jarred most recently by the Feb. 24 incident at Boston University that left two students dead and 30 other people displaced from their homes. The cause of the fatal blaze? A candle.

The Boston University fire is not an isolated incident. According to Fire Chief, college fires are often caused by a cocktail of four factors: a lack of automatic fire sprinklers, missing or disabled smoke alarms, careless disposal of smoking materials, and impaired judgment from alcohol consumption. These behaviors are extremely typical of the average 18 to 22-year-old student.

It is this fact that gives students perspective. While it may seem unreasonable or excessively cautious not to allow candles in residence halls, the startling increase in campus fires in university fires in recent years has

See FIRE on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 102

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonpakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Sheryl Wolnik

BU given top score in campus fire safety

FIRE from page 1

proven that such policies are absolutely necessary.

Fortunately, Boston College has been recognized for its outstanding policies regarding fire safety.

Princeton Review's The Best 361 Colleges: The Smart Student's Guide to Colleges gave BC a top score of 99 in the fire safety category. Scores for other schools fell as low as 60, and averaged 85. This total represents not only how well BC responds to fires, but how successful it is at preventing them.

This success can be credited to the comprehensive program in place at BC to work towards preventing fires and banning materials that could start them.

The Residential Life Fire Safety Committee, comprised of members from environmental health and safety, facilities services, student affairs, and the BC Police Department, looks at current issues that have arisen concerning fire safety as well as ones that may appear in the future.

Portion of allocated funds to go towards building upgrades and Information, there is a pool of money set aside for various campus purposes. A large part of this money is dedicated to auxiliary building upgrades and becomes available to projects as they are moved up on the priority list.

TRUSTEES from page 1

This money comes from the five-year capital plan. Approved last August, this plan includes a $2.14 billion budget from 2007–2011. The capital plan addresses the issue of "the campus' deferred maintenance backlog and growing inventory of obsolete space" in order to "maintain UMass Amherst's standing [as] a leading public research University," said a summary of the UMass capital plan.

Because this money does not cover all of the expenses, more funding is needed. One source of this extra funding, Section 10 money, is made up of borrowed bonds to be repaid over time, said Blaguszewski.

"When you make a list of things to do … you make an estimate of the costs you need. Any updates to these projects need to be re-approved by the Board of Trustees," Blaguszewski said.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu.

UMass Med. school chancellor steps down

Dr. Aaron Lazare, 71, will be stepping down as chancellor of the UMass Medical School after 16 years due to medical reasons.

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — After 16 years as chancellor of the University of Massachusetts Medical School, Dr. Aaron Lazare stepped down from the job Thursday because of health issues.

Lazare, 71, said he will continue to teach at the medical school after taking a year sabbatical to address his heart problems and write a book.

"This is a bittersweet moment for me," Lazare said in a memo sent Thursday to faculty, staff and students. "Beginning with the day I was appointed dean of the medical school, I have had an extraordinary vantage point as this institution has grown into a role as a health sciences campus of international distinction.

"To say that my work over the years has been professionally and personally rewarding is an utter understatement: It has been a privilege."

Lazare, one of the longest-serving medical school deans in the nation, presided over a period of extraordinary growth on the Worcester campus that included a 10-story, 360,000-square-foot research building that was named after him.

Four years after he took the school's helm, UMass was ranked among the top medical schools in primary care by U.S. News & World Report. The magazine ranked UMass fourth out of 125 medical schools in that category last year.

In October, professor Craig Mello won the school's first Nobel Prize in medicine for discovering a way to silence specific genes to help scientists fight illnesses like diabetes and cancer.

"Since Aaron Lazare stepped into the role of chancellor and dean of the University of Massachusetts Medical School, the institution has experienced tremendous success," said U Mass president Jack Wilson. "The history and trajectory of this institution has been nothing short of spectacular, and I believe that Aaron has been an essential component of that stellar rise."

Wilson said he will quickly appoint an interim chancellor and will soon start searching for someone to take the job permanently.

Lazare said he was diagnosed about three weeks ago with a heart arrhythmia after waking up in the middle of the night with a racing heart and irregular pulse.

The condition runs in the family, and the doctor said it's easily treated with medication.

"I plan to live for another 20 or 30 years," he said. "But you realize you have to slow down at some point."

In 2005, Lazare recovered from kidney cancer following an operation.

Lazare came to UMass as a professor and chair of psychiatry in 1982, after spending 14 years at the Massachusetts General Hospital and teaching psychiatry at Harvard Medical School. He became dean of the UMass medical school in 1990, and was named chancellor a year later.

An expert on the topics of shame and humiliation, Lazare wrote "On Apology" in 2004, and is planning to write a book about humiliation during the next year.

PARKING SERVICES
REGULATION REMINDER

Effective Monday, March 19, 2007, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. These hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMASS parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a proper permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 35, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone or access lane.

For more information, please visit our website http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.

Card access denied after power outage

Saturday's brief loss of power to the North Apartments was caused by an unknown problem in Western Mass Electric's system.

NORTH from page 1

as UCard readers, which unlock the residents' apartment doors, had failed to work properly after the power outage.

The card readers, which Director of Housing Operations John Findley, stated, had been locked after the outage, and were finally able to run on a back up power supply beginning at around 2:30 a.m. He explained that, "University staff stayed overnight in the buildings trying to re-activate them. By noon on Sunday, the card readers had been restored by Ingersoll Rand, the company that works with them."

Findley also finally provided answers to a question that many residents are still asking. Why did the power go out in the first place? He explained that the brief loss of power was caused by an unknown problem or glitch in Western Mass Electric's system. Western Mass Electric provides the North Residential Area, along with other areas on campus, with power.

Although some residents have expressed their aggravation with some of North's inconveniences, most are not planning to pack up and leave any time soon. Even Cross, who could not enter his apartment during the power failure, is not up in arms about the event. He remarked, "It wasn't a huge disaster, just an annoying way to end a night."

Stella Cernak can be reached at ccernak@student.umass.edu.

Dorm burglars seen by students in Field Hall gave the man with the white tee shirt $10. When she found out it was a ploy, McKenzie said she was particularly upset because her mother is a Cancer survivor.

WITNESS from page 1

While McKenzie lives in Field Hall, the two suspects only stole electronics and money from the Brooks, Baker and Webster Halls, according to police. The last report of theft was at 8:49 p.m. on Tuesday, around the time that the suspect entered McKenzie's room. McKenzie said the man stuttered a little bit when McKenzie asked him which organization he represented, but described his personality as "very cool and collected about it."

"I find that kind of stuff particularly offensive, because not only is he keeping the money that he's raising and conning people, but also the people who aren't there, he's actually scoping out their rooms and taking stuff and seems like they can get away with it," said McKenzie.

Tim McCall contributed to this report.

Eric Athas can be reached at editor@dailycollegian.com.

Al-Qaida chief confesses murder of Wall Street Journal reporter

AL-QAIDA from page 1

Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl with what he called his "blessed right hand." And he corroborates al-Qaida's known interest in attacking embassies, London's Heathrow Airport, the New York Stock Exchange and other targets.

But his role in some plots may be more minor than his hands-on involvement in coordinating the attacks of 9/11 — evidence of which was found on his computer when he was captured. Some of the plots were formulated in al-Qaida's early years, when alliances among jihadists were even more fluid than they are today.

"If you look at him having a senior position in al-Qaida, when he says he's responsible, it can be interpreted in a lot of different ways," said Ben Venzke, head of the Virginia-based IntelCenter, a government contractor that monitors al-Qaida messaging.

Some examples:

— Mohammed claims that he was "responsible for the 1993 World Trade Center Operation," which killed six and injured more than 1,000 when a bomb was detonated in an underground garage. Six jihadists with ties to international terror networks are serving life sentences. One official said Mohammed didn't hatch the plot, but he and elements of al-Qaida may have supported it.

He also claims to be responsible for the bombing of a nightclub in Bali, Indonesia, which was frequented by British and Australian tourists. Current and former officials say that his role was probably that of a financier for an al-Qaida affiliate group — Jemaah Islamiyah — operating in Southeast Asia.

Mohammed's link "could have been as small as arranging a safe house for travel. It could have been arranging finance," Rogers said. "But for his own self-worth, he may have tended to say, 'I was responsible for Bali.'"

He claims to have been responsible for providing financial support to "hit American, Jewish and British targets in Turkey." That's probably a reference to the 2003 bombing of two synagogues, a British-based bank and the British consulate in Istanbul, killing 58 people including the British consul-general.

Prosecutors said Osama bin Laden personally ordered the plot, and Mohammed was not named as a key provider of financial support during a three-year trial. Instead, Turkish authorities say a Syrian — Lxa'i Mohammad Haj Bakr al-Saqa — masterminded the attacks and ran $170,000 between al-Qaida and the Turkey-based militants.

And Mohammed claimed he shared responsibility — he stressed shared — for an attempt to assassinate Pope John Paul II during a 2005 stop in the Philippines. Authorities later blamed the plot on Ramzi Yousef, who was convicted of masterminding the 1993 World Trade Center bombing and accused of plotting to blow up U.S. airliners. Yousef was never charged in plotting to kill the pope.

Mohammed's claims help answer some questions. Some intelligence officials have long believed that would-be shoe bomber Richard Reid was part of a larger plan to take down airliners after 9/11, in part, because of e-mails he wrote that were discovered on a computer in a Paris Internet cafe.

Another British citizen has been convicted in the plot. In his statement Saturday, Mohammed said he was responsible for the shoe bomber operation "to down two American airplanes."

Current and former government officials say the CIA spent hundreds — if not thousands — of hours interrogating Mohammed and would have heard him describe in great detail precisely what he claims to have done in each plot. The transcript provided a snippet of his claims, officials said.

A CIA official declined to analyze Mohammed's statements.

One official cautioned that many of Mohammed's claims during interrogation were "white noise" — designed to send the U.S. on wild goose chases or to get him through the day's interrogation session.

In the Defense Department transcript, Mohammed said his statement was not made under duress. But Mohammed and human rights advocates have alleged that he was tortured, and legal experts say that could taint all his statements.

"In light of the rambling nature of his statements, and the views of some that he is prone to exaggerate his importance, we cannot feel confident we know exactly the level of his involvement in various prior attacks," said Joshua Dressler, a criminal law expert at Moritz College of Law at Ohio State University.

Report suggests that U.S. higher education needs improvement

By Rob Trucchinelli
U-WIRE DC BUREAU

WASHINGTON — The United States' performance in college education is lagging on the world stage, and the situation will only get worse unless radical changes are made, according to a new report.

"Hitting Home: Quality, Cost and Access Challenges Confronting Higher Education," says that the United States' higher education system will be unable, at its current rate, to produce enough degrees to meet the demand of its own workforce.

The report, authored by Travis Reindl on behalf of Making Opportunity Affordable, also indicates that the United States will fall farther behind international competitors in that department.

Other inequalities also contribute to the problem, and the report says "the United States has miles to go to eliminate racial and ethnic disparities in degree production."

"These gaps start in K-12 education ... in some cases, before," Reindl said. "What you have a lot of times, especially with minority groups and low-income groups, they tend to be concentrated in areas where you don't have the best schools."

While the number of students pursuing degrees in the United States is at an all-time high, tuition and other costs of attending college have skyrocketed in recent years.

Additionally, the report says that while American students are in the top five worldwide in terms of the percentage of students who attend college, they are 16th in terms of students who finish.

"Some of these other countries ... you don't have the same degree of diversity that you have in the United States," Reindl said. "You don't have some of the social and economic gaps to the extent of the United States.

"You have a more homogeneous population in a place like Norway; you also have less of a gap between rich and poor in some of those countries."

The report also outlined its sweeping reform plan to remedy many of these situations. One of its important priorities is to increase degree completion rates, especially as a percentage of enrollment rates.

"I think one of the first things that you could do," Reindl said, "is to really figure out which students aren't finishing and why. Some institutions already do that, but I think every institution can do a better job of that.

"That's when you start figuring out how to reach out to them."

Among the others include a better curriculum transition from secondary education to college and smarter spending by colleges.

"In some ways, in the United States, we suffer from the fact we're a really decentralized education system," Reindl said. "We focus on local control, and when it comes to colleges and universities, there's a lot of independent authority.

"A lot of activity is so scattered, that sometimes it's hard for the right hand to know what the left hand is doing."

He also said that the preliminary findings of another MOA report, coming out later in the spring, indicate that increases in costs of college attendance for students are not due to increases in curriculum and instruction spending.

The MOA hopes to implement these goals by providing "research, tools and support" to school systems and policymakers with the intent of "transforming how they deliver post-secondary education to serve more students without reducing quality."

These efforts are supported by a $25.5 million commitment over five years by the Lumina Foundation, an Indianapolis-based group.

Reindl said many of the people approached by the foundation — state legislators, business leaders and school superintendents in several states — have been receptive to its intentions, but there has been some resistance by people who don't believe the problem is as bad as the report would indicate.

'Joseph and the Dreamcoat' takes Mullins Center by storm

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 16, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Plagiarism in Journalism

Andy Smith

What's the easiest way for a journalist to lose his job? Plagiarism. Every writer, whether they are a third-grader doing a book report, or a professional journalist, knows that you do not take someone else's writing and pass it off as your own. If you want to use someone else's writing, you must first cite the source.

Apparently, Boston Globe football writer Ron Borges never got that memo. He was recently caught trying to use someone else's writing and pass it off as his own. Usually, every Sunday, Borges bylines a "Football Notes" column that runs in the sports section of the Globe. This column is a compilation of miscellaneous information gathered pertaining to the National Football League. In his Mar. 4 column, he was found by the Web site coldhardfootballfacts.com to have used a previously published article by sportswriter Mike Sando of the News Tribune of Tacoma, Wash.

If you were to look at the Borges column and the Sando article side-by-side, they are the published word-for-word with no differences. This is a clear violation of the unwritten Golden Rule of Journalism that no journalist, under any circumstances, will use another journalist's writing word-for-word without crediting the source.

Now, before you decide that Borges is a thief and should be fired from the Globe, let's hear the other side of the story. At the end of every Sunday notes column that is published in the Globe sports section, there is a disclaimer that states, "material from personal interviews, wire services, other beat writers, and league and team sources was used in this report." Does this get Borges off the hook? Absolutely not.

It was out of pure laziness that he copied and pasted Sando's article into his column, and that's just unacceptable.

The disclaimer means he used someone else's information and did not do his own reporting. That does not give him any reason to basically copy and paste Sando's writing into his column. Another piece of important information: according to Globe sports editor Joe Sullivan, Borges belongs to a group of national football writers who subscribe to a community notes system where these writers gather and share information online the other writers can use in their Sunday notes columns. Borges's defense is that he was simply using the information provided to him and he was unaware the article was already published on Feb. 25. Does this get Borges off the hook? No. This sounds more like a cop-out to me.

Now, let's make it clear that I do not know Ron Borges as a person and probably will never know Ron Borges as a person. He has written some cynical columns about my beloved New England Patriots in the past, but as a journalist, he has the privilege to do that. This has nothing to do with my feelings on his recent journalistic wrongdoings. I personally think the man should lose his job, but who am I? I am just a young, naïve columnist at a college newspaper. So let's hear what some professional sportswriters have to say.

"For years, when I primarily covered college basketball and football for the Los Angeles Times, I never used community notes packages," said Espn.com columnist Gene Wojciechowski in an e-mail. "I did my own reporting, rather than use pool material gathered by other writers around the country. And if I did use information from another writer, I always attributed it to that paper, that writer, or both. I'm not saying using pool information is right or wrong. I'm simply saying that by doing my own reporting for the entire notes package, I never had to worry about the information's authenticity, the context of the quotes, or having another writer or newspaper question where I got the material."

Former Sports Illustrated senior writer Jeff Pearlman wrote in an e-mail, "I honestly don't know enough about the specific [Borges] charges to elaborate. But if he intentionally lifted stuff and tried to pass it as his own, and I'm not saying he did, he – or any writer – should be fired."

As you can see, I am not the only one who stays away from plagiarism. Luckily for Borges, as far as we know, this is his first offense of plagiarism, so he will probably keep his job. He is currently on a well-deserved two-month suspension without pay from the Globe. However, if in the next two months, the editors at the Globe find that he has plagiarized before, we will probably find Mr. Borges as a full-time host on a sports radio program soon.

There is no justifiable reason why Ron Borges did what he did. It was out of pure laziness that he copied and pasted Sando's article into his column, and that is just unacceptable. In this age of the Internet we live in, it has become so easy to plagiarize something, whether it is a newspaper article or a book report. With just a click of a mouse and typing a few words into Google, anyone can find anything they need online. Often, an editor or a professor will not go through a strenuous Internet search to find if you took the material word-for-word from a Web site.

I am not denouncing his use of the notes sharing system Borges uses, but he should have changed the words around to make it his own. As a writer, it's your job and your duty to have a level of integrity, everything you put your name on should be your own. You should never take someone else's work and expect to get away with it. As Dave Kindred, a columnist for The Sporting News, once wrote to me in an e-mail, "You do your reporting, thinking, and writing in portions according to the time you have. It's called being professional."

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu

Due-in for a change

Friday, Mar. 16 is a date that is near and dear to all of our hearts. Today is a gateway to a week of socially accepted debauchery for college students nationwide; it also means there are a mere 24 hours left until arguably the most socially accepted day for the consumption of that gorgeously rich and thick beverage the dancing Irish puppets on TV are always talking about. But it also marks the end of something just as important – possibly the most demanding week of the semester for many of us.

Mike Reilly

Simply put, midterm week is awful. So awful in fact, that I procrastinated by writing this ed/op piece. Something had to be done because I know I'm not the first one to feel like a cheap S&M date for the arduously domineering amount of work due this week. But let's stop there and examine this for a moment.

Many of us are expected to take around three midterms, each weighing up to 20-25 percent towards our final grades, write a paper or two – all the while being expected to dutifully attend every class, and complete the homework assigned for them. I mean come on, let's be honest, if this was finals week people would be up in arms, and rightfully so. But the reason for that is due to the rules and regulations that have been implemented for finals week, so we all know where we stand.

I know a student who had to take three midterms all on one day this week, which wasn't even allowed during finals.

However, I know a student who had to take three midterms all on one day this week, which isn't even allowed during finals. According to the Office of the Registrar's online Web site regarding Final Exams, "If a student is scheduled to take three final examinations on the same day, the faculty member running the chronologically middle exam shall be required to offer a make-up exam."

So why is it that midterm week is allowed to be run so haphazardly? Are midterms merely an unspoken formality, set in motion by jaded professors for a feeling of accomplishment for the first half of the semester? Let me slow down on that front before I start resonating like a Hillary Clinton conspiracy theory. Whatever the reason, it's past due for a change.

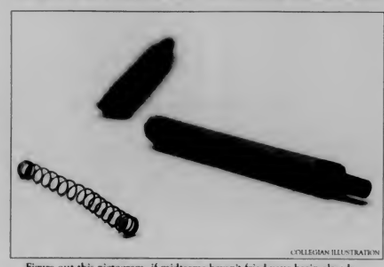
I propose taking steps to either suspend the classes giving exams during midterm week, or to employ a structure similar to that of finals week. This way, as students, we would know where and how to position ourselves for one of top two most grueling weeks of the semester. Being able to plan and knowing you have extra time from your normal schedule would have an impact on eating enough food, getting enough sleep, and to somewhat lower stress levels – all of which have an effect on our grades and our overall health. Speaking from experience, there is nothing worse than getting sick and trying to pull an all-nighter for an exam you have after your three other classes, and praying that somehow you will make it to the dining commons or to Dunk'n in between, for a grade-saving caffeine rush.

Yet there are still those high-minded individuals who would argue against my claim, saying that this all comes with the college territory. Though it's true that laziness and procrastination are undeniably integral parts of defining many of us as college students, myself included, there is simply too much common sense to this proposal to chalk it all up to carelessness. Midterm week is unquestionably different structure-wise and expectation-wise. This fact puts us, as students, at a disadvantage academically.

While this year's midterm season has come and passed, it doesn't mean there's nothing you can do about these issues. Talk to the student government, e-mail the Dean of Students, or start a Facebook petition, and save yourself some gray hairs and sleepless nights – but not now. Right now you get to relax and enjoy Spring Break 2007 because you've earned it.

Look out the plane window on the way to your tropical vacation, or kick back and watch Jack Bauer, in all his glory, save us from harm's way yet again. Whatever it is you're doing for break, have one on me – but remember, a hangover isn't around for 18 years... Happy St. Patty's Day to all, and to all a great break.

Mike Reilly is a UMass student, and is totally hanging loose right now.



COLLEGIAN ILLUSTRATION

Figure out this pictogram, if midterms haven't fried your brain already.

Cleaning house brings dirty laundry

Lauren Modisette

Perhaps you've heard of the latest shame to hit Washington this week – the U.S. Attorney Purge Scandal has officially slammed the front pages of major newspapers, and everyone's pissed.

Recent news reports show that, in the past year the U.S. Justice Department has systematically sifted through the nation's list of U.S. Attorneys in an attempt to "clean house for political reasons."

Seven U.S. Attorneys were fired and one was "forced out," purportedly to have a chance to appoint other attorneys in their place.

But critics say these prosecutors were purged because they weren't considered to be "team players" for Republicans. Upon request for an explanation of their termination, they were simply told that "the administration is grateful for your service, but wants to give someone else the chance to serve your district."

The concept of "cleaning house" for a new term is not unusual, but even seasoned politicians like Hillary Clinton noted its difference in this case. Clinton pointed out that it was rare for the administration to be making changes and appointing new prosecutors at this point in a president's term.

Dean Alfange Jr., a retired political science professor from the University of Massachusetts Amherst, says "when as many as eight United States Attorneys were asked to resign at the same time, questions were soon raised as to why. And these questions led to serious suspicions of improper political interference."

Alfange continues to explain the situations of some of the purged Attorneys, saying that one had successfully prosecuted a Republican Congressman while bringing criminal charges against the third-highest official in the Central Intelligence Agency. A second removed Attorney General "had not responded to the urgings of a Republican United States Senator and a Republican member of Congress to announce indictments of Democrats in time to allow the news of those indictments to be used against Democratic candidates in the November elections."

The justice system is keeping something from the American people, something that has the potential to influence the prosecution of federal crimes.

These underlying events strongly suggest the idea that the Republican Party is manipulating the justice system to their advantage. We are witnessing the Bush Administration's attempt to remove any non-Republican threat from the system. This is bad news if you're not on their side.

Alfange continues to say that, "of all the departments within the executive branch of the federal government, the Department of Justice is the one that must remain substantially insulated from political control." If not, then the justice system, based around truth and objectivity, could be coerced by political considerations. Though the President has control of policy direction in executive departments, he "must not control actions and decisions related to enforcement of law – particularly where there is a question of whether the law might be applied differently to members or supporters of one political party than to members or supporters of another."

So why does this matter to you and me? The justice system is keeping something from the American people, something that has the potential to influence the prosecution of federal crimes.

"It seems clear that the current administration is eager to use the legal (as well as the political) machinery of the federal government to put obstacles in the way of its political opponents and to favor the interests of members of the Republican Party and major financial contributors to that party," continues Alfange.

Despite the fact that those in powerful law positions are often political appointees, they still must have a certain amount of independence. They must be able to use personal discretion. If they do not have that freedom, then politics takes a hold over justice, leading the blind in directions it's not supposed to go.

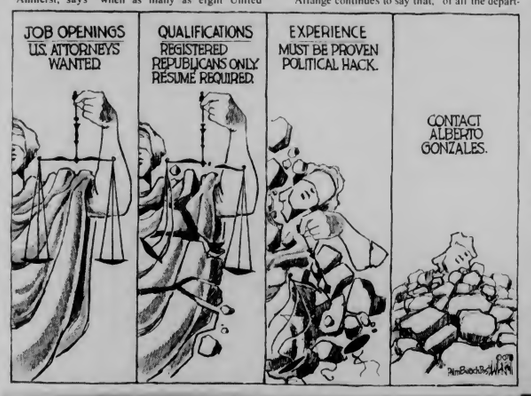
As with Hurricane Katrina, the Iraq war, and other historical controversies like the Pentagon Papers and Watergate, our government is attempting to hide something. Now, more than ever, Bush is beginning to resemble President Nixon.

The White House has said that President Bush had minimal involvement in this case in an attempt to avoid any possibility of impeachment or hurting his credibility. But e-mails that were released suggest that there were ulterior motives to the purge that have the potential for a political crisis in the White House. At this point the Senate is now requesting interviews with those who were involved in the process. They are requiring all documents to be available to them for further observation and are also requesting that the players make themselves available for voluntary questioning.

This is important because otherwise it could result in a national crisis. The Republican Party is attempting to overthrow the system from the inside out. It doesn't even seem like they put in any effort to cover up their tracks.

If our President is in fact involved, then he's treading dangerous waters. This is an impeachable incident, and a series of events that may prove to be historical. We may be on our way to appointing a new President along with those U.S. Attorneys.

Lauren Modisette writes on Fridays. She can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NON-COMMITTED FAIR TRADE

While I applaud Teresa Franco's Mar. 14 article on Fair Trade coffee, there are a few more facts to the story that many consumers may not be aware of.

The Fair Trade Certified logo that Franco references is a symbol given by the organization TransFair USA. What should be added is how the organization certifies coffee transections, not companies. This means that companies can advertise themselves as being fair trade even though they are actually only a small percentage fair trade.

However, organizations like the Fair Trade Federation certify companies that are committed to being 100 percent fair trade. The question is not why fair trade, but why not 100 percent fair trade? Why aren't companies such as Starbucks, which purchase three percent fair trade as Franco wrote, not purchasing all of their coffee fair trade?

Although it is a good step that the Worcester Dining Hall is offering fair trade coffee as an option, therein is where the fault lies. Fair Trade is not a type of coffee. It is the same coffee as the other options – the only difference is that the farmer was paid a living wage for it.

Martha Powers
UMass student

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMICARTISTS FOR NEXT SEMESTER!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Send an e-mail to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 16, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Broadway show thrills UMass

'Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat' astounds

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Elvis, a golfing millionaire, line dancing and cheerleaders, flashing lights and crazy dancing. Sounds like something out of Vegas, right? Close, but all this was seen in "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," which was performed last night at the Mullins Center.

This Broadway musical is based on a biblical story of Joseph, one of Jacob's 12 sons. Joseph is Jacob's favorite, and he doesn't bother to keep it a secret, giving him gift after gift and singing his praises. Joseph also has a special talent – he can interpret dreams with incredible accuracy.

One day Jacob gives Joseph an "amazing Technicolor dreamcoat," which sends the other 11 brothers over the edge. They hatch a plan to sell Joseph into slavery and to pretend that he was killed while battling a goat. Jacob is crushed, and Joseph is hauled off to Egypt to be a slave to Potiphar, an Egyptian millionaire. While he's there, Joseph impresses Potiphar so much that Joseph starts to run Potiphar's household, until he gets caught being seduced by Mrs. Potiphar. He gets thrown in jail where he interprets fellow prisoners' dreams.

When word gets to the Pharaoh about what Joseph can do, he pulls Joseph from the prison to interpret his dreams, which tell Joseph that Egypt will have seven years of plentiful crops, and then seven years of complete famine. Joseph becomes the Pharaoh's right hand man and helps prepare Egypt for the famine.

When the famine comes, Joseph's family is hit hard, so they come to Egypt for help. Not realizing that they are talking to Joseph, they grovel for food, which Joseph gives them, but not before framing one brother for stealing a golden cup. Joseph finally reveals himself to his family when he sees their selflessness in trying to save their brother. He reunites with his father and all is right with the world.

The musical is supposed to take place in biblical Egypt, but when was the last time anyone heard of Jacob using his cell phone to keep in touch with his sons?

It sounds like a regular old, run-of-the-mill bible story, but leave it to Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice to create from it an energetic, flashy and fun Broadway show. Before "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," Webber and Rice had paired up to write the hit rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar."

The two eventually parted ways – Rice went on to write songs for Disney movies such as Aladdin and The Lion King. Since "Joseph," Webber has written a number of popular Broadway shows, including "Cats," "Starlight Express," and "Phantom of the Opera," which was turned into a movie in 2004. He has also won numerous awards, including seven Tonys, three Grammys and an Oscar.

Originally a 20-minute school concert piece in England in 1968, "Joseph" got great reviews in local papers. It spread to performances in local cathedrals, and from there, it was "expanded and reopened at the London Palladium in 1991, going on to break box-office records," according to the Web site Andrew Lloyd Webber's Really Useful Group. It is now performed by both professional and amateur groups alike.

Last night's performance was performed by a traveling Broadway group. The unmistakable energy and high caliber of performances that are characteristic of a Broadway show were very much present. Many of the scenes were as though they were taken straight from a show in Las Vegas, complete with strobe lights and catchy music.

The musical is supposed to take place in biblical Egypt, but when was the last time anyone heard of Jacob using his cell phone to keep in touch with his sons, and to take a quick pic when a good photo-op comes up? What about cheerleaders urging the hero to "go, go, go"? And it's almost a sure thing that Egyptian millionaires back then didn't hang out on the greens playing golf. The Pharaoh, who bore a striking resemblance to Elvis, made his Valley Girl groupies swoon with every shake of his hips.

It was these random and funny surprises that kept the show interesting and fresh. It wasn't in-your-face music and high-energy dancing, however. There were some lower-key points, for example, two solo songs by Joseph – "Close Every Door" and "Any Dream Will Do." There were also a variety of musical inspirations used. Joseph's brothers drew from the Wild West for the song "One More Angel in Heaven," they became starving Frenchmen in "Those Canaan Days," and finally channeled Harry Belafonte in "Benjamin Calypso."

The ensemble was full of great performers who were thrilling to watch. The always entertaining brothers of Joseph got great reactions from the audience every time, due to their perfect timing and expressions. Joseph himself, played by Adam Ryan Tackett, had a powerful voice, and was very endearing. The narrator, the woman who tells the story of Joseph, played by Andrea Andert, who was filling in for the usual Clarissa Grace, was comedic and kept the pace of the story going. "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" was hugely entertaining, and deserves all the acclaim it has received in the past.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu.

A full page of photos of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" can be found on page 3.

UMass Football seniors celebrate their season

The Dining Services managers, and coaches and graduating seniors of the UMass football team attended a "Savor the Victory" lunch yesterday in honor of their defeat over Montana. They enjoyed a delicious meal of Elk and Antelope.

The Book Nook

Spend break with a book

By Jen O'Brien, Amy Calandrella, and Genevieve Crane
Collegian Columnists

Looking for a good book to read this spring break? Well, whether you are spending your time on long plane rides, lounging on the beach or captive in your boring hometown, you are sure to find the perfect fix on this list.

Dreading a week at home with nothing to do? Cure your boredom with Susan Steinburg's "Hydroplane." This collection of witty short stories in which Steinburg reexamines high school memories will cause you to have sudden fits of laughter. Crafted with curt sentences, a matter-of-fact tone, and an endearing love of tangents, her stories revisit adolescent awkwardness, first sexual experiences, and remind us how our past always echoes and resonates in our present life. Reading "Hydroplane" in your hometown will no doubt leave you awash in memories.

It's worth noting that Steinburg is a graduate of The MFA program at UMass. Last fall she returned to campus to read some of her stories at Memorial Hall as part of the Visiting Writers Series. (go to www.umass.edu/english/eng/mfa/vws.htlm for more information). By the time she finished reading, the entire room was red-faced with laughter.

Looking for a light beach read? Mitch Albom's "For One More Day" is the well anticipated follow up to his best-selling novels "Tuesdays With Morrie" and "The Five People You Meet in Heaven." In this tale we encounter Charley Benetto, a washed up, middle-aged, depressed drunk, estranged from his family and friends.

His mother's death further propels him into depression and he attempts suicide, but fails. Soon after, in this fog between life and death, he encounters the figure of his dead mother. She brings him on a whirlwind tour of their life together, which was not always pleasant. Introduced to his shortcomings as a son and the infinite potential of his life, Benetto realizes his own value as a person, and the value of his relationships with others.

Like Albom's previous books, this story serves its purpose as simple, short, and inspirational with relatively well-written prose. Albom is notorious for his often overdone sentimentality, and "For One More Day" is no exception. The premise of this book is interesting and has wide appeal, for many often wonder what they would do "for one more day" with a loved one. Albom's approach to the topic, although heart wrenching, somehow lacks creativity and depth. If you are looking for an afternoon's easy read, however, "For One More Day" will do the trick.

In the mood to enter the dark house of love? Then try "Tempting Evil" by Keri Arthur. The main character Riley Jenson is half-were-wolf, and half-vampire. Of course this makes her job of policing supernatural races that much easier. Her latest task is to enter the heavily guarded pleasure palace of Deshon Starr, a mad-scientist.

If you love vampires and werewolves then you were born to read this book. In this tale Riley encounters a spirit lizard, psychic, and other supernatural beings all of which were brought together for one reason or another concerning Deshon's estate. Arthur creates an interesting and engaging world, with plenty of romance and action mixed in. The addicting storyline will leave you wanting more. If you enjoy this book, make sure to read "Full Moon Rising" and "Kissing Sun" also by Arthur, for more of Riley's back-story.

Searching for an epic adventure during your break? Mentally prepare yourself with Yann Martel's "Life of Pi." A survival story, the protagonist finds himself facing what appears to be certain death at the hands of a Bengal Tiger, his only accomplice on a life raft stranded in the middle of the ocean. Fantastical islands and hallucinogenic sailors find their niche within the novel, but Martel so clearly enjoys his narration that he makes everything within this unbelievable world seem plausible.

Martel bases his plot on Moacyr Scliars' short story "Max and the Cats." Martel breathes new life into the work by creating an intelligent and empathetic protagonist. He believed that there could be no better metaphor for self-struggle than the portrayal of a boy trapped on a boat alone with a Bengal Tiger, and perhaps he was right.

So no matter where your spring break is taking you, make sure you pick up one of these books to occupy your time.

The writers can be reached at jlobr0@student.umass.edu.

Classical performance set to stun with fun, modern twists

By Michael Hardman
Collegian Staff

Classical works are generally accompanied by a puffed-up, stiff atmosphere suitable only for those who want to hear strict recreations of beloved Mozart, Beethoven, and others. There are, however, groups of musicians coming together in order to break this mold of performing and who then stomp on the broken remains.

Tenor Nathan Granner and Beau Bledsoe, a guitarist, have formed a cohesive bond with a belief in that very attitude. Granner, a punk rocker in the flesh, is a member of The American Tenors, whose vocal skills are chock-full of raw energy and dark beauty. Bledsoe is a master of the flamenco guitar and has played extensively in different cultures. In their collaboration both styles are present in equal measure and this strange partnership has earned many standing ovations.

Their musical tour, "Mozart Was a Punk," is making a stop at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Mar. 25.

"We are going to do the traditional flamenco that rocks. It won't be harsh, it's going to be nice music. Girls really love it. It's great for a date," said Granner recently.

While Granner and Bledsoe stick to the original songs of the classical realm, they play in different arrangements that cross rivers and gorges that most classical musicians are afraid to even dream about. While doing this can be dangerous to integrity, the duo has meticulously worked to create a perfect balance that is both beautiful and daring.

Their debut album titled "Departure" signifies their intents. It is filled with the classics that most aficionados will recognize and there is also some good old "southern comfort" music interspersed as well.

They are not fully satisfied yet for they wish to push themselves further out in the universe by creating an album full of outlaw music. "Our album "Departure" is just the beginning of a departure," said Bledsoe.

These two guys are rockers. They contain that certain showmanship that many bands cannot conceive. They have successfully combined a little bit of insanity with consummate professionalism. They have a passionate respect for their art, yet they will always say that they want to make their shows a party.

"The thing that we are trying to do is be pied piperish," said Granner. The story of the Pied Piper is that a man came into a town and essentially used his music to lure 130 people into a cave to be held hostage over a money dispute. While they are not literally trying to take people hostage, what the duo is doing is luring people away from what is comfortable, usual, and sane for them. They are taking the audience's ears and mind's hostage for the duration of their performance. Their hope is that with some luck those ears and minds will develop a thirst for more.

Granner and Bledsoe met while they were in college. They became friends through a music course that they took together and immediately noticed some chemistry. They also found that neither one wanted to stick to the rules that their professors preached.

While they did have an everlasting passion for the classical genre, they recognized that young people do not go to these shows. "We were trying to figure out a way to get this music to people our own age group," said Bledsoe. Through experimentation and tedious practice, they created their album "Departure," that embodied everything they had learned.

"There is crossover and there is real musical range. There is sentimentality and there is imagination. There is Andrea Bocelli and there is Nathan Granner," wrote David Perkins, a professor at the University of Massachusetts.

The show on Sunday, Mar. 25 is the first night most students will be back from spring break and would be a great way to return. It is at the Iron Horse Music Hall at 7 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 in advance or $15 at the door.

Michael Hardman can be reached at mhardman@student.umass.edu.

Nathan Granner and Beau Bledsoe take their training in and love of classical music and infuse it with modern and ethnic elements to create an entirely new and delightful sound.

Mass Attack returns to Boston

HOCKEY from page 10

Cahoon doesn't want — or need — is for UMass to be satisfied.

Cahoon wants the Minutemen to go into the Garden today and demand success, not expect it. He said it's nice see all the work from the summer and fall begin to pay off, but all is not accomplished yet.

"We just got through talking about how great it is to be playing at this time of year and have the games be real meaningful games," Cahoon said outside the Minutemen's locker room after practice on Wednesday. "From that standpoint, it's fulfilling. I don't know if you can call it satisfying. You're satisfied if you win it. We're certainly not satisfied, but we feel fulfilled to be able to be there and part of it."

UMass enters the weekend playing some of its best hockey this season. Currently the Minutemen are in the midst of a six-game winning streak that includes sweeps of Northeastern and Maine to end the regular season, and a second one over the latter in the quarterfinals last weekend.

Nearly a month has passed since the last time the Minutemen were defeated. That was on Feb. 17 in Burlington, Vt., in a 3-0 loss to the Catamounts. Counting the defeat and a tie with Providence on Feb. 10, UMass is 6-1-1 since the middle of February.

But that's something Cahoon and the rest of his team have blocked out of their consciousness. The coach doesn't believe in carry-over, repeating what he has been saying since UMass began its hot streak: every weekend is different.

"I think the stage piece is what you need to block out," Cahoon said. "The significance of the game is clear, you can't go in there having just any expectation of what you have to do, you have to go in there and be demanding of what you need to do."

Jarman sounded just like his coach when asked about playing the Wildcats in the semifinals. Despite taking two-of-three games of the regular-season series from UNH, he said that all doesn't matter now in the playoffs.

"That does help, but this is the semifinals of the Hockey East, so that really doesn't mean anything," Jarman said. "It's a brand new game and we have to take care of business."

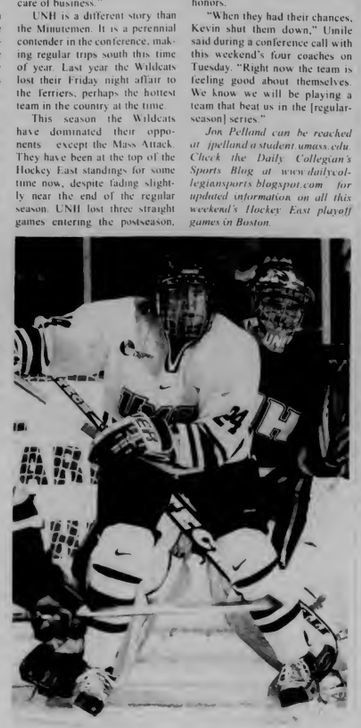
UNH is a different story than the Minutemen. It is a perennial contender in the conference, making regular trips south this time of year. Last year the Wildcats lost their Friday night affair to the Terriers, perhaps the hottest team in the country at the time.

This season the Wildcats have dominated their opponents — except the Mass Attack. They have been at the top of the Hockey East standings for some time now, despite fading slightly near the end of the regular season. UNH lost three straight games entering the postseason, but then rolled over Providence in the quarterfinals.

According to coach Dick Umile, goaltending turned things around for the Wildcats against the Friars. The statement is warranted given Kevin Regan's superb play last weekend. He stopped a combined 84 shots (42 each night) in a pair of shutouts. The performance earned him Hockey East Player of the Week honors.

"When they had their chances, Kevin shut them down," Umile said during a conference call with this weekend's four coaches on Tuesday. "Right now the team is feeling good about themselves. We know we will be playing a team that beat us in the [regular-season] series."

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Check the Daily Collegian's Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for updated information on all this weekend's Hockey East playoff games in Boston.



Sophomore forward Alex Berry has recorded 12 points this season. He has six goals and six assists in 26 games played.

Virtue steps up to fill Matheson's void

VIRTUE from page 10

the final regular season games at home against Maine. Then Nolet and Bevis both returned for the first playoff game against the Black Bears, a 3-2 win.

Nolet was sidelined again in that game with a new injury, and the next night Virtue was back in the lineup once again filling the void left by Matheson, who returned to defenseman once more. But by this time, Virtue had proven that he deserved a defined role as one of the team's four centers.

"Last weekend against Maine, we found a position for him," Cahoon said. "We put him in Matheson's line between [Kevin] Jarman and [Will] Ortiz, and we wanted to just watch him a couple of shifts there."

Although entering the game he didn't know how long he would play or where, Virtue stayed right where he started the game.

"We felt comfortable enough with the way that line was playing and with the way he was complementing them that we just left him there," Cahoon said.

The coach also said that he's seen marked improvement from the sophomore just in the few weeks he's played consistently.

"He's skating much better than he has, and he's freed himself up a little bit," Cahoon said. "Lots of times when kids are trying to break into the lineup, they're squeezing the stick pretty hard, they get a little tighter, so when they free themselves up, they're a little bit quicker, they make quicker decisions, and they make a more simpler play."

Just as Virtue has earned the confidence of his coaches as well as his own, he's once again moving into uncharted territory. The Mass Attack takes on top-seeded New Hampshire tonight in the TD Banknorth Garden in Boston, a stage he and the majority of the rest of the team has never seen.

Virtue couldn't have timed his breakout any better. He's firmly entrenched himself on the lineup that will be trying to return to the Hockey East championship game for the first time since 2004.

"Right now, he's between Jarman and Ortiz, and unless we feel we need to tweak the lineup, he's going to stay there," Cahoon said.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr a student umass.edu. Check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog for updated information about the Hockey East playoffs throughout the weekend.

Minutemen are definition of team

Inconsistent lineups have proven to gain positive results

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It's no secret that this is already a special season for the Massachusetts hockey team. The Minutemen have only made the Hockey East semifinals twice before this year.

Perhaps what's particularly special about this Mass Attack squad is that it lacks a special player. That's not to say the athletes aren't talented, or that they're not doing their job. On the contrary, they all are.

And that's been the theme of their success heading into the semifinal matchup with New Hampshire tonight. The Minutemen haven't relied on just a few goal-scorers to lead them past teams like Maine, a former No. 1 earlier this season, everyone has been chipping in.

"We found the [offensive balance] by tweaking lines and then trying to take people and take them out of a comfort zone within the team to see how they handle that," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "Maybe it will take a little pressure off them in certain instances, or in other instances, maybe give them something to aspire to by, putting them with a different type of player."

His lineups have been anything but consistent this year. Every few weeks, changes have been made, such as moving sophomores Chris Davis and Cory Quirk from the third line with Chris Capraro to the top line with P.J. Fenton in November.

After the winter break, it was the combination of seniors Kevin Jarman and Mark Matheson and freshman Will Ortiz that took off.

Throughout the changes, the one constant has been that points have come from just about everywhere.

Six Minutemen hit the 20-point plateau this season (two more at 19 points), in addition to 12 Maroon and White skaters notching double-digit points this season. Neither Boston College nor Boston University can boast that kind of balance. The Eagles have eight double-digit scorers while the Terriers boast nine.

Last season, just three UMass players (Stephen Werner, Marvin Degon and Matt Anderson) hit 20 points overall, and nine players recorded 10 or more.

Cahoon said finding the balance in his offense has been a season-long endeavor.

"It took shape over time," he said. "It takes time to figure all that out. Once we saw that we could get a goal from just about any of our four lines, we could match any of our four lines across the board with most of our opponents. It seemed like it gave me more flexibility to be able to put a lineup together and we started to go with it as a result of the feedback we got initially."

Cahoon has insisted all year that his lines are not ranked. On the lineup chart, senior captain Matt Anderson has been on the fourth line, or green line, with wingers Davis and Scott Crowder. However, their coach insists that just because the trio is the last line to hit the ice, it's no reflection on its role on the team.

When Davis returned from an injury on Feb. 23 for the series with Northeastern, Cahoon matched him with Anderson and Crowder instead of putting back at the top line with Capraro and Quirk.

Matt Burto's production in Davis' absence allowed Cahoon to avoid forcing Davis back onto that top line immediately, further demonstrating the team's line balance.

"There's two pieces to that," Cahoon said. "Matty Burto has been playing some of the best hockey he's played in a while, so we wanted to try to sustain that to get more of that out of him. And Chris was coming off being dinged up and we didn't want to put him in a situation where all of a sudden he felt like he needed to be the guy again."

When everyone contributes on offense, it makes matchups easier on Cahoon, but tougher on his opposing coaches, and no one knows who will find the back of the net this weekend in Boston.

Jeremy Rice can be reach at jeremyr a student.umass.edu. For more coverage of the Hockey East playoffs in Boston, check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for updated information on all this weekend's Hockey East playoff games in Boston.

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU 413-593-5222 705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee www.hukelau.com
STAR OF THE COMEDY CENTRAL SPECIAL "BOYISH MAN"!
THIS SATURDAY!
From HBO's "Tourgasm"
GARY GULMAN
APRIL 7TH TOMMY DAVIDSON
APRIL 28TH DOM IRRERA
MARCH 23RD LAVELL CRAWFORD
APRIL 21ST ADELE GIVENS
MAY 26TH PABLO FRANCISCO

On the Rocks School of Bartending
• Get certified in one weekend
• Anyone 18+ may bartend
• The course is held on campus
• Great paying & fun job!
Sat. & Sun. March, 31st & April 1st
or
Sat. & Sun. April 28th & 29th
1-800-MIX-0094
www.OnTheRocksBartending.com

UMass can benefit from HEA parity

PELLAND from page 10

losses. For the first time in history the Maroon Platoon's pregame-introduction taunts were correct.

After practice on Wednesday it was the same tune from Cahoon. The fact that UMass took down UNH twice this season, beat Maine four times in a row and has Jon Quick standing on his head has little bearing on the weekend.

Given the fact that momentum can't win games, it has at least given you a little boost. Right coach?

"As I said going into the second Maine series, we might as well be playing Spa Tech or the Red Army, it doesn't make any difference who we're playing," Cahoon said. "We need to go out and play at a high level, play within ourselves and not be concerned with who it is we're playing against."

I guess not.

For those of you who don't know, Spa Tech is Massachusetts' and Maine's leader in training the masseuses and cosmetologists of the future. I found the comment particularly funny. Oh, and the Red Army was the Soviet Union's military back in Joseph Stalin's heyday. To my knowledge it did not have an official hockey team.

Even Kevin Jarman got into the humble act.

"They're still the same team we know," he said. "They're a real special team."

Don't forget UNH can get knocked off any given night.

Nobody wants to play the Eagles right now. They're this season's equivalent to last year's Terriers, if only on a smaller scale. BC is playing the kind of hockey that is making Brian Boyle feel better about passing up the professional ranks and sticking around for a subpar (for him) senior season.

The ex-captain-turned-captain-again has picked up his play as of late. A few weeks ago, coach Jerry York credited the improvement to the threesome on the top line with Boyle in the middle. It seems York's favorite game to play with Boyle is musical positions. After moving to the wing mid-season, he was at the blue line last weekend.

BU won the Beanpot on this very same surface, so you know what that means. The Terriers have just enough juice left in the tank for great play this weekend, then fade come NCAA time.

I'm sure league officials sent the Catamounts some parting gifts for bowing out last weekend. Hockey East will never get enough of BU and BC. Did you know their campuses are only separated by nine miles? Per regulation, the conference has to inform you of that every time they face each other.

In yet another chapter in a rivalry for the ages, the Terriers and Eagles will probably beat up on each Friday night, leaving the winner bruised, battered and vulnerable going into Saturday's final.

Should the Minutemen do as told by their coach — and remember that any team in Hockey East can beat any one else in Hockey East — they could be the one's frozen in time on the league Web site.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpelland a student umass.edu. Check the Daily Collegian's Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for updated information on all this weekend's Hockey East playoff games in Boston.

Terriers and Eagles set to renew rivalry

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

It simply doesn't seem like a complete college hockey season unless BC and BU play each other five or six times. The two Boston schools have already met on four occasions — three times in the regular season and once in the Beanpot Championship Game.

So far this season, the series is split, but the Terriers are sitting pretty with the Beanpot trophy. However, the Eagles can reconcile their Beanpot heartbreak by vanquishing BU on the way to the Hockey East Final.

Last year, the Terriers beat their rival in the season series, the Beanpot final and the conference championship. But Jack Parker's squad fell short against BC when it mattered the most — in the quarterfinals of the NCAA tournament. It remains to be seen how BU will respond with a trip to the finals on the line and a chance to win its second consecutive Hockey East Tournament title and seventh overall.

Boston College is arguably the hottest team in the nation. After their loss in the Beanpot final, the Eagles rattled off six straight wins to finish the regular season. The last time it was on the ice, BC soundly defeated an overmatched Northeastern team by a total of nine goals.

One of the central reasons for the team's eight-game winning streak is the strong play of goaltender Cory Schneider between the pipes. In his last 11 games, Schneider has a 1.64 goals-against average and a .947 save percentage.

BC's only question mark is the unit playing directly in front of its star goalie. The Eagles' defense has been decimated by injuries over the past several weeks, forcing coach Jerry York to make drastic changes to his line up.

During the Northeastern series, the coach moved his best center and leading scorer, junior Brian Boyle, to full-time defense. With defensemen Anthony Aiello out with a hip injury and Carl Sneep a game-time decision with a high ankle sprain, Boyle will definitely see significant minutes from the blue line.

"He's played defense during the year, late in the game," York said. "He's played some penalty kills back there. So he's had a little taste of it, but I thought he's played remarkably well when you look at all of his minutes and his full body of work back there. He's valuable at either spot for us and we'll see him at both spots down the stretch here."

The Eagles' offense also seems to be clicking at the right time. However, the team's ability to score goals against a quality defense may be hindered by the breakup of the highly prolific line of Nathan Gerbe, Brock Bradford and Boyle. It will be difficult for freshman Ben Smith to replace Boyle's physical play at center, but the new line seemed to click in the BC's first quarterfinal game, scoring all three of the team's goals.

While the Eagles cruise into the weekend with two easy quarterfinal victories, BU barely won a hard-fought series against Vermont (18-16-5). The Terriers took the final two games after dropping the first, needing an extra period to win Game 3.

"I think it's better to have a tougher series from an emotional point of view," Parker said. "Sometimes when you go through a three-night stand with every game being so physical and so intense, you wind up getting worn down and beat up. I don't think that happened to us, but we certainly came out of that with an emotional lift, having to win the last two games and the last one in overtime."

Without a doubt, BU's strength is in its defense. Led by senior captain Sean Sullivan, the unit allows a league low of 1.89 goals per game. However, its defensive corps may also be without one of its better blue liners. Senior Kevin Schaeffer did not play in the Vermont series and will be a game-time decision for Friday according to Parker.

But with senior goaltender John Curry in the crease for the Terriers, defensive support may not even be an issue. Curry is one of the top goalies in the country, as his goals-against average of 1.84 ranks second nationally. The senior also ranks third in save percentage (.934) and first in shutouts (seven).

If BU gets strong play from Curry and the defense, the only question will be the team's offense — which has struggled during part of the season. The Terriers average 2.56 goals per game, fifth best in Hockey East.

"I'm hoping it's a low-scoring game," Parker said. "If it isn't, then we're going to be on the wrong end of it. Most of our games have been that way. I'm expecting a very physical game and I'm expecting a very emotional game. Emotions will get the physical aspects going. We know each other so well — it's obviously a heated rivalry."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu. For more on Hockey East weekend in Boston and all of UMass sports, check the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com.

UMass eliminated by Mountaineers

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

Last night, Freeman suffered a similar fate, scoring just six in his final game for UMass.

Freeman finishes his career with 1,722 points and a 15.1 points per game average. He began his career with Steve Lappas in 2003 and this season was the only year that the Minutemen went to the postseason.

Lasme exits the Pioneer Valley as the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year and a two-time A-10 Defensive Player of the Year. Lasme was named Dick Vitale's Player of the Week after he recorded two of his four triple-doubles on the season.

Lasme is only the third player in NCAA history to record four or more triple-doubles in a season, which he accomplished against La Salle on Senior Night at the Mullins Center.

Senior guard James Life, in his short time as a Minuteman, was one of the most prolific 3-point shooters in UMass history. He finished his career with 140 3-pointers with his four against WVU last night, and passed Edgar Padilla on the all-time list to move into seventh in UMass history for total 3-pointers made.

Senior Brandon Thomas, Lasme, Freeman, Life and walk-on Matt Pennse all participated in their final game at UMass last night.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Jaclyn Murphy to be honored in game

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will be playing for more than just the opportunity to knock off the two-time defending National Champions No.1 Northwestern Wildcats on March 23.

While you'll still be able to find the final stats and box score following this matchup, the game itself will take a backseat to the real reason why these two schools will converge in Yorktown, N.Y. This game is being played for one of the most avid and enthusiastic fans the sport has.

UMass and Northwestern are playing in the inaugural Friends of Jaclyn College Lacrosse Showdown. The benefit game was inspired by Jaclyn Murphy, 12, who was diagnosed with medulloblastoma, a malignant brain tumor, in March 2004.

The two schools are getting together to help raise awareness of pediatric brain tumors and to support the Friends of Jaclyn Foundation, a charitable organization created to raise funds and offset the costs of medical treatment for children who are suffering from pediatric brain tumors, according to the charity's Web site, www.friendsofjaclyn.org.

"I can't say enough about the student athletes and the coaches from these two programs," her father Dennis said. "You can't put into words what these two programs have meant to my daughter. They don't have any idea how much of an impact they're making in helping raise awareness of this disease. We're already seeing some residual and positive effects as result of this game."

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos, who is returning to her hometown next Friday, got to know Jaclyn while she was the assistant coach at Northwestern and has since gone on to forge a close relationship with one of her biggest fans.

"The last year she has been getting checkups and MRI scans and the good news is that the tumor hasn't come back," Venechanos said. "She's still dealing with the side effects of her different lifestyle. She is still tired from time to time and tries to go to school when she can."

And almost three years after being told their daughter had a life-threatening brain tumor, the family's luck continues to be in short supply. Last month the family's house burnt down and they are now living with neighbors for six months.

"We just put everything into perspective," Murphy said. "It's just an inconvenience as far as we're concerned."

Jaclyn fell in love with lacrosse at a young age and had been playing the sport before she and her family heard the devastating and life-changing news. Soon after lacrosse was robbed from Jaclyn's life, unwelcomed rounds of radiation and chemotherapy treatment moved in its place.

In March 2004, the seemingly healthy and vibrant young girl became ill for many days. At first, doctors assumed it was a viral infection. After spending five days in a hospital receiving tests, doctors still could not determine the cause of Jaclyn's illness.

On March 26, Murphy went for a check-up at her pediatrician's office where her doctor felt it was necessary to do a CAT scan. The CAT scan found that Jaclyn had a mass in the fourth ventricle of her brain. It was soon confirmed at Westchester Medical Center that it was in fact a brain tumor.

Four days later, Jaclyn underwent a six-hour surgery to remove the life-threatening tumor. On April 7, another surgery was required to implant a life port into her chest in order to begin chemotherapy treatments.

Later that month, Jaclyn began chemo and radiation treatments. Eight, six-week cycles of chemotherapy was required following radiation treatments, but after receiving five and a half cycles of the chemotherapy, Jaclyn began to suffer hearing loss and severe weight loss. In March 2005 her parents decided it was in their daughter's best interest to end the chemo treatments prematurely. The decision was one of the toughest Jaclyn's parents would ever have to make.

"At that point it was either risk reoccurrence of the tumor coming back or watch our child go deaf," Murphy said.

But soon after, her spirits would receive a major boost from those who played the sport she loved.

Jaclyn's first contact with the Northwestern program came after her youth lacrosse coach Matt Cameron told friend and Northwestern head coach Kelly Amonte Hiller about Jaclyn's situation. Hiller then had her squad sign a media guide and had it sent to Murphy.

But the coaches and players' relationship with Jaclyn didn't end when the media guide came in the mail.

In the spring of 2005, Jaclyn was able to make the trip to visit her heroes before a game at John Hopkins University where she shared her experiences of being diagnosed with a brain tumor at just nine years old.

"She came into our pre-game meal and basically told us about her whole situation," Venechanos said. "It was the first time she had ever told anybody about her situation because she was so comfortable around us."

Northwestern's biggest fan also proved to be a good luck charm, as Jaclyn's forecast during her impromptu talk that the Wildcats would advance to the finals came to fruition.

"She told the team she would meet us in Annapolis, Maryland, which was the site of National Championship game," Venechanos said.

But the predictions were not to end there.

At halftime of the 2005 National Championship game, Jaclyn was asked for her prediction on what the final score would be. Just as she predicted Northwestern would be making the trip to Annapolis, she also accurately predicted the final score: 13-10 in favor of Northwestern.

And soon, it became evident that a mutual admiration had grown between Jaclyn and the Northwestern program.

"We didn't realize at the time us doing the little stuff meant so much to her," Venechanos said. "At the same time if we couldn't get through one day practice and she could go through three MRI in one week, we realized we could get through anything. Her courage meant so much to us."

A year and a half after first meeting Jaclyn, the decision was made to have Northwestern and UMass make an up close and personal visit to her hometown.

"I'm not sure who exactly had the idea for the game," Venechanos said. "It may have been Kelly the coach at Northwestern who decided that we should have a benefit game for Jaclyn since she did so much for us."

"She's pumped," Murphy said about her daughter's eager anticipation for next week's game. "She's had a really difficult time sleeping and can't wait to see the girls from Northwestern and meet the girls from UMass."

On March 23, Yorktown High School will serve as a reminder of the capability sports has to bring people together and inspire those even with the most difficult obstacles to overcome. Even though one team will be victorious at day's end it's safe to say Jaclyn Murphy and her cause will score the biggest victory. And you don't have to be a fortune teller to know that.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley a student umass edu

UM hopes to pull turnaround

Cannella believes there's still time left to save the season

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Whether it occurs in the beginning, middle or end of a season, there is never a good time to hit a rough spot. The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is learning that firsthand in 2007. UMass is now 1-3 on the season, a far cry from where it envisioned itself just four weeks ago.

"There is no good time for it," UMass coach Greg Cannella said, speaking of his teams recent struggles. "You never want to hit a rough spot, but when you do, you have to deal with it and the sun comes up everyday. We can't change the past now, so you have look towards the future."

Cannella says the only bright spot he sees in the Minutemen's early struggles is that there are 10 remaining games in the regular season, a factor that could give UMass enough time to turn itself in the right direction.

He cites the 2003 Penn State team as an example of not giving up in the early going. That season the Nittany Lions traveled to Amherst to face the undefeated Minutemen carrying a 1-5 record. Penn State beat UMass and then ran the table into the NCAA Tournament.

This weekend the Minutemen try to resurrect their own season, beginning with Brown here tomorrow before opening league play in Baltimore, Md., next weekend against Loyola.

The Maroon and White enter the weekend off a tough loss to No. 2 Albany on the road Tuesday. UMass went down 7-0 in the first half, but surged back to tie the game at nine and force overtime. But the Great Danes survived the rally by scoring the game-winner 12 seconds into the extra quarter.

Despite not being pleased with the result, Cannella said it is good to know that his team is capable of erasing a large deficit.

"Anytime you have the ability to come back it's always in the back of your mind that you can do it," he said. "If you don't do it, or you have never done it, then you're not sure. When you have done it, the team can pull together and use that as a positive experience even though you didn't wind up winning the game."

Above all else this season, Cannella points out that UMass has displayed great character, and the willingness to hang in until the very end of games. So far this season, three games have been decided by a single goal while the season opener against Hofstra came down to a pair of scores. Cannella counts that as a one-goal game because the Pride scored with just over a minute to go in regulation.

UMass will see a balanced Brown team Saturday that is going in a different direction from itself. After losing their first game of the season, the Bears have won three straight games over Hofstra, Providence, and most recently, Bellarmine.

Brown had a comeback of its own Tuesday, breaking an 8-8 tie with a little over three minutes remaining in regulation. The Bears also received a lot of help from attackman David Madeira's career-high five goals. It was his second game back from an injury.

"They're coming in with a lot of confidence," Cannella said. "They're not coming down here to get beaten. They're coming down here to win the game, so we had better be ready."

Loyola has already opened league play and continues it this weekend against St. John's. It will be the first of three straight home games for the Greyhounds. They currently boast a 2-2 overall record (1-0 IAC) having beat Penn State to begin IAC play.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland a student umass edu. Check the Daily Collegian's Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for updated news on all UMass sports.

Minutewomen deal with team illness

Parent's Weekend Tournament begins while sickness lingers

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

Fatigue and lack of sleep is not exactly the best medicine when you're sick. But that is all the Massachusetts softball team (8-8-1) has to work with as it begins the FAU Parent's Weekend Tournament, in which it could play five games in two days.

The Maroon and White gets things started in Florida today when it takes on Rutgers (4-13) at 9 a.m. The double-header's second game — against Quinnipiac (2-4) — is scheduled to get underway at 11 a.m.

UMass continues its weekend challenge when it faces off against Michigan State (12-0) at 11 a.m. and Texas A.M. (21-2) at 4 p.m. tomorrow.

Championship play will begin on Sunday at anytime between 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Despite Rutgers' dismal record, UMass coach Elaine Sortino expects her players to bring their A-games against the Scarlet Knights — three of whom are batting above .300.

Catcher Kim Hodges leads her Rutgers team with a .343 batting average. The sophomore has played all but one of the squad's games and has amassed seven RBIs, nine runs scored and a .351 on-base percentage.

One point below her on the batting average list is Sarah Kalka.

The middle infielder has accumulated an average of .342 so far, playing in 15 of the Scarlet Knights' 17 games. A sophomore, Kalka has recorded 13 hits, seven runs scored and a team-leading 10 RBIs. She also registered the squad's only triple of the season.

The next highest batting average is .333 and is that of sophomore Brittany Loisel — but hers comes with an invisible asterisk.

The second baseman has tallied only 15 at-bats on the year, knocking five of them in for hits. Her lack of playing time is reiterated, however, when one notices her one RBI and six total bases.

The squad's torque and horsepower is evenly distributed between three of its members: sophomore shortstop Kaitlyn Valiante, junior outfielder Mallory Miller and senior first baseman Kristen Madoch, all of whom have two dingers on the season.

Pitchers Chrissy Yard, Nicole Lindley, Nicole Freeman and Jessica Crosby each have one of the team's wins this season, with Yard maintaining the best ERA at 4.76.

As of Wednesday, however, it was unclear who would take the mound for the Scarlet Knights.

UMass won't have much time to rest after Rutgers, as it is scheduled to square off against Quinnipiac immediately after.

The Bobcats have not had much chance to hone their skills thus far, but Sortino says her team must be ready for anything to surface.

"Hopefully we'll have an advantage [because we've had more games so far]. But [the Bobcats] have been in Florida practicing all week — there's something to be said for that," she said. "I don't think you can expect anything. I think you work to do what you can do.

"Right now I just think that we need to approach each opponent the same way," she continued. "I don't think it matters if they've played [a lot] or not. We've got to take our game and execute."

She mentioned that her players must take this weekend not one game at a time — but one pitch at a time, if they want any chance of success.

"You can't let the game get ahead of you," she said. "It's a pitch-to-pitch kind of thing. If you get ahead [of yourself] you're not going to be where you need to be."

She stressed that her team must first trudge through day one's matchups before it reaches Michigan State and Texas A&M on day two.

Sortino also mentioned that enduring another weekend chock-full of games will not be easy for the Minutewomen, nearly all of whom are feeling a bit under the weather.

"We're just trying to recover," Sortino said. "I wish that we were a little bit healthier. But I can't control that."

With the exceptions of senior first baseman Amanda Morin, junior infielder Stacy Cullington, and freshman infielder Jessica Serio, all of Sortino's players have fallen victim to a bug that is going around — and meeting the demands of being college student-athletes doesn't help.

And last weekend's seven games in four days as part of the USF Adidas Spring Break Invitational was not what the doctor ordered.

"This past weekend was very difficult — getting up at 6:30 a.m. having breakfast at like 7:15 being on the field warming up at 8:30," she said. "You [take batting practice] at 8:00 or 8:30 to play at 11 o'clock — you didn't have any choice. We'd back every day about 9:30-10 [p.m.] and couldn't eat dinner. We had to order pizza because the last thing you need to do is hang around a restaurant for an hour and a half.

"[We were] three hours late on Sunday night," she continued. "And [the players] had to get back to class [the next morning] — but you have to do what you have to do."

Sortino said that no matter how worn out her troops may feel, they always bring everything they've got to the diamond — and that this weekend won't be any different.

"I liked the way the kids handled practice the other day. I thought that they gave great effort and they gave whatever they had," she said. "I think it's kind of important to have a type of tenacity, mentally. I don't think you can let that kind of stuff get in your way."

She was unsure as to how she would arrange her pieces for the weekend's contests, but said she'll do some experimenting to test the waters for possibilities.

"We'll keep moving things around until our kids get comfortable," she said. "We still have some kids who aren't comfortable where they are and with what they're doing and hopefully we're going to find that out."

Dominic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Maroon and White gets restful layoff

Four road games in eight days after 10-day rest period

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is using the 10-day layoff to prepare and rest its tired legs. The Minutewomen will hit the road once again, playing four road games in eight days. Last week they knocked off Albany 15-7. Junior attack Kathleen Typadis scored a career-high six goals and her performance earned her Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week.

The Minutewomen play at the University of New Hampshire Tuesday at 3 p.m. UNH (1-3) is off to a slow start this season, but it has faced Top 20 competition in two of its first four games, losing to No. 9 Dartmouth and No. 18 Yale. UNH defeated Holy Cross for its lone victory in the early season. Holy Cross defeated UMass, 7-6, back on February 21st.

UMass' all-time record against UNH is 16-17-2, it hopes to put together a better performance than last year when UNH won convincingly, 17-8.

"I don't think we've had much success with them the last few years. They're a great team and they're an athletic team," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "They are similar to us, they have great athletes, they go hard to the goal and they're well coached.

"Right from the opening whistle to the end of the game it's going to be a battle," she said. "We are going to be prepared for anything they do."

UNH sophomore attack Sarah Von Bargen leads the Wildcats in scoring with 11 goals and one assist. UNH has struggled in the opening half by only scoring 15 goals on 51 shots in four games. UMass has outscored its opponents in the first half 39 to 21 during the first six games.

UNH smoked us last year, so we're looking forward to have an opportunity to play against them," Venechanos said.

Spring break could not have come at a better time for the Minutewomen. With the week off from school the Minutewomen can focus on the upcoming games.

"We've just been really focusing on ourselves the last few days at practices," Venechanos said. "We gave them a couple days to rest their bodies. We are going through things that we can improve on from the last six games."

The Maroon and White will also have a home away game when it hosts the defending National Champion Northwestern Wildcats next Sunday night. The game will be played at Yorktown High School in Yorktown, N.Y. For UMass, it is considered a home game. Northwestern is 4-1 against UMass all-time. The last time these two teams met was in 1989 and Northwestern won 9-5.

Venechanos spent three years at Northwestern as assistant coach and recruiting coordinator. Assistant coach Angela McMahon played under Venechanos at Northwestern. McMahon played at UMass then transferred to Northwestern, where she played three seasons and was a tri-captain for two years. Assistant coach Sarah Albrecht also played at Northwestern, she graduated last season after helping the Wildcats to two consecutive national championships.

Northwestern (3-1) is ranked No. 2 in the country. Leading the Wildcats this season is senior midfielder Kristen Kjellman. Last season she received the Tewaaraton Trophy as the top female lacrosse player in Division I. Through four games she's totaled 15 goals and seven assists.

"Whenever you go against the defending national champion it's a great test," Venechanos said of her former team. "They potentially have All-Americans at each position, so they can be a little flexible and risky on the attacking end and the defensive end. They really put a lot of pressure on the ball."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames a student umass edu

Don't forget to go to www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for the skinny on your favorite UMass teams

From Your Dorm To The Airport And Back!
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

2007 UMass Baseball Season Preview

Minutemen hope to thrive on maturity and experience in '07

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Three games are already in the books, but the Massachusetts baseball team is still feeling itself out for the 2007 season. The Minutemen opened the year down south, losing three in a row to Central Florida.

Wednesday's home opener against Boston College was postponed due to non-playable field conditions, but that game has been rescheduled for April 9 at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass begins an eight-game road trip this afternoon against Dartmouth College at 3 p.m. Five of the first eight games will be played in Brandenton, Fla., while the next three will be held in Philadelphia, starting the Atlantic 10 portion of the schedule against Temple.

The Minutemen are coming off a dismal 14-30 season (11-16 A-10) in 2006. The conference's head coaches don't see them doing much better this year, as they were predicted to finish 10th out of 14 in the A-10.

UMass was outscored 18-5 in the first three games of the season to a UCF team that had already played 17 games going into the series last weekend.

"We played a pretty good ball club in Central Florida," coach Mike Stone said. "We need to play. I saw some good signs and some positive outings by some pitchers.

"But we didn't hit much. We did some things offensively, stole six or seven bases. Defensively, we were pretty good except for the last day we made four errors. We need to play and get our feet wet a little bit."

The only sure thing about this year's ball club is that the maturity level is greater than 2006. The core of the starting lineup is upperclassmen, and other than freshman right-hander Jared Freni, most of the pitching staff has seen significant innings in their time at UMass.

"We have that sense of being a team that should do well," Stone said. "It looks like we have more depth. Of course, you don't know until you go out there and pitch.

"We really have six or seven starters," Stone said about his bullpen. "The second group of starters will be ready to come in after the starters because you can't figure somebody's going to give you a complete game the first time out."

The Minutemen only had five complete games as a team last season. David Sullivan had three of them, but was lost to graduation. Seniors Chris Lloyd and Rory McDonald each had one.

Lloyd will be the ace of the starting rotation to begin the season. He struggled last year with an 0-6 record and a 6.21 ERA in 11 starts.

His role as the team's No. 1 starter may be temporary if Freni performs up to his hype. Stone is the most impressed with his pitching staff in this young season, and especially the freshman from Malden Catholic High School.

"[Jared] pitched very well," Stone said. "He gave us a real good effort. He pitches tough. He has a lot of talent and he works hard and is an aggressive pitcher."

Freni will be a regular weekend starter this season for the Minutemen. He was credited with the loss in his first collegiate game last Saturday. Freni allowed two earned runs (one unearned) on six hits in six innings of work. He also recorded four strikeouts and walked three batters.

Sophomore Mitchell Ilenberg came in for the rest of the game, allowing the only other two runs in UMass' 5-2 loss to UCF – the closest margin of defeat on the weekend.

While there is no clear-cut rotation at this point, the Minutemen have plenty of pitchers to choose from, just none of them will be throwing lefty. Out of all 13 pitchers on the team, not one of them is left-handed.

At the pro level, that might be an issue, but in college ball, breaking balls aren't as devastating, so left-handed pitchers aren't as effective match-up wise.

Jim Cassidy, who looked like one of UMass' top pitchers, hasn't pitched yet because of a sore arm. Beau Hodges also didn't see any action because he was suffering from a sprained ankle.

Other than that, Stone was impressed with his relief pitching from setup man Aaron Smith and closer Bryan Adamski.

"They looked pretty sharp," Stone said.

Stone's biggest concern so far has been the lack of offensive production. The Minutemen return seven of their top hitters and six of their top fielders, one of which is sophomore second baseman Adam Tempesta.

Tempesta had the most doubles on the team last year with 16, and boasted the second-best average at .311. His keen eye at the plate made for only 12 strikeouts in 177 at-bats.

He is recovering from a broken bone in his middle finger of his left hand, which he injured covering first during bunt drills. Tempesta still found a way to play in the last two games.

"We're trying to give him more time to get ready," Stone said. "He looked pretty good on Sunday, so I think he'll be all set this week."

The Minutemen scored only five runs in their first three games, something that must change if they want to climb out of the basement of the A-10.

"Offensively, I was kind of disappointed," Stone said about last weekend. "I thought we'd do more offensively this weekend, but when you see good pitching right out of the gate, it's tough. It's difficult to go from inside the gym to the field. It's an adjustment period.

"We need to get going," he added. "We need to get people on. We need to get them into scoring position quickly, and when that happens, we need to have people just step up there and find a way to get them in."

Stone believes this can be a good team, especially since most of the returning starters have been there before through the worst of times. And whether it's been solid pitching on the opposing side, or just plain old slumps at the plate, he's sick of losing.

"It could have been a combination of good pitching that we saw, and usually when a team plays 17 games before you play them, it's tough. And [Central Florida] is pretty good to begin with. But I'm tired of making that excuse because I really expected us to hit more."

As to where this team will finish in May is anyone's guess. But with the experience and maturity UMass has, the future is in the player's hands.

"This team really has to decide, individually and as a group, that we need to play tough," Stone said. "I think that we have enough talent to be the kind of team that we want to be, but we have to be tough mentally and physically. That's a choice that they have to make."

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard at student.umass.edu

Senior Bryan Adamski is batting .364 in 11 plate appearances through the first three games this season. Adamski finished last year with 26 RBI and a .294 batting average. The Minutemen begin an eight-game road trip this afternoon against Dartmouth at 3 p.m.

Junior third baseman Ryan Franczek has gone 2-for-11 with two runs scored and one RBI in the first three games of the 2007 season. He finished last year with a team-high 27 RBI and four triples.

UM breakdown by position

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The 2007 season for the Massachusetts baseball team (0-3) hits full swing tomorrow for the first of five games in Bradenton, Fla. This year's team looks much like the 2006 Minutemen – a team that finished 14-30 – but that makes for a much more experienced group under coach Mike Stone.

CATCHERS

UMass pitchers struggled mightily last season and are still a young bunch. Fortunately for them, they have a veteran backstop to throw to in Bryan Garrity. The junior co-captain has been the primary starter since he arrived at Amherst and provides a consistent bat in addition to his leadership qualities.

Garrity has ended each of his seasons with a .264 batting average and has slowly improved his eye at the plate, leading to more walks and a higher on-base percentage. Garrity has opened the season sixth on the order, leading the team in batting average and RBIs in the early going.

Three additional catchers are on the roster, most notably Frank McPherson. The senior started eight games for the Minutemen, but managed only one hit in 25 at-bats. Incoming freshman Matt Lawlor and Ben Kessel could see minimal time backing up Garrity, as well.

CORNER INFIELDERS

The Minutemen lack thumpers in the middle of the order, but first baseman Bryan Adamski (senior) and third baseman Ryan Franczek (junior) are the only two players who could be construed as power hitters on this roster. The corner infielders were the only players on the team that hit more than one home run last season. They each hit four long balls and Franczek (27) edged out Adamski (26) for the team-lead in RBIs.

Franczek had a well-rounded season, hitting .307 while leading the team in runs (33), triples (4), total bases (79) and slugging percentage (.476). Adamski wasn't far behind, hitting .294 and finishing at or near the top in every major statistical category.

Sophomore Jim MacDonald who started 38 games in 2006 will backup Franczek at the hot corner and see some time as the designated hitter. MacDonald struggled at the plate all year long, finishing last on the team with a .221 average. Junior Andy Tuetken will fill in at first base for Adamski.

MIDDLE INFIELDERS

The strength of the Minutemen lineup is up the middle. Senior shortstop Lou Proietti and sophomore second baseman Adam Tempesta were not only double play partners, but finished first and second on the team in batting average.

Proietti was superb, pacing the Minutemen with his .331 average, .411 on base percentage and 16 stolen bases. Tempesta was equally impressive in his freshman year, hitting .311 with a team-high 16 doubles. Tempesta displayed terrific bat control, striking out only 12 times in 177 at bats.

Not only were they the only two players to appear in all 44 games, but neither of them missed a single start. The pair struggled a bit defensively, though, with Proietti ending the year with 18 errors and Tempesta with 15.

OUTFIELDERS

The four leading hitters from last year are all infielders. Needless to say, the outfield has to step up in a big way if 2007 is going to be successful on offense. That responsibility will be placed on seniors Bill Rankin and co-captain Travis Munsey.

Rankin started just 17 games a season ago, but played well in his limited time, finishing with a .284 average. Rankin's success is critical to the order because he is the only left-handed hitter in the line-up other than Proietti. Rankin's early struggles so far – he's 0-11 with three strikeouts – need to be corrected to keep some balance in the lineup.

Munsey played in 30 games last season, and led the team in sacrifices (10), while hitting .276. Munsey, much like the rest of his teammates, needs to work on his plate discipline – as he only managed two walks in 89 plate appearances. His senior leadership helps, but they need him to get on base more regularly.

With Rankin in center and Munsey in right field, it appears freshman Brian Baudinet will see the majority of starts in left. Junior Jim Cassidy will also see plenty of action this season, splitting time in the outfield and at designated hitter. Two freshmen – Mike Donato and Garrett Glashoff – should also see some time roaming the outfield.

PITCHING STAFF

The offense may have been a struggle in 2006, but the pitching was even worse. The UMass team ERA (6.07) was almost two more runs per game higher than its opponents. The staff remains mostly the same this year, but the Maroon and White lost perhaps its best starter, David Sullivan, to graduation.

The pitching is more experienced this year, and with that will likely come improvement. However, one major problem the Minutemen will face all season long is the lack of left-handed arms on their staff. In fact, UMass is devoid of even one southpaw on the roster and it will be difficult to match up against left-handed batters.

Senior Chris Lloyd (started in the opener) is the de facto ace of the rotation, although his 0-6 record and 6.22 ERA last year would argue otherwise. Lloyd needs to improve greatly in his senior season for the Minutemen to be more competitive.

Jared Freni, a freshman, could very well emerge as the staff ace as the season progresses. He was solid in his first career start on Saturday and much is expected of him. Rounding out the rotation will likely be sophomore Mike Dicato (7.27 ERA in 2006) and senior Rory McDonald – who was 2-4 with a 5.48 ERA in 11 starts last year.

Stone will hand the ball to junior Aaron Smith and slugger hurler Adamski in the later innings to close out ballgames. They were the only two pitchers on the team last season to finish with earned run averages below five. Adamski had five of the team's seven saves last season and led the team with his 3.60 ERA.

The remainder of the bullpen is extremely young and inexperienced and will be led mostly by Ryan Walczak, Mitchell Filenberg and Tim Comiskey.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa at student.umass.edu

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 3/16 (first show begins)
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Dead Silence (R) 1:30 4:40 7:40 10:05
I Think I Love My Wife (R) 1:10 4:25 7:20 10:00
Premonition (PG-13)* 1:00 4:15 7:00 9:50
Wild Hogs (PG-13) 1:05 4:40 7:10 9:45
300 (R)* 12:01 am 12:05 am
Music and Lyrics (PG-13) 1:20 4:20 7:35 10:10
Zodiac (R) 12:45 4:10 8:00
Rono 911: Miami (R) 1:45 4:55 7:50 10:15
Breach (PG-13) 12:55 4:45 7:30 10:05
The Number 23 (R) 1:25 4:35 7:40 10:25
Bridge to Terabithia (PG) 1:30 4:30 8:05 9:20
Ghost Rider (PG-13) 1:15 4:40 8:05 9:50
7:00 7:40 9:10 10:30
* NO PASSES NO SUPERPLAYERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Check out our website at www.dailycollegian.com for more non-stop UMass sports coverage

NOW SHOWING MAR. 16 - MAR. 22
amherst cinema
Live and Become
Pan's Labyrinth
FRI-SAT 2:30, 7:45 SUN-TUES 2:30, 7:45 MON-WED 2:30, 7:45 THURS 2:30
THE LIVES OF OTHERS
FRI-SAT 1:30, 4:40, 7:20, 10:05 SUN-THURS 1:30, 4:40, 7:20
THE LAST KING OF SCOTLAND
FRI-SAT: 5:00, 10:10 SUN-THURS: 5:00
JANUS FILMS
WALKABOUT SUN Nicolas Roeg 3:15
CHILDREN OF PARADISE MON 7:30 Marcel Carne THUR 4:20
28 AMITY STREET 413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

7							9
	1				8	5		4
4			5
	7		1	6				2
		3	8		5	4
8				3	2		7
					3			6
1		8	6				5
	5							7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 News services
6 Engraving fluid
10 Mimicked
14 Starts the bidding
15 Nary a one
16 Smooth and lustrous
17 Gyro breads
18 Bear upon
20 Play divisions
22 Nickel or dime
23 Architect Mies van ___ Rohe
24 Take off
26 Essential parts
28 Petunia or Babe
30 Radar spot
31 Letter from Greece
32 Perfect example
34 Churn
36 Lively tune
40 Sailsfed
42 Equivalent word
44 Highest male voice
45 Dinghy devices
47 Give up!
48 Ignited
50 Drum out
52 Slimpy's pal
53 Dozen
56 Small sola
58 Actor Holm
59 Qualified
61 Freebooter
64 Electricity reductions
67 Made comfortable
68 Part of a tool
69 Bart's bus driver
70 Spirited stallion
71 Covered with soot
72 Perceptive
73 Hot, spicy drink

DOWN
1 Swabbing tools
2 Monumental
3 Cleaning agent
4 Empty-headed
5 Gather together
6 Tropical cuckoo
7 General notion
8 Skinny or poop
9 Transference
10 Reverend wonder
11 Bamboo lover
12 Surpass others
13 Colorists
19 Component piece
21 Fa-la connector
25 Scenic overlook
27 Eagle's claw
28 12 point type
29 Image of a deity
33 Kwajalein or Enewetok
35 Put into circulation
37 Became greater
38 Singer Lovett
39 Govt. agents
41 Steno pad
43 Most eccentric
46 Flowerlike pattern
49 Reliman or Lendl
51 Gas additive letters
53 Leg bone
54 Tips off
55 Son of Cain
57 Muse of lyric poetry
60 Pear-shaped instrument
62 ___ off (angry)
63 Whirlpool
65 How come?
66 Male offspring

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
DO MAKE SAY THINK
Featuring members of Broken Social Scene
plus The Berg Sans Nipple
SATURDAY, MARCH 24 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/CLUBROOM ORIGINAL LINE-UP REUNION!
SEBADOH
plus The Bent Moustache
THURSDAY, MARCH 29 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I've slept with too many women, I've done too many drugs, and I've been to too many parties."

-George Clooney

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

SO HOW DID YOU MANAGE TO GET A GIRLFRIEND ANYWAY?
I LET HER "SAVE" ME. IT EMPOWERED HER. SHE WAS SO DRUNK WITH GLORY THAT SHE IMMEDIATELY AGREED TO DATE ME.
WAY TO BACK INTO THAT ONE.
YEAH. IT'S MINE, THOUGH. SO BACK OFF. PATENT PENDING!
DON'T YOU GET ANY IDEAS, MISTER?
!!!
EASY. I SAW HER AND PRETENDED TO CHOKE ON MY SANDWICH.

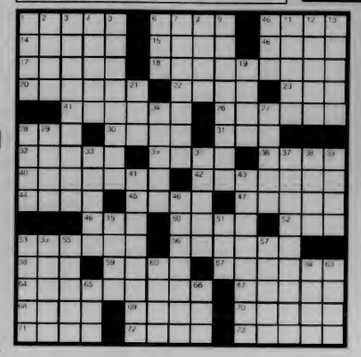
SZAJGIN'S SAGA By Ashley Miami

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

ISN'T IT WEIRD HOW CARTOONS TAKE ON A WHOLE NEW PERSPECTIVE WATCHING THEM IN COLLEGE?
TOTALLY LIKE BECAUSE OF MY SOCIOLOGY CLASS I CAN SEE HOW THE COYOTE FEELS INDIGNANT BY THE ROADRUNNER'S EASY SUCCESS.
NO, I MEANT LIKE WHERE DOES HE GET ALL THE MONEY TO BUY THOSE SWEET ACME ROCKETS?

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

The real downside to this job is the lack of internet access
We only have a slow dial-up connection at our living quarters.
You should check out my website!
You have a website? For what? Amateur internet videos of bisons?
Don't question my need for a website.



Submit your comics!
collegiatecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you find a pot of gold the odds are it belongs to a pimp so leave it be.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
The Real Housewives of Orange County are far less attractive than the fake ones.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Friday night is taco night! Shred the cheese, pour the salsa and rock on.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You are like a giant bunyon plaguing humanity. Quite icky!

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Dress like creepy little leprachaun for all of spring break in honor of St. Patrick's Day.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Never rest on your laurels, especially if they are made out of thorns.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Sometimes you are way too fun for your own good.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Embark on a journey to find a juice that hasn't been tainted by cranberry flavoring.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Next week is a time of first. For example, you will make some friends.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
If your travels should bring you to a patch of wild berries, DO NOT EAT THEM!

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You would benefit greatly if Viagra could also raise your moral fiber.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The odds are, if it came out of your nose it is probably not a good source of vitamins.

Have a wonderful Spring Break and remember...

wrap it up.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Announcements
Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Umass Amherst Summer 2007 Offering new online GenEds and more. Plan now by visiting our summer sneak preview website: www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Direct Sales – Eyewear Specialists Sell an exclusive line of high quality sunglasses and reading glasses direct to consumer. Make 40% on each sale. Build a sales team and make additional commissions and bonuses. Small investment for samples required, fully refundable at any time. Call John at 1-800-322-6748

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons Apartment June- August 15th. $2050/month includes everything. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Submit your classified advertisment online.

Just visit www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 16, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Game Over

Junior Gary Forbes recorded 15 points, four rebounds and three assists in last night's 90-77 loss to West Virginia in the second round of the NIT. Rashaun Freeman, Stephane Lasme, James Life, Brandon Thomas and Matt Pennie have all played their final game in a UMass uniform.

West Virginia ends UMass' season in second round of NIT

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The 2006-07 season finally came to an end for the Massachusetts men's basketball team last night, as the Minutemen fell to the West Virginia Mountaineers, 90-77, on the road in the second round of the National Invitation Tournament.

UMass	77
WV	90

Senior guard James Life led the Minutemen with 20 points on 7-of-13 shooting and 4-of-9 from behind the arc. Senior co-captain Rashaun Freeman had just six points in the loss, while Stephane Lasme and Gary Forbes had 14 and 15 points, respectively.

The Minutemen finish their season at 24-9 after a 1-1 run in the NIT. UMass' win over the Alabama Crimson Tide in the first round of the NIT on Tuesday night at the Mullins Center was the Minutemen's first playoff win in over 10 years.

Last night, the Minutemen went down early but rallied from 19 points down in the second half and got the deficit down to four on two occasions before the superior Mountaineers squad pulled away.

UMass' 24-9 record is the fifth-best record in the school's history. Lasme led his team in his last game as a Minuteman, tallying 14 points and adding 14 rebounds, finishing his career with 1,011 points. Life went 0-for-4 from 3-point land in the first half and scored just two points, but lit it up in the second frame, scoring 18 points with 4-of-5 shooting from behind the arc.

Junior Dante Milligan finished the game with a career-high 10 points after Freeman went out with his fourth foul early into the second half. Milligan contributed to the Minutemen's 16-5 first half run, adding five points in the spurt.

Freeman's performance was similar to the first-round loss in the Atlantic Tournament to Saint Louis. Freeman got his fourth foul with just under 10 minutes left in that game and scored just six points in the loss.

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

UM returns to the Garden

Mass Attack takes on New Hampshire in semifinals

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Although it seems like longer, it has only been three years since the Massachusetts hockey team last skated on the ice sheet at the TD Banknorth Garden. Back then it was called the FleetCenter and the Minutemen competed in a historical Hockey East championship game against Maine.

UMass lost, 2-1, to the Black Bears in triple overtime on March 19, 2004 and hasn't been back to the weekend in Boston since. That is until today when the Mass Attack (20-11-5) takes on New Hampshire (25-9-2) in the first game of semifinal action at the big rink.

The puck drops on the Minutemen and Wildcats' contest at 5 p.m. Boston College and Boston University will follow at 8 p.m.

Senior captain Matt Anderson put it best last weekend after UMass secured a sweep of Maine to reach this weekend.

"It's been a long road the past two years, two and a half years. We've had a lot of losses," he said. "It's just nice to see all the hard work and things like that come together. At the same time though, [this] weekend is another weekend."

There are very few current Minutemen who were on the rink for the last time in 2004 and the number drops to one when talking about who actual played in the marathon against Maine.

Along with Anderson who was out with a shoulder injury seniors Chris Capraro and Mark Matheson also didn't dress for the game because of what UMass coach Don Cahoon called earlier in the season, "a variety of reasons."

The lone Minuteman to see ice time in the conference final was winger Kevin Jarman. Although it was a while ago, the senior says he still holds fond memories of that weekend, but is remains disappointed the Minutemen didn't accomplish more.

"The last time I was there we were able to accomplish something pretty special, almost accomplished something really, really special," said Jarman, who was on the ice to start the game and registered three shots. "But it's a lot of fun and it's a hell of an experience playing in front of 17,000 people with the caliber of hockey. It's going to be another great time."

Jarman's sentiment of wanting more goes right along with what Cahoon preached. Although he wants his team to be proud of its accomplishments, the one thing

See HOCKEY on page 6

Junior defenseman Mike Kostka ranks third on the Mass Attack with a plus-10 this season. He has 18 points on three goals and 15 assists.

Hockey East parity means high hopes

Jon Pelland

The concept of parity in Hockey East is tattooed on my brain. This is because coaches in the conference tend to point it out just about every weekend during league play. "Anybody can beat anybody" should be Hockey East's motto.

We're all well aware that all four teams in this weekend's tournament in Boston are capable of winning it all and having a picture of itself hoisting the trophy plastered on HockeyEastOnline.com for the next year (you may also get an automatic bid into the NCAA tournament. I'd have to double-check).

But it's true that we're in for some great hockey (guaranteed) this weekend at the New Garden. UMass plays there for the first time since the name change from the FleetCenter and has a legitimate shot at winning the coveted home page photo-op after the championship game on Saturday night.

Although coach Don Cahoon's crew took the season series from all but one of this weekend's participants (2-1 over both New Hampshire and Boston College, narrowly lost 0-1-2 to Boston University), it should still be ecstatic about drawing the Wildcats in the semis.

This is by far the best matchup for the Minutemen. Thanks to Vermont for the loss last weekend in the only quarterfinal series to go three games – otherwise UMass would be playing BC. Even though the Wildcats are the No. 1 seed in the playoffs and No. 3 in both national polls, before the pairings were even announced the best shot UMass had at making the final was through UNH.

Both teams play on some of the largest sheets in the league. Whittemore is the largest while Mullins is right behind. That means both squads are constructed to be good skaters – a trait the Mass Attack has demonstrated time and again these past few years.

The only major difference between the two is that UMass lacks a prolific scorer, something that hasn't dogged it to this point.

Except the 5-1 shellacking that inflated Jon Quick's goals-against average, UMass beat up on the Wildcats in the their other two encounters – one at the Whittemore Center and another at Mullins.

So what if UNH starting goalie Kevin Regan didn't play in the game in Amherst? It was still the Minutemen's only win ever over a second-ranked team. The Mass Attack loves beating up on back-ups who are thrown into the fire.

Just ask Maine's No. 2, Dave Wilson. That poor kid had to withstand the heat for four straight

See PELLAND on page 6

Virtue called upon to fill void

Sophomore forward replaces Matheson in time of need

By Jeremy Rich
Collegian Staff

It happens all the time. A player that's been relegated to the bench suddenly gets tossed into the fire and is given the dubious task of filling in for one of the stars of a team.

It happens when the starting quarterback goes down and the backup has until the other team punts to warm up, or when a pitcher strains a muscle, and a young reliever has to make a spot-start.

The Massachusetts hockey team's Jordan Virtue has had a different challenge down the home stretch of the season. The man he replaced, Mirk Matheson, has been out there on the ice with him.

Virtue is a center, but the injury bug has hit the Mass Attack hardest on the defensive end. When defenders Martin Nolet and Topher Bevis went down late in the season it forced Matheson to return to the original position he played upon joining the Minutemen, defenseman.

This left a spot open up front, and UMass coach Don Cahoon's choice was the 6-foot-1, 200-pound sophomore.

"He's played about a dozen games this year," Cahoon said of Virtue, "and he's progressed nicely in each one of those games to the point where over the last few weeks, he's playing with a lot more confidence."

Virtue played sparingly for most of the season – nine of the first 28 games – but has played a larger role over the last month, appearing in six of the last eight games, including last weekend's Hockey East quarterfinals.

Cahoon says that Virtue's consistent improvement has allowed the coaching staff to trust him out on the ice as the games intensified.

"He's getting on pucks and making reads more readily than he was earlier in the year," Cahoon said. "I think that has to do with his own assuredness that he fits and that he's making the right decisions and making the right plays."

Virtue played in a total of eight games all of last year, so he was still very much a raw player entering his second season with the Maroon and White. However, he has made the most of the chances he's gotten.

"I think sometimes it just comes with opportunity and it comes with experience," Cahoon said. "He's been here a couple of years now, and I think he clearly understands what we are asking of him and what role he plays within the team. He's had a nice little run here and hopefully he'll continue to improve."

Virtue played in both games at Vermont on Feb. 16 and 17 and then sat out the first game of a home-and-home series with Northeastern on Feb. 23 (defenseman Patrick Dineen filled in for Bevis).

But then when Nolet went down on Feb. 25 in Matthews Arena, Cahoon made the move to switch Matheson to defense and bring Virtue into the game at center.

"At Northeastern his role was that he was going to fill in at different positions," Cahoon explained, "depending on how we moved Matheson around, whether we needed him on the wing position or we were going to play him in the middle. He was really in a precarious position. He never knew from shift-to-shift where he was going to be used or when he was going to be used."

That trend continued through

See VIRTUE on page 6

Sophomore forward Jordan Virtue has one point on an assist in 13 games this season. He has taken over the offensive duties for Mark Matheson as of late, and has been a part of UMass' run in the postseason.

UMass Athletic Wrap

Sponsored by

University Health Services
Health Education

UMass Athletics
Calendar of Events

This Weekend

Friday, March 16

HOCKEY
vs. New Hampshire
5:00 p.m.
Boston, Mass.

SOFTBALL
vs. Rutgers
9:00 p.m.
Boca Raton, Fla.

SOFTBALL
vs. Quinnipiac
11:00 a.m.
Boca Raton, Fla.

Saturday, March 17

MEN'S LACROSSE
vs. Brown
1:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

SOFTBALL
vs. Michigan State
1:00 p.m.
Boca Raton, Fla.

BASEBALL
vs. Dartmouth
3:00 p.m.
Brandenton, Fla.

HOCKEY
Hockey East Championships
7:00 p.m.
Boston, Mass.

Sunday, March 18

BASEBALL
vs. Northwestern
3:00 p.m.
Brandenton, Fla.

SOFTBALL
Championship Round
TBA
Boca Raton, Fla.

Next Week

Monday, March 19

BASEBALL
vs. Jacksonville State
2:30 p.m.
Brandenton, Fla.

WOMEN'S TENNIS
vs. Lynn University
2:30 p.m.
Boca Raton, Fla.

Tuesday, March 20

MEN'S LACROSSE
vs. Sacred Heart
3:00 p.m.
Amherst, Mass.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
at New Hampshire
3:00 p.m.
Durham, N.H.

University Health Services
Health Education

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe hit the game-winning shot in Tuesday night's 89-87 overtime win over Alabama to give UMass its first post-season win since 1996.

Food as friend?
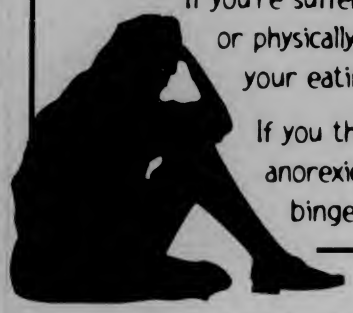
Food as enemy?

If your relationship with food feels out of control

If you're suffering, emotionally or physically, because of your eating

If you think you might be anorexic, bulimic or a binge eater



You could be one of the estimated 5 million people in the U.S. with an eating disorder. Eating disorders are serious health problems – physically and emotionally destructive, and potentially fatal.

But confidential help is here, right on campus!

The Eating Disorders Clinic at University Health Services uses a team approach to support the medical, emotional and nutritional needs of women and men with eating disorders.

Take the first step toward healing – call 577-5414 for more information or an appointment.

UMASS AMHERST

UHS Health Education
577-5181
www.umass.edu/uhs

411-075 03/07

Not Published

[redacted]

Will Ortiz

Kevin Jarman

BLACK BEARS ELIMINATE MASS ATTACK PAGE 10

Museum of sex welcomes visitors Page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 50 LO: 39 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MARCH 26, 2007

Black Bears prey on Minutemen | page 10

After winning its first NCAA Tournament game against Clarkson on Friday, the Mass Attack lost to Maine in the East Regional Final on Saturday, 3-1. Senior Kevin Jarman scored 7:40 in overtime against Clarkson to earn a much anticipated rematch with the Black Bears, but failed to advance to the Frozen Four.

UM students survive crash

4 students left unharmed after colliding into 18-wheelers

By Vincent Capone
Collegian Staff

For most students, spring break is a time for excitement and escape from the stresses of school. But for four University of Massachusetts students, this wasn't the case.

While heading home on the afternoon of Friday, March 16, Fred Obeng-Ampofo, Eric DeBlois, Kevin Swiechowicz and Ryan O'Flanagan survived a four-vehicle collision off Exit 2 on Interstate-90 East.

The mix of freezing rain and snow contributed to the hazardous driving that afternoon, making the roads slippery and reducing visibility.

Two separate vehicles carrying the party left the UMass campus at around 2:30 p.m. that day. Freshmen Eric DeBlois, Kevin Swiechowicz and Ryan O'Flanagan rode in the first vehicle – a 1997 Saturn SC2 coupe – while junior Fred Obeng-Ampofo drove his sister and two of her friends in a separate SUV.

"The ride to Worcester from Amherst usually takes about an hour's drive, but that day I planned on spending an additional 30 minutes on the road because of poor conditions," recalls the driver, Obeng-Ampofo.

An hour into the drive, about 200 yards from the Charlton Plaza, O'Flanagan, while driving in the first lane, lost control of the wheel and slid into the middle lane in front of an oncoming Dunkin Donuts 18-wheeler.

"We were traveling at about 28 miles per hour when it happened," said Swiechowicz, who was in the passenger seat. "Ryan was not at fault in any way."

Seconds after O'Flanagan's car slid into the middle lane, the 18-wheeler slammed violently into the front side of the Saturn, crushing the bumper and front end of the car.

"I heard a tremendous boom," said DeBlois, who was in the backseat watching a movie.

The Dunkin Donuts truck skidded to the side after pushing the Saturn into the middle lane in front of another truck. The impact of the second truck destroyed the trunk of the vehicle and caused the car to spin into the guardrail, landing right in front of Obeng-Ampofo's oncoming SUV.

See CRASH on page 3

UMPD appoints new deputy chief of police for operations

By Vincent Capone
Collegian Staff

The police department of the University of Massachusetts has appointed a new deputy chief of police for operations, a new position in the department.

Johnny C. Whitehead, a former officer, colonel and chief of field operations for 18 years in the Baltimore County Police Department, was chosen to fill the new position.

"He is a capable, accomplished, professional individual, and I look forward to him being part of our team," said police Chief Barbara O'Connor in a statement from the UMass news and information office.

She believes Whitehead brings highly qualified experience to the position, with his previous position as a law enforcement official for the lieutenant governor of Maryland and involvement with the Maryland Department of Transportation's Motor Vehicle Administration.

"I am pleased to be joining the UMass Amherst Police Department," Whitehead said in the press release. "My experience is grounded in community policing, and I see this department as an integral part of campus life."

Whitehead served the Baltimore County Police Department from 1979 to 1997, as a police officer to colonel and chief of field operations bureau. While serving as colonel between 1995 and 1997, Whitehead administered over 1,300 employees in eight precincts and was responsible for a $55 million budget and policy and strategic planning.

More recently, Whitehead served as senior policy advisor on public safety issues to the lieutenant governor of Maryland, overseeing policy development, and providing research and advice on issues such as community-based policing, highway safety, domestic and gun violence and emergency preparedness, according to the press release.

Whitehead is a graduate of the FBI National Academy and the Federal Executive Institute. He received his bachelor's degree in criminal justice from the University of Baltimore in 1992, and later went on to earn a master's degree from John Hopkins University in 1996 in applied behavioral sciences.

"He is a capable, accomplished, professional individual and I look forward to him being part of our team," said Chief O'Connor in the press release.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu.

Johnny C. Whitehead is the new deputy chief of police for operations at UMass. He previously served 18 years in the Baltimore County Police Department.

Robert Mugabe still honored by UMass

Sen. Obama receives same doctorate as 'violent dictator'

By Taylor Fife
Collegian Correspondent

When Senator Barack Obama received an honorary degree at the University of Massachusetts Boston last year for "advancing and protecting the interests of the less fortunate [and] adherence to a political credo that transcends both party and race," many people were excited to hear a politician give his opinions on leadership and race in the United States.

Now, millions of Americans and Bay Staters are thrilled that Obama, the only sitting black senator and current presidential hopeful, has thrown his hat in the ring and is striving to become the leader of the United States.

Exactly 20 years before Obama's recognition, another black politician received an honorary degree from UMass for his efforts "to establish racial harmony between blacks and whites." Only one year after accepting his degree he became president of his native country, Zimbabwe. He was an early critic of apartheid and had fought for years for the independence of African nations.

But today, Robert Mugabe, recipient of an Honorary Doctorate of Law in 1986 from UMass, is known as one of the most oppressive, violent and tyrannical dictators of this time, responsible for the death of countless Zimbabwe citizens and the primary actor in the economic collapse and devastation of a nation.

The contrast between the visions of the two politicians lay in their speeches during the ceremonies.

"We also advocate war against-armed struggle-against South Africa," Robert Mugabe told a crowd of students and faculty while receiving his degree. His program for ending racial prejudice in Africa called for violence and harsh economic sanctions against those he perceived as racist.

Senator Obama's speech in 2006 also called for an end to racism, but in contrast to Mugabe, he hopes to achieve this through love and mutual understanding.

"Empathy is a quality of character that can change the world – one that makes you understand that your obligations to others extend beyond people who look like you and act like you and live in your neighborhood," Obama said.

Mugabe's penchant for violence was either unnoticed or unimportant to the board of trustees who decided to award him with the honor that year.

In 2002, a BBC special reported that in the years 1982 through 1985, Mugabe consolidated power by committing mass murders.

UMass President Jack Wilson has acknowledged that stripping Mugabe of his degree is not out of the question, but almost no real action has been taken in the 20 years since the degree was given.

Last semester, a Zimbabwean student at UMass Boston started a petition that called for the revocation of the degree, but insufficient pressure has led to no results.

Last year, Mugabe ranked fourth on Parade Magazine's list of the world's worst dictators, only behind Omar al-Bashir of Sudan, Kim Jong-il of North Korea and Than Shwe of Burma – a dictator known for his use of child soldiers and forced labor camps.

Mugabe has never been known for his dedication to democracy or freedoms but his disrespect for rule of law and decency. In 2000, he confiscated farms from white farmers and redistributed them to political allies with little or no agricultural experience. Zimbabwe's agricultural industry quickly fell into disarray.

More than two-thirds of Zimbabwe's work force have

See LEADER on page 3

Robert Mugabe received an Honorary Doctorate of Law from UMass in 1986 and became "one of the most oppressive and violent" leaders of Zimbabwe.

Presidential candidate Barack Obama received the same honorary degree last year for his interests to protect the well-being of the less fortunate.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 103
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Atlas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jameson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Copy Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellogian
Sports Editor Dana Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Post
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Natasha Pedchenko
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Bokaemis
Assistant News Nicole Bourgakis-Kokol
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rue
Web Editor Lewis Hale
Photo Editor Tom Trinh

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Atlas

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Yiu Langen

Pentagon blames officers for errors in Tillman case

By Lolita C. Baldor and Scott Lindlaw
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nine officers, including up to four generals, should be held accountable for missteps in the aftermath of the friendly fire death of Army Ranger Pat Tillman in Afghanistan, a Pentagon investigation will recommend.

Senior defense officials said Friday the Defense Department inspector general will cite a range of errors and inappropriate conduct as the military probed the former football star's death on the battlefront in 2004, said one defense official.

The official, who like the others requested anonymity because the Army has not publicly released the information, said it appears senior military leaders may not have had all the facts or worked hard enough to get the facts of what happened on April 22, 2004, when Tillman was killed by members of his own platoon.

Dozens of soldiers — those immediately around Tillman at the scene of the shooting, his immediate superiors and high-ranking officers at a command post nearby — knew within minutes or hours that his death was fratricide.

Even so, the Army persisted in telling Tillman's family he was killed in a conventional ambush, including at his nationally televised memorial service 11 days later. It was five weeks before his family was told the truth, a delay the Army has blamed on procedural mistakes.

The latest investigation has focused on how high up the chain of command it was known that Tillman's death was caused by his own comrades. Officers from the rank of colonel and up will be blamed in the report, according to one officer who has been informed of the findings.

According to the officials, the report will not make charges or suggest punishments, but it will recommend the Army look at holding the

See TILLMAN on page 3

A Pentagon investigation will recommend that nine officers be held accountable for missteps in the aftermath of the death of Pat Tillman in 2004.

Unconventional... maybe.
We also have part-time, year-round positions with paid insurance, time off and education!!
APPLY NOW! sixflags.com/workatsixflags.asp
Unique... definitely.
Six Flags is a Smoke and Drug Free Equal Opportunity Employer
For More Information Call 413-786-9300 ext. 3100
• Free & Discounted Passes!
• Free Admission!
• Buddy Passes!
• Competitive Wages!
• Flexible Schedules!
• Scholarships!
• Student Loan Assistance!
• Paid Internships!
• Real World Career Experience!
• Exclusive Team Member Events!
• Health Insurance Availability!
• Lots of Free Stuff!
45 YEARS
Six Flags
NEW ENGLAND
Opportunity. It's our major attraction.

Lesbian mother wants court to ban adoptions to gay men

By Greg Bluestein
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Sara Wheeler's life has become a contradiction. Once a proud lesbian, she's now a pariah in the gay community. Once in a committed relationship with a female partner, she's rethinking her sexuality.

And now she's doing something she once would have considered unthinkable — arguing that gays don't have the legal right to adopt children.

Wheeler is coming to grips with the fact that she's become an outcast for taking this step in a custody fight for her child. But she says that isn't what her fight is about: "It's about motherly rights."

Wheeler, 36, and her partner, Missy, decided to start a family together and share the Wheeler last name. In 2000, Sara Wheeler gave birth to a son, Gavin, through artificial insemination. Two years later, they decided Missy Wheeler should adopt the child and legally become his second parent.

Georgia law doesn't specifically say whether gay parents can adopt a child, so the decision was up to a judge in the Atlanta area's DeKalb County. After an adoption investigator determined that both partners wanted it, the judge cleared the request.

The couple's relationship later soured. Missy Wheeler wouldn't comment for this story, but her attorney, Nora Bushfield, said Sara became involved with someone else and wouldn't let Missy and Gavin see each other.

Sara Wheeler acknowledged the other relationship, saying "regardless of my action, it doesn't make me a bad mother."

Sara and Missy Wheeler had split by July 2004, and Missy was fighting for joint custody of the boy.

The two sides do agree about one thing: The case is about a mother's rights.

"Everybody seems to forget we're not talking about lesbian rights," Missy Wheeler's attorney says. "We're talking about a child who's been bonded with a mother."

Sara Wheeler made the legal argument that, since nothing in Georgia law specifically allowed gay adoption, the adoption should be tossed out. Her first lawyers warned her the case could set gay rights back a century.

Sara Wheeler is asking the state Supreme Court to reconsider her case. Such a request rarely succeeds, but the narrow vote gives her hope that one justice might be swayed.

"There's nothing that states this is an acceptable adoption," she said. "If Georgia wants to allow it, it needs to make proper laws."

As the legal motions flew back and forth, the two women established a workable routine. The 7-year-old boy goes to Missy Wheeler's place every other weekend and on Tuesday nights. The rest of the time Sara Wheeler ferries him to karate practice, plays tag with him outside her apartment and takes him out for pizza every Friday.

The case has taken a toll on Sara.

Aside from a few gay friends, she has turned away from the gay community. She no longer dates, and doesn't go to gay clubs or events any more. She said she is rethinking whether she is still a lesbian or whether she should abandon dating for good.

"I just don't feel comfortable in that scene," she says. "I'm just trying to figure it all out."

She knows she's seen as a betrayer, but in a sense, she feels she was the one betrayed.

"Before I'm anything — gay or lesbian — I'm a mother," she says. "And the most important thing is to make sure my son has a relationship with his biological mother."

Sara Wheeler made the legal argument that, since nothing in Georgia law specifically allowed gay adoption, the adoption should be tossed out. Her first lawyers warned her the case could set gay rights back a century.

She hired a new attorney and asked the DeKalb County court to toss the adoption that she had previously pushed for, claiming it should never have been approved because it runs afoul of state law.

News of the tactic whipped up Atlanta's gay community, one of the largest in the South. Lambda Legal, a gay rights group, made a legal filing with the Georgia Supreme Court supporting Missy Wheeler. "There's something about this case that's just tragic," said Greg Nevins, a lawyer for the group.

Laura Douglas-Brown, editor of Southern Voice, the city's main gay newspaper, penned a column accusing Sara Wheeler of "self-hating."

"We owe it to each other not to lash out in ways that damage the entire gay community," she wrote. "Your own family may be destroyed, but don't destroy ours, too."

Sara said she felt like she had no choice.

"I'm not doing anything else a mother wouldn't do to fight for her son," she said. "Some people may think it's the unthinkable, but if they were put in my shoes, they'd do the same thing."

It didn't go so well. Her lawsuit seeking to throw out the adoption was rejected by the DeKalb County judge and then the state Court of Appeals.

Then the Georgia Supreme Court, in a 4-3 vote in February, declined to hear the case. Only months earlier, the court had upheld the state's constitutional ban on gay marriage, which Georgia voters overwhelmingly approved in 2004.

Justice George H. Carley, who voted with the minority in the gay adoption case, declared he was "at a loss to comprehend" why the court refused to consider a case of such "great concern, gravity and public importance."

Lawmakers consider impeachment

President Bush and first lady Laura Bush wave as they return to the White House in Washington after spending the weekend at Camp David, Maryland on Sunday.

By Hope Yen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With his go-it-alone approach on Iraq, President Bush is flouting Congress and the public, so angering lawmakers say that some consider impeachment an option over his war policy, a senator from Bush's own party said Sunday.

Meanwhile, the Senate's No. 2 Republican leader harshly criticized House Democrats for setting an "artificial date" for withdrawing troops from Iraq and said he believes Republicans have enough votes to prevent passage of a similar bill in the Senate.

"We need to put that kind of decision in the hands of our commanders who are there on the ground with the men and women," said Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.). "For Congress to impose an artificial date of any kind is totally irresponsible."

GOP Sen. Chuck Hagel (R-Neb.), a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and a frequent critic of the war, stopped short of calling for Bush's impeachment. But he made clear that some lawmakers viewed that as an option should Bush choose to push ahead despite public sentiment against the war.

"Any president who says, I don't care, or I will not respond to what the people of this country are saying about Iraq or anything else, or I don't care what the Congress does, I am going to proceed — if a president really believes that, then there are what I was pointing out, there are ways to deal with that," said Hagel, who is considering a 2008 presidential run.

The Senate planned to begin debate Monday on a war spending bill that would set a nonbinding goal of March 31, 2008, for the removal of combat troops.

That comes after the House narrowly passed a bill Friday that would pay for wars in Iraq and Afghanistan this year but would require that combat troops come home from Iraq before September 2008 or earlier if the Iraqi government did not meet certain requirements.

On Sunday, Hagel said he was bothered by Bush's apparent disregard of congressional sentiment on Iraq, such as his decision to send additional troops. He said lawmakers now stood ready to stand up to the president when necessary.

In the April edition of Esquire magazine, Hagel described Bush as someone who doesn't believe he's accountable to anyone. "He's not accountable anymore, which isn't totally true. You can impeach him, and before this is over, you might see calls for his impeachment. I don't know. It depends on how this goes," Hagel told the magazine.

In his weekly address Saturday, Bush accused Democrats of partisanship in the House vote and said it would cut the number of troops below a level that U.S. military commanders say they need. Vice President Dick Cheney also accused Democrats of undermining U.S. troops in Iraq and of sending a message to terrorists that America will retreat in the face danger.

"We have clearly a situation where the president has lost the confidence of the American people in his war effort," Hagel said. "It is now time, going into the fifth year of that effort, for the Congress to step forward and be part of setting some boundaries and some conditions as to our involvement."

"This is not a monarchy," he added, referring to the possibility that some lawmakers may seek impeachment. "There are ways to deal with it. And I would hope the president understands that."

Lott said setting withdrawal dates is a futile and potentially dangerous exercise because Bush has made clear he will veto any such legislation.

"There are members in the Senate in both parties that are not comfortable with how things have gone in Iraq," Lott said. "But they understand that artificial timetables, even as goals, are a problem. ... We will try to take out the arbitrary dates."

Sen. Bill Nelson (D-Fla.), said the Senate bill seeks to heed the recommendations of the bipartisan Iraq Study Group by setting a goal of withdrawing some troops while leaving others behind to train the Iraqi army for border patrol and other missions.

"That, combined with a very aggressive, diplomatic effort in the region is what we're going to need to have," he said.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), said she believed that setting a timetable was appropriate but declined to predict whether it would garner enough Senate votes to pass.

"People of this country have spoken overwhelmingly. It's been constant now," Feinstein said. "They want us out. It is time for the Senate to weigh in. I hope we will have the votes."

Hagel spoke on ABC's "This Week." Feinstein and Lott appeared on "Fox News Sunday," and Nelson was on CNN's "Late Edition."

Students want Mugabe's honor revoked

LEADER from page 1

jobs in the agricultural sector, primarily as wage laborers, and with the collapse of white-owned farms, more than 400,000 of the poorest Zimbabweans lost their jobs.

Zimbabwe's economy has been driven to shambles by poor government mismanagement over the years. Lagging tax revenue and outrageous government spending has forced Mugabe's government to print excess amounts of money to pay off their debts. Zimbabwe's unprovoked war of aggression against the Democratic Republic of Congo in 1998-2002 hit them hard.

The International Monetary Fund has described Zimbabwe's economic policies as "off-track" and "mis-guided." Support from the IMF has been suspended again due to payments that have come late, or sometimes not at all.

Two weeks ago, the IMF expressed "deep concern" over Zimbabwe's deteriorating economy. Mugabe did not seem too worried and threw a massive party for his 80th birthday in which thousands attended.

By U.S. standards the inflation rate in Zimbabwe has always been off the charts but remained manageable until around the year 2000. The official annual inflation rate rose from 32 percent in 1998, to 133 percent in 2004 and to 585 percent in 2005. The IMF reported 1,216.0 percent inflation for 2006 and projects a 4,278.8 percent inflation rate for 2007.

In 1983, one U.S. dollar could be exchanged for about one Zimbabwe dollar. Today's exchange rate cannot be published in a weekly newspaper because of its day-to-day changes. In mid-February 2007, one dollar could buy about Z$5,000. By Feb. 26, one dollar was worth about Z$7,000. Mugabe, who has two bachelors degrees and one masters degree in economics, responded to hyperinflation last month by declaring all price increases illegal.

Economists are not convinced that this is going to have the effects that Mugabe hopes for. Price inflation is caused by an increase in the money supply. This occurs only when the government literally or figurative speeds up the printing presses and churns out more cash. According to classical macroeconomic theory, buyers and sellers cannot have a lasting impact on inflation of domestic prices without having more money in the system.

Zimbabwe currently suffers from an employment rate of 80 percent, and 80 percent of the country lives below the poverty line. The richest 10 percent of the country consume more than 40 percent of all goods there. Gross Domestic Product in Zimbabwe is shrinking, and the current public debt is 1.08 times the GDP. Mugabe has blamed the economic problems of his country on Western powers and imperialism.

During the week of Mugabe's birthday celebrations, he responded to opposition party rallies by declaring political demonstrations illegal and arresting opposition party leaders. He also postponed presidential elections that would have taken place in 2008 until 2010. The United Nations described his presidential victory in 2002 as "rigged."

Mugabe is known for throwing political enemies in jail, framing them for outrageous crimes or creating arbitrary laws that he knows enemies violate. Mugabe's attempt to frame opposition leader Morgan Tsvangirai for an assassination attempt even inspired a Hollywood production, "The Interpreter," starring Sean Penn and Nicole Kidman.

In 2005, Mugabe led a hold "Clean up the Filth" campaign. He forcibly removed 700,000 people from their homes, destroying their property and businesses. He claimed that it was a campaign of urban renewal that sought to clean up the worst parts of the country. The areas that people were removed from were known strongholds of opposition.

Opinions of Mugabe continue to be mixed

In the 1960s, Zimbabwe was under the racist and undemocratic rule of white leaders. The country, then known as Rhodesia, was not given independence from the United Kingdom because of it[s] [i]-treatment of its racial m[a]jority. Although whites represented only five percent of the population, they controlled the government, were 95 percent of voters and by law owned 50 percent of the land. Mugabe was an important leader in the struggle to overthrow the racist white government that controlled the region.

After decades of violence and negotiations, the new nation Zimbabwe was given independence, blacks were granted political and social freedoms and Robert Mugabe was named prime minister. Despite his current unpopularity in Zimbabwe, Africa and the entire world, he was voted number three on a list of the "100 Greatest Africans" by readers of the monthly magazine, "The New African."

Mugabe's received degrees from Fort Hare, the University of South Africa and University of London. He received honorary degrees from Michigan State University, University of Edinburgh and the University of Zimbabwe. Mugabe also famously quipped in a 1998 speech threatening trade unionists that he had "many degrees in violence."

Students at both Michigan State University and University of Edinburgh have been calling for revocation of his degrees since the mid-90s.

The dictator, shown in this 1986 photo, has committed mass murders to consolidate his power in Zimbabwe, ranking him fourth in world's worst dictators.

Icy roads cause 4-vehicle collision on Mass. Pike

CRASH from page 1

"If it had not been for my sister and her two other friends who abruptly yelled, 'brake,' it would have been an even more catastrophic scene," said Obeng-Ampofo, the driver of the second vehicle.

Hitting the brake as hard as he could, Obeng-Ampofo managed to bring the SUV to a sudden halt inches away from the demolished Saturn. It left the scene with barely any damage. O'Flanagan's vehicle was totaled, and debris of its impacts were scattered throughout the middle and fast lane, most of it along the guardrail.

Everyone involved in the collision, including the two truck drivers, were left uninjured.

About a minute after the accident, Obeng-Ampofo recalls grabbing for his camera and recording some reactionary interviews of the passengers in the Saturn. His recordings were sent in to CNN's I-Report and later broadcasted on their station's nightly news program at 10 p.m. the following evening.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu.

Watch video footage from the crash at www.dailycollegian.com

Man gets probation for dead deer sex

SUPERIOR, Wis. — A 20-year-old man received probation after he was convicted of having sexual contact with a dead deer. The sentence also requires Bryan James Hathaway to be evaluated as a sex offender and treated at the Institute for Psychological and Sexual Health in Duluth, Minn.

"The state believes that particular place is the best to provide treatment for the individual," Assistant District Attorney Jim Boughner said.

Hathaway's probation will be served at the same time as a nine-month jail sentence he received in February for violating his extended supervision.

He was found guilty in April 2005 of felony mistreatment of an animal after he killed a horse with the intention of having sex with it. He was sentenced to 18 months in jail and two years of extended supervision on that charge as well as six years of probation for taking and driving a vehicle without the owner's consent.

Hathaway pleaded no contest earlier this month to misdemeanor mistreatment of an animal for the incident involving the deer. He was sentenced Tuesday in Douglas County Circuit Court.

"The type of behavior is disturbing," Judge Michael Lucci said. "It's disturbing to the public. It's disturbing to the court."

—Associated Press

Duke lacrosse case lawyer dies

Lead defense lawyer of the Duke lacrosse sexual assault case, Kirk Osborn, died early Sunday after suffering from a massive heart attack two days earlier.

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Kirk Osborn, a lead defense attorney in the Duke lacrosse sexual assault case, died early Sunday, a fellow defense attorney in the case said.

Osborn had a massive heart attack on Friday and died shortly before 1 a.m. Sunday, attorney Joe Cheshire said.

Osborn represented Reade Seligmann, one of three Duke lacrosse players charged in the case stemming from a dancer's allegation she was sexually assaulted at a team party. The players were originally indicted on charges of rape, sexual offense and kidnapping, but Durham District Attorney Mike Nifong dropped the rape charges in December after the accuser changed a key detail in her story.

All three have steadfastly maintained their innocence.

"We will never forget Kirk and his sacrifices for Reade and for justice," Seligmann's family said in a statement. "Kirk's fight for the truth and for justice in this case met the highest standards of ethics and professionalism and stand in stark contrast to those who condemned Reade. He is an example of what a lawyer should be."

Actions by Osborn in the case included a motion with phone records and security camera images showing Seligmann would have been nearly a mile away from the Durham house at the time the woman said he was taking part in the attack.

Osborn also filed a motion to have Nifong removed from the case, arguing that Nifong went after the lacrosse players to win votes.

In January, Nifong asked the state attorney general's office to take over the investigation after the state bar charged Nifong with several ethics violations tied to his conduct in the lacrosse case. If convicted of the ethics violations, Nifong could be disbarred.

Associated Press

Officers blamed for case errors

TILLMAN from page 2

nine officers accountable.

One defense official said it appears the inspector general will not conclude there was an orchestrated cover-up in the investigation.

Tillman's father, Pat, said Friday he had no intention of commenting on the inspector general's report until he had heard an Army briefing on Monday. That day, the Army plans to release the report and a second related to the killing.

The other report is by the Army Criminal Investigation Command, which will focus on whether a crime, such as negligent homicide, was committed when Tillman's own men shot him. One defense official said it appears the investigation did not find any criminal intent in the shooting.

Tillman's case drew worldwide attention in part because he had turned down a multimillion-dollar contract to play defensive back for the Arizona Cardinals in order to join the Army Rangers after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

The report's release comes with the Bush administration under fire from the public and Congress for the war in Iraq. Though the Afghanistan conflict has not drawn nearly so much criticism, the report could add to the drumbeat of negative stories the administration has had to endure over the treatment of wounded soldiers and the long deployments of U.S. troops.

To date, the Army has punished seven people for the Tillman killing, but no one was court-martialed. Four soldiers received relatively minor punishments under military law, ranging from written reprimands to expulsion from the Rangers. One had his pay reduced and was effectively forced out of the Army.

The Army, which requested the inspector general review last year, said in a statement released Friday that it "plans to take appropriate actions after receiving the inspector general's report."

Previous investigations of the case have focused on the facts of the incident and sought to answer questions of whether it was a fratricide.

The report's findings were first reported on Friday by CBS News.

Tillman died in Afghanistan's Paktia province, along the Pakistan border, after his platoon was ordered to split into two groups and one of the units began firing. Tillman and an Afghan with him were killed. A specialist at the time of his death, he was posthumously promoted to corporal.

Since the incident, the Army has moved to improve the notification procedures and now requires an officer to review initial casualty information and verify that the families have been told the best, accurate information.

Man murders ex-girlfriend, burns body in barbeque grills

By Monica Rhor
Associated Press

HOUSTON — For at least two days, neighbors at a city apartment complex noticed an acrid aroma, black smoke and leaping flames coming from two barbecue grills on the balcony of a second-floor apartment.

What, neighbors at the Red Oak Place apartments wondered, was going on in the unit where 27-year-old Timothy Wayne Shepherd lived? What was he burning at all hours, for days at a time? The answer turned their stomachs.

According to law enforcement officials, Shepherd dismembered, and then burned the body of his former girlfriend, Tynesha Stewart, a 19-year-old Texas A&M University student. Nothing remains of Stewart's body, Harris County Sheriff Tommy Thomas said at a press conference Saturday.

"I just don't know what to think about it," said Louis Evans, whose balcony faces Shepherd's in the quiet tree-lined enclave in northern Houston. "I thought he was a nice normal person. I guess you never know what your neighbors are doing."

Authorities said Shepherd has confessed to strangling and dismembering Stewart, a college freshman who was home on spring break, because he was angry that she had started a new relationship.

Officials first thought Shepherd had disposed of her remains in a large commercial trash bin that had since been emptied, launching an intense debate in the area about whether the Sheriff's Department should conduct a massive and expensive search of area landfills for Stewart's remains.

Stewart was last seen March 15 and was reported missing March 19. The next day, the Harris County Sheriff's Office homicide division launched its investigation.

On March 16, neighbors said they first noticed the unusual activity — and the unpleasant odor — on Shepherd's balcony.

"The smell was awful," said Evans, who also became alarmed after seeing a blaze shoot out from the grills. "I was wondering: What is he burning? Not cooking, but burning. There is a difference."

At times, Evans said, the flames from the grills leapt dangerously close to the roof of the balcony. Evans says he called 911, but when firefighters arrived, the flames had calmed and Shepherd assured them everything was under control.

A leasing agent at the apartment complex also noticed the thick dark smoke and the intense flames and asked Shepherd what he was doing, Evans said. Another neighbor, 18-year-old James Hebert, told The Houston Chronicle that he often cooked out with Shepherd, and even left his grill at Shepherd's apartment. When he wasn't invited over, he asked his neighbor what was going on. Shepherd replied that he was cooking for a wedding, the newspaper said.

Dionne Whitaker, 31, who lives in the complex, said she saw Shepherd carry the grill and smoker to a garbage bin a day or so later, the newspaper said.

Human remains generally require extremely high temperatures to destroy, and authorities have not said how it is possible that Stewart's remains could be completely burned on a patio grill.

"This certainly turned out to be one of the most heinous crimes I've ever seen in my 38 years (in law enforcement)," Thomas, the sheriff, said Saturday.

Shepherd, who is charged with murder, is being held on $250,000 bond in the Harris County Jail. Telephone message left with his attorney, Chip Lewis, were not immediately returned. On Sunday, the door to Shepherd's apartment was covered with plywood boards.

Missing Class for Passover?
(or any other religious observance)

If so, notify your professor or employer in advance.

State Law requires that the University excuse any student who is unable to attend classes or participate in any examination, study, or work requirement because of religious observance. Students have the right to make up examinations, study, or work requirements that they miss because of religious observance without any adverse or prejudicial effects. No fees may be charged to the student for the makeup exercise.

The law also provides that such makeup work may not create an unreasonable burden upon the University. Therefore, students have an obligation to inform their course instructors, in advance, of the days on which they may be absent for religious reasons.

In the event of a dispute between an instructor and a student, either party may contact the department head, the Ombuds Office (545.0867), or the Office of Jewish Affairs (545.9642).

UMASS AMHERST | For more information, visit our website at www.umass.edu/jewish or call the Office of Jewish Affairs at 413.545.9642

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

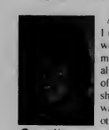
EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 26, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The reality of weddings



Caroline Moretti

As a self-declared thinking person, I usually try to spend as little time watching TV as possible. However, my self-righteous constitution always seems to waiver in the face of a really juicy, mindless reality show. I'm not sure what it is about watching the personal exploits of others that sucks me in, but I'll ashamedly admit I love it.

I recently discovered MTV's newest gem, "Engaged and Underage," which follows lovesick teens on their rocky road to wedded bliss. I'm not sure what captivates me more about this show, the invariable fights with disapproving parents or the fact that these couples can't legally have a champagne toast at their reception. Perhaps the most intriguing part of this show is the way it documents a creepily growing trend: young marriage in the United States.

To most of us, marriage seems like a far-off prospect, like home ownership and daycare fees. The whole institution is correlated to the fantasy world of an old school sitcom, pulling up to the two car garage and announcing "Honey, I'm home!" Yet, for a growing portion of American teens, marriage is a very actual and imminent reality. According to the Chicago Tribune, teenage marriage rates increased by 50 percent during the 1990s, signaling the largest rise in young marriage for nearly 50 years. Not since the days of our grandparents has getting married before college been so popular and hip.

To what can we attribute the growing popularity of teens tying the knot? There are a few popular theories, but the inconsistency of U.S. marriage records makes it hard to trace a definitive answer. Some draw connections to the prevalence of abstinence-only sex education and the restrictions it enforces on young people's sexual freedom. Teens who aren't fully exposed to their own sexualities might see marriage as a simple obstacle in the way of unrestricted, consequence-free "doin' it" without considering the greater implications and responsibilities of a marital union. Others point to a shift in cultural conservatism that's rising in certain portions of the U.S. The marked growth of the married teenage population could be related to the rising popularity of a stricter brand of Christianity.

Her guy had gone from cyber-fling to cyber-fiancee at speeds that boggled my perceptions of love.

However, this trend isn't limited to ultra-uptight factions of the Christian right. Even the most liberal, free-thinking college student can be seduced by the romantic, happily-ever-after promise of young marriage. During the second semester of my freshman year, my then-roommate got into a relationship with a boy she met over the Internet. I was happy for her, but also surprised at how quickly their liaisons had become so serious, complete with multiple epic-length phone calls a day. I was even more surprised to hear that, less than a year later, the two of them had wed. Her guy had gone from cyber-fling to cyber-fiancé at speeds that boggled my perceptions of love.

While I was still happy for her, I was skeptical about this union's permanence. A Rutgers University study found that couples who marry before the age of 20 are two to three times more likely to divorce than their older counterparts. Statistically, the odds weren't in their favor, and I wasn't exactly shocked when I heard they had broken up several months later. Now, my ex-roomie has an ex-husband, and could have to deal with even more intimidating aspects of a distant-sounding adult world: divorce court, ex-parte and alimony.

The bottom line is: marriage is really serious business. It's supposed to be a one-shot deal, you and the person you'll spend the rest of you worldly existence with. There's a lot to consider before you walk down the aisle, and for most young people it can be hard to distinguish between real consistent love and the puppy variety. The most important thing to understand before you commit your life to another person is yourself, and that's a big part of why people come to college, right?

Take your time, and get to know the real you before you say the big "I do." I promise that getting married isn't nearly as cool as MTV makes it look.

Caroline Moretti can be reached at cmoretti@student.umass.edu

Making a hard choice

Tucker Merrick

If you have ever thought Democrats were lacking in finesse and creativity, now is the time to give them credit. Last Friday, the House of Representatives Democrat majority passed the first binding resolution for complete troop withdrawal from Iraq. This controversial bill, which narrowly squeaked through a 218-212 margin to set the month of August 2008 as point of no return, is a clever one.

Though widely known for setting the date of withdrawal, this condition is only a small part of a much larger bill for the future budgeting of the Iraq War. If the president wants a piece of that $124 billion included in this bill, he has to sign an official end to the war. Sure there is lots of burning pork imbedded in this bill to get opponents' fiery objections, but the idea of denying money to Iraq due to this politically-motivated manipulation has gotten many people pissed.

Soon after its passing, President Bush trumped the bill as "an act of political theater." Obviously, HR 1591 is going to be vetoed, and along with it the billions of dollars that could be greatly utilized by troops in the Middle East. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi must know this, and she must also know that there's no way that the slim 218 majority can grow to override the president's big red veto pen. Despite this foreseeable and bleak future, the Democrat majority joyously roared at the voting outcome, and we have to wonder why.

It is undeniable that by cementing a final departure deadline, we tell the insurgents in Iraq just how long they have to wait until we are gone.

This bill has the standard circling disputes of Iraq politics: pork barrel spending, troop levels, war funding, bullying and putting on a show. Yet beneath all of this is a simple question: is the war winnable?

Though it seems long ago, just last December the Iraq Study Group (ISG) issued their conclusions from the first substantial investigation into this conflict. They found the situation to be "dire," stating there was "no guarantee for success in Iraq."

Recently, the House of Representatives narrowly passed a resolution setting a deadline for troop withdrawal.

The Democrats who voted for this bill obviously take this uncertainty and anticipate the failure of success. As Pelosi put it, "Proudly, this new Congress voted to bring an end to the war in Iraq." They don't want a victorious finale, just a conclusion. They see the "tail costs" for equipment and veterans of the war (mentioned in the ISG report) as a burden that is unnecessary to proliferate. As the ISG put it, "Estimates run as high as $2 trillion for the final cost of the U.S. involvement in Iraq." It seems like a heavy price to pay for a war we potentially cannot win.

But there is always that uncertainty. To anyone who sees the glass as half-full, the situation in Iraq has the potential to turn in our favor. There's always that hope that more troops will help, that an open-ended exit will ensure its ease. If you limit that time, then there is only one option. Sure, our country was slow going in the beginning, but there is still a possibility to set up for a successful endgame.

It is undeniable that by cementing a final departure deadline, we tell the insurgents in Iraq just how long they have to wait until we are gone. We let them know exactly when we will give up and move out. From there, it will only be a matter of time until we're evacuating people from embassy rooftops.

But the vital question remains as to whether this bleak future is inevitable. If it is, then this bill should be signed into law. If we are in-fact bound for failure, then the sooner we get out, the better it will be for our country.

With spending around eight-billion dollars per month and new admissions of civil war, it's getting hard to deny that the Iraq conflict is in fact a dire one. Can our country tough it out and see it through, or is this effort futile? Unfortunately, it's not a question we can answer in the present, nor is it a question we should answer with compromise.

All we can do is hope that whatever side we decide — to be either pessimistic or optimistic about victory — that the choice is realistic.

Tucker Merrick is a Collegian Editor and can be reached at jmerrick@student.umass.edu.

Yet another Texas politician has lost it

Chris Eckel

The law of averages says that every politician in Texas cannot be a jackass. However, it is becoming harder and harder to find examples to the contrary. The most recent example of terrible Texan politicians is State Senator Dan Patrick.

Patrick, rather unsurprisingly, is also a strong conservative personality who hosts a radio show. In his spare time, he wrote a book entitled "The Second Most Important Book you Will Ever Read: A Personal Challenge to Read the Bible." Above and beyond the aggrandizing self-importance of the title, Patrick is grossly self-absorbed — he actually created a user account at Amazon.com to write a review of his own book.

Patrick may be in love with himself, but one idea he certainly is not in love with is women having control over their own bodies. In January 2007, he filed legislation to make abortion in Texas illegal if the Supreme Court overturned Roe v. Wade. Intriguingly, the man who proposed the companion bill in the Texas House is Warren Chisum, the man who believes that the sun revolves around the Earth.

Great minds think alike, indeed.

As a follow-up to that campaign, Patrick proposed legislation last week to make it Texas state law to offer women seeking an abortion $500 to carry the baby to term, and then, if desired, put the baby up for adoption. Apparently, Patrick thinks the so-called sanctity of life translates in financial terms to less than the cost of a PlayStation3. His reasoning is that such a financial incentive would reduce the number of abortions in Texas.

The offer is incredibly chauvinistic, foolish and insulting. Let's talk about finances first. A woman carrying a child to term is, in essence, working 24 hours a day for roughly 270 straight days. Patrick and his Country Club friends in the Texas legislature work 140 days every two years. So, Patrick is proposing that a woman be paid $500 to do what is roughly four years of work for him. I wonder how he would feel about being paid the same amount of money. One thing is for sure — on such a salary, he wouldn't have been able to purchase the radio station he owns and on which he broadcasts such nonsense.

However, even if Patrick hadn't made such a ridiculously lowball offer, this proposal is still misogynistic and unrealistic. A politician or judge should never be allowed to tell a woman what to do with her body. Plastic surgery is not illegal, and never will be. Piercing one's ears is not illegal, and never will be. What people choose to do with their own bodies is, and should be, up to them, and them only. As much as they would like to control people's thoughts and actions, people like Dan Patrick and Bill Napoli, his bumbling political colleague from South Dakota, must realize that politicians, judges and religious leaders (three separate groups that are becoming alarmingly overlapping) do not and cannot legislate against human choice.

Apparently, Patrick thinks the so-called sanctity of life translates in financial terms to less than the cost of a PlayStation3.

Of course, when it comes to abortion, there is an additional implication: women are incapable of making a proper decision about their own bodies and lives. As Patrick is a conservative Christian, this is hardly surprising: many sects of the Christian church have for millennia systematically suppressed women. In this "most important book," Patrick quotes Timothy 2:11, which states "Let a woman learn in silence with all submissiveness. I permit no woman to teach or have authority over men; she is to keep silent." When one considers that Patrick endorses a text that calls for the complete subjugation of women, it is not a shock that he considers women unfit to make decisions about their own lives.

Of course, even if Patrick respected women, he probably would not respect their beliefs or decisions, just as he does not respect anybody except those who subscribe to his ridiculous beliefs. This is a man who launched a movement to boycott "Politically Incorrect with Bill Maher" and the Houston Chronicle because he alleged that it's liberally biased. In other words, if you don't agree with Patrick, then he will forcefully attempt to suppress your beliefs, just as he has tried to suppress women. How can a man so opposed to intellectual and individual freedom possibly remain in elected office?

Then again, in some parts of this country, anything is possible.

Chris Eckel can be reached at ceckel@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT (OF UND)

A recent story in USA Today made it appear that the University of North Dakota has already established a campus-wide, tobacco-free policy when, in fact, we are still in the process of considering such a policy. The USA Today piece also failed to emphasize that our consideration focuses on helping people who want to quit first and foremost. A recent editorial in the Grand Forks Herald also failed to put the way we are going about this into a full context.

Representative groups of faculty, staff and students at UND have voted to support a more restrictive policy – understanding that there are details to be worked out. For example, will there be places where smokers will be directed to smoke if they so choose. Certain buildings, which we have leased to other organizations, would be exempt from our policy. While we may well ask these organizations to join the campus-wide restriction, their involvement would be voluntary. Leading up to the implementation of a more-restrictive policy would be an extended period during which smoking-cessation programs and other help will be available. Since we recognize that any policy banning smoking will be difficult if not impossible to enforce, the policy will likely take the form of asking people to respect the wishes of a majority of our faculty, staff and students who wish to reduce the negative impact of tobacco on our campus.

As expected, we have encountered the "what about smokers' rights" argument against having any kind of a more restrictive policy. Often overlooked from this viewpoint is that smokers harm others in many ways, both directly and indirectly. Tobacco and tobacco smoke contains cancer-causing agents for which there is no safe level of exposure, indoors or out. A whiff of tobacco smoke might be enough to trigger an asthma episode in those especially sensitive. A whiff of tobacco smoke might be all it takes to cause someone trying to quit to relapse. Smokers also have an impact on others through the impact they have on themselves. Almost always overlooked is the fact that tobacco-users who are part of our health insurance program draw down a disproportionate share of our health care dollars and are certainly a part of the cause of annual double-digit percentage increases in health-insurance premiums. This impacts us all.

Smoking is the leading cause of preventable death in the United States, claiming more than 440,000 lives each year, including 860 in North Dakota. Smoke-free policies have been shown to decrease tobacco use and increase cessation attempts and successes. That's what we would be shooting for.

Charles E. Kupchella
President
University of North Dakota

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.
MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.

SEE SOMETHING THAT IRKS YOU? THE COLLEGIAN IS ALWAYS LOOKING TO IMPROVE ITS COVERAGE. PART OF THAT EMANATES FROM TAKING THE PULSE OF YOU, THE READER AND MEMBER OF THE UMASS COMMUNITY.

SPEAK YOUR MIND. GET HEARD.

SEND AN E-MAIL TO:
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 26, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Kinky' sex museum welcomes visitors

NYC brings on the blushing

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Correspondent

New York hardly ever gets any sleep: tourism keeps it up all night by continuously bringing people from around the world to the city's streets. Some are attracted to the vibrant lights of Times Square, a real party for the senses, while others tend to enjoy more educational and cultural gems courtesy of the several art, natural history and science museums. However, five years ago, New Yorkers and tourists of the Big Apple gladly welcomed a refreshing alternative to fossil halls and postmodern art-work exhibitions when an atypical institution joined the ranks of the city's cultural harbors: a museum with a sexy twist.

The Museum of Sex is housed on three stories of a building on Fifth Avenue and is usually the cause of sudden silence in cell phone conversations of pedestrians who pass it by. Perhaps it is the thick letters of the word "sex" in the front or the sign that politely asks the museum's visitors not to "touch, lick, stroke or mount the exhibits." From time to time, a bunch of daring and intrigued souls step through the "X" marked doors and explore the exhibits that are served with a dose of giggles and blushing.

According to the museum's Web site, museumofsex.com, its mission is "to preserve and present the history, evolution and cultural significance of human sexuality." The three current exhibits highlight the taboo topics of sex, explore the development of sex in film and emphasize the significance of the museum's permanent collection.

"Kink: Geography of the Erotic Imagination" occupies the first floor of the museum, an exhibit that explores a wide array of sex fetishes. Upon the entrance, a sign gives attendees the freedom to "touch and smell the objects in this exhibition." Female latex masks, pony-play, plushies and medical play are just some of the kinks that are presented in the huge fluorescent-pink painted room. Each fetish includes a written description regarding its nature, a visual or audio component and a model or a photograph.

It did not take long for the attendees to asses the parenting skills of a mother who brought her teenage daughter to the museum: she received either looks of shock or approval. She quickly moved on to the second exhibit; however, if she hoped for something more historical and less sexual, she was in for a big disappointment.

"Action: Sex and the Moving Image" is an exhibit that traces the history of sex in film, including oral sex, transsexuality, homosexuality, taboo and censorship. Panels with written explanations are mounted next to movie screens that play the corresponding sex scenes taken from American films. The dimly-lit room begins with

The risqué nature of the museum ensures sheer amusement for art and sex lovers alike. Within the museum walls are a plethora of delightful and deviant displays.

Kink, a sex museum in New York City, is open to anyone who can resist the urge to "touch, lick, stroke or mount" any of the exhibitions.

the presentations of "stags" or "smoker" films that emerged in the early 20th century and were considered illegal by most state standards due to explicit sexual content. The exhibit explores the development of sex in film throughout the decades and concludes in the present. The use of cell phones is not allowed within the museum to preserve the audile aspect of the experience.

Last week an elderly man, who was unaware of the rule, answered his cell phone and interrupted the mix of moaning and chatter produced by the films and the attendees by speaking in German. A security guard politely asked him to end his conversation and soon people returned to viewing, reading or quietly chatting.

"The film exhibit and how sex is portrayed in the media was my favorite one," said museum visitor Jill Guskin. "In today's world, sex is given so much hype, it is something so shocking and so natural at the same time. The exhibit was particularly successful in pointing that out."

The third floor's "Spotlight on the Permanent Collection" comes closest to resembling the setting of a traditional museum. With the exception of the gigantic sign, "world's first Internet controlled sex machine" and the streaming of a pornographic orgy movie from the 1970s, the objects on display are behind glass. This exhibit presents a sampling of about 10,000 items that are permanent relics of the museum. Everything from condom tins to intricate corsets are available for viewing pleasure. The exhibit presents a variety of books and plays sexual education videos from the 1950s and 1960s. Sex in American art and technology is also featured with provocative art work that can only feel at home in the Museum of Sex.

A set of illustrations taken from the U.S. Patent Office applications submitted between 1862 and 1984, presents computerized graphics of sex inventions from that time period. Some things include a vacuo thermic-body-treatment appliance, a device that measures erection girth and length, a sex-machine with male and female attachments and a headboard with attached stirrups, designed to "therapeutically assist with intercourse by easing strain on the top partner by transferring exertion to the legs."

It is no surprise that many

See SEX MUSEUM on page 6

Local director debuts western Mass. series

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Correspondent

Beyond the scope of the University of Massachusetts's campus lies a state like no other, one that producer and director Steve Alves's film collection Where We Live, proves to be worth exploring. From the mysteries of the Connecticut River to Greenfield's battle with sprawl development, the six films approach Western Massachusetts with a graceful sense of awe, uncovering the internal beauty and distinctiveness of the landscape and its people.

"Where We Live represents a body of work I produced over a 20-year period, put together as a collection," explained Alves, "with the themes of the Connecticut River Valley and Western Massachusetts as a particular place to live."

The film Beneath the River takes its viewers 120 feet below the surface of the Connecticut River and surveys the history of this body of water, leading to the discovery of massive sunken bridges and a chilling abyss that spirals down for an unknown number of miles. In an interview featured on the DVD set, Alves explained that he could have easily made Beneath the River to be a film to attract divers, but he felt that would not accomplish his goals for this movie.

"The really hard challenge," explained Alves, "was to make a film that would reach everybody in Franklin County; to understand and appreciate the river that they drive over everyday in their cars and not even think twice about." UMass's own Professor of Biology Ed Klekowski and his diving team, who discovered two new insect species in the Connecticut River, play key roles in the film and guide the viewers deep beneath the surface. This film brings out the magnificence of the stretch of the river that flows through the state and colorfully merges history with the present.

A Sweet Tradition is a film that successfully captures the importance of passing down the skill of maple sugaring in the New England area from generation to generation. The film is dominated by the cheerful voices of the children who tell the stories of the production of maple syrup from their own point of view. The children's words carry a sense of responsibility and clear understanding of the process. Somehow, when a child explains that it takes about 40 gallons of sap to produce one gallon of maple syrup, the scope of the work that these families must carry out becomes tangi-

See FILM SERIES on page 6

Local filmmakers Steve Alves, right, and Rawn Fulton, left, worked together on the recent six film series entitled "Where We Live," which Alves produced and directed.

Ratdog guitarist Mark Karan delved into aspects of the psychedelic drug culture with a Daily Collegian correspondent, and opened-up about the values that accompanied the 1960s music scene.

Ratdog psychs Drome

By Conor Sullivan
Collegian Correspondent

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.

The clouds quickly blotted out the sun after two of the most beautiful days this semester has offered. The drive to Springfield on March 15 was made through a dull haze with a depressing drizzle and the grit and grime of a dense urban environment. It was a strong contrast to the soothing and uplifting jams playing from the car stereo, and the images of pretty girls in flowery skirts they conveyed. The purpose of the voyage was to see Ratdog, a band fronted by Bob Weir, famous for his part in founding The Grateful Dead.

The militant guards at the front of the Hippodrome provided even further contract to the affable press handler at the security entrance, who was willing to make exceptions for a few diehard fans.

The guitarist of Ratdog was a sociable man, who looked younger than the facts of his biography made him. Mark Karan had been raised in the San Francisco Bay area in the 1960s, and although he had lived elsewhere for all intents and purposes, he'd "grown up" in the Haight.

The Haight, the districts of Haight-Ashbury and Haight-Fillmore in California, had become the focal point of the psychedelic and counter culture movements of the '60s. This movement was due largely to the extensive use of psychedelics, stemming largely from the "Acid Tests" of author Ken Kesey and his group The Merry Pranksters. The band that performed at these events, showcasing their new style of music, was The Grateful Dead.

It was at this time, when he was just 11 years old, that Karan developed his intense love of music, and to a great extent, his musical style. He would see bands such as The Grateful Dead, Quicksilver Messenger Service, Big Brother and Jefferson Airplane, for "next to no money" by attending Sunday shows at the Fillmore which admitted kids under 12 for free, while charging all others $2. During these times, Karan experienced all the great Blues and Rock acts of the day for less than half his weekly allowance.

But the draw to the Haight was about much more than just the music. It was the power of a movement, a sense that the individuals there were a part of something and that it was "bigger than the bad guys." It was in Haight-Ashbury where Karan and others found the set of values they could live their lives by. Values Karan calls, "Not Red State, Blue State, family values type shit ...real spiritual values, real loving values." Values of love, of peace and acceptance, of withholding judgment and prejudice against your fellow man.

It was through the use of psychedelics that many people found themselves truly able to

See RATDOG on page 6

'Where We Live' to debut on ACTV today

FILM SERIES from page 5

ble. This feel-good film allows its viewers to taste the sweetness of the tradition and demonstrates that sometimes children can be the best teachers.

The film Together in Time tells the story of a tradition that is full of sound, movement and life: contra music and dance in the New England area. The film traces the history of this particular hobby, from the attempt of the successful car entrepreneur Henry Ford to revive contra dance to the musical talents of the people who sustain the life of contra music in this area.

"Together in Time was especially enjoyable to write and direct," said Alves, "because it focuses on a very positive idea of the abiding heartbeat of humanity." One of the many highlights of the film is the story of an avid fan of contra dance and music, a woman who is 101 years old. Her story alone awakens a sense of appreciation of the contra tradition and touches upon the longevity of this interest. The film claims a sensible verdict: the New England area is a safe haven for contra music and dance lovers.

The Franklin Community Development Corporation (FCCDC) is the focus of the film Everybody's Business that highlights the accomplishments of this organization in creating and sustaining local businesses in the community. The film is done in an interesting manner that allows the businesses to tell their story rather than focus on the FCCDC alone.

The situations of the businessmen who needed help with either reviving or starting a new business point to the necessity of the FCCDC and the monetary funds the corporation provides for local developments. Supported by old photographs, the film does a great job in telling the history of businesses and fusing their success with the contributions that came from the FCCDC.

The next film in the collection Life After High School, focuses on the choices that high school graduates face after their four years of schooling are over. The film does a splendid job in capturing the attention of the teenagers who must decide on what to do next and explores the options of skilled and unskilled jobs on the market. The hairstyles and fashion of the people featured in the film reveal that it was made a long time ago; nevertheless, Life After High School proves that its lessons are timeless. The film is enticing in its presentation and topic investigating an aspect of life that high school graduates must deal with in every generation.

Talking to the Wall is not only the longest film on the DVD set, but it is also the most captivating and inspirational piece in which Alves shares a part of his life with the viewers. The film documents a tough battle between Greenfield and corporate giant Wal-Mart. It also succeeds in describing the director's contributions to the cause and explains his motivation for resisting sprawl development.

"Talking To The Wall: The Story of an American Bargain was a totally engrossing film to make," explained Alves, "because I was able to bring to light what I think are important social issues about land use and our government's inadequate role in protecting citizens and the communities from the abuses of large corporations."

The sixth film of the collection leaves the viewers hungry for more work from the director and provides a gleam of hope for the preservation of significant communities such as Greenfield. It allows the audience to get to know the director, explores the history of sprawl development and leaves room for questions. Placing the film as last on the DVD set makes it a powerful conclusion to a collection of work that can only come from a director who truly loves and appreciates Western Massachusetts and its effervescent spirit.

"I would hope that those who see my films simply enjoy the experience of watching them," said Alves. "There's a certain satisfaction to a good story well-told, which is primary to a movie experience. Gratitude for the benevolence of nature, the reason we exist and the desire to protect that which sustains us, land and communities, is also a reaction I hope for."

Alves, who currently lives in Greenfield, attended the USC Film School and worked in New York City and Hollywood as a film editor. "During the 1980s I moved to Western Massachusetts and began producing my own films, mainly documentaries. Writing and directing allows me to make the films I want to make and I don't miss the city life one bit," said Alves.

Amherst Community Television will air Where We Live for seven consecutive days starting today. One film will be shown each day and all six films will run continuously that Sunday. The showings will feature interviews with Alves and extras featured on the DVD set as well. Alves will also take part in "An Evening of Film and Art Steve Alves and Robert Masla" at the R. Michelson Galleries in Northampton on April 13. Excerpts from the film collection will be shown followed by a discussion with the director.

A six film series on western Massachusetts is debuting on Amherst's community station, ACTV, today, and will continue for seven consecutive days. On April 13, local filmmaker Steve Alves will visit Northampton for a special screening of excerpts from the series.

Sex museum a hit among 'curious' art enthusiasts

The darkened hallways of Kink offer just enough shadow to hide any embarrassed expressions, as nearly every display exhibits the more taboo aspects of art and human interaction.

SEX MUSEUM from page 5

museum visitors walk away from the illustrations speechless, either pondering about the practicality of the devices or are simply unable to grasp the ideas behind the inventions. Whatever their thoughts the attendees are reassured that this is not the kind of museum parents can take their children to on a Sunday afternoon.

"I think it's important to have the Museum of Sex to stir people away from the idea that sexuality is something 'wrong' and 'immoral,'" said Gurskin.

The Museum of Sex is located on Fifth Avenue and 23 Street in New York City and is open seven days a week. The price of a ticket with valid student ID is $13.50.

A postcard sold in the museum's gift shop eloquently sums up the necessity of the Museum of Sex's existence. "Because you don't think about Picasso seven times an hour."

NEW Abbsolute SALON AND DAY SPA
Your One Stop Beauty Salon
Hair, Nails, Tanning, Massage, and Skin Care
10% off any tanning package
10% off any service or product
good through April 27, 2007
413-397-9988
267 Amherst Rd.
Sunderland, MA
(across from Cliffside Apts)
all major credit cards accepted

Youth lose drug culture

RATDOG from page 5

Bob Weir, frontman of the band Ratdog which performed last week in Springfield, was a founding member of The Grateful Dead.

connect. "When I started getting high it was as a kid in the Haight, and in that scene," said Karan. "And it was all about LSD and it was all about Marijuana, both of which I consider to be consciousness expanding drugs. Drugs I consider to make you more sensitive, more aware, more plugged in, more likely to be turned on to your brother, more likely to be exploration, to seek new things, and really want to fill yourself with the good stuff."

Karan said that by the time Ronald Reagan was in office, he had watched American culture grow. "Angrier, more impatient, people want everything now... simply...without plot" to the point where now "they don't want to sit and listen to an entire movement of a symphony, they want a three-minute song." Along with these changes came a drastic shift away from LSD and other drugs, which lowered the ego and opened people up to each other and towards heroin, cocaine and alcohol, which Karan said: boosts the ego. "I don't think they inspire the same spiritual and emotional place that LSD inspires, so the focus away from LSD, it's sad and I don't like seeing it."

Despite the fall from prominence of the culture and philosophical ideas that was originally so intrinsical in their music, The Grateful Dead continued to tour and make music as a band until the death of Jerry Garcia in 1995. A few years prior, Bob Weir had started a side project know as The Ratdog Review later shortened to simply Ratdog. Upon Jerry's death this became Weir's dominant touring gig.

Karan, who had been listening to The Dead for all of his formative years and most of his adult life, spent most of his career as a "starving musician," he said, "doing blues gigs and sessions and whatever else was available." Having met one of the members of The Other Ones, a band composed of the remaining Grateful Dead, in that environment he was flown up to San Francisco. With the honest belief that he would not get the gig, he just played as himself, happy at the chance to play with a band he had idolized as a child. Thus began Karan's involvement with The Other Ones and subsequently Ratdog, a band which he describes as not only allowing him a "comfy living," but also granting him an unsurpassable level of musical permission and freedom to be himself.

Much of the band's younger crowd now yearns for a connection to the drug culture which Karan spoke of; a culture which had been lost long before they had been born. However, from the stage Karan claimed that it didn't seem they were being true to the deeper philosophies of the culture; he said "what passes for hippie, in a lot of instances has become a fashion statement. If you've got the dreads and you've got the corduroy and you eat 'E' and you go to some sort of GD related shows then you're a hippie. But I see these people being really judgmental, being pretty close minded about their opinions about music and sometimes being harsh with one another on the lot and to me that's not hippie because to me at the basis of the whole hippie thing, beneath all of it is acceptance, non judgmental, love, peace. All of that stuff, then you start piling on paisley and dreadlocks and whatever the hell else you like."

The poor attitude of many fans was tangible at the show, where people that stood in front rows were subject to all manners of pushing and elbowing. The worst was that many mostly middle-aged members of the crowd harassed some of the young women present. Quite contrary to the peaceful messages proclaimed through the songs, numerous fights occurred which lead to security interventions and ejections.

But in the right sections the attitude was much warmer, people were very friendly, and more than happy to share whatever they had with those around them. Karan expressed his hope that by drawing people into the atmosphere of a Ratdog concert, perhaps they could be influential in opening some minds and turning people around. Even if it was through tangential experiences, he hoped to propagate some of the ideals which have fallen out of style since The Dead were formed, unfortunately only a few in the crowd seemed to accept this message on a more than superficial level.

Maine ends UMass' season

HOCKEY from page 10

to get the puck on goal and to relieve himself of the pressure of two UMass defenders, while hoping to catch Quick off guard. But it was also the second example in less than five minutes of how in a sport like hockey, a lucky bounce can mean the difference between winning and losing.

The Minutemen needed to score to avoid going into the third down by two goals, especially after squandering a 5-on-3 power play in the middle of the period. The team finally put a puck past Bishop on the man advantage with less than two minutes left in the frame.

Senior forward Kevin Jarman handled the puck by the boards on the right side and passed to Anderson in the high slot. The senior captain briefly held the puck and launched a wrist shot, which slipped past Bishop's left shoulder.

Junior forward P.J. Fenton originally earned credit for the goal since it was difficult to determine if he tipped the puck on its way to the right side of the net.

"Before the period, I thought going in we had some momentum," Anderson said. "But I thought, especially at the end of the second period, we played pretty well."

But Maine's third goal in the early stages of the final period sealed the fate of the Minutemen, as they mustered very little offense during the next 10 minutes. Though the team had several good scoring opportunities during the last two minutes of regulation, in a last ditch effort to get back into the game.

Maine forward David de Kastrozza went to the penalty box for interference in the 19th minute. Cahoon promptly pulled Quick, giving his team a 6-on-4 advantage. The Minutemen moved the puck well during the power play, but could not slip anything passed goaltender Ben Bishop.

Their best look came on a slap-shot from senior forward Chris Capraro near the left faceoff circle. Bishop played the shot perfectly and made an energetic glove save to preserve the lead, a few seconds before time ran out on the Minutemen.

Despite being the apparent underdog as the four seed in region, the Mass Attack played a spectacular defensive game against No. 1 seed Clarkson on Friday. Posting his second career shutout, Quick paced the Minutemen with 33 saves, including 18 in the second period alone.

David Leggio was nearly as spectacular in net for the Golden Knights, turning away 37 total shots – a new school record. But the one shot he failed to stop cost his team the game.

Leggio's perfect play continued until the eighth minute of the overtime period, when he finally succumbed to pressure from the Minutemen's third line.

Forward Will Ortiz attempted to wrap the puck around the left side of the Clarkson net. The freshman lost control of the puck, but it ended up on the off hand of sophomore Jordan Virtue's stick on the edge of the right face-off circle. Virtue put a backhand shot into the chest of Leggio.

The Clarkson goaltender let the puck slip out from underneath his outstretched body, allowing senior forward Kevin Jarman to get his stick on the puck. He flipped the rebound into the upper region of the net before Leggio could react.

In an instant, a singular red light illuminated at the north end of the ice transformed a scoreless, hard-fought hockey game into a celebration for the Minutemen.

Even in a game of minimal scoring, each team had multiple genuine scoring chances in every period. But the deciding goal was one that was neither pretty nor a fluke – it was instead the result of hard work in front of the net.

"It becomes even more simple when the game gets into the late stages," Cahoon said. "And you knew that the last goal scored was either going to be the winning goal in overtime or if it's in regulation – a hard goal to overcome."

Yet the game seemed to follow the pattern of UMass dominating the first, Clarkson controlling play in the second and both teams having equal opportunities in the third and overtime periods.

The Maroon and White opened the game with strong forechecking and puck movement, resulting in a total of 13 shots on net. The Minutemen's best scoring chance came midway through the period. Senior forward Matt Anderson flipped a rebound from the left side of the net over the crossbar, despite beating Leggio.

In the second frame, Clarkson kept the puck in its offensive zone for much of the period, launching 18 shots at Quick. The team's best scoring chance at that point came during the 12th minute. On a 2-1 rush, forward Steve Zalewski passed from the right slot to Matt Beca on the left side of the net. The pass caught Quick out of position, but Beca failed to make enough contact with the puck to score.

One minute later, defenseman Grant Clitsome went off the ice for a tripping call. Another Clarkson penalty put UMass on a 5-on-3 advantage for 29 seconds. But the Mass Attack could not convert, despite having several second chance opportunities.

To fulfill the typical pattern of an evenly matched hockey game, neither team dominated the third period. Junior forward P.J. Fenton almost managed two breakaway attempts, once with a man advantage and another on the penalty kill. However, he could not completely shake his defender or put a quality shot on net in either case.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Senior forward Kevin Jarman watches the puck sail into the net in Friday's 1-0 overtime win over No. 1 seed Clarkson in the first round of the NCAA Tournament. The goal marked UMass' first NCAA Tournament win in the school's history.

Irregular penalties cost Mass Attack

Too many penalties gave Black Bears extra edge in the end

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ROCHESTER, N.Y. – It's a difficult way to lose, when an apparent strength becomes your fatal flaw. Despite being the least penalized team in Hockey East, the Massachusetts hockey team (21-13-5) sent eight men to the box in its 3-1 loss to Maine (23-14-2) in the NCAA East Regional Final.

The team averaged 11.3 penalty minutes in the 37 games leading up to the NCAA tournament. The 16 minutes spent on the penalty kill against Maine may not appear to be an overly egregious figure. However, when you consider that Maine statistically has the best power play in Hockey East, operating at an efficiency of 25 percent, the eight penalties seem much more significant.

"If you look at the way the game evolved, it was a little bit uncharacteristic for us," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We took far too many penalties tonight against a great power play to be able to make it comfortable for ourselves."

Certainly the UMass skaters did not purposefully commit the infractions, as they were well aware of the challenge awaiting them on the ice if they committed too many. No one has more respect for the Maine power play than the UMass defense, especially junior Mike Kostka.

"They just have a great group of guys on it," Kostka said. "Guys like [Michel] Leveille, [Teddy] Purcell – obviously you see them move around, they move really well. They can all shoot the puck really well. I think just the fact that they're just very talented offensively – it allows them to create a lot of offense on the power play."

Had the Minutemen not allowed Maine to score on a two-man advantage early in the final period, UMass may have been able to tie the score. But it was evident that a two-goal deficit was too much to overcome for the Minutemen.

"We're down two goals, and we've given up two kind of freaky goals," Cahoon said. "But at the same time, they maybe could have had two more great plays that they missed out on. So we shake it off, we get the goal, makes it a one-goal game – now we're in it. And then that third goal on the power play sapped a lot of energy out of us."

The third Maine goal, which restored the Black Bears' two-goal lead, was the epitome of the team's power play achievement. Like most teams, the Black Bears pass the puck around the offensive zone in an attempt to catch the opposing goalie out of position and limit his view of the puck.

With UMass juniors Matt Burto and Mike Kostka in the penalty box, Maine took advantage of its second 5-on-3 power play of the game in the sixth minute of the third period. Though not the Black Bears' top power play unit, the five skaters on the ice executed the strategy to perfection.

Defenseman Bret Tyler fed Matt Duffy with a pass in the high slot. Duffy sent a quick slap-shot toward the net, slipping the puck past the UMass goalie. It appeared that Quick did not have a clear vision of the shot, shielded by his own defensemen who crowded around the net minder attempting to block shots.

Maine's second goal, though with a man advantage, was not a typical Black Bear score on the power play. Defenseman Mike Hamilton simply flipped the puck toward Quick from the left rear of the net. A lucky bounce later, the puck ended up in the net off a deflection.

Perhaps the most senseless penalty occurred toward the end of the second period. While attempting to change lines, a UMass player exiting the ice made contact with the puck. The referee whistled the Minutemen for a bench minor of too many men on the ice. The Maroon and White were consequently forced to kill off the second half of the penalty to open the third, instead of riding the momentum of its first goal into the final frame.

But spending 16 minutes on the penalty kill hurt the Minutemen in addition to giving Maine excellent scoring chances.

"I had used my best scorers over and over again killing penalties, Cahoon said. "So now you're trying to get some offense from guys that have killed penalties pretty well and they've been on the ice far too much, so that's kind of a double edged sword."

Several of the Minutemen's top scorers and playmakers are also among the team's best penalty killers. The team's leading goal scorer, sophomore forward Cory Quirk, and junior forward P.J. Fenton (third on the team with 25 point(s) spend significant time on the ice with the team's best defensemen during penalty kill situations.

However, the Mass Attack allowed only four power plays against Clarkson (25-9-5) in the first game of the weekend. The Minutemen successfully squashed each penalty, despite dealing with the ECAC's foremost unit with the man advantage.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen take first A-10 series

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Trailing 2-1 in the ninth inning yesterday on the road to conference foe Temple (6-13, 1-2 A-10), the Massachusetts baseball team (4-7, 2-1 A-10) was down to its last strike in the first game of the doubleheader.

The middle infielders for the Minutemen made sure their team would enter Game 2 with a chance to sweep the double dip, rather than just trying to salvage the pair of games.

Back-to-back doubles by shortstop Lou Proietti and second baseman Adam Tempesta gave the Minutemen a one-run lead, and junior closer Aaron Smith notched his second save of the season to preserve the 3-2 victory.

The Maroon and White took full advantage of a Temple throwing error with one out and nobody on in the final inning. The error enabled left fielder Mike Donato to reach second base following a Jim Cassidy strikeout – the men up the middle for UMass delivered consecutive doubles to capture the lead for the first time.

The late heroics hailed out freshman hurler Jared Frent who was terrific – from taking a hard-luck loss. In just his third career start, Frent captured his first win with eight strong innings of work.

The Minutemen were unable to pull off the same heroics in the second game, falling behind 7-0 after the third inning. UMass made things interesting once again in the ninth, down 9-7, sending the tying run to the plate with one out after a Proietti single. But Tempesta and first baseman Bryan Adamski couldn't keep the game alive.

UMass starter Jim Cassidy didn't make it out of the third inning, surrendering seven runs in just 2 2/3 innings. The Owls scored six runs in the third inning, including three unearned runs with two outs.

Despite the loss, the Minutemen captured the three-game set between the conference opponents due to their 13-11 triumph on Saturday. UMass led that game 4-3 after the eighth inning, before each team exploded in the final frame.

The Maroon and White posted eight runs in the top half of the inning, and it seemed as though the game was all but locked up at 12-3. Temple strung together some hits, but it still trailed by seven, with just one out left to register for UMass. Sophomore pitcher Mitchell Erlenberg appeared to end the game when he struck out Mike Kelch, but Kelch reached first on the wild pitch to lead the bases.

Temple proceeded to club consecutive doubles, and the game was suddenly 13-10. Smith came in for Erlenberg and shut the door for the save to end the miraculous comeback attempt by the Owls. Chris Lloyd was solid for the Minutemen in his eight-plus innings, picking up his first win of the season.

Before the series against Temple, UMass played in five games during Spring Break, winning two. All five games were played in Bradenton, Fla., against four different opponents.

On Wednesday, the Minutemen were shut out, 4-0, against Illinois (7-8). UMass failed to muster up any runs, despite knocking 10 base hits. Sophomore Tim Comiskey was solid in his seven innings of work, but he took the loss.

The Maroon and White split the two meetings with Northwestern (6-11) last week, winning 10-7 on Sunday and losing 4-2 on Tuesday. In between those two games, UMass took a thrilling 15-14 game against Jacksonville State (12-12). Good pitching was hard to come by in that contest, with the two teams combining for 36 hits and 10 walks.

The Gamecocks scored three in the ninth to tie the game off UMass pitching and the game was sent to extra innings. The Minutemen ended things in the 11th with a walk-off single by Bryan Adamski who also notched the win in his three solid innings of relief.

UMass lost its first game during break, 14-10, to Dartmouth (3-9-1).

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu

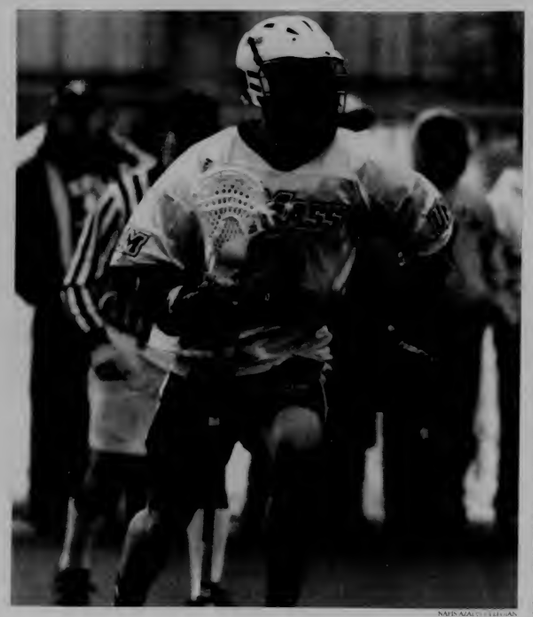
WRITE FOR SPORTS!!
sports@dailycollegian.com

PARKING SERVICES
REGULATION REMINDER

Effective Monday, March 19, 2007, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. These hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMASS parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a proper permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 35, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone or access lane.

For more information, please visit our website http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.



Sophomore Jim Connolly had a goal and an assist in UMass' 10-8 loss to No. 11 Loyola on Saturday in Baltimore. Connolly ranks second on the team in scoring with 16 points on 11 goals and five assists.

UM suffers fifth loss

Loyola puts Minutemen three games below .500 mark

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is in a somewhat unfamiliar spot. Less than a year ago, the Minutemen were en route to a national championship appearance against one of the best teams in the country.

Now, seven games into the 2007 season, down two All-Americans (Sean Morris and Jack Reid), UMass is trying to stay within sight of the .500 mark.

The Minutemen dropped their fifth game of the season to No. 11 Loyola on Sunday, 10-8, and mixed in one win over Sacred Heart on March 20 at Garber Field with a 7-4 loss to Brown three days before.

UMass	8
Loyola	10
UMass	11
S.H.	4
UMass	4
Brown	7

UMass returns to Garber Field for its eighth game of the season on Saturday when Penn State visits Amherst for a 12 p.m. start. UMass will stay at Garber Field until April 14 when the Minutemen travel to Hobart.

Loyola's defeat of the Minutemen sent UMass back to three games below .500 at 2-5. The Minutemen lost five games all of last season, going 13-5 through the campaign before losing to Virginia in the title game.

On Saturday, UMass put up a solid fight but couldn't come away with the upset. UMass had 21 more shots on goal than Loyola in the game but couldn't put the finishing touch on the contest after outscoring Loyola 3-2 in the fourth quarter.

The Minutemen had 47 shots on goal throughout the contest to Loyola's 26. Sophomore attack Jim Connolly turned in six shots, four of them on goal, and finished with a goal and an assist for two points to lead the Minutemen.

Attack Tim Balise also had two points in the loss with two goals on five shots. Balise, a relative newcomer to the UMass offense, has nine goals so far this season to go along with six assists. Senior midfielder Brett Garber leads the Minutemen with 14 goals, followed by Connolly with 11. Midfielders Rory Pedrick and Andrew Recchione have contributed on the offensive end with five and four goals, respectively.

The Minutemen's second win of the season against Sacred Heart on March 20 represented the Minutemen's most prolific offensive output of the season, scoring 11 goals while allowing just four.

Connolly led the Minutemen's offensive strike with a goal with just over a second left in the first half that started a 7-0 run for the Minutemen. UMass shut out Sacred Heart in the second half of the game on the way to the 11-4 win.

Garber tied a career-high with four goals in the win and Balise notched his second hat trick in as many games. He accomplished the same feat against Brown three days earlier. The Minutemen forced 20 Sacred Heart turnovers and effectively stifled its offensive attack. The Minutemen benefit mightily from scoring, as do most teams, and have won the last 35 games when they have scored 11 goals in a game.

Against Brown on March 17, UMass dropped its fourth game of the season and fell to 1-4, while Brown improved to 4-1. Pedrick scored two goals in the UMass loss. Brown attack Dave Madeira tallied a hat trick in the win.

Madeira scored his second goal of the game with 2:33 left in the first half to give his team a 3-2 lead over the Minutemen. Brown never gave up that lead. The UMass deficit increased to 5-2 when Jack Walsh and Thomas Muldoon scored consecutive goals early in the third quarter.

Brown goalie Jordan Burke made 16 saves against the Minutemen, who finished with the lowest scoring total – four goals – since a 6-3 loss to Navy on March 11 of 2000. After the loss to Brown, UMass went 1-4 for the first time since 1965. Sophomore attack Evan Blum registered his second career goal in the loss.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

UMass loses two of three

Minutewomen defeat BC, but fall to UNH and Northwestern

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team went 1-2 on the road this week, dropping to 5-4. The Minutewomen are coming off a victory yesterday at Boston College, 10-9, in overtime. Sophomore midfielder Holly Drown scored the game-winning goal with 12 seconds left in overtime.

The Minutewomen lost two in a row before that, losing a close one to New Hampshire, 11-10, and were crushed by No. 2 Northwestern, 18-4. They close out their four-game road trip on Wednesday against No. 17/18 Yale.

Yesterday, the Minutewomen came back against the Eagles after falling behind by as many as three goals. In the first half the Minutewomen defense allowed eight goals on 14 shots. The offense did not attempt many shots, but it proved to be efficient, scoring six goals on nine shots in the opening half.

With 19:10 left in the second half the Eagles held a 9-7 lead, but that would be the last goal the Eagles would score. Drown and junior attack Kathleen Typadis took over. The UMass scoring duo netted all four goals in the second half and overtime. Typadis scored her 19th career hat trick with three goals on five shots. She moved her scoring streak to 33 games.

Drown scored all three of her goals after halftime. Melynda Zwick assisted Drown's game-winning goal with 12 seconds remaining in the first overtime period. She also scored two goals in the first half.

BC was held to one goal on eight shots in the second half and the overtime period. Goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy stopped eight shots and the UMass defense forced 18 turnovers.

UMass	10
BC	9
UMass	4
North	18
UMass	10
UNH	11

The Eagles drop to 4-4 on the season after the 1-2 stretch last week. UMass gave BC its first home loss of the season; the Eagles are now 2-1 at home. Freshman attack Lauren Costello led the Eagles with five points, scoring four goals and an assist. Senior attack Elizabeth Kadison almost sealed the game in regulation with what she thought was a last second goal. The officials overruled the goal because time had expired.

Northwestern showed UMass why it was the No. 2 team in the nation with an 18-4 stomping of the Minutewomen. The First Annual Friends of Jaclyn Murphy Foundation Benefit Game was played in front of a UMass record crowd 3,075 fans in Yorktown, N.Y. Both teams participated in a banquet the night before the game to help raise money and awareness for the Friends of Jaclyn Foundation.

Northwestern (4-1) has won the last two National Lacrosse Championships and UMass coach Alexis Venechanos was an assistant during both of those championships. Typadis scored the game's first goal, but that would be the only goal for the Minutewomen in the first half. Northwestern answered with 15 straight goals before Typadis scored midway through the second half.

Northwestern had even scoring throughout the team. Three players scored hat tricks and seven players in all had at least two goals. Northwestern had nine assists and out-shot UMass 35-10. Drown and sophomore attack Claire Mancini scored the final two goals.

New Hampshire defeated the Minutewomen in a back and fourth game. UNH took an early 3-0 lead 10 minutes into the first half. Typadis answered with two goals to cut the deficit to one. At the 15-minute mark, Drown tied the game 4-4 with an assist from junior midfielder Christina Twichell. UNH then took the lead again, 5-4, but UMass answered with two goals from Typadis and sophomore midfielder Meghan Reddy. UNH tied it at 6-6 before the first half ended.

The second half was close until UNH gave itself some breathing room, taking a 10-8 lead. Zwick scored with 6:18 left in the game to pull within one. UNH again pushed the lead to two with a goal from sophomore midfielder Ashley Durepo. Durepo scored five points on four goals and an assist. Twichell netted a late goal but the Minutewomen could not complete the comeback, falling 11-10.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

Junior Julie Papaleo scored one goal in UMass' 10-9 win over Boston College on Sunday. She now has two goals on the season.

Junior Kathleen Typadis scored three goals in UMass' 10-9 win over Boston College on Sunday. She leads the Minutewomen in scoring with 33 points on 28 goals and five assists.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
The courses are challenging. Everything else is a breeze.
At UMass Boston, summer learning is about stretching your mind, not your patience or your pocketbook.
Over 500 courses offered days, evenings, or online
Small classes taught by distinguished UMass Boston faculty
Easily accessible Boston Harbor campus
World-class education at a real-world price
Registration Starts April 2.
Illuminate your summer.
summer.umb.edu UMASS BOSTON 617.287.6000

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
#1 North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Write for sports!!
sports@dailycollegian.com

Holy Junk, that tortoise is crazy smart!

Tortoises love Sudoku almost as much as they love lettuce and other delicious leafy greens.

Send us more pictures of odd creatures completing the sudoku at: collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			9		2
	1	9				3	6
5	6						7	9
		6	5		1	7
	3						5
		1	4		3	8
7	2						1	8
	9	8				6	3
			1		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Droop
4 Post game summary
9 Advantage
14 Pool tool?
15 Flabbergast
16 Lustrous
17 Poetic tribute
18 Coup group
19 Electric wires
20 Delicate color
22 More severe
24 Chicago lower
26 Hillary and Bill
30 Bridge position
33 Book bag
34 Powerful stinks
38 Stock amount
39 Related
40 ___ along (ambles)
43 Yanks slugger
44 Not quite right
46 Desert state
48 Shooting stars
51 Bachelor bash
52 Affectedly devout ones
54 Gargoyle
58 Followed ___ gin fizz
62 Binge
65 Enticed
67 $
68 San Diego ballplayer
69 Religious belief
70 NATO word
71 Accumulate
72 Put away
73 Just short

DOWN
1 Dundee populace
2 Westerns actor Murphy
3 Davis of "Commander in Chief"
4 Brit in the East
5 Ostrich kin
6 Inclination
7 Quetzalcoatl worshiper
8 Beads of wisdom?
9 Ways up
10 Cheats
11 Min's title
12 Wrap up
13 Herndon and Cobb
21 Fashion leaders
23 Long or Peeples
25 U.S. defense group
27 Midwest airport
28 Roman tyrant and others
29 Toboggans
31 That lady
32 Afternoon social
34 Postal sticker
35 Marisa of "My Cousin Vinny"
36 Privileged few
37 987-65-4321 grp
41 Hosp. sections
42 Blood
45 Evening receptions
47 Smidge
49 Mandela's nat
50 Wading birds
53 Frozen fall
55 Robert and Alan
56 Truth: to Shakespeare
57 Actor Savalas
59 "So Big" author Ferber
60 Bucks' mates
62 Hydromassage facility
63 Singer Tillis
64 Nutrition letters
66 To the degree

DELANO'S
$5 Pitchers
$2 Vodka Well Drinks
Get Your Butt Downtown!
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

Quote of the Day

"I wasn't kissing her, I was whispering in her mouth."

-Chico Marx

Two Dudes By Aaron Warner

CHECK IT OUT, DUDE! A SWEEPSTAKES NOTIFICATION LETTER!
FORGET IT, DUDE. YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING ARE IMPOSSIBLE.
YOU'RE RIGHT. IT'S ADDRESSED TO THE GUY DOWNSTAIRS.

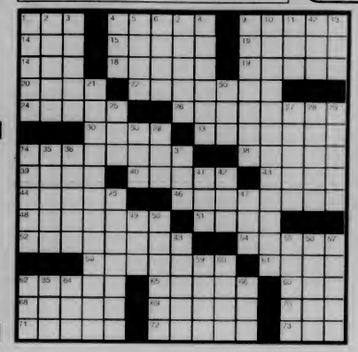
MS Paint By Mike Audette

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

WELL, HOW DID YOUR EXAM GO TODAY, ROOMIE?
NOT GOOD.
I WAS WAITING FOR THE PROFESSOR TO ARRIVE AND SPILLED MY WATER BOTTLE, AND HAD TO TAKE THE TEST WITH MY PANTS WET.
SOME DAYS I CAN'T BELIEVE I'M ACTUALLY PAYING MONEY FOR THIS.
I FEEL THE SAME WAY WATCHING NICOLAS CAGE MOVIES.

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

I can't believe I YOU mine) a website
Doesn't everyone
I have a free email account
I'd call You a Jeezer, but I know old people who have websites



Continuing & Professional Education
UMASS AMHERST SUMMER 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
• New online GenEds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions:
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Registration begins: April 2
Plan now by visiting us @ www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
How high does the sycamore grow? If you cut it down you will certainly never know.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The French term for public lice literally translates to "butterflies of love."

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Happy Feet may or may not be the story of your life. You are one crazy dancing bird.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Remember when the Bank of America in town burned down? Good times.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You have been acting wrinkly like a raisin, try to be more like a juicy grape.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You cannot be accused of shoplifting unless you actually steal the whole store.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't be surprised if someone steals your identity, who wouldn't want to be you?

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
After this spring break, a jury would convict you of being dirtier than Akon.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Do you think our nation's forefathers just found a regular eagle and shaved its head?

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
In spite of all its grossness, many people absolutely adore egg salad.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Llamas are extremely weird looking but then again, so are you.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You are so gosh darn sweet you're actually sour.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES... LIKE NO OTHER!
Now Open for Lunch!
Hours
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Join the wave of your generation's willingness to serve our country No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Umass Amherst Summer 2007 Offering new online GenEds and more. Plan now by visiting our summer sneak preview website: www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

Apartment for Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Apartment for Rent

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NO FEES www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

Best Staffing Service to Work For! Meet the highly skilled recruiters from Staffing Now who provide the best jobs in the area! We will be at the UMass career fair on March 28 from 1-4, Goodell Building Lobby. We are looking for skilled office workers with great computer skills. We are currently hiring for clerical, administrative, accounting and finance postions. www.staffing-now.com

Employment

Direct Sales – Eyewear Specialists Sell an exclusive line of high quality sunglasses and reading glasses direct to consumer. Make 40% on each sale. Build a sales team and make additional commissions and bonuses. Small investment for samples required, fully refundable at any time. Call John at 1-800-322-6748

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

Employment

Looking for a great summer job? Become an Academic Peer Advisor for the fall 2007 incoming students with Undergraduate Advising. Application deadline is April 4th. For more information or to print an application visit our website at www.umass.edu/advising/

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Services

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Summer Sublet

Alpine Commons Apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes everything. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 26, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Reversal of Fortune

Maine turns tables, ends UMass' Frozen Four dream

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ROCHESTER, N.Y. – Although the Frozen Four is not in its immediate future, the Massachusetts hockey team established a new level of success for the program this season. Playing in the NCAA tournament for the first time in school history, the Mass Attack (21-13-5) defeated Clarkson (29-9-5) in the East Regional Semifinal, 1-0.

The team advanced to play Maine (23-14-2), for the fifth time in three weeks, with a trip to St. Louis on the line in the regional final. But the Black Bears enacted sufficient revenge after losing four straight to the Minutemen, winning 3-1.

UMass	1
Clarkson	0
UMass	1
Maine	3

"Our players certainly left everything on the ice," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "And they should be proud of themselves, how they grew as a program during the year. I congratulate our guys for the type of effort they've put forth throughout the year and making a game of this."

But it was ultimately uncharacteristic play in the form of a lack of offense and penalties that put the Minutemen at a disadvantage. They scored only two goals in the pair of games, a figure well below their season average of 2.89. The Maroon and White also committed eight penalties, allowing Hockey East's best power play to spend 16 minutes on the ice.

"As far as our game was concerned, I though we were a little off," Cahoon said. "We weren't playing quite as organized and playing with as much conviction as we've played with in the recent past."

In accordance with its statistical prowess, the Maine special team units dominated the game. Not only did each of the three goals come on some form of special teams play, the Black Bear penalty kill successfully protected the net on all seven situations with a man down, including once with only three skaters.

However, it was a Maine power play in the third period that permanently swung the momentum in its favor. The Minutemen scored in the second period to trim the deficit to one. But the team allowed the lead to double after surrendering a 5-on-3 goal early in the third.

The CCHA-based officiating crew called junior forward Matt Burto for a hook in the defensive zone during the fifth minute. Just 46 seconds later, junior defenseman Mike Kostka joined Burto in the box after being whistled for slashing behind his own net.

Maine spent the first 45 seconds of the power play fluidly passing the puck around the offensive zone, hoping to catch sophomore goaltender Jon Quick out of position. Then defenseman Bret Tyler passed to Matt Duffy on the left side of the high slot. Duffy slapped a one-timer that slipped past Quick's outstretched right blocker. The goaltender evidently did not see the puck, shielded by the traffic in front.

"The third goal was definitely a challenge for us to maintain our composure and for us to stay upbeat," senior captain Matt Anderson said. "It was a big momentum shift and it became pretty challenging after that."

But before the rash of penalties began, Maine forward Teddy Purcell had the best scoring chance of the first period early in the frame. Fielding a rebound at the left faceoff circle, the freshman beat Quick, but his shot rang off the left post.

Two UMass penalties around the last five minutes of the period gave the Black Bears their first two-man advantage. Maine had several quality scoring opportunities on the 5-on-3 power play, none better than a one-timer from Purcell towards the end of the first penalty. The freshman secured the puck in the middle of the left faceoff circle and blasted a hard shot that almost beat Quick's outstretched right blocker.

The penalties kept coming in the second period, but both teams finally managed to get on the board. With Jarman and Purcell in the penalty box for matching minors, Maine scored its first goal by taking advantage of the open ice and the spread out UMass defense.

Surviving a scrum in the left corner, forward Josh Soares launched a centering pass to Tyler who was streaking toward the net. Quick made the initial save, but the deflection flipped over his right side and bounced into the net off the shoulder of a UMass defenseman.

Less than five minutes later, sophomore forward Alex Berry went to the penalty box for obstructing a Maine player in the defensive zone. Hamilton flipped the puck on goal from an awkward position to the left side of the net. The shot hit Quick in the head, caroming off the back of his facemask for the score.

The goal appeared to be an attempt by the Maine forward

See HOCKEY on page 7

TIAN TIAN/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Kevin Jarman scored 7:40 into overtime to give UMass a 1-0 win over No. 1 seed Clarkson in the first round of the NCAA Tournament on Friday. The Mass Attack was eliminated in the East Regional Final the very next night, losing to Maine 3-1.

Maine goaltender Ben Bishop (right) made 35 saves and let up only one goal to eliminate the Mass Attack from the NCAA Tournament.

Bishop's return ends UM run

Goaltender returns from groin injury to shutdown Minutemen

BY JOE MELONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ROCHESTER, N.Y. – When the Massachusetts hockey team (21-13-5) squared off with Maine (23-14-2) on Saturday in the quarterfinals of the NCAA Hockey Tournament, it had to like its chances.

Earlier this month, the Minutemen swept the Black Bears on consecutive weekends, first to clinch home ice in the quarterfinals of the Hockey East Tournament and then to eliminate the Black Bears from the tournament. But the last time these two teams met, there was one large absence from Maine's lineup. Starting goaltender Ben Bishop spent both weekends in Maine nursing a strained groin.

"I had to listen to [the games] on the radio, they weren't even on television so that made it even tougher," Bishop said. "I got to see the edits when they got back and just tried to be prepared for tonight."

Freshman goaltender David Wilson replaced Bishop in each series and essentially played the role of whipping boy. The Mass Attack hit Wilson up for 16 goals in the four games at the Mullins Center.

Having since healed, Bishop got the nod from trainers to suit up for the tournament and wasted no time re-establishing himself as one of the nation's premier young goaltenders. In Friday's opening round matchup with Saint Cloud State, the sophomore made 33 saves on 34 shots.

Bishop's performance against the Huskies lifted Maine into the quarterfinals of the tournament, setting up the rematch with UMass who defeated Clarkson to advance to the 16-team field.

After the second sweep of the Black Bears, the Minutemen struggled to find the back of the net or manufacture genuine opportunities to light the lamp. In the three games following the consecutive sweeps of Maine, the Minutemen notched just three goals.

While many wrote UMass's uncharacteristic surge of goal scoring off to Wilson's poor play, in those games the Minutemen looked like a different team. For that four-game stretch, they looked like more than just a trap team taking advantage of their opponent's poor neutral-zone passing. They strung together crisp passes and added some nifty stick and puck handling to create several scoring chances on top of their 16 tallies.

On Saturday, there were no pretty passing plays or players maneuvering themselves into open ice for goals or even goal-scoring opportunities. At times, the Minutemen looked lost and frustrated by the Black Bear defense. The Minutemen managed to send 35 shots Bishop's way but forced only a handful of legitimate scoring chances, often resorting to slap and wrist shots from odd angles out of frustration.

Bishop stopped 34-of-35 shots including 15 in both the second and third periods in leading the third-seeded Black Bears to a 3-1 victory over UMass. He corralled the few rebounds he allowed and snatched several shots that appeared destined for the back of the net just as they seemed by him.

Bishop's presence in goal provided the Black Bears with more confidence allowing them to send three and four players into UMass's zone whenever possible.

"It's like in football, if your number one quarterback comes back into the huddle, your guys feel pretty good. In hockey, obviously, goaltending is so important," Maine coach Tim Whitehead said.

Although the Black Bears didn't record an even-strength goal, the constant barrage of Maine players attacking the UMass goal and streaking through the UMass zone forced the Minutemen into eight penalties – including three in the final period when the Mass Attack needed just one goal to even the score.

"The guys in front of me did a great job. The defense played phenomenal both nights and the forwards back-checked hard. It made my job a lot easier," Bishop said.

In the pivotal third period when Bishop surely felt a pinch or two from his injury, the Black Bear goaltender stood tough. He stopped 15 UMass shots in the final period to protect Maine's lead.

In their four tilts with the Black Bears prior to Saturday, the Minutemen outscored Maine in the third period, 7-3, giving them confidence they could deadlock the score.

"Over the past three weeks I feel like we had our best jump in the third period," UMass senior captain Matt Anderson said. "We've come strong in the third. You can look

See BISHOP on page 7

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 68 LO: 38 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 2007

SPIESS TIES UMASS RECORD PAGE 10

KAUR TO PERFORM AT SMITH PAGE 5

UMass faculty oppose change in calendar

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A recent survey released by the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate found that over half of UMass faculty oppose a proposal that would have the campus' spring semester begin and end two weeks earlier than it currently does.

Of the 241 faculty and administrators that responded to the survey, 59 percent said they were against the change, with 24 percent standing in favor of the move, and 17 percent remaining neutral.

Detractors of the proposed change cited issues such as the disruption of the Five College cooperative efforts, the ability to conduct academic discipline between semesters, and a substantial decrease in international study opportunities for students.

The change, proposed by UMass Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano is suggested to be implemented in the 2009-2010 academic year.

According to Gargano's update report for the Five Colleges, the fall semester would begin the Tuesday after Labor Day and end (including exams) on Dec. 23. The spring semester would begin around Jan. 15, and graduation would be no later than the second weekend in May.

"Almost all of the universities where we compete for students have earlier start dates for the fall and spring," Gargano said in his proposal. "Generally they start before Labor Day or immediately after Labor Day for the fall and for the spring semester around Jan. 12 or Jan. 14. The proposed change in dates will enable the Amherst campus to be more competitive," he said.

Because the spring semester would begin well before the start of the other institutions in the Five Colleges, students who wish to take courses and collaborate in artistic projects, such as music, theater and dance at those schools might not be able to, respondents said.

"We have a truly shared curriculum," said Ron Snell, who heads both the University's astronomy department and the Five College Astronomy Department. "It would be a tremendous problem for us if the calendars weren't the same."

Many of the faculty responding to the survey said a shorter January break would curtail teaching preparation for the second semester, as well as research, grant-proposal writing at an important time of the year.

Gargano cites the academic calendar and the late final exam date as a serious obstacle to the students hoping to obtain employment or internships over the summer.

"Students at competing universities complete the spring semester around May 10 and can start their internship by May 17; this is appealing to the employer. Due to our late schedule, UMass Amherst students cannot start until June," he said.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at mbbelliv@student.umass.edu.

The other side of the spectrum

UMass Students for Life aims to provide alternatives to abortion

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the liberal climate of Massachusetts and the overwhelming majority of Democrats on college campuses, opinions that stray from the Democratic Party's line have limited room to breathe.

But on the University of Massachusetts campus, a group of students, driven by their desire to launch a different point of view into the mainstream, has emerged.

The organization is UMass Students for Life.

The cause lives up to the namesake. UMass Students for Life is a student-run organization that started in the 2006 fall semester with a pro-life platform and the intention of providing another avenue for pregnant women on the UMass campus besides abortion.

President Nicole Desrochers and co-founding member Caitlin Petrizzi, along with 25 student members, believe that dialogue on abortion is a one-way street right now, and they are aiming to start a conversation from the pro-life side of the debate.

"I've been involved in pro-life groups in the past, and I saw a lack of it on the UMass campus," Desrochers said. "[UMass Students for Life] is a place for women to go to get the whole story and to really get support if they want to keep their babies and go to school. That was really the motivation; to help on the campus."

Desrochers, along with Petrizzi and several other current members, started UMass Students for Life over a year ago and have made strides to make their group the ideal haven for pregnant college women.

Recently, Desrochers invited Dr. John Diggs, a pro-life Medical Doctor in South Hadley, to speak about abortion and the "difference between objective fact and opinion," according to Desrochers and Petrizzi.

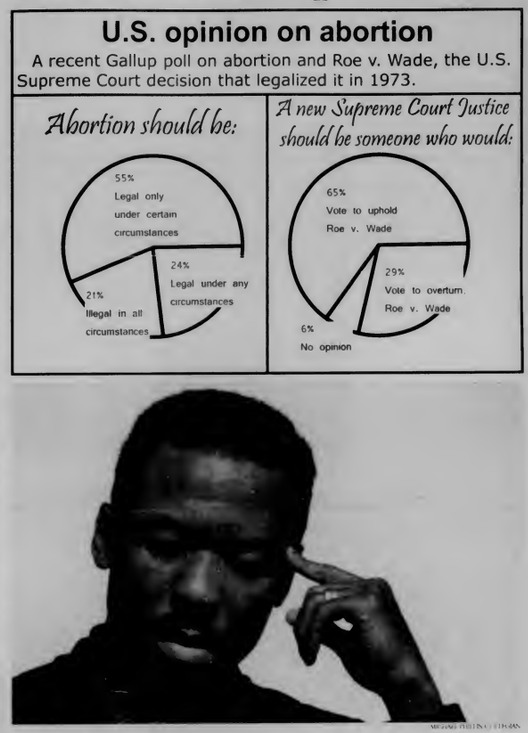
Diggs' seminar was the "first big thing" for the new organization, Petrizzi said. UMass Students for Life is also planning several fundraising events for this spring and has something on the horizon for the fall semester.

But the group is relatively new and is trying to accomplish the difficult task of spreading the word that they're here.

"We want to act as an outreach group to send people to different services that we know of," Desrochers said. "If a woman on campus knew about our group and tried to get in touch with us – which is the ultimate goal, we want to be able to be accessible – she would contact us and we would help her get to the services that she needs and deserves."

Desrochers has had close friends go through the abortion process and that experience served as the impetus for

See LIFE on page 3



U.S. opinion on abortion
A recent Gallup poll on abortion and Roe v. Wade, the U.S. Supreme Court decision that legalized it in 1973.
Abortion should be:
55% Legal only under certain circumstances
24% Legal under any circumstances
21% Illegal in all circumstances
A new Supreme Court Justice should be someone who would:
65% Vote to uphold Roe v. Wade
29% Vote to overturn Roe v. Wade
6% No opinion

The UMass Students For Life organization recently invited Dr. John Diggs Jr., a pro-life doctor from South Hadley, to speak in a seminar about the "differences between objective fact and opinion" in the context of abortion.

A closer look at the SGA candidates

Sophomore Aaron Buford and junior Ruth Thompson team up as candidates for SGA President and SGA Trustee, respectively.

Junior Josh Murray runs for the position of SGA Trustee in this week's elections, which will be held on Wednesday and Thursday.

BY AMBER VAILLANCOURT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student Government Association President Elvis Mendez and Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum asked Aaron Buford and Ruth Thompson to become candidates for their seats as president and trustee, respectively, in this coming election. And this Wednesday and Thursday, they will be doing just that in the SGA elections at the University of Massachusetts.

Buford is a current sophomore Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) major, focusing on Youth Leadership & Urban Development. Buford, born and raised in Dayton, Ohio moved to Amherst in 2000 where he attended Amherst Regional High School.

Mendez elected Burford as the current SGA Secretary of Diversity, and Buford has begun working with the African, Latin, Asian/Pacific Islander & Native American Caucus, or ALANA. The SGA presidential candidate has also been meeting with UMass professors, along with Amherst High School faculty, to strengthen the alliance between the University and the Amherst community.

The SGA Trustee candidate, Thompson, is a junior Social Thought and Political Economy and Women's Studies double major. Originally from Cambridge, Mass.,

Thompson is an active Senator who has served in the Student Senate for the past two years, representing the Central Living Area. This year is Thompson's second serving on the Ways and Means Committee, which allocates $1.3 million to various Registered Student Organizations.

This year marks her first year serving as chairwoman on the Ways and Means Committee. She also serves as a Resident Assistant within the Van Meter/Butterfield Cluster and is a member of the Haitian American Student Association, the ALANA Caucus, and serves as an Educator Advocate for the Everywoman's Center.

See BUFORD THOMPSON on page 3

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the race for Student Trustee for the upcoming Student Government elections is junior International Relations major Joshua Murray. Formally the Lieutenant Governor for the Central Residential Area, Murray plans to lean on his experience gained from the position and, "a lifetime of lobbying activity," to influence his performance as he sits on the Board of Trustees as the sole University of Massachusetts Amherst student representative.

If elected, his primary aim is to prevent the consistent increases of tuition. According to the Boston Globe, tuition and fees have gone up 32 percent in the past four years. He says in his Facebook.com group, Joshua Murray for Student Trustee, "Tuition is constantly on the rise and students have yet to benefit from these cost hikes." He speaks on a need for an increase in activity and effectiveness in areas that commonly disperse the cost of schooling, such as financial aid.

In his platform, he calls for the freezing of tuition rates.

"We all have felt the crunch from the never-ending fee hikes that we are all forced to endure. I think it's time to petition for a freeze of student fees in the UMass system," Murray says.

As part of driving down the cost of education, he also lobbies for more state funding and an increase in financial aid.

"The University of Massachusetts offers some of the very worst financial aid packages to students within the university system. There's a big problem with that picture," he explains. "Private colleges and universities around this state are receiving larger financial aid packages than students at this university. There is absolutely no reason this university cannot at least be competitive with other schools in the state," he continues. "I will work my hardest to promote growth in the financial aid awards that are provided to our students."

Continuing to appeal for fairer treatment of UMass students he contends, "It is important for a student to be able to afford his/her state education."

"As the importance of a four year degree is increasing, the importance of fair tuition rates also increases. Many students who attend this university have

See MURRAY on page 3

Jewish seminary to admit homosexuals

BY RACHEL ZOLL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The seminary considered the flagship institution of Conservative Judaism said Monday it will start accepting gay and lesbian applicants, after scholars who guide the movement lifted the ban on gay ordination.

Arnold Eisen, incoming chancellor for the Jewish Theological Seminary, said the decision was made after extensive discussion with faculty and students, a survey on views of the issue within the movement and a meeting of the school's trustees.

"The larger issue has been how we can remain true to our tradition in general and to halakah (Jewish law) in particular while staying fully responsive to and immersed in our society and culture," Eisen said in a statement distributed to the school community and its supporters.

The Conservative branch holds the middle ground in American Judaism, adhering to tradition while allowing some change for modern circumstances.

The larger and more liberal Reform Jewish movement, as well as the smaller Reconstructionist wing, allow gays to become rabbis; the Orthodox branch bars gays and women from ordination.

In December, the Committee on Jewish Law and Standards voted to allow the seminaries to decide on their own whether to admit openly gay students. However, their decision also left leeway for synagogues to reject gay and lesbian clergy if the congregations believe that same-sex relationships violate Scripture.

Earlier this month, a smaller Conservative seminary in Los Angeles, the Ziegler School of Rabbinic Studies at the University of Judaism, announced that it has accepted its first openly gay and lesbian applicants.

The New York seminary has extended the application deadline for the fall semester until June 30, so students can take advantage of the

See JEWISH on page 3

Jewish Theological Seminary student Ira Stup wears, "Proud to Stand for Gay Inclusion," on his jacket as he stands outside the Park Avenue Synagogue.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 104

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Penze
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjaukukul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Masson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Drivers in NJ may be fined for texting while driving cars

BY JON HURDLE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — New Jersey drivers who insist on sending text messages on their cell phones or personal digital assistants may find themselves on the wrong side of the law if legislators approve a new bill.

The plan is in response to a recent Nationwide Insurance survey finding that one in five drivers are texting while driving, a figure that rises to about one in three among people aged 18 to 34, said Democratic Assemblyman Paul Moriarty.

"It's extremely dangerous," said Moriarty, one of three sponsors of the bill. "It requires you to completely take your eyes off the road. I see people driving down the street using both their thumbs to send a text message, and I can only imagine they are steering with their knees."

Drivers caught texting would be fined between $100 and $250. Similar measures are being considered by three other states, Moriarty said.

The measure would allow police to pull over any driver found texting while driving, a tougher approach than currently allowed under the state's ban on drivers using a mobile phone on the highway. Under that law police are only allowed to stop drivers if they are also committing another offense.

Critics have asked why the bill does not also seek to outlaw other sources of driver-distraction such as coffee or food, but Moriarty said such a bill would never pass the state legislature.

The bill, introduced last week, has 20 co-sponsors both Democrats and Republicans. It is expected to be debated in a committee during May or June and then pass to the full Assembly and the Senate whose leaders have indicated they are in favor, the assemblyman said.

New Jersey drivers who send text messages on their cell phones while driving may find themselves paying a fine if lawmakers approve a new bill.

Anna Nicole autopsy released

BY MATT SEDENSKY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DANIA BEACH, Fla. — Anna Nicole Smith accidentally overdosed on at least nine prescription drugs including a powerful sleep syrup she was known to swig right out of the bottle – after a miserable last few days in which she endured stomach flu, a 105-degree fever, pungent sweating and a pus-filled infection on her buttocks from repeated injections.

In a detailed autopsy report released Monday, a medical examiner noted the former Playboy playmate refused to go to a hospital three days before her Feb. 8 death and chose to ride out her illness in a hotel suite littered with pill bottles, soda cans, Slim Fast, nicotine gum and an open box of Tamiflu tablets.

Broward County Medical Examiner Dr. Joshua Perper found that in the days leading up to her death, the 39-year-old Smith had been taking large amounts of the seldom-prescribed sedative chloral hydrate, which also contributed to the 1962 overdose death of Smith's idol Marilyn Monroe.

Police found no apparent signs of foul play, and the medical examiner also ruled Smith's death probably was not a suicide because people who take their own lives typically use much more lethal drugs than chloral hydrate.

Rather, he said, Smith might have been simply unaware that the sedative could be fatal in combination with multiple other prescriptions she was taking in normal doses for anxiety, depression and insomnia.

Contributing factors included her weakened condition from a stomach flu and fever brought on by an infection on her buttocks from repeated injection of other drugs.

"She may have taken the dosages she was accustomed to but succumbed because she was already weakened," Perper said in his report. "Miss Smith has a long history of prescription drug abuse and self-medicated in the past."

A statement issued by lawyers for Howard K. Stern, Smith's companion who was with her before her death, said that Stern and Smith's physician urged her to get emergency treatment but she refused because "she did not want the media frenzy that follows her."

"She refused to go to the hospital because she wanted to avoid media," said attorney Lilly Ann Sanchez in a statement. "Anna called the shots in Anna's life and everyone close to her knows that."

The autopsy report left some unanswered questions such as why it took so long for emergency personnel to be summoned when Smith was discovered unresponsive on Feb. 8 in her room at the Seminole Hard Rock Hotel and Casino.

The report found that a private nurse had asked a bodyguard to call 911 around 1 p.m. and had started CPR. The Seminole EMS were called about 1:40 p.m. by a bodyguard and arrived six minutes later. The ambulance reached the hospital at 2:43 p.m., and Smith was pronounced dead shortly thereafter.

Perper said Smith could have been saved had she been hospitalized earlier in the week simply because her drug intake could have been controlled.

"If she would have gone to the hospital she wouldn't have died because she wouldn't have had the opportunity to take the excessive amount of chloral hydrate," he told The Associated Press.

But Perper said the lag in calling 911 on the day of Smith's death probably didn't matter.

"The earlier you come to a hospital the more you have a chance, but there's not a guarantee," he said. "Those are not things with a mathematic precision, but within a reasonably degree of medical certainty, I don't think she had really a realistic chance."

Perper said he believed at least three doctors had prescribed Smith drugs using a number of aliases, but all the medication was meant for her.

Stern lawyer Sanchez said the chloral hydrate was prescribed for Smith by her friend and psychiatrist, Dr. Khristine Eroshevich, who also traveled with her to Florida. Sanchez said the drug was prescribed last year after Smith's 20-year-old son Daniel died in the Bahamas of apparent drug-related causes.

"She was having nightmares. She was having hallucinations. She was unable to sleep," Sanchez said, adding that Eroshevich turned to "an older, tried and true drug" because it was more effective for Smith than newer sleeping medicines.

See SMITH on page 3

Broward County Medical Examiner Dr. Joshua Perper speaks during a news conference outside the Medical Examiners offices in Dania Beach, Fla., Monday. According to the autopsy report, Smith died of a prescription drug overdose.

UMASS AMHERST

March 28, 2007 1pm-4pm

Staffing Agency Fair

Come Meet The Agencies
Dress up & Bring resumes

Goodell Building Lobby and Outside

Jobs in all areas full-time part-time long term
temp

Career Services

Student Affairs and Campus Life
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Meet the candidates

Buford and Thompson team up for SGA elections

BUFORD THOMPSON from page 1

A voter would find not only a series of bulleted "tangible" goals in Buford and Thompson's detailed strategic plan for the upcoming school year, but would also find a game plan explaining how those goals would be accomplished.

Some titles of their goals are: Student Control over Student Housing, Police Protection Not Persecution, Expanding Financial Aid & MASSGrant, Build the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM), Fund & Staff Supportive Services & Centers, Increase RSO Support, Decrease Red Tape and Action Committees, Not Bureaucratic Committees.

Buford and Thompson believe they make a good team because they both have experience within different networks, which has allowed them to increase their knowledge on what students want and don't want. The two say they share many of the same principals, goals, and vision for this campus which is what allows them to work so productively together.

Amber Vaillancourt can be reached at availlan@student.umass.edu

Joshua Murray runs for Trustee

MURRAY from page 1

at least some loans, and the majority of which have financed most of their education through loans that will take years of their lives to pay back. It is important to stabilize these inflated tuition rates and help more students in their higher education," Murray said.

His Facebook group also provides his insight on a need for more campus diversity and a demand for student justice.

"It is time to tell the state to get out of our private matters and let us continue our university education in peace," he declares. He goes on to say that he has observed a decline in the respect shown for the rights and freedoms of both citizen students and those who join the system from abroad.

In the interview, he discussed the increased need for availability of education for all and for the promotion of student organizations already in place on campus. He lauded the efforts of those currently involved in the quality of their educational experience and encourages more students to do so.

He asks students not to be dismayed if they do not see him passing out flyers on Election Day.

"I don't want to annoy students," he says. "I think the student who decides to vote can be trusted with making an informed decision without someone handing them a flyer."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu.

YMCA class shows refugees life in U.S.

BY MONICA RHOR
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — The creaky van rattled past Pakistani food stores, the Principe Azul disco and stores with saris in the window, giving the Daramay clan a 45-mph view of their new hometown's diversity.

Every so often the van stopped, and out climbed the six young men, two teenage girls, a little boy and their mother – refugees who had arrived from Liberia only a few weeks earlier.

The women wore sheer headscarves in delicate prints, and some of the boys donned T-shirts with French slogans. The ride was part of a three-day cultural orientation to introduce the basics of Houston life.

Stop No. 1: The Worksource, an employment agency that helps place refugees and Katrina evacuees. The men, who speak only rudimentary English, gathered at one table to fill out job applications with the help of the orientation teacher, Jean Francois Mukendi.

Job hunting is a priority for adult refugees, whose government assistance runs out four months after arrival. But Fatumata, 18, and her mother, Kaba Makinsian, sat quietly at another table, only waiting. Unlike the men, they cannot write or speak any English.

The family got a pep talk from employment counselor Naji Abdelsayed, who arrived from Egypt in 2000 and went through Mukendi's orientation himself.

About 50,000 refugees come to the United States every year, and although all get a brief cultural instruction before arriving, only about 40 percent get training like Mukendi's class at the YMCA.

Even that number may fall because the federal funding has been steadily dropping, YMCA officials said. Over the last six years, money for the program has been cut in half.

The Houston class, started in 1992, now sees about 220 people a year, and most of them start off clinging to images of the U.S. picked up from television or other refugees.

They imagine a country with gleaming sedans and glorious estates, without also anticipating the stress of navigating the culture's often-different values.

Stop No. 2: Wal-Mart. Here, Mukendi told the group as they stood in front of the sliding doors, they could buy anything. Food. Clothes. Household goods. School supplies.

"This is my first time to enter this kind of store," said Abdurahaman Daramay, as his relatives filed down wide aisles bursting with bright colors, bold designs and signs bustling in English and Spanish: "Always low prices. Siempre precios bajos."

"Hi, how are y'all doing?" asked a blue-vested worker with a grin.

N'vabury Daramay, 20, was reminded of a Moroccan marketplace: "This is like a Houston medina."

But even in Wal-Mart, some things were amiss. One shopper stared at the refugee women's head scarves, then pulled her pocketbook close to her body.

Kaba Makinsian shook her head in disappointment.

The Daramays spent three years at a refugee camp in Guinea before entering the U.S. with the sponsorship of a sister already living here.

"Before you came here, what was your idea when thinking about America?" Mukendi asked his students during the two days of classroom lectures that preceded the van tour.

The answers flew. "America is a good place to be." "Here you can have a good life." "Here you must be punctual."

And here, Mukendi repeatedly reminded his students, you are expected to ask questions. A hard task for refugees coming from a culture where questioning is impolite.

Then there are the contrasting views of punctuality. (In Liberia, arriving two hours late for an appointment is acceptable. Here, it is not). equality. (In Liberia, a husband has final say in all household decisions. Here, men and women are equal). and parenting. (In Liberia, children cannot question their parents. Here, they often speak up.)

"We are not here to change what you believe in," said Shawn Webb, the YMCA's educational services director. "We just want to show you that there are a lot of differences."

YMCA International Services cultural orientation instructor Jean-Francois Mukendi, left, leads Liberian refugees through a kosher market in Houston. The program is used to ease the transition for immigrants living in the U.S.

Jewish seminary welcomes gays

JEWISH from page 1

new policy.

Eytan Hammerman of Keshet, an advocacy group for full inclusion of gays at the seminary, said he knew of at least one gay student who had already submitted an application, which was put on hold while the issue was under review.

The survey JTS conducted found majorities of two-thirds or more among clergy, educators, administrators and others approved admitting gay students. However, respondents in Canada, where Conservative Judaism is more traditional, were "overwhelmingly against" ordaining gays.

Still, Eisen and others insisted the movement would not split. Leaders believe the more likely response is that individuals who object to the change will leave to worship in Orthodox synagogues.

"I do not think in the near future it will result in great changes in the school," said Rabbi Joel Roth, a faculty member and expert in Jewish law who considers ordaining gays contrary to Jewish teaching. "The only way that I worry about it hurting the school is if the result of this decision is the marginalizing of those who oppose this decision."

Roth resigned from the Law Committee when it lifted the gay ordination ban. He believes Eisen will work hard to maintain respect for conflicting views but said the true impact of the decision won't be apparent for years.

Smith died from drug overdose

SMITH from page 2

Perper said Smith also had been on several antidepressant and antianxiety drugs and had recently been injecting herself with purported longevity medications, vitamin B-12 and growth hormone.

She felt ill shortly after arriving in Fort Lauderdale from the Bahamas on Feb. 5 on a trip with Stern to buy a new yacht. But that illness was brought under control by antibiotics and an ice bath. She also suffered intense, pungent sweating that soaked the sheets. An assistant medical examiner's report described seeing a table in Smith's hotel room containing cold medicine, sodas cans, Slim Fast, nicotine gum and an open box of Tamiflu tablets.

The public airing of the details of Smith's death reflected the way she lived her life.

A high school dropout in Texas, she gained fame as a Playboy Playmate of the Year, a model for Guess jeans and later a star in her own reality show. She married 89-year-old oilman J. Howard Marshall II, and after his death took her fight for Marshall's estimated $500 million fortune as far as the Supreme Court. That ongoing battle could make her infant daughter, Dannielynn, very wealthy. Stern and two other men have claimed to be the baby's father.

The medical examiner's report was accompanied by a press release and even a PowerPoint presentation. Among the excruciating details were descriptions of Smith's breast-enhancement scars, her pink hair extensions and numerous tattoos.

Students for Life gives alternatives

LIFE from page 1

her involvement in the pro-life cause. It is an issue that provokes powerful emotions on both ends of the spectrum, and Desrochers and Petrizzi were both aware of the potential for chaos when dealing with a sensitive issue.

So they implemented a policy of cool, calm and collected. They have formed an apolitical group with no religious affiliation or divisive partisan politics in order to create a dialogue with people who subscribe to pro-choice policy — or those who haven't made up their minds.

Desrochers believes this was the best way to take a strong stance on a delicate issue.

"Obviously it's an issue that's very polarizing and emotionally charged, and rightfully so," she said. "I tell people not to get animated or to lose our cool, especially as a new group and especially with the kind of message that we're trying to portray. We're trying to be very inviting and advocate for life, so we're trying to be cool and compassionate. That's the point of it."

UMass Students for Life has worked closely with the organization Birthright International, which has a branch in Amherst. Birthright International offers free pregnancy testing, confidential assistance, nonjudgmental and caring advice, maternity and baby clothes, housing and social agency referrals and adoption information among other things, according to its Web site, www.birthright.org.

The organization comes highly recommended from Desrochers, and allows UMass Students for Life to be more aggressive with their promises, knowing that it has an established organization for women in need right around the corner.

"[Birthright International] will bend over backwards to make sure that you and your baby are safe, healthy and happy and have all the resources that you want," Desrochers said.

Petrizzi's grandmother was involved with Birthright International for eight years and provided shelter for a woman in need during her time as an employee, and Petrizzi believes that adoption is a valid choice for a new mother too overwhelmed to take care of a newborn child.

Desrochers and Petrizzi think that Birthright International is the key to providing care for newborns and opens up another option for women who aren't able to take care of a child after it's born.

UMass Students for Life is aspiring to be something along the lines of Birthright International, except concentrated specifically on the UMass campus and, of course, on a much smaller scale. Desrochers and Petrizzi want UMass Students for Life to provide "any need that a woman could possibly want."

While no women have come to UMass Students for Life for help yet, Desrochers, Petrizzi and the rest of the members will continue to provide something that they believe was missing from the UMass campus.

"I think this is something basic and to want to have your child once you become pregnant is something natural," Petrizzi said. "That shouldn't be jeopardized or twisted around to make it seem like it's nothing. And the problem with UMass, being such a liberal campus, it makes it seem like abortion is a women's choice, it's women's health, it's a decision that's personal and it makes it like it's not a big deal."

"I think it's a misconception that any woman who would want to have an abortion on campus wouldn't be able to do school, wouldn't be able to do this, that and the other thing," Desrochers said. "But it is possible. And the point of this group is to make it possible for her and to help her achieve everything she wants to achieve."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
is hiring copy editors for the Fall 2007 semester

if interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center basement or contact Sheryl Wolnik at swolnik@student.umass.edu.

Guest Chef Series

Chef
Matt Sunderland
Presents...A Taste of Spain

MENU:
TAPAS:
• Grilled Crusty Breads
• Thin sliced Serrano Ham
• Roasted Garlic Puree
• Bean Puree
• Manchego Cheese
• Tapinade

ENTREES:
Gazpacho Soup
Carved Chimi Currie Salmon
Paella
Pork & Potato Casserole
Roasted Chicken with Garlic & Paprika
Spinach with Raisins & Pine Nuts
Green Beans with Tomatoes & Pearl Onions

DESSERT:
• Pumpkin Crumble

• Executive Chef at Chandler's (Yankee Candle)
• Tour Host to Spain

Tuesday, March 27th
Berkshire DC
from 5 to 9 pm

DINING SERVICES
CHANDLER'S RESTAURANT
www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." – Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How to spot a 'Facebook Creep'

EDITOR'S NOTE: This column has been abridged to fit the space of the newsprint. You can read the full column, along with Owen's other works, on his blog (oshowblog.blogspot.com).

Owen Boss

"Facebook Creep" has become a term that is recognizable to anyone unfortunate enough to live in the Facebook era. While I too have an account, and have been known to creep from time to time, I have noticed that certain people have gone above and beyond the call of creepiness.

I have categorized them into groups, in an attempt to not only expose them for what they are, but to warn other members of the Facebook community to consider these descriptions when thinking of their friends; chances are you know at least one of them.

The Photo Creep: You have over 1,000 photos. As if that isn't creepy enough, you have to be that kid at the party with the camera. This creep (which usually is a girl – but is creepier when it's a guy) takes it upon themselves to document every single night, week or weekend for your specific group of friends. No one else takes pictures because we all know that no matter how stupid the situation is, you're going to force it into some kind of a photo op. You title your photo albums after lyrics to popular songs like "This is why we're hot" or "Ergalicious," even though the songs themselves have no relevance to the pictures found within.

You poke people like it isn't creepy. Well it is. Stop.

The Wall Creep: It is understandable when you receive a random message from a random friend and see that it was sent at 3 a.m. A lot of stupid things seem wall post-able at 3 a.m. on a Saturday. However, this creep chooses instead to post at a time when they can assure you that not only are they completely sober, but thinking about you. Often times this creep will approach you at parties and come up with some kind of stupid inside joke like yelling "Shiver Me Timbers!" like a pirate. Then, when you wake up hung over in the morning and sign on to see what's good with the book- they have already posted "YARRR SHIVER ME TIMBERS" on your wall by 8 a.m.

The "I haven't seen you since grade school" Creep: I completely forgot you were alive. I had finally forgotten your name, face, and how I knew you, until you friended me last week. I haven't seen or heard from you since we did the Christmas pageant at church in the third grade but your convinced we are still close enough to be friends on the book. If I reject your friend request I run the risk of hurting your feelings (which at this point I don't really care about), and if I accept God knows how long you will creep on me through the internet.

The Poke Creep: You poke people like it isn't creepy. Well it is. Stop.

The "I quit facebook but still creep" Creep: Whether it was a rough breakup, the surfacing of compromising photos, graduation, or you just couldn't take being on facebook anymore – you decided to call it quits. You deleted your wall, you removed all of your photos and you even removed all information except where you're from and what your name is. However, you continue to creep. You are the creepiest of the creeps because your lack of participation on Facebook makes you hard to track. You can creep without detection – and without worrying about covering your tracks.

The Photo Comment Creep: You comment on photos that you aren't even in. You didn't go to the party – and chances are you don't even go to that school, but just in case everyone doesn't know that you saw the picture... you throw a comment underneath it like "Lol" or "Sexxyyy" just to remind whoever posted the photo album you still creep on them.

The Boyfriend/Girlfriend "I want to know your password" Creep: You demand that you know the password to your boyfriend or girlfriend's account. That's super creepy.

The Event Creep: You invite every single one of your friends (even if they go to USC) to a party at your house called "Big Party." You have invited 250 people, but only 3 have RSVP'd- two are your roommates and one is you. No one wants to go to your stupid parties because they are lame. However, no one really wants to hurt your feelings, so we all click "Maybe I'll show up," knowing damn well we won't.

The "my Facebook picture isn't me" Creep: Whether your picture is Tupac, Giselle from Victoria's Secret, or some fat naked guy with a mullet, you should probably just have a picture of yourself. No one really thinks its funny – we all just assume that it means you have no good pictures of yourself. You don't really creep anyone out... because you're just trying to be funny. But it isn't.

The "Hey I got your screen name from Facebook" Creep: Stop trying to get our relationship from weird casual acquaintance to someone you can talk to on a regular basis. You didn't have my screen name for a reason. I only accepted your message request because I couldn't tell who it was by looking at your purposely vague screen name. It's people like you that are ruining it for everyone. And now you can look at my away message and find out where I am. Creep.

Owen Boss is a UMass student. He can be reached at obossa student.umass.edu

Four years later

Brad DeFlumeri

Four years after the initial U.S. invasion of Iraq, there is much to be positive about and to look toward as justification for ou expenditure of national blood and treasure. Although the mainstream media (Fox News notwithstanding) will actively try to accentuate the negative and bury the good news originating from Iraq, there is still a great deal occurring that gives cause for optimism.

First, as was recently reported by renowned Boston Globe columnist Jeff Jacoby, Iraq's currency, the dinar, is now a solid and reliable medium of exchange, a marked change from the days of the repressive Baath Party rule of Saddam Hussein. Jacoby also recently noted that small businesses and agriculture have each experienced a large upswing comparatively to the Hussein era.

Additionally, and maybe more importantly, is the notion, as begrudgingly reported by the mass media, that the surge proposed by President Bush – and overwhelmingly OPPOSED by the defeat-embracing Democrats in Congress – is showing immediate signs of effectiveness. Principally, as recently reported by the Boston Globe, insurgent strikes have been lessened and long-time unstable neighborhoods have been fortified because of the added troop brigades and divisions, despite the clamoring for defeat by the majority party in Congress. With the foremost expert on urban warfare and counter-insurgency management – esteemed General David Petraeus – now firmly entrenched as the top commander in Iraq, we all owe him and the troops the time and the support needed to carry out their mission and leave Iraq in a better state than it is currently in.

Iraq is now a country free to choose its own government, amend its own constitution and empower its own political leaders.

As more troops cycle into Iraq and as the insurgents see that their efforts to undermine the progress toward stability will be increasingly less successful, it would stand to reason that our troops will continue to find small victories along the path toward a dignified and respectable withdrawal. However, setting a deadline for withdrawal while our brave men and women in uniform are in the middle of a life and death struggle not only serves to give impetus to the enemy to stay vigilant, but it also, similarly, undermines the efforts and diminishes the morale of our troops: signaling a day that they will retreat in the middle of a struggle.

However, what we must keep in mind, now four years after the overthrow of one of the world's most brutal and ruthless tyrants, is exactly how far we have come – not the mistakes (and their have been plenty) that have been made along the way. Specifically, Iraq is now a country in which a free press and democratic functions of government can now operate. Iraq is now a country free to choose its own government, amend its own constitution and empower its own political leaders. Historically, the progression away from dictatorship and tyranny and toward individual empowerment and democratic institutions is seldom free of blood and struggle – it wasn't for the United States in the 18th century, or Japan and Germany in the 20th century, and it certainly is not for Iraq in the 21st century.

That is not to say that Iraq will not mature into a stable region fully capable of self-rule and national identity. After a full century of meddling from the British, rule by the decree of a murderous dictator, and widespread in-fighting among warring ethnic and religious factions, Iraq's push for a better and brighter future is one that the United States now has a vested interest in. It will benefit no one and nothing to turn our backs on a country and a people that deserve a chance to taste the sweetness of the freedoms that we worked hard for.

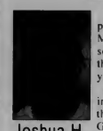
More pressingly, now – immediately after the installation of a noticeably more competent ground commander to lead our uniformed heroes – is unmistakably not the time to push our troops into the heat of the battlefield while concurrently trying to strip them of their will and the equipment needed to complete their mission. Exploiting the efforts and sacrifices of our troops to undermine the credibility and weaken the political hand of President Bush is a despicable but all too prevalent practice of those in Congress.

Instead of political posturing, we should embrace unity in support of the troops and instead of espousing pessimism and negativity over the condition of Iraq, we should boldly look with optimism toward a better future for the Iraqi people and a secured and stable Iraq. We owe our troops nothing less than our support and admiration and anything more than the Democrats in Congress are throwing their way.

Lastly, do not let the leftist media paint the picture of the country where our troops fight so valiantly; conversely, let the troops themselves tell you the progress that has been made in Iraq over the last four years and you will visualize an entirely different portrait. The sacrifices of our troops have not been made in vain, but in the pursuit of a better way of life for a people starved of democracy and prosperity: two treasures that Americans selfishly take for granted.

Brad DeFlumeri is a UMass student. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Not so fast, Deval



Joshua H. Wilder

It is remarkable how quickly public opinion can change in Massachusetts. One minute a person can do no wrong and the next they are the butt of every joke you hear.

Such a swift and drastic swing in standing among citizens of the Bay State has happened with Governor Deval Patrick, and for good reason.

Many of us can remember the summer and early autumn months leading up to the election between Patrick and Lt. Governor Kerry Healy. While walking down the street in places like Boston, Northampton, Worcester or elsewhere it was impossible not to pass by a car with that bright blue and white bumper sticker: Deval Patrick for Governor, Together We Can. It seemed that Patrick had captivated state residents with his campaign and was leading Massachusetts into a new era of governing.

After all, it was Patrick who touted himself as a man of the people. Raised by a single mother, he worked his way up from the depths of poverty to Harvard Law School. Under President Clinton, he won benchmark victories for civil rights. As a business executive, he acted as a strong voice for corporate reform. A man with such a history and sense of determination seemed like a breath of fresh air for residents fed up with government corruption and blunders such as the Big Dig looming on their minds.

One of Patrick's main campaign promises was that he planned on bringing massive property tax relief for the people of the Commonwealth. By keeping the financial burden on state residents lower than it has been in the past, Patrick was going to make a dent in the long held notion of "Taxachusetts," and reduce spending.

Saying that the Patrick era has been a work in progress so far would be an understatement.

Or was he?

Saying that the Patrick era has been a work in progress so far would be an understatement. To start off, Deval decided that the Ford Crown Victoria driven around by previous Governor and now presidential hopeful Mitt Romney was an inferior means of transportation. This Governor, a "man of the people," needed to drive something much humbler. In order to stay in touch with the average citizen, Patrick decided he needed a $46,000 Cadillac.

Not exactly what most people had in mind when they thought of a man of the people, but if Patrick decided he wanted to pay for such a vehicle himself, than that is his prerogative, right? Well, sort of. Instead of paying for the car out of his pocket, Patrick opted to have the state lease the car. So while you are struggling to pay off fees on your own 1991 Ford P.O.S., rest assured that you are helping to pay for the Governor's new whip.

Patrick's mishaps in office are far more wide reaching than a car though. It hasn't taken him a long time to go back on his pledge of reducing financial woes for the state. In fact, Patrick has already pledged millions of dollars in new state spending for various increases in after school programs and additional public works initiatives.

Who will be supporting all this spending? The taxpayer, of course.

Mr. Patrick has only been in office a few months, yet he has spent a great deal of that time explaining to the public why he won't be able to keep all the promises he made to get into office in the first place.

It seems that Patrick has other priorities. He has created a media firestorm over phone calls made to a top official at the world's largest financial company, Citigroup. Patrick called top official and former U.S. Treasury secretary Robert E. Rubin on behalf of Ameriquest Mortgage as they sought urgent financial assistance from Citigroup.

To say that Patrick's intervention here served as a conflict of interest would be to say that George W. Bush is an unpopular president. While making the call, Patrick was relying on his close ties to Rubin. Both men served in the Clinton Administration during the mid 1990s and know each other well.

Despite the fact that Citigroup has ties to Beacon Hill, mainly in the form of the lobbying firm Dewey Square Group, Patrick's involvement in this controversy begs the question: is he looking out for the state of Massachusetts or for his own lackeys and special interest groups?

Patrick answered critics by saying he made the phone call not as his role as governor, but after a personal request by an official from the firm owning Ameriquest Mortgage – which, by the way, has been frequently accused of predatory lending.

Alright, Deval. It seems you spend a lot of time acting not as governor, but something else – driving around in a Cadillac, taking state police helicopter rides, poking your nose in special interest situations where everyone agrees you have no business in the first place and going back on campaign promises. But when do you plan on following through for all the people who helped you get elected last year?

Deval Patrick for Governor, Together We Can... Screw the people once again.

Josh Wilder can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

Fighting for funding, life

Debbie Friedman

As the War in Iraq rages on, consuming the news media and cluttering the minds of the American people, it's becoming easy to forget about another war, which was declared more than three decades ago and still wages on today.

Richard Nixon sent the country to war against cancer in 1971, when he signed into law the National Cancer Act. Since then, a governmental commitment to finding a cure to the second-leading cause of death in the United States has been the non-partisan thread running through every succeeding administration.

However, the Bush administration is putting an end to this trend with the unveiling of their latest budget plan. The new plan seeks to make another cut to the National Cancer Institute's budget, this time by $40 million. Undoubtedly, the money being taken away from cancer research is going towards financing the expensive and disastrous war with Iraq. But in doing so, the Bush administration is hurting the very thing they went to war to protect – the lives of the American people.

This year the American Cancer Society (ACS) estimates that 1,444,920 Americans will be diagnosed with cancer, nearly half of which will die. In fact, 1,500 people die per day because of this disease. And with every dollar that is taken away from research funds, a cure to all the suffering caused by this horrible disease gets pushed further and further away.

In the 1970s, just like today, being personally affected or knowing someone whose life had been plagued by cancer was not a rare occurrence. So when Nixon gave the National Cancer Institute (NCI) special autonomy with in the National Institute of Health and allocated $100 million into the institute's budget, it was seen as a bold and necessary step. This bold step was not meant to be an isolated legislative action however. The Nixon administration initiated the National Cancer Act and declared a metaphorical war on the disease in order to light a torch to be carried on by all presidents to come, until a cure was found. Unfortunately, the Bush administration is attempting to blow out the flame by slashing the budget at a time when significant progress is finally being made.

In a 2007 fact sheet released by the ACS, they state their advocacy for a 5 percent annual increase to the NCI's budget in order to "sustain past progress and [continue] the modernization of cancer research." However the Bush administration is doing the opposite by annually cutting the budget. Since 2005, Bush has cut funds by $71 million, which has and will continue to severely hurt cancer research and treatment studies.

This bold step was not meant to be an isolated legislative action, however.

Bush has tried to justify his administration's actions by citing the fact that cancer deaths have dropped for the second year in a row. However, it is a completely ineffective strategy to pull back the minute you begin to cover some ground. Essentially, the Bush administration is attempting to cut and run in the War on Cancer, and the hypocrisy of their actions reveal a complete disregard for the well being of the citizens of this country – especially the millions who endure the wrath of cancer.

Since 2001, the department of defenses' budget has gone up 48 percent. This year it will total 439.3 billion dollars, which is 92 times higher than the cancer budget. While it is inevitable that the defense budget will be higher than the budget for cancer research, there is no reason for such a large disparity.

The American people have to realize that although at face value it does not seem like they are sacrificing much for the War in Iraq, they are actually sacrificing their health. The defense budget is only able to skyrocket by sucking money away from significant areas of American life-most importantly, the financial funds for research on debilitating and fatal diseases.

And we all have to ask ourselves if it is worth it. Is it worth billions of dollars to chase down insurgents in Iraq, when we could use the money to save millions here at home, whose lives are destroyed by cancer every year?

Sure, cancer cannot fly planes into our buildings and cause a national tragedy. It also cannot drop bombs on our cities or plant deadly chemicals in our water supply. But it can, and it does kill millions of men, women and children of all ages. It also costs this country billions of dollars in medical expenses each year. Therefore, cancer should be treated like any other deadly enemy we go to war against.

Americans need to demand that our government stay committed to curing this disease by providing serious financial investments and long-term political policies. Now that science is helping more people reclaim their lives from cancer, we must send additional "troops" in to help fight the war, in order to save the rest. It is one troop surge the Bush administration won't have any trouble rallying support for, because it is the only way to sustain the most fundamental ingredient of democracy.

Debbie Friedman can be reached at dfriedma@student.umass.edu

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

THE SOUNDSYSTEM OF SOUNDSYSTEM

The emotional value in "Sound Of Silver" creates an edge to the album not heard in albums previously released by LCD Sound System.

Soundsystem finds balance

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

It would seem that James Murphy's LCD Soundsystem can do no wrong. Their debut 2002 single "Losing My Edge" was both a sharp commentary on the absurdity of "cool" in independent music and an assertion that Murphy is, in fact, the coolest of them all.

The self-titled full-length released in 2005 struck a near-perfect balance between the dance floor tendencies of Murphy's production with The DFA and his knowledge of what makes a great rock song. 2006's unlikely collaboration with Nike, "45:33," seamlessly blended a myriad of musical ideas into one massive workout track. But with "Sound Of Silver" Murphy has surpassed any prior entries in the LCD Soundsystem catalogue by infusing his knowledge of music and perennial wit with a new-found emotion.

The great strength of "Sound Of Silver," and indeed of any LCD Soundsystem release, is the flawlessness of the beats. Murphy's simple yet searing production leaves each song a lean, beat-driven machine – there are no superfluous sounds. This may seem a potentially boring way to present a song, but Murphy knows what he's doing. Unlike other producers – Dave Fridmann and his work on the newest Flaming Lips and Clap Your Hands Say Yeah albums comes to mind – Murphy doesn't deploy any flashy production tricks. As such, there's nothing to distract the listener from the heart of the song and nothing to annoy after repeated listens. And these songs don't need distraction as they're incredibly well-written.

LCD SOUNDSYSTEM
"SOUND OF SILVER"
CAPITAL RECORDS
4.8/5

Murphy spends ample time on the album indulging in his humorous side. The album's first single, "North American Scum," is a proud declaration of his country of origin. "For those of you who think we're from England we're not, no," Murphy declares. "New York's the greatest if you can get someone to pay the rent," he asserts before adding that "some proud American Christians might disagree Here in North America But New York's the only place we're keeping them off the street." The song is chock full of such clever lines and Murphy sounds just as fresh and witty here as he did five years ago on "Losing My Edge." Is it deep? No. Is it endlessly entertaining? Definitely.

After "North American Scum," however, he treats the audience to a pair of the most personal songs he's ever written. "Someone Great" borrows a beat from the middle of "45:33" and the song starts off with a lonely pulsing synth, soon joined by a steady drum and what sounds like the quick repeated pull of a zipper. Murphy enters with "I wish that we could talk about it But there, that's the problem." Its unclear what the song's subject is – it could be someone's death, or perhaps a reaction to the discovery of a spouse's affair. But with the melancholy in Murphy's voice and lines like "The little things that made me nervous Are gone in a moment I miss the way we used to argue Locked in your basement," it's obvious something has happened that shouldn't have. "When someone great is gone," Murphy chants at the end of the song, and the audience shares his sadness.

"All My Friends" is another surprise – here we see the wistful James Murphy reminiscing over the past. A simple, sparse piano starts the piece

See SILVER on page 6

Yusef Lateef releases live disc

By Brad Farberman
Collegian Staff

With "Yusef Lateef At The Bottom Line," the retired Five College Distinguished Professor of Music and Grammy Award-winner has unearthed a live document as arresting as anything he's done.

The disc, out now on Lateef's own YAL Records, features a quartet date from 1977, recorded live at the now-defunct Bottom Line club in New York City (the venue closed in 2004 after almost 30 years at its Greenwich Village location). The show highlights a lesser-known, electric side of Lateef's music, having more in common with the sounds of James Brown or P-Funk than the soaring, highly spiritual explorations one has come to expect from Lateef.

Although, no one should expect anything from Lateef; the man's music is nothing if not unpredictable.

And his band is nothing if not exciting to listen to. Drummer Albert "Tootie" Heath, of Heath Brothers fame, is as funky as it gets, foreshadowing the beats of hip-hop and drummers like Adam Deitch, formerly of the John Scofield Band, and Questlove of The Roots. Heath has toured and recorded with Herbie Hancock, Dexter Gordon, Ben Webster and Lester Young among others, and was the house drummer at the Montmartre club in Copenhagen in the 60s. Today, he leads "The Whole Drum Truth," an all-percussion quartet featuring trap kit geniuses like Billy Hart and Ben Riley.

YUSEF LATEEF
"YUSEF LATEEF AT THE BOTTOM LINE"
YAL RECORDS
4/5

The energetic Steve Neil, on bass, is no slouch either. A former student of John Coltrane bassist Jimmy Garrison, Neil has played with Art Blakey, Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Archie Shepp and Eddie Harris. He toured Europe with Lateef in 1977 and 1978.

Pianist Khalid Moss, heard here on Fender Rhodes electric piano among other keyboards, has recorded with Betty Carter, and saxophonist Pharoah Sanders. Currently, he is a reporter for the Dayton Daily News in Dayton, Ohio.

Lateef, however, has not taken a day job since this concert date in 1977. The multi-instrumentalist, performing here on C flute, soprano saxophone, shanmie and vocals, has released dozens of albums since the late 70s, and more than 30 through YAL. "At The Bottom Line" is the first archival offering from the Amherst-based label.

The punchy "Stocking Cap" kicks things off with a driving drum groove from Heath and sharp, staccato lines from Lateef, a la Maceo Parker. Moss beats things up, too, with a winding synthesizer solo.

Following that number is "Sweet Love," by pianist Kenny Barron. A highlight of the record, the instrumental tune is slow, pretty and warm, especially in comparison to some of the more aggressive pieces on the album. Lateef's playing here is gentle, save for some wild moments towards the end of the tune.

"Somebody Said" features playful lyrics ("A thing ain't nothing but a thing in space," sings Lateef) and some Sly Stone-inspired bass from Neil. "125 Eighth Ave.," presumably about Harlem, finds Lateef describing the locale as being "filled with soul through and through," and leading his comrades through sections that nod to the music of New Orleans.

"At The Bottom Line" has a lot to offer; this comes as no surprise, considering the personnel involved. Directions on how to order the disc can be found on his personal Web site. Lateef will perform in France, The Netherlands and Austria this year with the Belmondo brothers.

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberm@student.umass.edu.

Yusef Lateef's latest album "Yusef Lateef At The Bottom Line" was recorded in 1977 at the Bottom Line in New York City. Bottom Line closed in 2004.

Kaur's music gives peace a new chance

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Correspondent

She has a gentle face, a delightful smile, bright eyes and a soothing voice that is meant to be heard. Snatam Kaur, a name she received from her teacher Yogi Bhajan, means "Universal" or "Friends to All." This dedicated follower of the Sikh tradition and sacred chant artist has been on The Celebrate Peace World Tour with her band mates since 2004.

"We call it 'Celebrate Peace' because we believe that peace inherently exists within each of us, and that it is a matter of recognizing that and then celebrating the reality of that," explained Snatam Kaur. "Through the vibration of the music we intend to give people an experience of peace, weather they come to the concert or take a CD home with them. There is no doubt that the vibration of the music is very powerful," she added.

Born and raised in the United States, Snatam Kaur's parents practiced edltation, yoga and chanting, embedding the principles of the Sikh tradition which originated in India, into the young girl. This practice calls for recitation and singing of sacred words in a language called Gurumukhi, explained Snatam Kaur. The language, designed by the Gurus of the tradition, is meant to pass on healing to anyone who hears or recites the words. In harmony with a talented team, Snatam Kaur's performances strive to do just that: spread peace and healing.

"I travel with an incredibly talented tabla player, Manish Vyas, who is really a master at his art form and brings a beautiful love and flavor of Indian Classical music," she said. "I am also accompanied by GuruGanesha Singh who plays the steal stringed guitar; he brings a joyful spirit to our performances along with some western elements with his soul journeying guitar playing. Finally, Ram Das Singh is with us and he plays piano and clarinet and really gives us the wings to fly. I play the harmonium, an Indian instrument, and the violin. Mostly in concert I like to sing."

When Snatam Kaur arrives to a performance, serene and relaxing music is not the only thing that she and her band mates bring with them; they reach out to the community in a number of ways with the belief that people have the power to affect the planet through their thoughts and actions.

"During the tour, GuruGanesha and I also teach Kundalini Yoga workshops to give people tools to maintain a state of inner peace on a daily basis," she explained. "So, with this tour we are really working to help people have a very strong sense of inner peace. During our tour we are dedicated to doing community service and we offer free children's yoga and song hours in many neighborhoods across the country."

Although Snatain Kaur plays the violin and harmonium, her favorite instrument is her voice. She has found that her voice is directly related to how she feels physically, mentally and spiritually. Since it is an instrument that allows her to spread healing and spiritual power, Snatam Kaur tries to take care of herself.

See KAUR on page 6

Snatam Kaur received her name from her teacher Yogi Bhajan. Her name means "friends to all."

Exercise daily to get rid of your tension

By Veronica Garret
Collegian Columnist

Now that spring break is over, we have to start thinking proactively and get 'back on the ball' so to speak. Schedule our time for schoolwork, work and friends, of course.

The thing we don't realize is that stress does not subside simply by putting our lives on hold. Staying on track to better our lifestyles is what gives stress the time off. Many do not know that stress can affect numerous character traits, including your personal-emotional side, as well as your sex life. However, before you panic, there are solutions and remedies to this stressful time when you thought all the nervous tension from the week before had vanished, at least for a while.

Therapies for the anxiety felt through day-to-day life vary with the person. Some people enjoy cooking and exercising, while others choose it as a contradiction. Even as I clean to alleviate stress, some may sleep, instead.

Exercise is the most feasible to be mentioned when someone responds to "How do you get rid of stress?" I would most definitely agree with that. Exercise is a beneficial and proactive lifestyle choice. When you're feeling stressed, go for a walk or run. Even just throwing a blanket or towel down on the floor of your room and stretching is a great way to focus your energy and clear your mind. Taking those little breaks is a justifiable way to relax, but when including them into your daily routine, the chances go up to alleviate stress, entirely.

When you begin exercising regularly, as stress mitigation or to clear your mind, or whatever the reason is, you begin to feel better about yourself, self-confidence goes up as you notice a trimmer waist or thinner thighs. With new found or building confidence comes bigger smiles, and just that has the power to encourage new friendships, or broaden your horizons with the opposite sex.

A fun fact of exercise and the bonus of stress relief can be learned from Dr. June Maebover Reinisch, who said, " what is the easiest and healthiest way to gain length on

See ADVICE on page 6

Kaur to perform at Smith

Snatam Kaur was born and raised in the United States, but her parents still encouraged her to follow many Indian traditions such as meditation, yoga and chanting.

KAUR from page 5

"Music can take me into a feeling faster than anything I have ever known. It seems to transcend everything: language barriers, cultural barriers and religious barriers," she said. "We travel all over the world, and in most cases people don't understand the words we are singing, and they don't understand why I am dressed in the Sikh clothing and turban. Once the music starts, people don't really care who we are or even what we are singing. They feel the love in the music and they are transported by it." Snatam Kaur has brought the sacred chanting accompanied by tranquil layers of music courtesy of her band mates to several corners of the world: Asia, Europe, United States, Mexico and Canada. Nonetheless, this artist does not have one favorite place to take the stage.

"I'd have to say that my favorite stop on the tour is when I come out on stage, 'stop' and sit down at my harmonium with my band members on either side," explained Snatam Kaur. "For a moment we look at each other with a flash of joy in our eyes, and then look out to the audience and start our first song."

This chant artist has released six albums on Spirit Voyage Records and is a firm advocate of the idea that music holds the actualization of peace in its hands. "I encourage other musicians to use the medium of music to communicate the messages of love and peace because it is so powerful. I do believe that musicians have a key role on our planet at this time to bring peace through music," she said.

Snatam Kaur, who considers her music and concerts to be a "journey," will fill the Helen Hills Hills Chapel at Smith College with her voice on March 31, 2007 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Tickets are available on spiritvoyage.com.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu

Safe alternatives for dealing with stress

ADVICE from page 5

your penis? And the answer to that is, lose weight. An urologist from Indiana University who examines a lot of male genitalia reports that for every 35 pounds you gain, and by the way in increments that would be less, you lose approximately an inch of penile length. And that's because the way that men gain weight is they gain it in this fat padding that's around the penis, in the abdomen and around the penis. So everytime you gain 35 pounds, or with less gain it will be less, you lose one inch of your penis in this pad of fat that's around your penis. So, if you lose weight, you're going to reveal more of the length of your penis, making it longer."

Women also have a slight benefit to keeping active. A study at Harvard found that "20 minutes of exercise spurred greater sexual response in the women." Regular exercise improves coordination and flexibility. Sex, without mention is a great way to wave goodbye to stress and burn calories; with varied circumstances, calories burned fluctuate.

If you are not really the type for rigorous activity or sports, there are numerous other ways to reduce your level of stress. Keeping a journal or any type of writing is very effective. Scrapbooking or photography were some of my favorites. Drawing or painting to get in touch with your creative side. Knitting or exploring design with your clothing, go against the corporate mainstream. I have actually heard that even watching aquarium fish can rid you of stress and lowers blood pressure too. Anything you find tranquility or peace in will be beneficial in stress reduction. You don't always have to follow the trend.

Veronica Garett can be reached at vgarrett@student.umass.edu

LCD Soundsystem continues hit streak

SILVER from page 5

and sets the stage for musings on the alienation of friends and the ensuing struggle of trying to win them back. "You spent the first five years trying to get with the plan And the next five years trying to be with your friends again," Murphy drops his perpetual pretense of coolness – it's almost as if "Losing My Edge" never existed. "Where are your friends tonight?" he repeats. The sentimentality serves Murphy well and it's the highlight of the album.

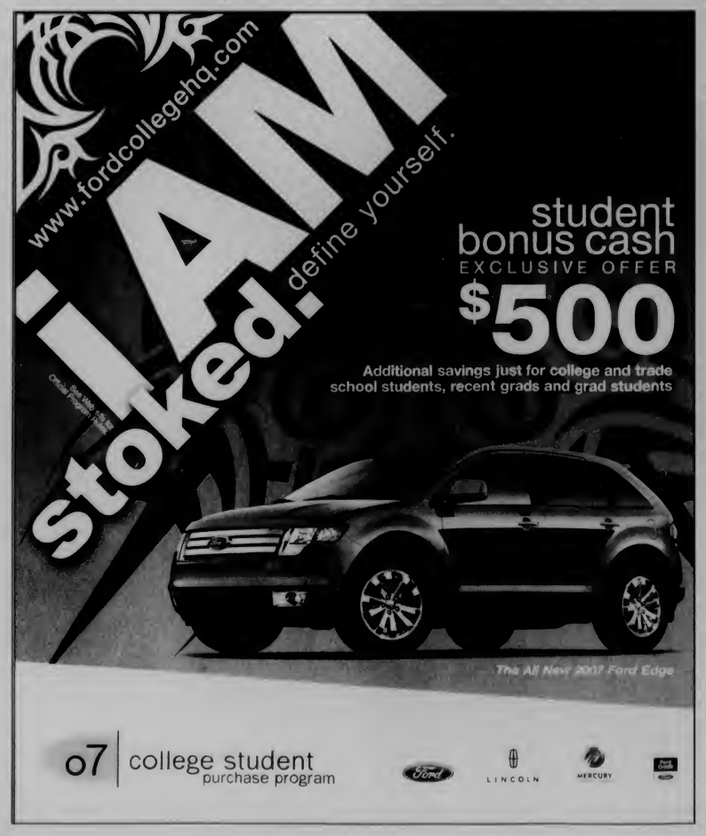
Even songs without much lyrical depth are exercises in excellence. "Sound Of Silver," the album's title song, finds Murphy repeating "Sound of silver talk to me Makes you want to feel like a teenager Until you remember the feelings of/A real live emotional teenager Then you think again," over and over. The lyrics don't mean much but the seven-minute song segues from a hypnotizing chant backed by a sizzling bass line into an ambient piano piece, with Murphy's chant recurring throughout.

"New York, I Love You But You're Bringing Me Down" closes the album with Murphy adopting the role of crooner, another first for him. It's a love note to the city's grime and grit and he pleads for New York not to change. Backed by dynamic cymbal crashes and over-dramatic guitar solos, Murphy becomes his generation's Sinatra and it's an endearing way to end the album.

"Sound Of Silver" doesn't sound all that different than other LCD Soundsystem releases – the flawless beats and witty commentaries are still here. What sets this album apart from prior outings is its emotional depth. With "Sound Of Silver," the audience is allowed to meet James Murphy the human being instead of James Murphy the acerbic musician, making it the first truly essential release of Murphy's career.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbec@student.umass.edu.

"Sound of Silver" has some of the better beats in today's techno music with their simple, yet intense production.



WRITE FOR ARTS!!

E-MAIL US AT

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIN.COM

On the Rocks School of Bartending®

- Get certified in one weekend
- Anyone 18+ may bartend
- The course is held on campus
- Great paying & fun job!

Sat. & Sun. March, 31st & April 1st
or
Sat. & Sun. April 28th & 29th

1-800-MIX-0094

www.OnTheRocksBartending.com

Breaking down the last four standing in the Elite Eight. Senior guard Lee Humphrey hit seven 3-pointers, scoring 23 points. Every time Oregon pushed the game close, Humphrey hit a 3-pointer to keep the game out of reach. Junior guard Taurean Green scored 21 points and junior guard Corey Brewer had 14 points and two blocks.

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

This starting five is the most talented in the tournament, with Brewer, Noah, and junior forward Al Horford. If Florida can win it all again, it will be the first team to win back-to-back championships with the same starting five. Against Oregon, the Gators played sloppy with 18 turnovers, including five from Brewer. To repeat, the Gators will need to take care of the ball and hit shots early in the game to open up post lanes for Horford and Noah.

UCLA

Last season UCLA made it all the way to the big dance only to be routed by Florida 73-57. The Bruins came back strong this season, buying into head coach Ben Howland's defensive game plan. If the Bruins have any shot at defeating the Gators they will need to play great defense and force turnovers into easy baskets.

In the tournament thus far, the defensive pressure has been outstanding. UCLA is holding its opponents to under 55 points per game. The Bruins held No. 1 Kansas to 24 points in the second half and forced crucial turnovers late in the game. Sophomore guard Darren Collison had five steals to lead the defensive charge. Collison had 14 points but struggled distributing the ball with only one assist and seven turnovers.

Junior guard Arron Afflalo scored 15 of his 24 points in the second half against Kansas. If Afflalo can't carry the offensive load against Florida, then the Bruins might not have any chance to make it back to the championship game. The other key will be sophomore forward Josh Shipp. Against Kansas he shot 2-for-7 from the field, he hit a 3-pointer at the end of the first half but didn't provide much. Shipp can relieve pressure from Afflalo, but if he struggles early in the game Afflalo could see more double teams and zone defense.

Ohio State

The big question is how good can the Buckeyes be when Greg Oden is not in the game? The Buckeyes showed they can perform well without the big man from time to time although it is crucial that Oden stays out of foul trouble. He needs to stay on the floor because he makes an impact when he isn't scoring or blocking shots. Opponents are staying out of the lane or taking tough, off-balanced jumpers, and on offense he opens up the three point lanes for shooters like senior guard Ron Lewis.

Freshman guard Mike Conley Jr. is unstoppable going to the basket and his dribbling skills are second to none. Memphis head coach John Calipari told his team not to attempt to steal the ball from him because it's a waste of time. In crunch time every team needs a player that can take the ball to the basket. If Lewis or junior guard Jamar Butler are struggling from the outside, Conley provides another element to the team. When Conley is shooting the ball well he is the best player on the court.

Lewis has been hitting big shot after big shot for the Buckeyes. Against Memphis he scored 22 points. If the game is on the line against Georgetown, look for Conley going to the basket or Lewis lining up a game-winning 3-pointer.

Georgetown

The Hoyas finally make a return to the Final Four. Junior center Roy Hibbert played one of the toughest centers in the country in North Carolina's sophomore Tyler Hansbrough. Now he is matched up against one of the most gifted centers in the tournament in Greg Oden. Both of them stand eye to eye at seven-foot-two. The same question looms about Hibbert, how long can he stay in the game? Hibbert is in foul trouble every game in the tournament, however the Hoyas have been able to play well despite his troubles.

Big East Player of the Year junior forward Jeff Green scored 22 points against UNC. The one-two punch of the Hoyas backcourt propelled Georgetown into the Final Four. In 74 minutes of play sophomore guard Jesse Sap and junior guard Jonathan Wallace combine to score 34 points and 15 assists with only 3 turnovers. The backcourt will need provide that same punch when going up against the Buckeyes backcourt of Lewis and Conley.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Junior Forward Joakim Noah's top-seeded Florida Gators coasted through the Midwest Region, knocking off Oregon, 85-77 in the Elite Eight. The Gators will now face UCLA, the No. 2 seed in the West Region, in the late game of the Final Four this Saturday.

Check out the new sports blog!!!
www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

Insight comes from all directions.
You bring something unique to the table, and at Ernst & Young, you'll be encouraged to speak up and contribute. Because we know that bringing together people with different backgrounds and perspectives lets us deliver quality results for our clients. It's why we've created a work environment of mutual respect that promotes your personal and professional growth and success. So visit us on campus or at ey.com/us/careers
FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006
Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do
© 2007 Ernst & Young LLP

Freshman Maude Lecluyse put the Minutewomen over the top against the Fighting Knights, winning her singles match in the No. 6 spot to give her team the 4-3 victory. UMass is now 9-5 on the season, taking the only Atlantic 10 contest thus far, a 6-1 win over Fordham.

Spiess ties all-time wins mark at FAU

TENNIS from page 10

as she has done all year, beating the ninth-best singles player in Victoria Weltz, 6-4, 6-1.

The only setbacks in singles play for the team came at the three and four positions. Ellen de Jong fell to the undefeated Gedvile Norkute, 6-3, 6-4, while Dasa Stanimirovic was downed by Katerina Jiskrova, 6-0, 6-2.

The Minutewomen needed to win their fifth and sixth singles matches in order to win the match, and Maude Lecluyse and Stephanie Gimenez scored victories that sent the Fighting Knights home with their second loss of the season.

Gimenez won her match over Christine Johnstone, 6-3, 6-3, and the outcome of the day would come down to Lecluyse. After splitting the first two sets with her opponent by scores of 6-4, 6-4, the young freshman won the tiebreak in the last set, 7-6 (7-4).

The doubles point was lost 2-1, but Michele Spiess and Laura Murillo did score an 8-4 victory at the third spot.

Due to inclement weather conditions, the match against Florida Atlantic was pushed back to Thursday – it was originally scheduled for Tuesday.

No external conditions were going to prevent Michele Spiess from etching her name into the record books on Thursday.

Jackie Braunstein no longer solely sits atop the throne as the UMass all-time singles victories leader. With her 6-0, 6-0 victory over Claudia Kecht, Spiess now can count herself amongst elite company with 63 singles victories for the Minutewomen.

The 5-2 team victory on the afternoon made Spiess' individual achievement that much sweeter.

UMass took care of the doubles point this time, winning at the second and third slots. The duo of Stephanie Gimenez and Ellen de Jong coasted to an 8-2 victory over their opponent, while Laura Murillo and Spiess were victorious in a hard-fought match with Eve Xanthopoulos and Natalia Totevska, 9-7. Murillo and Spiess are 3-0 in doubles play since being paired together in the loss to Harvard.

Not to be outdone by Spiess, Masha Pozar and Ellen de Jong also came up victorious at the second and third spots, respectively.

Pozar defeated the Owls Elodie Wendling, 6-4, 6-2, while de Jong knocked off Katherine Bartnik 7-6 (7-5), 6-2.

Dasa Stanimirovic fought hard at the fourth position, but eventually ended up losing 5-7, 7-5, 1-0 (10-3) to Pia Terol.

Maude Lecluyse also put up a valiant effort at No. 5 but fell to Danielle Simone, 6-3, 6-4.

Stephanie Gimenez capped off the successful weekend with a 6-0, 6-2 victory over Eve Xanthopoulos at the sixth spot.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Clemens once again weighing options

PICARD from page 10

the Astros that kicks in when he retires doesn't make leaving home for one of his former teams any easier.

The Red Sox aren't in dire need of his services, but with Papelbon recommitting himself as the team's closer, you can be sure Theo Epstein would rather have Clemens on the mound every fifth day than Tavarez.

Then there are the Yankees. With Chien-Ming Wang starting the 2007 season on the DL with a hamstring pull, there's plenty of room on board for the Rocket, especially with the recent departure of Randy Johnson.

Speaking of the Yankees, remember how I said nothing has changed? I take that back.

That change is Andy Pettitte. The same Andy Pettitte that influenced Clemens to leave New York for Houston after the 2003 season. Even he decided to return to the Bronx for one more championship run, and don't be surprised to see him follow in his good friend's footsteps once again.

Clemens has openly stated that he would have never left New York for Houston had Pettitte not made the move.

And what's stopping him from doing it again?

Sure, Houston has bolstered its offense by signing Carlos Lee to a $100 million deal. But if Pettitte is as influential now as he was three and a half years ago, then Robinson Cano better get used to wearing No. 24 – he's offered to switch from No. 22 if Clemens signs with the Yankees.

Whatever the outcome of this year's Roger Clemens sweepstakes, the waiting game is getting old. Nobody knows what Clemens is going to do at this point. It could come down to family. It could come down to money. But in the end, the Yankees are hoping that it will come down to someone they already have: Andy Pettitte.

Danny Picard is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Roger Clemens made 19 starts for the Houston Astros last season after signing with the team in June. He went 7-6 with a 2.30 ERA in those 19 appearances as Houston missed the playoffs by one game.

Latest UMass squad has staying power seventh.

PELLAND from page 10

They responded to that diss by opening the season 7-1-1 and finishing fourth in the league standings – gaining home-ice advantage in the conference playoffs for just the second time in school history. UMass couldn't quite break the top 10 in either national poll, but did hover right around it with a most recent No. 12 ranking.

In several interviews this season, sophomore goaltender Jon Quick said there was one line spoken to him that really made UMass his choice as the No. 3 goalie recruit a year ago. Former assistant coach – and current Merrimack head coach – Mark Dennehy told Quick the program was seeking players to put banners in the Mullins rafters.

Next season as a junior, Quick will be able to do just that, doubling the program's banners to two. Although one NCAA banner and one 1971-72 ECAC Championship banner aren't much compared to the basketball team's Final Four and Elite Eight cloths, this could just be the beginning for coach Don Cahoon's team.

All indications are that this season was not a fluke. Cahoon's squad proved to be one of the deepest in Hockey East, boasting balance as one of its chief strengths along with its traditional skating skills.

Many key cogs to UMass' success will be back next season wearing maroon sweaters, but as always, there are some others that must move on. Matt Anderson, Mark Matheson, Chris Capraro and Kevin Jarman will surely be missed, but not nearly as much given the level of talent of the Minutemen's underclassmen.

It was truly nice to see all those players contribute this past weekend. Although I was not able to attend the games in Rochester, I did happen to catch Jarman's game-winner and Anderson's goal from the ESPN Zone at the New York-New York Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas. Everyone else was watching Kansas and UCLA.

Don't expect the rapid drop-off in wins UMass faced when Tommy Pöck, Nick Kuiper and Greg Mauldin left town. While this year's four seniors were important players, those left behind are more than capable of picking up the slack.

A 30-point and two 20-point scorers return next season in Cory Quirk (31), P.J. Fenton (24) and Will Ortiz (21) as will Chris Davis, whose production suffered because of persistent injuries.

This was a breakout year for Quirk, proving he possessed the scoring touch and playmaking ability needed to play the top-line pivot in Hockey East. Cahoon will probably put him back with Davis next season allowing the pair to wreak havoc on the opposition.

Enough has already been said about Quick. He'll move up in the league's goalie hierarchy with BU's John Curry departing for bigger things.

Having a group of talented defenders at full strength should be another thing Cahoon looks forward to next season. The Minutemen's blue-liners were bruised and beaten for much of the second half this year. In fact, UMass will have just about the same group intact, being led once again by Mike Kostka.

Perhaps the Mass Attack's most overlooked defenseman this season was David Leaderer. He found a scoring touch late in the season while playing superb on the other side of the puck. Leaderer finished the season at plus-11, just behind Kostka's plus-12 for the defense – Quirk led the team with a plus-16 rating.

While the "2007 NCAA Tournament" banner is the first for the Minutemen, it most certainly won't be their last.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Check the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Although it was his final season, senior captain Matt Anderson helped establish UMass as a force in Hockey East for years to come.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's
Student Insurance Blue Cross GIC
Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
Friday, March 30th, 2007:
3 BLIND MOOSE
Saturday, March 31st, 2007:
COTTON WOOD
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
Need a place to play?
Come to Seven O's!
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-6788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat&Sun
Next to Cuffside Apts.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	6		9		3		7
		2				5
3	1						9	6
			3	4	5
1								8
			7	8	1
6	3						8	1
		1				7
	7		4		9		5

ACROSS
1 Gems
6 Smile radiantly
10 Stick or happy starter?
14 Painter Matisse
15 Violent anger
16 Legal or medic lead-in
17 Binding contract
19 Diaphragm
20 Etta's forte
21 Serious in purpose
23 Member of the cavalry
27 Bluer
28 Dust Bowl refugee
29 Fond du ___ WI
31 Sardonic style
32 Pom, e g
35 Hot, spicy drink
37 Potato bud
38 Asylum seeker
40 Switch position
43 Chest wood, often
44 Of a wedding
46 Yuletide song
49 Brit flyboys
51 Actor Aubrey
52 Provoke
54 Native American game
57 Eminem and 50 Cent
59 Devastate
60 Cain's victim
61 Out of work
66 Exhaust
67 Minute skin opening
68 Rub out
69 Get smart with
70 Skiers' ride
71 Celtic clan branches

DOWN
1 Greek letter
2 Female quail
3 Common conjunction
4 Ironed
5 Inasmuch as
6 Inhumanly cruel
7 Corn serving
8 The African Queen screenwriter
9 Tablelands
10 Washer cycle
11 City on the Rio Grande
12 Up for the day
13 Danish or turnover
18 Highland topper
22 Oakland player
23 Flaw in one's logic
24 Approve
25 Ready for picking
26 Instinctive
30 Gear tooth
33 Ultimatum word
34 Dropout's cert
36 New girl at the ball
39 Distant
40 Lyric poems
41 Strikes out
42 Run away
43 Pliers
45 Mitsubi Range output
46 Gem weights
47 Saudi
48 Lassoers
50 Grainger
53 Blow one's top
55 Yachting trophy
56 Stirs to anger
58 Snooty one
62 Bullpen stat
63 Bazoo
64 $ quote
65 ... Planes, R.

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT: • Trivia Night
WED: • Open Mic Night
(all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMF & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. • N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-0000 www.theharp.net

Quote of the Day

"I just cash in on the fact that I'm good looking, and I've got a nice figure and girls like me."
-Sid Vicious

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

SO WHERED THIS "STARTING YOUR OWN BUSINESS" THING COME FROM?
WELL, YOU DON'T TAKE ME SERIOUSLY, SO OTHER PEOPLE MUST NOT EITHER. SO I STARTED MY OWN BUSINESS TO CHANGE THAT PERCEPTION
SO YOU DID ALL THIS - BECAUSE OF ME?
DON'T GET ALL SAPPY ON ME NOW
I'M NOT. I'M ANGLING FOR MY CUT OF THE ACTION
OH. WELL DON'T DO THAT EITHER.

Hard Knocks By Louis Coppola

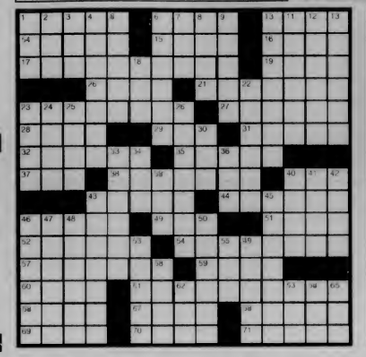
HARD KNOCKS
OKAY, HERE'S WHAT WE CAN DO... WE'LL ALL JUST GO STAY AT MY HOUSE UNTIL WE FIGURE OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT.
NO WAY. IT'S OKAY TO GO TO YOUR HOUSE FOR A VISIT, BUT LIVING THERE?!
YOUR FAMILY IS... IS... UH...
IS... UH... UH...
YOUR FAMILY IS, UH...
LET'S SEE, TRASH ISN'T THE RIGHT WORD.

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

HOW DO YOU KNOW WHEN SOMEONE IS "THE ONE?" YOU KNOW, LIKE THE ONE PERFECT FOR YOU?
I ADORE RYAN, I NEVER REALIZED WHAT A GREAT GUY HE WAS BEFORE
NOW, EVEN JUST THINKING ABOUT HIM I FEEL FUNNY, MY THROAT GETS DRY AND I CRAMP UP.
USUALLY THAT'S A PRETTY GOOD INDICATION, BUT IT SOUNDS LIKE TOO MUCH FAST FOOD TO ME.

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

DEE CHECKS OUT THE OWL'S WEBSITE
CARVER'S
House of Unwholesome Shenanigans
Must Be 18 To Enter
I didn't look past your homepage
I only put that up because my mom had been the only one visiting



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If you still have no idea where you're living next semester start digging a burrow.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The happiest song ever written for a piano was Crocodile Rock by Elton John.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Neil Young may bear a striking resemblance to a caveman, but he's got mad bank.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your cup of coolness will runneth over if you shave two lines into your eyebrow.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If your computer is going excessively slow, fill the USB port with cocaine.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Remember when Green Day was actually good? Ah, fifth grade was the best!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are destined to outlive the astoundingly old juice man with the zany eyebrows.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Make an earnest effort to set the world record for longest time spent pogo-sticking.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stalk the members of LFO until they agree to perform at your brother's Bar Mitzvah.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Save some of that bacon from breakfast for a sandwich later in the day.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Rebuild your entire life around Clarissa Explains it All. Pet croc, hubcaps, the works.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If it burns when you pee, try taking the lit cigarette out of your pantalones.

There is a direct correlation between good karma and the number of comics you create in your lifetime.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321

Apartments for Rent

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house-2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartments for Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Employment

Now Hiring Atkins Farms Country Market 1150 West Street Amherst MA www.atkinsfarms.com (413) 253-9528 Sales Associates: Evenings and Weekends in the Bakery, Deli and Candy Departments. Cashiers: Days Evenings & weekends at the Front Register Area.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Fall 2007 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergradute credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Employment

Looking for a great summer job? Become an Academic Peer Advisor for the fall 2007 incoming students with Undergraduate Advising. Application deadline is April 4th. For more information or to print an application visit our website at www.umass.edu/advising/

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM a perfect 2-0 over break

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With a pair of victories in Boca Raton, Fla. this past week, the Massachusetts tennis team is stringing together quite a successful season.

The Minutewomen (9-5, 1-0 Atlantic 10) defeated the Lynn Fighting Knights, 4-3, this previous Monday, and followed it up with a convincing 5-2 triumph over the Owls of Florida Atlantic on Thursday.

UMass	4
Lynn	3
UMass	5
FAU	2

The team will travel to Virginia to compete against Old Dominion on Friday.

If history was going to determine the outcome of the match against Lynn, the Minutewomen would be in for a long day. UMass had come up empty in their first seven efforts against the Fighting Knights, but it was up for the challenge this time.

This was the team's inaugural outdoor match of the season, and it pitted them against the No. 3 team in Division II.

It was the singles players that came up big for the Minutewomen, winning four of the six matches in that department.

Masha Pozar stepped up into the first slot and soundly defeated Lynn's Alexandra Shunk in straight sets, 6-2, 6-1. This was no small feat as Shunk was ranked fifth in women's singles for Division II.

Michele Spiess continued to overwhelm opponents

See TENNIS on page 8

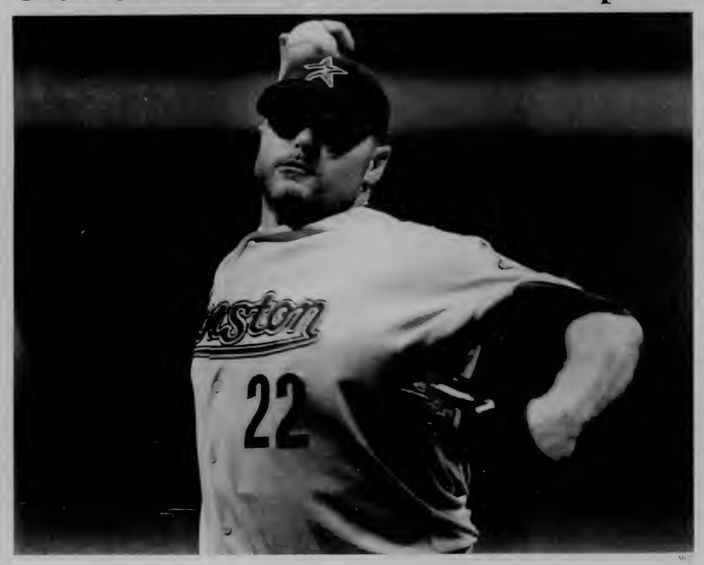
FILE PHOTO / UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Michele Spiess tied the UMass singles wins record with last Thursday's 6-0, 6-0 victory over Florida Atlantic's Claudia Kecht. Spiess is now tied with Jackie Braunstein on the all-time list, and can take sole possession of the mark with a win Friday, when the team visits Old Dominion.

Clemens still undecided about possible return in 2007

Despite opening in Red Sox' rotation, Rocket still '50-50'

Danny Picard



There's nothing new to report.

That's the latest word out of the Roger Clemens camp, even with what looks like a perfect opening in the Boston Red Sox starting rotation. Jonathan Papelbon offered his duties to return to the bullpen and reacquire his role as the closer over the weekend, making room for a fifth starter in Boston.

Julian Tavarez was immediately named Papelbon's replacement to start the season, but there's no guarantee it's going to stay that way.

Prior to Papelbon's move, there seemed to be no room for another starting pitcher in the Red Sox rotation. Not even for Clemens.

The most recent opening has to put Boston back in the hunt for the Rocket, but his agent, Randy Hendricks, insists nothing has changed.

"Roger won't decide until May," Hendricks said in an email over the weekend. "At that point, he will decide if he thinks he can play physically and whether he wants to play mentally. If he passes both of those tests, I expect him to decide on the team by the end of May."

Sound familiar?

He's playing the waiting game once again. In the exact same manner as last year, Clemens will sit back and watch how the season unfolds for the three teams he will take into consideration.

It's no secret that the Houston Astros, New York Yankees and Boston Red Sox are the only teams he would consider playing for if he decides to return to baseball.

In February, it looked as though the odds of retirement were in his favor. Clemens told a Houston television station last month that there was an 80 percent chance he would retire.

His agent believes his chances of playing are a little bit better than that.

"I have always said it was 50-50," Hendricks said. "Roger said one day, some time ago, that it was 80-20 against [returning] on that day, meaning that was how he felt that day."

Other than that 30 percent differential from last month, nothing has changed. The same three teams are his only preference, and there won't be a decision made anytime soon.

Clemens signed a one-year, $22 million deal with Houston last June after months of speculation. He finished the season with a 7-6 record and a 2.30 ERA in 19 starts, but once again, his offense failed to hold up its end of the bargain.

The Astros had the worst team batting average in the league (.255) and were ranked 25th (out of 30) in total runs scored (735). Meanwhile, Houston had the fifth-best team ERA in the majors at 4.08.

Once again, the easiest move for Clemens would be to stay in Houston for another season. His son, Koby, remains in the organization, and his 10-year personal services contract with

See PICARD on page 8

Much like last year, Roger Clemens is taking the early part of the season off as he decides whether to return for another season. If he does come back, he will likely sign with either the Houston Astros, New York Yankees, or the Boston Red Sox.

Mass Attack has finally arrived

First-ever NCAA appearance puts program on hockey map

Jon Pelland

It's hard to believe that nearly six months have passed since the Massachusetts hockey team began its season against Sacred Heart and Clarkson.

A lot has happened since those early October meetings, with more good than bad for the Minutemen. UMass took a late-season hot streak into the Hockey East and then the NCAA postseason, and almost rode it to the Frozen Four, having been sent home this weekend by Maine.

Almost.

The 2006-07 version of the Mass Attack is arguably the best squad to play in Amherst. It set high marks for wins (21) and fan attendance in a single season, drawing just over 100,000 to the Mullins Center.

But after defeating Maine four times in two consecutive weekends to close out the regular season and begin the conference playoffs, the Black Bears defeated the Minutemen when it mattered most and now find themselves with a spot in the Frozen Four this weekend.

It's still amazing that Maine made the field of 16, and even more astounding is the fact the Black Bears garnered a higher seed. UMass couldn't have done much more to suggest it deserved the three-seed in the East, but the return of goaltender Ben Bishop has silenced the Black Bears' critics.

Despite not achieving the ultimate goal, UMass should still revel in the wide array of accomplishments it had this season. The Minutemen possessed almost no respect in Hockey East at the beginning of the year. The preseason coaches' poll picked them to finish

Sophomore Cory Quirk was second on the team with 31 points this season as UMass played arguably the best year of hockey in its history.

See PELLAND on page 8

Final Four set for Saturday

Oden, Noah lead top seeds to semifinals

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's down to the final four. The bracket is set and there are no big surprises in this Final Four, two No. 1 seeds (Florida and Ohio State) and two No. 2 seeds (UCLA and Georgetown). Every team in this semifinal has won at least 30 games, which has never happened in NCAA history.

FLORIDA

The Florida Gators are attempting to win back-to-back national championships for the first time since Duke did it in 1991-1992. Standing in their way is UCLA, who is looking to avenge last year's loss in the National Championship game.

Carrying the load for the Gators is Joakim Noah, who is averaging 13 points and 11 rebounds during the tournament. The Gators took down No. 3 Oregon, 85-77,

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

Freshman center Greg Oden led Ohio State over Memphis, 92-76, in the South Regional Final to advance to the Final Four.

AP HONORS UMASS' LASME PAGE 12

FERRELL STARS IN FAMILIAR ROLE PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

WINDY/SUNNY : HI: 58 LO: 26 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 2007

SGA candidates sound off in debates

SGA presidential candidate and Chairman of the University Policy Committee, Matt Giancola.

SGA presidential candidate and Secretary of Diversity, Aaron Buford.

SGA presidential candidate and UMass senior, Eoin Moore.

Candidates drive home SGA platforms

BY JAMIE MASON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last night the Student Government Association (SGA) had a debate between this year's three presidential candidates and two trustee candidates before voting begins today.

Running for the presidential position this year are Eoin Moore, Aaron Buford and Matt Giancola. For the trustee position, Ruth Thompson (running with presidential candidate Aaron Buford) and Joshua Murray are running.

Moore, a senior, has run three times previously for the presidential position. He said that he would like to evoke, "smack that day" because he likes to "smack that." He quoted the movie Braveheart saying, "vote for me and you will live, don't vote for me and you will die."

Buford, a sophomore, is a Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) major, focusing on Youth Leadership and Urban Development. He is involved with a tutoring program at Amherst High School and with the campus' men's resource center. He hopes to engage students and increase their participation,

See DEBATES on page 3

SGA Student Trustee candidate and member of the Ways and Means Committee, Ruth Thompson.

SGA Student Trustee candidate and former Lieutenant Governor for the Central Residential Area, Joshua Murray.

MASSPIRG hopes to maintain funding

BY LORAINE BURGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While University of Massachusetts students place their votes in the Student Government Association presidential and Student Trustee elections, they will also be asked to support the continuation of the MASSPIRG chapter (RSO) at UMass funded by an $11 per student, per semester waiveable fee.

When filling out tuition forms, students must decide whether or not to check the box stating that they agree to donate $11 to the MASSPIRG chapter at UMass. Any student who chooses not to support the group may waive the fee.

If the vote isn't successful, the University will remove the donation option from the tuition form altogether.

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) is a statewide student-directed nonpartisan organization. The group conducts research, advocacy and public education in environmental preservation, consumer protection and hunger relief.

MASSPIRG urges students to vote "Yes" in keeping the option to donate money toward the organization open. They argue that their existence allows students to keep control over their educational experiences and keep them involved in volunteering and engaged in issues on campus.

Last year, MASSPIRG staff and students passed a law that made Massachusetts appliances more energy efficient, hoping to save the state over $8 billion over the next 20 years.

MASSPIRG is currently working to fight local and national poverty by organizing their hunger and homelessness awareness week, their panel on the genocide in Darfur and their "Spare Change for Social Change" drives in which they donated the proceeds to local shelters and schools in Sudan.

About two-thirds of the money that is donated goes towards hiring professional staff such as staff-advocates, lobbyists, lawyers, scientists and organizers. The rest of the funds raised goes to direct program work and campaigns, to office costs and materials and to national program work and outreach to other PIRGs across the country.

"We don't want our fee to be mysterious or misunderstood," said Jessica McGowen-Vanderbeck, MASSPIRG campus organizer. "It is simply the way in which we are able to have a larger impact on social environmental issues because it allows us to hire professional staff who work full time on students' behalf."

In 2006, MASSPIRG staff and students registered over 6,400 new Massachusetts voters, over 1,600 of which from U Mass.

The Student Government Association (SGA) elections will be held today and tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. in all dining commons and the Campus Center.

Painter injured in industrial accident

BY DERRICK PERRINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A painter injured in an industrial accident earlier this week while working on the construction of the new central heating plant at the University of Massachusetts is in critical condition at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Rejean Chicoine, 55, of Springfield, has remained in critical condition since Monday night after being pinned between a beam and the scissors aerial lift he was working on, according to Ed Blaguszewski, Director of the News and Information Office at UMass. Chicoine had been spray painting beams for the new central heating plant when the incident occurred. He was freed only after co-workers climbed up the lift to dislodge him and then lower the lift, Blaguszewski said.

The UMass Police Department received the call for assistance and responded to the site of the incident at 8:19 p.m., Monday night. CPR was performed on the scene and Chicoine was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital by the Amherst Fire Department ambulance, according to the UMPD.

Officials at Cooley Dickinson Hospital could not comment on the nature of Chicoine's injuries or the treatment he had received, but confirmed that he remained in critical condition on Tuesday.

See ACCIDENT on page 3

A closer look at the SGA candidates

Moore hopes fourth time is the charm

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the past four years, University of Massachusetts senior Eoin Moore has run for president Student Government Association (SGA) four times. He has also run for the position of student senator twice. Each year he has different promises, offering a unique twist to different campus issues.

"I'm running for president because I am destined to be ruler of the SGA and UMass," said Moore.

Moore is from the affluent town of Duxbury, Mass. When comparing Duxbury to UMass, Moore explains he has noticed there is an anti-rich environment on campus.

"I was napping on a couch in the campus center one day and I heard a student explain how she was hired to be a teacher in a rich community and her friend responded that she never would want to teach the rich. We oppress the people who are not the norm and on our campus the norm happens not to be rich," said Moore.

Last year Moore promised if he won the election, female students on campus would be granted a gun to take with them along campus for when they felt unsafe. This year Moore promises to solve the police situation on campus by having the police move into the dorms and the students into the police station.

"The police are not going to go away, we have to accept that. We should have the police move into the dorm and have the students move into the police station to solve the rioting problem," says Moore.

When asked about if he supports MassPIRG, Moore responded, "I support masturbation."

Another one of Moore's campaign promises is to get rid of all the computer hackers around campus.

See MOORE on page 3

Matt Giancola: Advocate for Student Rights

BY LUCAS CORREIA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Matt Giancola, presidential candidate for the Student Government Association (SGA), is determined to make a difference. He feels that the SGA is on the cusp of getting great things done, and that he can take the actions necessary to ensure a positive change.

Giancola is no stranger to student government. His freshman year, he was the Senate Liaison for the Orchard Hill Area Government. He has been a member of the SGA for the past two years, and is currently the Chairman of the University Policy Committee. He is a junior and is majoring in Political Science.

Giancola is reaching out to better student life in many ways. If elected, Giancola says will do everything he can to support the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) an organization that lobbies the state government to provide more funding for higher education and make tuition and student fees more affordable. He also would like to make the University of Massachusetts more accessible to students in low-income communities by providing full support to the "Student Bridges" program, which reaches out to children and teens, showing them the impact a college education could have on their lives.

Giancola would also like to have more events on campus.

"The administration constantly chides students for

See GIANCOLA on page 3

A student passes in a 'Drop with a W' form in Registrar's Office in Whitmore. Yesterday was the final day for students to drop with a 'W'.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 93

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Atlas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherol Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellbeau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sidney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolaniitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Group finds toad the size of a small dog

A man holds a 9kgm (15 inch) long cane toad near Darwin, Australia.

DARWIN, Australia (AP) — An environmental group said Tuesday it had captured a "monster" toad the size of a small dog.

With a body the size of a football and weighing nearly two pounds, the toad is among the largest specimens ever captured in Australia, according to Frogwatch coordinator Graeme Sawyer.

"It's huge, to put it mildly," he said. "The biggest toads are usually females but this one was a rampant male ... I would hate to meet his big sister."

Frogwatch, which is dedicated to wiping out a toxic toad species that has killed countless Australian animals, picked up the 15-inch-long cane toad during a raid on a pond outside the northern city of Darwin late Monday.

Cane toads were imported from South America during the 1930s in a failed attempt to control beetles on Australia's northern sugar cane plantations. The poisonous toads have proven fatal to Australia's delicate ecosystems, killing millions of native animals from snakes to the small crocodiles that eat them.

As part of its so-called "Toad Buster" project, Frogwatch conducts regular raids on local water holes, blinding the toads with bright lights then scooping them up by the dozen.

Dog's 'Heimlich' saves choking owner

CALVERT, Md. (AP) — Toby, a two-year-old golden retriever, saw his owner choking on a piece of fruit and began jumping up and down on the woman's chest. The dog's owner believes the dog was trying to perform the Heimlich maneuver and saved her life.

Debbie Parkhurst, 45, of Calvert told the Cecil Whig she was eating an apple at her home Friday when a piece lodged in her throat. She attempted to perform the Heimlich maneuver on herself but it didn't work. After she began beating on her chest, she said Toby noticed and got involved.

"The next think I know, Toby's up on his hind feet and he's got his front paws on my shoulders," she recalled. "He pushed me to the ground, and once I was on my back, he began jumping up and down on my chest."

That's when the apple dislodged and Toby started licking her face to keep her from passing out, she said.

"I literally have pawprint-shaped bruises on my chest. I'm still a little hoarse, but otherwise, I'm OK," Parkhurst said.

"The doctor said I probably wouldn't be here without Toby," said Parkhurst, a jewelry artist. "I keep looking at him and saying, 'You're amazing.'"

Comedian wrecks Ferrari

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Maybe Eddie Griffin should leave the driving to his chauffeur.

The comedian destroyed a rare million-dollar Enzo Ferrari on Monday when he crashed it into a barricade while promoting a movie.

He was unhurt in the low-speed incident, at Irwindale Speedway, about 20 miles (32 km) east of Los Angeles.

"The brother's good at karate and all the rest of that, but the brother can't drive," Griffin told reporters.

He was practicing for a celebrity charity racing event tied to his upcoming film, "Redline."

The car, one of just 400 manufactured, belonged to the film's producer, Daniel Sadek. Sadek estimated that the car was worth $1.2 million, and seemed philosophical about the loss, saying he was just happy that Griffin was unharmed.

The real-estate investor has put up his own money for the $26 million picture, and allowed one of his two $200,000 Porsche Carreras to be destroyed for a scene in it.

A worker looks at a damaged Ferrari Enzo worth $1.5 million yesterday at the Irwindale Speedway in Irwindale, Calif.

Man dies after battle with drugs

By Jim Suhr
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — A former trucker whose documentary chronicled an agonizing descent as methamphetamine ravaged his body has died, optimistic to the end that his story would keep others from the highly addictive stimulant.

"He was extremely satisfied, wanting to do more in getting the word out and showing kids what meth harm does. We didn't get to that point," his father, Jack Bridges, said shortly after the 35-year-old died Monday at a hospital in Cape Girardeau.

"He didn't want anyone to go through what he did," his father said.

Shawn Bridges drew global attention last year for "No More Sunsets," a 29-minute film shot by a former southern Illinois television videographer at Bridges's request.

By his family's account, Bridges already had died at least twice, his heart so damaged by years of using meth – a concoction that can include toxic chemicals such as battery acid, drain cleaner and fertilizer – that it stopped and had to be shocked back into beating.

The documentary shows Bridges mostly bedridden, his constant companions a catheter and feeding tube.

"I'd say he's got a 34-year-old body on the outside with a 70- to 80-year-old man on the inside," his father told The Associated Press last May.

About 28,000 people sought treatment for meth addiction across the country in 1993, accounting for nearly 2 percent of admissions for drug-abuse care, according to the federal Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.

A decade later, the meth-related admissions numbered nearly 136,000 — more than 7 percent of the national total for drug-abuse treatment.

Family members have said Bridges had been haunted by the dreary day in 1976 when his younger brother Jason, barely a year old, died in a car wreck. Bridges was 4 and nowhere near the accident but still blamed himself, wanting to trade places with his dead sibling, his father said.

A lenient upbringing set Bridges on the road to becoming "a little monster," his father said. "By 16, the kid was a high school dropout and partier."

At 26, Bridges had a heart attack that his father blamed on meth's ability to damage a chronic user's heart and other internal organs. Bridges learned he had congestive heart failure. Twice, he tried to kill himself, family members said.

During his final months in a hospital bed, Bridges' words slurred to guttural sounds. At times, he spit up blood, and his weight fell dangerously when he couldn't keep food down. His father said Monday that Bridges developed a urinary tract infection shortly before he died.

"I don't think people will forget what got him to this point," said Chip Rossetti, who filmed the documentary. "But what he did with his condition is really the amazing thing."

Rossetti said 500 to 600 copies of the documentary have been sold, some going as far as Australia. Bridges was also profiled on German television. Rossetti said Monday he plans a sequel, chronicling Bridge's final year and testimonials by people touched by his awareness effort.

Shawn Bridges, died yesterday after his fight with methamphetamines.

Senate wants Iraq timeline

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defying a veto threat, the Democratic-controlled Senate narrowly signaled support Tuesday for the withdrawal of U.S. combat troops from Iraq by next March.

Republican attempts to scuttle the non-binding timeline failed on a vote of 50-48, largely along party lines. The roll call marked the Senate's most forceful challenge to date of the administration's handling of a war that has claimed the lives of more than 3,200 U.S. troops.

Three months after Democrats took power in Congress, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) said the moment was at hand to "send a message to President Bush that the time has come to find a new way forward in this intractable war."

But Republicans — and Sen. Joseph Lieberman (D-Conn.), an independent Democrat — argued otherwise.

John McCain (R-Ariz.), a presidential hopeful, said that "we are starting to turn things around" in the Iraq war" and that a timeline for withdrawal would embolden the terrorists in Iraq and elsewhere.

The effect of the timeline would be to "snatch defeat from the jaws of progress in Iraq," agreed Lieberman, who won a new term last fall in a three-way race after losing the Democratic nomination to an anti-war insurgent.

Bush had previously said he would veto any bill containing the timeline, and the White House freshened the threat a few hours before the vote on Tuesday. "This and other provisions would place freedom and democracy in Iraq at grave risk, embolden our enemies and undercut the administration's plan to develop the Iraqi economy," it said in a statement.

Similar legislation drew only 48 votes in the Senate earlier this month, but Democratic leaders made a change that persuaded Nebraska's Democratic Sen. Ben Nelson (D-Neb.) to swing behind the measure. Additionally, Sen. Chuck Hagel (R-Neb.), a vocal critic of the war, sided with the Democrats, assuring them of the majority they needed to turn back a challenge led by Sen. Thad Cochran (R-Miss.).

The debate came on legislation that provides $122 billion to fund the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan as well as domestic priorities such relief to hurricane victims and payments to farmers.

Separately, supporters of an increase in the minimum wage readied an effort to attach the measure to the spending bill, along with companion tax cuts that Republicans have demanded. The House and Senate have passed different versions of the bill but have yet to reach a compromise.

The House has already passed legislation requiring troops to be withdrawn by Sept. 1, 2008. The Senate vote assured that the Democratic-controlled Congress would send Bush legislation later this spring that calls for a change in war policy. A veto is a certainty, presuming the president follows through.

That would put the onus back on the Democrats, who would have to decide how long they wanted to extend the test of wills in the face of what are likely to be increasingly urgent statements from the administration that the money is needed for troops in the war zone.

"Frankly, I think we'd like to reach out to the president ... and say, 'Mr. President, this is not a unilateral government. It is a separation of powers, and the Congress of the United States is assuming review,'" House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer (D-Md.), told reporters as the Senate debated the war.

Reid also referred to the president at a news conference. "I would hope that he would be willing to work with us in coming up with some language that both (houses of Congress) could accept. At this stage, he has been very non-negotiable. So we'll see what happens," he said.

As drafted, the legislation called for troop withdrawal to begin within 120 days, with a non-binding goal that calls for the combat troops to be gone within a year.

The measure also includes a series of suggested goals for the Iraqi government to meet to provide for its own security, enhance democracy and distribute its oil wealth fairly – provisions designed to attract support from Nelson and Pryor.

The vote was a critical test for Reid and the new Democratic majority in the Senate nearly three months after they took power. Despite several attempts, they had yet to win approval for any legislation challenging Bush's policies in a war that has claimed the lives of more than 3,200 U.S. troops and cost in excess of $300 billion.

Republicans prevented debate over the winter on non-binding measures critical of Bush's decision to deploy an additional 21,500 troops. That led to the 50-48 vote derailing a bill that called for a troop withdrawal to begin within 120 days but set only a non-binding target of March 31, 2008, for the departure of the final combat forces.

Some Democrats said they would support the non-binding timetable even though they wanted more. "I want a deadline not only for commencing the withdrawal of our forces but also completing it rather than a target date," said Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.).

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., answers questions from reporters at the Capitol Tuesday.

10 reasons why you'll love a Mac.

1. Run Microsoft Office. Flawlessly. On a Mac, Office gives you Word, Powerpoint and Excel with the same familiar features and shortcuts.

2. It just works. With a Mac, the OS, the applications and the computer are all made by the same folks, so they all work perfectly together.

3. 114,000 viruses? Not on a Mac. Mac OS X was designed with a superior UNIX foundation, a built-in firewall and security measures far surpassing what you'll find on PCs.

4. You can even run Windows. Parallels Desktop for Mac makes it possible to run Windows software on your Mac.

5. Tools to make amazing stuff. Find your creative voice with iLife '06, the award-winning suite of software found on every Mac.

6. You can use your existing printer or camera. Your Mac comes loaded with thousands of peripheral drivers, so just connect via USB, FireWire or Bluetooth.

7. Mac OS X keeps getting better. The world's most advanced operating system makes it easy to find, access and enjoy everything on your computer.

8. Instant video chats. The built-in iSight camera on iMac, MacBook and MacBook Pro make it easy to video chat with up to three friends or family members at once.

9. Use your Student Discount and SAVE on Apple products!

10. Buy your Mac right here, at your Campus Store. We're just steps away. Visit, call or shop us online today.

Authorized Campus Store

UMASS AMHERST
University Store
Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003-0000 413.545.2619
http://www.bkstore.com

Giancola aims to increase events

GIANCOLA from page 1

going out to parties and drinking, but they don't put their money where their mouth is and have alternative activities for students to engage in," he states on his Facebook group's discussion board.

Other actions Matt will vouch for include bringing back same-room reservation, getting the police out of UMass dorms and implementing a sign-out policy.

Giancola is looking at issues at an international level. He recently passed an action in the University Policy Committee to divest funding from the country of Sudan. The Board of Trustees is currently considering the proposal.

"If the Board of Trustees approves it, UMass will take all of its investments out of companies that support the Sudanese government; a government that has no respect for human life," said Giancola.

"As our voices come together and grow louder, the clamor will become so great that we can no longer be ignored. As President, I will work each and every day in making sure that voice gets heard by the people in charge," said Giancola.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Moore hopes to end 'hacking'

MOORE from page 1

"I feel we are in a dangerous situation, very similar to the 1980's movie War Games," Moore said.

Unlike Aaron Buford and Ruth Thompson who are running as a president/trustee team, Moore feels that it is unnecessary for him to have a running mate.

"I have run the first three years without a running mate, I don't need one now," Moore said.

This semester is Moore's final semester at UMass whether he wins or loses the election.

"If I win, I'll still rule UMass even after I am gone. I do not have to be physically on campus to rule the SGA," Moore said.

SGA Presidential candidate Eoin Moore promises to rid the campus of computer hackers.

Painter injured in industrial accident

ACCIDENT from page 1

According to Blaguszewski, the Northwestern District Attorney's Office, Federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration and the Massachusetts State Police were on the scene yesterday to begin an investigation of the incident along with officials from the UMass Office of Environmental Health and Safety.

"[The University] remains concerned for the person involved and his family," Blaguszewski said.

Chicoine had been working for a subcontractor of O&G Industries of Torrington, Conn., the general contractor for the $118 million central heating plant, according to Blaguszewski.

O&G Industries could not be reached for comment by press time.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

Clashes erupt at Paris train station

By Jamey Keaten
Associated Press

PARIS — Riot police firing tear gas and brandishing batons clashed Tuesday with bands of youths who shattered windows and looted shops at a major Paris train station, officials said. Nine people were arrested.

Officials said about 100 people were involved in the melee at Gare du Nord, one of Paris' most important transport hubs. Officers and police dogs fired tear gas and charged at groups of marauding youths, some of them wearing hoods and swinging metal bars.

The youths responded by throwing trash cans and other objects at the officers. A group of youths smashed the windows of a sporting goods store and looted boxes of shoes. Others attacked automatic drink dispensers and set fire to an information booth.

Commuter Cyril Zidou, a 24-year-old electrician, said he was coming home from the gym "when I just got gassed." One woman was evacuated by paramedics for inhalation of tear gas.

The violence did not appear directly related to France's presidential election less than a month away, but it highlighted the social and economic tensions that the country's new leader will inherit when he or she takes power in May.

The train lines from Gare du Nord radiate out to the same suburbs north of Paris where three weeks of rioting erupted in 2005. That violence was born of pent-up anger — especially among youths of Arab and African origin — over years of high unemployment and racial inequalities.

Youths at the station said Tuesday's clashes started when police manhandled a young person of North African origin. Some claimed that the youth's arm was broken in the confrontation.

Zidou said the violence had echoes of the riots in 2005. "They never finished," he said. "It slowed down a bit."

McCain: Progress seen in Iraq

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republican presidential contender John McCain said Tuesday, "we are starting to turn things around" in the Iraq war, as he broke off campaigning in Florida to vote against a proposed troop withdrawal timeline.

In a speech on the Senate floor, the Arizona Republican said President Bush's decision to dispatch additional troops last winter "is working far better than even the most optimistic supporter had predicted. Progress is tangible in many key areas despite the fact that only 40 percent of the planned forces are in Iraq," he added.

McCain spoke on a day in which two nearly simultaneous attacks outside Baghdad killed at least 48 Iraqis, and he said he did not want to paint an overly optimistic picture. He added, "I have been critical of the conduct of this war since 2003, and very much regret that only now, four years into the conflict, are we beginning to implement the kind of strategy that was necessary from the start."

Aides said it was the first time he had systematically addressed recent events in Iraq, and he had decided to do so on the Senate floor in the run-up to a pivotal vote.

The assessment also came at a politically pivotal time, as McCain, once the presumed Republican front-runner, attempts to halt a reversal in the polls that has jolted his presidential hopes.

A heavy majority of Americans opposes the war in Iraq and doesn't approve of Bush's handling of the conflict. Yet the most ardent Republicans still approve it, and the presidential rivals are vying for the support of hard-core GOP voters.

"What we cannot do, and for the sake of America's vital national security interests, we must not do, is give up just at the moment we are starting to turn things around in Iraq," McCain said.

Using a color-coded map of Iraq as a prop, McCain said Iraqi army battalions have arrived for duty as called for, many at or above 75 percent of their programmed levels, bomb attacks and murders are down since the new policy was implemented and the number of civilians killed in Baghdad dropped from 1,222 in December to 494 in February.

He said U.S. forces have moved out of large bases to take up positions in small outposts as part of a shift in strategy. "Contrary to predictions, this has not increased U.S. casualties. And, not surprisingly, our presence has resulted in a dramatic increase in actionable intelligence about terrorists," he said.

McCain said the debate in the Senate had an Alice in Wonderland quality to it, with critics of the war attempting to "micromanage a conflict based on what the conditions were three months ago — not what the reality is today."

The day's events marked the first time McCain has broken off campaigning to cast a Senate vote on the war. He attended a Florida fundraiser earlier in the day, and arranged to return to the state for the evening.

Scientists fear mercury in energy-saving bulbs

By Lisa Von Ahn
Associated Press

NEW YORK — There's an old joke about the number of people it takes to change a light bulb. But because the newer energy-efficient kinds contain tiny amounts of mercury, the hard part is getting rid of them when they burn out.

Mercury is poisonous, but it's also a necessary part of most compact fluorescent bulbs, the kind that environmentalists and some governments are pushing as a way to cut energy use.

With an estimated 150 million CFLs sold in the United States in 2006 and with Wal-Mart alone hoping to sell 100 million this year, some scientists and environmentalists are worried that most are ending up in garbage dumps.

Mercury is probably best-known for its effects on the nervous system. The Mad Hatter in the classic children's book "Alice in Wonderland" was based on 19th-century hat makers who were continually exposed to the toxin.

Mercury can also damage the kidneys and liver, and in sufficient quantities can cause death.

U.S. regulators, manufacturers and environmentalists note that, because CFLs require less electricity than traditional incandescent bulbs, they reduce overall mercury in the atmosphere by cutting emissions from coal-fired power plants.

But some of the mercury emitted from landfills is in the form of vaporous methyl-mercury, which can get into the food chain more readily than inorganic elemental mercury released directly from a broken bulb or even coal-fired power plants, according to government scientist Steve Lindberg.

Disposal of any mercury-contaminated material in landfills is absolutely alarming to me," said Lindberg, emeritus fellow of the U.S. Department of Energy's Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

The mercury content in the average CFL — now about 5 milligrams — would fit on the tip of a ballpoint pen, according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and manufacturers have committed to cap the amount in most CFLs to 5 milligrams or 6 milligrams per bulb.

The majority of Philips Lighting's bulbs contain less than 3 milligrams, and some have as little as 1.23 milligrams, said spokesman Steve Goldmacher.

To prevent mercury from getting into landfills, the EPA, CFL makers and various organizations advocate recycling.

Besides commercial recyclers and some municipal waste collection services, some retailers accept used CFLs.

IKEA, the Swedish home furnishings chain, has free drop-off programs at all of its 234 stores, 29 of which are in the United States. Spokeswoman Mona Astra Liss said response was slow at first, but has since picked up.

Now advocacy groups are calling on Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and other big chains to get involved.

Andy Ruben, vice president for corporate sustainability at Wal-Mart, said the company was working with the EPA's Office of Solid Waste and others to find mercury and recycling solutions.

SGA candidates sound off in debates

DEBATES from page 1

he said.

Giancola, a junior, political science major, has been involved with the SGA for three years. Beginning in the Orchard Hill area government, he was elected as a senator in his second year and was voted as chairman for the University Policy Committee in his third. He is interested in divesting the University of Massachusetts from Sudan and getting people involved, he said he is excited for the year ahead.

During the presidential debate the candidates were asked about three goals that they would like to achieve while in office. Moore spoke about how UMass was like the television show, Dawson's Creek. He said that he was most like Mitch, Dawson's dad and then he proceeded to sing the theme song for Dawson's Creek, "I don't want to wait for our lives to be over."

Buford stressed the good intentions that he is bringing to the table and the organizing and restructuring that he hopes to do. He said he hopes to move away from an entity that just passes policies and into one with a sense of agency. "I don't do this for fun. I do it for pleasure. I do it to see things change. I am very invested. Please vote for me," he said.

Giancola said he saw the presidency as an awesome responsibility. "Every decision should benefit students. We need to stress the point that students come first and we will not back down from a fight," he said. Giancola also said that last year only 15 percent of the student population voted for the SGA elections. "This year let's send a loud message to campus that students care," he said.

Ruth Thompson, a junior Social Thought and Political Economy and Women's Studies double major has been in the SGA for two years. She is a senator and a member of the Ways and Means Committee, which allocated $1.3 million to student run organizations. "I was at a board of trustees meeting where they raised student fees and gave President Wilson a 10 percent bonus. There is something wrong with that. He is working hard, but we are working hard too," she said.

Joshua Murray, an International Relations major, said that he wants to uphold the mission statement of the university, ensuring that they provide students with affordable, accountable and high quality education. "I would like to lower the increased tuition, it's inflated like the cable bill, and that was my motivation for running for this position," he said.

When Thompson was asked about how her experience will help her, she said that she meets with upper level administrators through her involvement with the Ways and Means Committee. "I am not intimidated by anyone. I am firm, aggressive, and I will do whatever it takes to get the students what they want," she said. "The university is supposed to be students being first for UMass, are we really living it? I will ensure that we will."

Murray said that he saw the relationship between the trustee and the president as a team, an integral force, and together they could get the job done. "We want to engage the student body, listen to what they want and incorporate their ideas," he said. "I am motivated that all the candidates are working towards the same goals. I am here to try my best."

Voting begins to day from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. in all dining halls and the Campus Center.

Jamie Mason can be reached at jmason@student.umass.edu

SOLVE THIS.

HAVE FUN WORKING HERE.

* Solve this puzzle for a chance to meet ITA Software's extraordinary engineers and interview at our Cambridge, MA office. For details, please visit www.itasoftware.com/careers/umass.

ita Software™
www.itasoftware.com/careers

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MASSPIRG lets you choose

Among the various names of SGA candidates and referenda on ballots today, student voters will notice a particularly lofty question pertaining to MASSPIRG, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group. The question, in brief, explains the purpose of MASSPIRG (in their own somewhat esoteric language) and requests permission from you, the student fronting $11 a semester, to continue their efforts via the waive-able fee found on tuition bills each fall and spring.

The referendum might strike some as familiar, as it has found its way on SGA ballots for several years now. But for others, certain questions may arise: what is MASSPIRG? Why am I voting for a fee that's waive-able anyway? Or even, where is my waivable $11 going?

Many students are familiar with MASSPIRG as the ubiquitous (and highly persistent) group collecting "change for social change" door to door. However, one's complete understanding of the organization's purpose is often curbed by the fact that they are standing right in front of you, making you very uncomfortable and nobody wants to be the guy who can't spare their pocket change to feed the hungry. That's what they do anyway, right, feed the hungry?

In part, yes. MASSPIRG is one of the more ambitious Registered Student Organization's (RSO) on campus. The UMass chapter is just one of many in the state, which all belong to the overarching collection of PIRG's nationwide. MASSPIRG and the rest of the PIRG family tree concern themselves with issues ranging from environmental preservation and consumer protection to hunger relief.

The PIRG's were the brainchild of Ralph Nader in the 1970's (no wonder they're so persistent) and made a name for themselves in the 1980's as the champions of "bottle bills," which allowed U.S. citizens to collect cash refunds on recycle bottles and cans. Nader's involvement in the organization's creation, however, is a bit of a curse, as resistance to PIRG's funding system is often rooted in its political, less-than-non-partisan approach to activism and advocacy. With its involvement in the fight against global warming and support of soup kitchens to feed the homeless, to refer to MASSPIRG as left-leaning is no misnomer.

But an organization's political sensibilities aren't often called into question in its quest for University funding. The Republican Club, Cannabis Reform Coalition and intramural hockey team all receive funding from the University regardless of whether or not they consider themselves non-partisan. On the contrary, MASSPIRG can be seen as "uber-Democratic" in the sense that students can opt-out of contributing to their efforts. Commendably, MASSPIRG is the only RSO on campus that has this waivable fee. Opposed to our compulsory personal funding of every other RSO being buried beneath the costs comprising our tuition, MASSPIRG gives you the option not to pay up.

Likewise, MASSPIRG isn't required to affirm its existence on tuition bills with such frequency. The referendum is on the ballot every two years because MASSPIRG wants to make sure the student body is aware of its existence and approves of what they do. So, regardless of whether or not you support MASSPIRG's efforts to fight global warming or see any point in recycling your bottles and cans, The Daily Collegian requests your support of the MASSPIRG referenda.

What's $11, anyway? You're already paying for every other RSO on campus regardless of whether you support it – at least MASSPIRG is asking your permission, even if they are kind of annoying about it.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the UMass Daily Collegian Editorial Board

Should the student body vote for MASSPIRG?

YES NO What's MASSPIRG?

Following our money to the top

Jackie Hai

We're all familiar with the tendency of some professors to pile extra homework and papers on us the week before spring break. This time around, little did we know that the University would pile on one more thing when we weren't looking.

On Wednesday, March 14, the UMass Board of Trustees voted on President Jack Wilson's proposal for student charges for the 2007-08 academic year. The proposal, which passed, will increase the cost of tuition and mandatory student fees by 3.4 percent, up to $9,921 from the $9,595 bill in-state students got stuck with this year.

Meanwhile, the average salary of administrators has risen by nearly 50 percent over the past two years, according to a report by Jeff Napolitano published in the UMass Voice last month. Chancellor Lombardi got a 39 percent pay raise, bringing him a cushy $347,499 annual paycheck.

In a statement released to the Daily Collegian by the UMass Office of the President, our administration justifies the fee raise with the following main arguments:

First, the 3.4 percent increase is lower than the current inflation rate of 3.6 percent. Second, the revenue generated would be spent on recruiting and retaining faculty, capital projects (that's financial jargon for New Dirt) and technology upgrades. Third, UMass Amherst has one of the lowest total costs of attendance among New England's six flagship public universities, coming in second only to the University of Maine. Elsewhere in the country, many public universities are preparing even greater fee increases, e.g. 7 percent at the University of California and 10.4 percent at Arizona State University. Fourth, we are reminded that the University is still trying to make up for losses from cuts in state funding that took place between 2000 and 2004.

Now that we've heard what the administration has to say, let's talk about why their justifications are problematic.

If money from the state is so scarce, and if we're expected to tighten our belts and contribute more for the good of all, then why are administrators receiving pay raises? We get it, a 3.4 percent fee increase is 0.2 percent lower than the rate of inflation. How considerate. Thank you. But by the same token, Lombardi's raise is a good 35.4 percent greater than inflation. And according to Napolitano's calculations, administrator raises equal roughly 27 percent of the $11.57 million in extra revenue generated by fee increases. Tell me that's not just a little bit disproportionate.

If we're expected to tighten our belts and contribute more for the good of all, then why are administrators getting pay raises?

Next, comparing our costs of attendance and level of fee increases to other universities sounds nice, but means little. On average, public universities are more expensive in New England than in every other region in the United States, so saying UMass Amherst ranks fifth in New England for tuition and fees is largely irrelevant. And just because other college students are getting hit with greater expenses doesn't mean it is okay for ours to go up too. That's like one crook saying he's better than the other because he stole less money.

Numbers aside, the University is simply failing to keep its promises. The "250 Plan," intended to restore the number of tenure-track faculty on campus, got its funding slashed since its introduction in 2005. Students object that New Dirt focuses too much on flashy projects like the outlandishly priced North Apartments while old infrastructure falls apart, but their criticism goes in one ear and out the other. Finally, let's not forget the time Vice Chancellor Gargano said he wanted to see more Abercrombie and Fitch, and less GAP when it came to the demographic of students he hoped to attract to UMass.

Gargano is lucky that our society isn't more class-conscious, had he made a quip about race instead of class in that speech, there would have been such an uproar that he would be out of a job. As it is, the University's trend of building incentives for wealthy students while pricing out students from low-income families represents a major betrayal of the public's trust: the belief that the mission of public universities is to provide an affordable, quality education to anyone who seeks it.

How are they getting away with it? For the answer, we have to turn and look at the overall trend toward privatization in our nation's economic system. Over the years, institutions of higher education have become increasingly similar to corporations in the way they're run, and state universities are acting more like private ones to make up for funding cuts.

In that capitalist mentality, all of UMass' expenditures and efforts to attract higher class students to their flagship campus are seen as an investment. After all, wealthy students turn into wealthy alumni, the most reliable source for private funding when the state comes up short. Success in this goal apparently means rewards in the form of pay raises.

So if the Board of Trustees and the administration are looking out for each others' best interests, who in a position of power is looking out for the best interests of the students?

Jackie Hai can be reached at jhai@student.umass.edu

Dangers of the fifth column

Ben Duffy

Iraq is Vietnam, I won't argue with that. Although the two wars are separated by thousands of miles and dozens of years, it's difficult to look at one and not see the other.

The tactics used by the enemy during both wars have been quite similar. In both wars, the United States faced a ragtag fighting force that didn't have a chance of winning a pitched battle against the superior U.S. military. Neither enemy was foolish enough to fight that way, but instead chose to engage in a media campaign designed to wear down the will of the American people. In Vietnam, they were successful. In Iraq, they are also showing great progress on that front.

The U.S. didn't lose Vietnam in Vietnam. We lost it in the hearts and minds of the American people. Opposition to the war was a downward spiral as American morale declined, North Vietnamese morale increased, and so on and so forth until that disastrous day when we abandoned South Vietnam to their communist "liberators."

The "antiwar" movement didn't shorten the Vietnam War by a single day. It made the war longer and bloodier

What happened on the ground in Vietnam didn't happen in a vacuum. The North Vietnamese were keenly aware of what was going on in the U.S., and they exploited it. Just ask Colonel Bui Tin, the NVA officer who received the unconditional surrender of South Vietnam in 1975.

The colonel sat down for an interview with reporter Stephen Young in 1995. Young asked, "Was the American antiwar movement important to Hanoi's [North Vietnam's] victory?" Tin: "It was essential to our strategy. Support of the war from our rear was completely secure while the American rear was vulnerable. Every day our leadership would listen to world news over the radio at 9 a.m. to follow the growth of the American antiwar movement. Visits to Hanoi by people like Jane Fonda, and former Attorney General Ramsey Clark and ministers gave us confidence that we should hold out in the face of battlefield reverses."

Young asks, "What was the purpose of the 1968 Tet Offensive?" Tin replies, "To relieve the pressure Gen. Westmoreland was putting on us in late 1966 and 1967 and to weaken American resolve during a presidential election year."

"What about [Tet's] results?" asked Young. The colonel replied, "Our losses were staggering and a complete surprise. [Commanding General] Giap later told me that Tet had been a military defeat, though we had gained the planned political advantages when Johnson agreed to negotiate and did not run for re-election ... If the American forces had not begun to withdraw under Nixon in 1969, they could have punished us severely."

Tin simply confirms basic intuition. The antiwar movement didn't shorten the Vietnam War by a single day. It made the war longer and bloodier, and it eventually resulted in our nation's first unequivocal military defeat. The movement didn't prevent a single name from being etched onto that black wall. To the contrary, our boys could have been home years earlier, and South Vietnam could be a free country today if the antiwar movement hadn't acted as Hanoi's useful idiots.

One of the reasons that the North Vietnamese propaganda campaign was so successful was because it was the first war fought in the television age. Such a media campaign is even easier today in the Internet age.

A radical jihadist in Iraq recently posted instructions on the Al-Mohajroon Islamist website on how to infiltrate American Web forums in order to swing American opinion against the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"There is no doubt, my brothers, that raiding American forums is among the most important means of obtaining victory in the fierce media war ... and of influencing the views of the weak-minded American who pays his taxes so they will go to the infidel American army."

After encouraging fellow jihadists to pose as Americans when posting, the blogger writes, "You should post your contribution there ... This should include ... images and films of the Americans' crimes, killing unarmed civilians in Iraq."

"Obviously, you should post your contribution ... as an American ... You should invent stories about American soldiers you have personally known who were drafted to Iraq and then committed suicide while in service by banging or shooting themselves."

Check out this gem: "Your concern should be introducing topics which ... will cause [them to feel] frustration and anger towards their government ... which will ... render them hostile to Bush ... and make them feel they must vote to bring the troops back from Iraq as soon as possible."

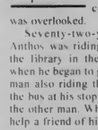
If I were a patriotic Democrat, I would question my allegiance to a party whose election is so essential to the victory of Islamist psychopaths. If I were part of the antiwar movement, I would be asking myself why my propaganda echoes jihadist propaganda so exactly.

Democrats and antiwar activists don't ever ask themselves these questions, and they get their panties in a bunch whenever I pose the questions to them. Why don't these people have the courage to look for answers within themselves? I don't want to "silence dissent," I just want Americans to stop acting as the useful idiots of blood-thirsty Iraqi terrorists. I guess that's too much to ask.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

NEWS: BILL TO BAN REGULAR LIGHT BULBS, INTRODUCED IN HOUSE
IF THEY DID THAT HE'D BE OUT OF BUSINESS!
CARTOONIST
STAYSKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES '07

Understanding intolerance



Debra Capellari

Not long ago, while we at the University of Massachusetts were busy completing our midterms and absent mindedly doing our homework, and while CNN was covering Anna Nicole Smith's death for 90 uninterrupted minutes at a time, a heinous crime committed in Michigan was overlooked.

Seventy-two-year-old Andrew Anthos was riding the bus home from the library in the middle of February when he began to get berated by another man also riding the bus. Anthos exited the bus at his stop, and was followed by the other man. When Anthos stopped to help a friend of his in a wheelchair who needed assistance, the man from the bus hit Anthos in the back of the head with a lead pipe. Anthos fell into a coma and died on Feb. 23.

What was the reason for the brutal beating? Anthos was gay. The man who assaulted him repeatedly called him a "faggot" on the bus, and it was after Anthos confirmed he was gay that the man hit him with the pipe.

You might be saying "Well, that's Michigan. We live in Massachusetts. We're the only state in the union that supports gay marriage. We're liberal and accepting." It's a good mantra, one that certainly might make some people feel better about the crimes being committed in other areas of the country, but it doesn't hold up well under further inspection. It was only a few weeks ago that a student on our campus was allegedly attacked outside of a Southwest dormitory for being a homosexual. We can't pretend anymore that hate crimes take place only in far away places. They happen very close to home, and they occur more often than one would like to admit.

"Hate crime" is defined by Webster's Dictionary as "a crime, usually violent, motivated by prejudice or intolerance toward a member of a gender, racial, religious or social group." And while the two examples were both of hate crimes directed toward someone based on their sexuality, other hate crimes based on religion, sex and race are also common.

If I may so boldly ask the question, what is the reasoning behind hate? There are many theories about this question, some stemming from the belief that hate is taught, not inherent.

Hate is taught by the people that surround you; be it parents, friends, teachers or co-workers.

When a baby first starts to speak, the first words are usually and innocently along the lines of "mama" or "daddy" or "dog." Rarely is a child's first word "fag" or something equally dehumanizing. This leads to a conclusion that hate is taught by the people that surround you; be it parents, friends, teachers or co-workers. In these situations, people develop their hate over a period of time, based on the actions and words of the people who are closest to them.

Another explanation for the reasoning behind hate is that people allow themselves to be guided by their emotions, which in theory seems harmless. But, we see the effects of misguided actions when people allow their emotions to take over. Hate seemingly stems from people's incapability to learn about something they've never heard of or seen before. A lack of understanding of a specific topic (in these cases homosexuality) allows a person to breed a certain fear of the subject. Instead of trying to grow and make room for something "abnormal" in one's consciousness, a person instead turns to hate. Learning and growing takes an effort that some people are unwilling to try to exert. Hating is easier, and therefore, the easier option.

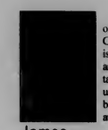
And while hate may certainly be the easier option, it is not the best option to choose. There are other, better choices to make in regards to our handling of people and situations that we have never encountered before.

Whether or not you want to grow and learn, you should at least be willing to practice tolerance. Without tolerance you'll never be able to exist around people who are even slightly different from you. If we could all learn to practice more patience and acceptance ... be gentler to the people around us ... we'd all be better off.

We, as citizens in the United States, are surrounded today by issues like war, healthcare, global warming and immigration laws. Gay marriage is a consistent issue in today's political agenda as well. Before we start trying to come up with solutions to other problems, we need to solve our most basic issues. We can't expect to solve such pressing global issues if we can't even address the fact that we could all do more to become better individuals. We should all remember to make our decisions and treat the people we meet with tolerance, open-mindedness and respect.

Deb Capellari can be reached at dcapellari@student.umass.edu

Why you should mark the box



James Mathews

It's March 27, and the polls are open – do you know what the Student Government is? For many, the answer is doubtlessly a resounding 'no.' Today and tomorrow, the SGA elections will take place, and yet again a largely uninformed student body will pass by the ballot box, unaware of what is at stake.

In the past few years, voter turnout at elections has been low – 8.5 percent of the undergraduate population voted in 2005, and in 2006 a 16.8 showing was seen as encouraging. In some sense, these meager numbers are no fault of the average non-voting student – SGA publicity is generally low, and because of this it is often seen as more of a private political club than a viable democratic institution. Moreover, elections are typically held during the first week after Spring Break, giving the returning student body little time to prepare. As discouraging as these phenomena may be, they are no excuse for non-participation.

The firings, along with hundreds of other misdeeds, stem from a philosophy that defines the entire administration.

Non-participation may, in a word, be the best way to describe the political attitude of our generation. Although in recent years, young people have turned out at the national polls in relatively large numbers, our participation in the democratic process in the down-time in between elections has been low. Rather than involve ourselves in interest groups, activist organizations or campaigns, we tend to take a more passive attitude, reserving our political lives to internet boards, debates amongst friends, and episodes of Comedy Central's late-night spoof shows.

In a country where the most visible form of democracy is a heavily bureaucratic Federal government composed largely of upper-class lawyer types, this attitude is understandable. Decisions made on a national level often seem distant and inconsequential to the young, and this reaction is often deserved. However, apathy towards national policy tends to breed a much more infectious disease: apathy towards local politics. Democracy, after all, begins at the level of the home.

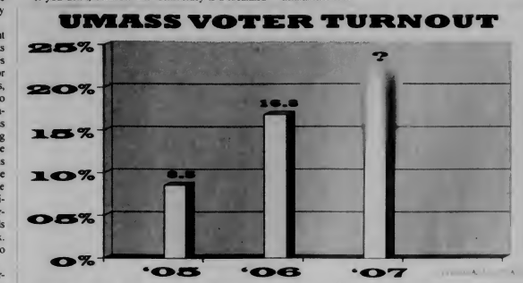
For adults, this means town government. Those of us who hail from New England have been lucky to inherit a functional system of Town oversight that easily allows for citizen participation. Town Meetings and City Councils make relatively public decisions regarding pressing local affairs. Regional newspapers report on the action. Although these smaller political bodies must work within the limits of State and Federal law, the existence of localized decision making is the cornerstone of any Democratic process.

For the undergraduate, local politics means the Student Government. At UMass, our body politic is the SGA. Its primary responsibility revolves around allocating funding for Registered Student Organizations, but this student senate is also authorized to make recommendations on a vast range of Campus issues – from dormitory policing to tuition hikes. If its role in these arenas seems ineffectual, there is only one place to look and place the blame: the student body. Like any smaller democratic entity, the SGA derives its political weight from its constituency. When the UMass undergraduate population is unconcerned and apathetic towards its own political goings-on, the SGA is a rather lame duck. If the student body is vocal and involved, it is a force to be reckoned with.

Of course, this kind of showing cannot happen overnight – elections are today and tomorrow, and the majority of students have had little time to take a stance on the issues. However, a statement can be made. I suggest the following: go to the polls – read the Daily Collegian's candidate coverage online and vote your conscience. If you can't come to a decision, leave your ballot blank. Don't vote for joke candidates – Student Government is serious business. Show at the polls, and push the turnout up. Sixteen percent is far from 'encouraging.' National turnout usually hovers somewhere around sixty percent – I say we should shoot for forty. Consider it a down payment on next year's election – we may not know the issues this year, but by next year, we'll have done our homework. If we do, we may have something resembling a vibrant democratic process here on the UMass campus. Whatever you do, vote.

If you don't, consider this: democracy is a localized process. In an ideal America, local political bodies serve as the primary representatives of their constituents, and their vocalized input has a heavy influence on the decisions of state and federal officials. This may not sound like our current political situation, but we've only ourselves to blame. To opt out of the local political process is to opt out of the democratic process as a whole. If we don't vote today and tomorrow, we've no right to make grievances, we've no right to our friendly conversation with fellow dissenters, and we've no right to laugh with the audience when we're watching John Stewart and Stephen Colbert. As a friend of mine likes to say, "if you don't vote, you can't complain."

James Mathews can be reached at jsmathews@student.umass.edu.



Voter turnout for SGA elections is far from commendable, hopefully 2007 will boost the statistics.

An incorrect interpretation

Andrew Freeman

When David Iglesias took the oath of office in 2001, he swore to uphold the laws of his state and the Constitution. No one told the newly-installed New Mexican prosecutor that he should instead swear allegiance to the Republican Party and its president.

Nearly six years later, Iglesias was fired. The Justice Department dismissed him and seven other federal prosecutors, supposedly because of inadequate performance. However, internal e-mails between current Attorney General Alberto Gonzales and his aides reveal that the prosecutors were deemed insufficiently loyal to the president's agenda.

Iglesias, a Republican, had investigated alleged illegal voter registration committed by left-wing groups. He found most of the alleged incidents were not worthy of prosecution, and the one case that merited it, lacked sufficient evidence. Iglesias was also prosecuting alleged corruption by local Democrats. Senator Pete Domenici (R-N.M.) told the prosecutor that he was disappointed the case was not going forward quickly, according to an opinion piece by Iglesias in The New York Times. Anger from local Republican leaders over these cases led to Iglesias being fired.

In response to these firings, many are calling for Gonzales to resign, since he had a principal role in the deliberations. Unfortunately, his resignation would accomplish nothing. The firings, along with hundreds of other misdeeds, stem from a philosophy that defines the entire administration – their interpretation of the unitary executive theory.

The unitary executive theory argues that all power in the executive branch is vested in the person of the president, citing Article II of the Constitution. Nearly all of the federal bureaucracy, from the Department of the Interior to the CIA, falls under executive supervision, and according to this theory, the president should directly control it. The Bush version of unitary executive theory adds to this that the entire bureaucracy should carry out the president's political goals.

The firings, along with hundreds of other misdeeds, stem from a philosophy that defines the entire administration.

John Bolton, Bush's former ambassador to the United Nations, defended the prosecutor firings in an interview on The Daily Show. His argument was grounded in the Bush version of this theory. He declared that bureaucrats should be "philosophically attuned" to the president's ideas. This was because "the whole point of electing a president to preside over the executive branch is to give the people a choice [in] the direction the entire executive branch is going in." A major difficulty for Bush was that he came into conflict with "permanent bureaucracies that have very different views from his."

There are many problems with Bolton's argument. Foremost is the idea that the people choose the president, so his policy is implemented by the entire bureaucracy. Many voters have an imperfect understanding of presidential candidates' positions, which are typically expressed in generalities and soundbites. Others cast their vote for the person they disagree with least – the lesser of two evils. Accordingly, a president's claim to a mandate is necessarily limited.

From the 2000 election, Bush could not claim a broad mandate for the policies he later implemented. First, he campaigned as a political moderate, not as someone who would remake the government in his own image. Second, his electoral victory was based on a 5-4 majority of the Supreme Court – hardly a ringing popular endorsement.

Another issue is the danger of politicizing the bureaucracy. If the bureaucracy's goal is to advance the president's agenda, and that agenda includes his party's success, then the bureaucracy should aid his party. This has happened repeatedly over the past six years, and the federal prosecutors were fired precisely because they did not engage in the politically-motivated actions demanded of them.

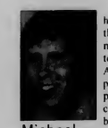
A politicized bureaucracy is less able to carry out its responsibilities to the public. The Food and Drug Administration, for example, is supposed to ensure the safety of food and medicine. A politicized FDA might clear dangerous drugs because the president wanted to repay a company for campaign contributions.

Another problem is granting the president excessive power. Executive agencies are obliged by the constitution to carry out the laws passed by Congress. The Bush administration believes it can decide whether or not to enforce these laws because of unitary executive theory. Bush has asserted this right in signing statements affixed to over 750 laws. He has furthermore authorized torture in Guatanamo Bay, Iraq, and elsewhere, in violation of international and American law. By making policy and carrying it out without Congress's consent, and by disregarding the law, Bush usurps legislative power.

Thankfully, many disagree with Bush's vision of government. Principled bureaucrats, such as Iglesias, strive to uphold the law without political bias. They are loyal to the Constitution and American people, not to the whims of the president. In a just state, this loyalty would be rewarded.

Andrew Freeman writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at adfreema@student.umass.edu.

Shop 'til you virtually drop



Michael Dennis

Online shopping has become one of the great conveniences of the new technological age. Anyone with the proper plastic can plop down into a chair, open up their browser, type in a few things, and have a brand spanking new refrigerator, DVD, baseball glove, or Leonard Nimoy doll sitting on their doorstep within a few days...and all without leaving their home! While it may not do much to cure obesity, those of us who have seen the light won't be turning back anytime soon.

Still, there are traditionalists and ninnies who insist that a trip to a brick and mortar store is the only way to go. Some will tell you that buying something online is a disconnected experience that leads to impulsive and uninformed purchases. By virtue of the fact that there's no direct exchange of cash or credit between two individuals, and that the item isn't sitting on a counter in front of you, buying on the internet is compared to playing with Monopoly money. But consider for a moment which situation holds more pressure – sitting in a chair in your underwear and twiddling your thumbs as you contemplate a buy, or trying to think straight while your friend talks in one ear and a salesperson in the other, both telling you how hot those feecal-brown Ugg boots make your legs look? (By the way, they're both lying—your legs look like Sequoia tree trunks.)

The notion of not dealing with a person when making a purchase makes many people uncomfortable. While it's certainly common for retail clerks to be friendly and courteous, having the best intentions in mind for the shopper, there is one unavoidable truth: their main objective, for better or worse, is to sell something to you (especially if they're making commission).

And while many online stores will pelt you with not-so-subtle suggestions (such as Amazon's feature whereby it tells you the shopping preferences of others who bought the product that you bought), they're much easier to fend off. The fact that a computer screen and not a person is asking you to buy something else makes it much easier to say no. In addition, online customer reviews hold infinitely more value than the sales pitch of a clerk. Many people would say that you "don't know who to trust" when it comes to reading reviews online – but if it's even a marginally popular product with at least more than one rating, chances are you'll be able to get a good impression. Fellow consumers don't have the same stake in you purchasing a video camera from New Egg as that clerk at Radio Shack has.

Whether it be hysteria instilled by the media or a simple fear of the unknown, people are by and large still deathly afraid of the internet.

The most common argument against online retail is the supposed risk of sharing one's credit card information over the internet. The perception seems to be that using a card online is akin to tearing off one's clothes and streaking down a crowed boulevard, exposed for all to see. For whatever reason, whether it be hysteria instilled by the media or a simple fear of the unknown, people are by and large still deathly afraid of the internet. Lost amidst it all is the reality that most cases in which a consumer finds their security compromised online occurs because they're the ones at fault, such as when they're not using proper virus protection, are tapping into an unsecured wireless network, or fall prey to conspicuous "phishing" attacks and hand over their account passwords.

As a result of many factors, very few of which are the fault of online retailers, there are many who still insist on the security they feel by handing their card over to a person. But as demonstrated by recent events, it seems that the extra time and fuel spent driving to the shopping center isn't going to make you any safer. TJX, the parent company of such retailers as TJ Maxx, Marshall's, and HomeGoods, announced that their computer system storing the credit card information of thousands of customers had been hacked into. No, this wasn't the information of online customers – it was that of people who walked into stores and handed their card to a smiling face. (And it's not the first time—similar incidents with other companies have threatened to turn it into a trend.)

There are people who, it seems, will never get over their fears of technology. They think the internet is a big, bad place, whereas it's actually no different than what we see every day in the "real world" – there are good people and bad people; reputable stores and not-so-reputable stores. The categorical shunning of internet buying ignores the fact that you need little more than common sense and anti-virus software to keep yourself safe. Those who eschew the convenience and freedom of buying online may want to start making a click or two before jumping to any conclusions. Online shopping is here to stay, and there's no slick sales pitch that could argue otherwise.

Michael Dennis can be reached at mdennis@student.umass.edu.

Olive Branch horrors

Dan Nicastro

News and stunning news must be reported. An evil is fast approaching which seeks to destroy our way of life. Its presence threatens to undermine all that we have strived for in this country. All of western civilization is in immediate danger, for members of the United States House of Representatives have sponsored a bill which calls for the creation of a Department of Peace.

The United States currently has 15 executive cabinet offices, including the Department of Defense, which oversees the military and the Department of Homeland Security, (the organization that color codes terror alerts and screws up hurricane relief). Recently, the House of Representatives proposed a resolution that would authorize the creation of a Department of Peace. This department would supposedly "balance out" the Department of Defense, making sure that diplomatic routes were exhausted so military action would be used only as a last resort.

NPR recently ran a story about one town's reaction to the Department of Peace. After hearing this report, my breathing became ragged. In debating this bill, America will be facing its biggest challenge to date. As a nation, we can't just turn a blind eye to this injustice. Peace is probably one of the greatest threats we have ever faced, as there is no enemy to defeat. Politicians will be reduced to focusing on domestic problems, or figuring out how to function in this new global world.

The story dealt with the town of Fairmont, Minn., which has a group of women who call themselves the "Fairmont Peace Club" (only because the name "Soviet Union" was taken when the group was formed). These women persuaded the town council to endorse the Congressional resolution (proposed by more than 60 Democrats in Congress) for the creation of a Peace Department. With the "Imperial March" from Star Wars playing in the background, the town council voted unanimously to endorse the bill. Thankfully, red-blooded Americans refused to take this sitting down.

By the next morning, Fairmont's true patriots started complaining so loudly that the council agreed to have a second meeting on the issue. At this second meeting, these noble proponents of freedom, liberty and global conflict clearly explained the dangers of the creation of a Department of Peace. President Peet Moeller warned that the bill and the propagation of peace was really "a humongous push to get the United Nations' foot in the door." And boy would that suck, because apparently "their total gayil, if you study up on it all, is to take away our sovereigny."

Peace is probably one of the greatest threats we have ever faced.

Local political leader named Neil Breitbarth obviously had studied up on the United Nations' ultimate goal, as he too warned that this bill would let the United Nations dictate American policy. Unfortunately, when asked by the reporter to find the section which gave this power to the U.N., he could only point to Section 102 (c), as this section contains the only mention of the United Nations in the entire piece of legislation. This section states that the Secretary of Peace will "ADVISE (sic) the United States Ambassador to the United Nations on matters pertaining to the United Nations Security Council." Unfortunately, Breitbarth could not find the section which said the U.N. would usurp American power. However, he did such a great job dramatically emphasizing the word "advise" that caps lock was required. It was stirring.

Another resident intended to read the bill, but was so shocked at the use of the peace symbol on the group's Web site that he quit Internet Explorer, knowing for certain he "wanted nothing to do with their program." As he put it, "the things my generation stood for with that peace symbol were wrong. It was bad." I know that I have long considered the symbol which represents peace, harmony and mutual respect only slightly less offensive than the Nazi swastika.

One resident's words cut through the debate like a beacon in the fog, as he delivered the clearest, most concise criticism of this bill: "A bunch of people come here and put peace on you – a fluffy peace thing, a fluffy children thing. You know, there's no reason for this kind of stuff. It's wrong, wrong, wrong." Thankfully, members of the audience could recognize his genius, and they clapped in agreement with his comment.

Fluffy peace-man is right. There really is no reason for this stuff. Obviously he could only communicate through the use of stream of consciousness because peace is so detrimental to a society that normal, linear thought cannot adequately describe its damage. Just think, about it. If we lived in a society which valued peace, the President would have no idea how to propose a budget which had less than 30 percent apportioned to military spending, poor people would not be rounded up off the streets and thrown into the military, there would be no point to a color-coded terror alert system and news networks would not be able to throw up flashy war graphics.

Also, just think of the geography war teaches us. Most Americans still can't find Iraq on a map, but they know there's a city named Fallujah, which is a definite improvement. While this Peace Department could possibly save many lives and create a better worldwide image of America, its danger to American society cannot be underestimated.

Dan Nicastro can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass starting to eliminate waste

BY ANDREW RICHMOND
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

In the current climate of rising public awareness about the environmental impacts of modern lifestyles, the call for increased accountability and sustainability is growing even louder. In keeping with this trend, the University of Massachusetts campus is in the midst of a highly successful series of programs aimed at increasing energy and resource efficiency. This strategy involves decreasing emissions and waste – all while managing to achieve results without sacrificing promised services.

To-date, a number of important energy-efficient benchmarks have been reached: over the past two years, around 40 UMass "E1-phase" initiatives have resulted in a reduction of electricity usage by nine percent, steam-consumption by 24 percent and water use by over 35 percent. Carbon emissions have also decreased considerably, a trend that promises to continue with the opening of the new Central Heating Plant, currently slated for 2008. Future "E2-phase" plans include updating steam lines and installing Variable Frequency Drives (VFDs) on existing utilities (such as fans) around campus to ensure they use the least amount of electricity necessary to operate.

In terms of currently achieved results, a montage of programs is responsible for the reported decrease in environmental impact. According to the administration, these strategies include new installations such as low-flow showerheads, already-completed steam-line replacements and direct digital controls to monitor and appropriately adjust energy consumption. All of these initiatives follow the University's policy of "Off is Green," which Robert A. Francis, Associate Vice Chancellor for Facilities and Campus Services, describes as aiming to "provide all the energy people and programs need, but not to oversupply." In short: "Just eliminate waste." Encouragingly, the school also employs a cost-efficient policy of "simple payback" (annual savings divided by project cost) when determining the impact of new programs, endeavoring to pay for projects over short amounts of time from the savings they provide.

Of the programs already in place, water-conservation efforts played an integral part in earning UMass the prestigious Massachusetts Environmental Purchasing and Sustainability Award in the fall of 2006. According to a University press release, the new Reclaimed Water Treatment Plant (RWTP), low-flow plumbing (like the previously mentioned showerheads) initiatives and water recycling for laboratory, dining commons, garbage disposals and other equipment are the three main programs which together result in a reduction of 21.6 million cubic feet of water used annually between 2004 and 2006 – a drop of over 35 percent.

While the water conservation gains are certainly impressive, they were not cited as the sole reasons for public acknowledgement of UMass's successful movements towards environmentally sustainable practices. Dining Services' continued involvement in supporting area farmers through the "Be A Local Hero, Buy Locally Grown" initiative (the stickers and produce of which any student eating in a dining common on-campus has surely seen) also played a part. Furthermore, UMass is the nation's first public University to cooperate with Seafood Watch, a program supporting attempts to obtain fish and other marine products only

See WASTE on page 7

Ferrell takes to the ice rink

Will Ferrell chooses each of his roles based on whether he likes the character he is going to be playing, regardless of the movie that the character appears in. Ferrell plays the role of Chazz Michael Michaels in "Blades of Glory."

BY TERRY LAWSON
DETROIT FREE PRESS

They call it the Paul Newman Syndrome: An actor takes a role, as, say, a race car driver, and then develops a lifelong love for the sport.

Will Ferrell, who plays a competitive ice skater in his new comedy "Blades of Glory," does not have that syndrome.

"I have not had my feet in a pair of those diabolical torture devices since the day we wrapped the movie, and I feel I can state with some certainty I never will again," he says. "Unless, of course, this is some kind of monster hit and the public demands the sequel. But maybe if that happens, I can be the coach. In fact, I'll just throw that out there right now."

Ferrell hadn't been on ice skates in years "like, why would I?" when he was offered the role of the uber-macho egomaniacal, hard-rock, hardcore and soft-hellied Chazz Michael Michaels in "Blades" which is, roughly, to skating what Talladega Nights was to stock car racing, "except with sparklier uniforms," says the actor.

Ferrell plays the swaggering, belching, lifelong rival to beloved one-time child prodigy Jimmy MacElroy, played by Jon Heder (Napoleon Dynamite), who, with Chazz, is banned for life from singles competition when their antipathy boils over into WWF-style televised brawling after they tie for the gold at the World Championships.

Three-and-a-half years later, Chazz is a drunken has-been doing third-rate ice shows, and Jimmy is selling skates at a sporting goods store when Coach (played by TV's "Coach" Craig T. Nelson) discovers a loophole that would allow them to compete as partners. It turns out the official bylaws failed to designate that partners meant male-female.

"There's obviously something inherently funny in the idea," says Ferrell. "The question is whether it's funny enough to fill up a feature film. About halfway through the script, I realized that wasn't a problem."

The script also came highly recommended from Ferrell's longtime friend and fellow aficionado of absurd comedy, Ben Stiller, who is one of the producers of the movie, which Stiller had developed for himself.

"Once again, taking Ben's table scraps," says Ferrell. Stiller ultimately decided against doing the movie because he felt the character was too similar to the male model he played in 2001's Zoolander. Ferrell also appeared in Zoolander, as fashion mogul Mugatu.

"Yeah, but I have no problem repeating myself," jokes Ferrell. "My standards aren't as rigorous as Ben's."

Ferrell has branched out farther than Stiller playing the uptight Internal Revenue Service auditor who realizes his humdrum life is being appropriated by a novelist in last year's Stranger than Fiction, providing the voice of the Man in the Yellow Hat in the adaptation of the children's book Curious George and playing a depressed guitar-strumming gofer for a reclusive novelist in Winter Passing.

"As clichéd as this might sound, it's really more about the characters than the genre for me at this point," says Ferrell. "I'm like every other actor out there, looking for good characters to play."

Will Speck, who co-directed Blades with Josh Gordon, points out that "Will has been creating characters for years," starting with "Saturday Night Live" and continuing in film. "He is an amazing performer who is so good at what he does that you forget that, as the saying goes, comedy is hard."

Made harder yet with competition skates, which Ferrell points out, are more ankle-challenging than recreational or hockey skates.

Though Ferrell gives credit to the choreographers and skating pros that helped him get through his ice time, he was all too happy when the stunt doubles and the effects team attended to the heavy lifting including when he hoists Heder over his head in the routines.

"Jon was so funny. Before we started, he told me about how he was going into training, and was really getting into it and he was going to do all his skating himself. I just smiled secretly to myself. On the second day he was like, 'What did I get myself into?' You get really sore really quick, not to mention black-and-blue."

As for all the real-life Olympic skaters who have cameos in the film, including Nancy Kerrigan, Brian Boitano and Peggy Fleming, Ferrell says they were well aware of what they were getting into when they agreed to lampoon the sport they love.

You know, it would be pretty hard to do what they did if they didn't have a sense of humor about themselves. The costumes, the routines and the whole spectacle, it's completely

See FERRELL on page 7

Binder's 'Reign Over Me' inspired by 9/11

BY TERRY LAWSON
DETROIT FREE PRESS

BIRMINGHAM, Mich. — Like most everyone, director Mike Binder knows exactly where he was on 9/11. Unlike most of us, though, he didn't witness it on TV.

"I had just finished doing an interview with Diane Sawyer on 'Good Morning, America,'" says the Detroit born-and-raised writer and director of Reign Over Me. After leaving the studio, "I had the car stop at 32nd Street so I could run an errand, but they wouldn't let me in the building. I was like, 'Why, what's going on?' And the doorman says, 'Look up, you idiot!' And there it was, that plane stuck in the tower. At first, no one could move. And then we were scared as hell."

Sometime later, with no way to fly back to Los Angeles, where he lives, he and a friend were walking through Manhattan's Bryant Park. They saw people attempting to console a weeping woman.

"It hit me that she would never, never be the same person, and I realized none of us would be Oklahoma City, Katrina ... those happened to other unfortunate people. But 9/11, that happened to us all. And that was pretty much the genesis of Reign Over Me."

Reign Over Me tells the story of two New Yorkers, former college roommates who have lost connections with each other, and the outside world. Don Cheadle is Alan, a successful cosmetic dentist who realizes he has no true friends outside his family. One day, he sees his former roomie, Charlie (Adam Sandler), on the street, and realizes he has not spoken to him since his wife and daughters were on one of the planes that crashed into the World Trade Center.

Charlie professes not to know him, and appears unstable. Alan's efforts to get Charlie to talk about anything except video games and old rock 'n' roll LPs are futile, and he becomes determined to ensure that Charlie gets help.

"That was actually another idea I had been playing with, unconnected to 9/11," says Binder over breakfast in Birmingham last weekend. He had come back to Detroit which he still calls home with Sandler to host a preview of Reign Over Me.

"I wanted to do something about two old friends, men who have lost their ability to communicate, who for different reasons, have nobody to talk to. So I put these two things together and started writing. When I was finished, I knew that the nature of the material meant that if I wanted to get it made, I would have to have a real movie star attached."

Binder first sent the script to Tom Cruise, who, he says, loved the story but ultimately elected not to do it. But when Cruise was attached, he was to be paired with Spain's Javier Bardem in the role that went to Cheadle. Bardem suggested Sandler when Cruise opted out.

Sandler was interested, but

See BINDER on page 7

Don Chedle stars as Alan, a New York dentist that is coming to terms with the fact he has very few friends in his life.

More environmental work needs to be done

WASTE from page 6

from environmentally sustainable sources. Finally, the state commended the University's cleaning system on utilizing a wide array of environmentally friendly cleaning products.

As the on-going series of reports from the United Nation's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (and Al Gore's Oscar-lauded documentary An Inconvenient Truth) seek to prove, fossil fuel emissions (predominately in the form of carbon dioxide gas) resulting from the production of electricity and heating energy are the main contributors to the politically and scientifically hot effects of global warming. In this vein, UMass's large recent reductions in energy and steam usage (which are especially commendable given the construction of new projects such as the North Apartments) translate into a decreased demand for oil and coal to burn in the campus power plant, resulting in a net lessening of harmful carbon emissions. In the future, the administration holds that these reductions will continue as the new Central Heating Plant (CHP) comes online, switching a large part of the fuel burden onto the shoulders of cleaner-burning gas. As the project's Web site states, the CHP "has some of the most stringent air quality permit requirements for a combustion turbine facility of its kind in the United States."

Despite its many accomplishments to date, UMass knows that it cannot rest on its laurels, but needs to continue developing and implementing new policies and projects designed to move the campus towards greater energy efficiency and environmental sustainability. Approved projects include integrating the power-grids of both the west and east sides of campus to make the best use of the new plant (a program with an estimated simple payback of 2.25 years), while other suggestions range from more steam line replacements (simple payback of 4.5 years) to the staggered implementation of Variable Frequency Drives across campus (collective simple payback "under five years") to further decrease the amount of wasted energy.

All in all, the UMass campus has made considerable strides in recent years towards reducing its environmental impact and increasing its energy efficiency – actions motivated by a forward-thinking strategy focused on eliminating waste that continues to spur the development of future eco-friendly initiatives.

Binder and Sandler team up for new flick

BINDER from page 6

Binder says he was unsure whether he really understood who this guy was. "He went back and forth, and I was making all kinds of changes, but I just couldn't make him happy or feel comfortable. And during that period, Javier had to leave for another project. Don Cheadle had finally become a big name with Hotel Rwanda and he was interested."

Binder said he couldn't please Cheadle either. "He was like, 'I just don't know this guy.' It was an incredibly frustrating thing.

"But when I got in the editing room, I thought, 'Man, I've got something here with these two guys.' It just really worked for me."

Binder, whose start in showbiz came from doing stand-up at the Comedy Castle and other local clubs before he graduated from Birmingham's Seaholm High in 1976, wanted to be an actor when he moved to Los Angeles. He had his first big job, in a TV movie about comic Freddie Prinze, three years later.

But, he soon decided he wanted to write and direct more than he wanted to act. He made his writing-directing debut, the Detroit-set Crossing the Bridge (as in the Ambassador) in 1992.

"I insisted the actors read every line just as I wrote it," says Binder. "I finally realized that if I just let the actors do their job, they would make me look a lot better."

Since Binder and Sandler are best known for comedy, Binder knows there will be some confusion concerning Reign Over Me. The budget was only $20 million, with Sandler and Cheadle taking a fraction of their usual fee. While Binder says he wishes "everybody would love every movie I made," he's fairly content taking risks on movies he believes in.

Don Chedle (left) and Adam Sandler (right) both star in Mike Binder's "Reign Over Me." The actors took a serious payout to star in the movie.

Ferrell stars in familiar role

FERRELL from page 6

over-the-top.

"And yet there's this hushed atmosphere of seriousness when they are on the ice, with the announcers whispering and offering this academic commentary about every minute flick of the wrist. And yet for all that maybe because of all that you can't resist it. Just try to walk by a TV when skaters of that caliber are in the groove. You're hooked and amazed by it every time."

Ferrell says that in his relentless quest to "appear in a parody of every sport played anywhere on the globe," he is filming Semi-Pro, a comedy about the former American Basketball Association, once a stepping stone for NBA hopefuls.

Ferrell plays Jackie Moon, the owner-coach-player of Michigan's Flint Tropics. The comedy costars Woody Harrelson, Andre Benjamin, recent Oscar nominee and one-time Bad News Bear Jackie Earle Haley and Andy Richter.

And unlike most films set in Michigan, the cast and crew will be in Flint "soon, very soon," according to Farrell, for about five days of location shooting.

"It's all about authenticity," he says. "To be a Flint Tropic, you got to live like a Flint Tropic."

Will Ferrell stars as Chazz Michael Michaels an Olympic ice-skater who is forced to perform with Jon Heder after he is banned from singles competition in "Blades of Glory."

Ex-critic Rich to publish a new book

BY BRUCE DANCIS
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Frank Rich may have given up the New York Times' theater beat in 1994, but he never stopped covering theatrical or heavily staged events. When he switched to be an op-ed columnist for the Times, Rich found that the arena of modern politics had become nearly as scripted and orchestrated as the tragedies and comedies he had been covering on Broadway.

In a telephone interview from his home in New York, Rich explained that the idea of his recent book, "The Greatest Story Ever Sold" (Penguin, $25.95), "was to walk through the various shows (the Bush administration) put on, from the off-off-Broadway ones such as the Waco Economic Conference (in August 2002) to the Andrew Lloyd Webber-scaled extravaganzas such as 'Mission Accomplished'" in May 2003, when President Bush, in a flight suit, landed on an aircraft carrier off the coast of San Diego to proclaim that major combat in Iraq had ended with a U.S. victory.

But Rich believes the Bush administration has lost its ability to control events.

"They lost control of it in Katrina, where they couldn't manage the reality of people suffering in New Orleans, on camera," he said. "So nothing could counteract it, including Bush going down in a beautiful setting in New Orleans's Jackson Square with beautiful lighting at night.

"And of course they've lost control of it in Iraq," he continued. "I really believe the decision to enforce the rules about not allowing coffins to be shown of the fallen, (and) Bush not attending funerals of troops killed in Iraq, all were part of the strategy to make the war look cost-free to the American public. But ultimately it failed."

Rich pointed out that this effort to both stage the news and control how it is reported is neither new to the Bush administration nor a particularly Republican development.

"There is obviously a history of this in American politics," said Rich, 57, noting that he grew up in Washington during the Kennedy years "and saw the beginnings of a show business presidency then." And Ronald Reagan, a former actor, "took it to new heights with (advisor) Michael Deaver."

But, he added, "never has it been so brilliantly done as it's been done by this administration, where everything is planned, every setting, every camera angle is worked out."

As for modern Democrats, he said, "they want to do the same thing, but rather shockingly, given all their ties to Hollywood, they're amazingly incompetent at it. So it's not for lack of trying."

In his book, he tells of John Kerry also using an aircraft carrier, this one in South Carolina, as a backdrop for launching his presidential bid. But, Rich said, Kerry "didn't stop to think of the symbolism that the aircraft carrier was docked."

More recently, Rich cited U.S. Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton's online chat after she announced she was running for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"It reminded me completely of Bush's 'Ask the President' town hall meetings (in the 2004 campaign) where (audience members asking questions) were actually cast and rehearsed. It seemed that way in the Hillary Clinton Webcast I can't say for a fact that it was where she was not asked any tough questions, including about Iraq, and it was all staged."

But does the public really buy all this attempted manipulation?

At least when it came to Iraq, Rich said, "I feel the public definitely bought it, as did much of the press and a certain amount of Congress, including Democrats, for too long."

In part, this political desire to script and plan everything in advance in an attempt to influence how events are reported has been a response to the pervasiveness of 24-7 news channels and the Internet.

See RICH on page 8

Super 'Gansett Promo!

THE HARP

Keep the Pint Night

Loads of Prizes

Live Music

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is hiring copy editors for the Fall 2007 semester

If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center basement or contact Sheryl Wolnik at swolnik@student.umass.edu.

'Living' in the United States

The world of rocker Ted Leo

BY TIM DONNELLY
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

It's late April 2006 in the nearly stultifying, pavement-cracking heat of the California desert, and my friend Steve Chris and I fear for Ted Leo's life.

We had pushed our way near the front of the Outdoor Stage at day two of the Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival, each of us having already guzzled more water than the average sub-Saharan African country sees in a year to try to stave off the triple-digit heat.

To understand our concern, you have to understand Leo's musical history as a power punkster who got his start playing on the same Washington, D.C., stages as Fugazi and has undoubtedly thrashed the amplifiers of D.C. punk into the next generation.

After fronting the critically acclaimed band Chisel in the '90s, Leo reappeared in 1999 with the Pharmacists, and began releasing albums of fierce but melodic tunes. His early albums "Tyranny of Distance" and "Hearts of Oak" earned him comparisons to Joe Strummer and The Jam, while his songwriting was frequently compared to that of agit-folkie Billy Bragg.

And the music has remained in the true vein of what independent music was supposed to be spectacularly unpretentious, progressive and often bare-bones with strong, occasionally valiant, lyricism.

The performances we saw in tiny clubs in the Washington-Baltimore area usually involved Leo ripping the chords out his guitar with such intensity that his thrift-store shirt was a mess of sweat by the end of the set.

Thinking of how much he'd sweat in the Coachella sun almost made us tell Duff Punk to be on standby with an ambulance and water hose.

"Not to self-aggrandize here, but I do work pretty hard. It's a pretty athletic event," Leo said in an interview last week. "I just think I get so ramped up so quickly in the course of or in the beginning of a set that it just starts happening."

He survived the Coachella show of course; though he was instantly drenched in sweat from the first song which means that he rocked the oversized, ironic sunglasses right off everyone's faces.

If you wanted to hear the sweat besides that being gross you could find it on "Living with the Living," the band's fifth full-length, released Tuesday.

Some critics have said the album is Leo's most political yet, particularly because the song "Bomb Repeat. Bomb" sounds like a vicious anti-war missive as it verbally the assaults mindless, faceless, video-game-ish nature of combat.

But punk politics are often much more intrinsic and personal than the left-versus-right cable news circus most of America sees. For Leo (who identifies himself as Teddy on his voice mail), political songs come more naturally than writing pop songs about love or relationships.

"'Shake the Sheets' [the previous record] was practically just like a musical blog at a certain point," he said. "On the contrary, when I write a song like "Colleen" [on "Living with the Living"] for example, that's something I have to think harder about: 'Wow, this is kinda just really a personal song that's obviously about somebody specific. How do I feel about doing that?' The default mode is to deal with political questions."

Though the band has gained popularity in recent years, selling out D.C.'s famous 9:30 Club instead of sticking with the smaller Black Cat on this tour, for instance, and touring with Death Cab for Cutie, they've never strayed much from their dirty, loud punk roots.

The band switched record labels last year but stayed with small, independent Chicago label Touch and Go. Several songs in their catalog could easily be commercial hits that would blast the background colors right off any Fall Out Boy fan's MySpace page, but Leo and Co. still huff their own equipment on stage.

"It's like, this might be kind of corny-sounding ... the idea of paying someone to move my stuff for me, it just feels strange," he said. "I could see at a certain point if we could afford it having someone to help but I can't see having someone to do it all. I feel like I would have to remain involved in that aspect of the evening."

COURTESY OF TED LEO.COM

Ted Leo and The Pharmacists still do all the loading and unloading for all of their own shows. Leo insists this is because he cannot afford yet to pay roadies to tour with his band.

Rich explores new media technology

RICH from page 8

"The Bush administration figured out that (television) is a medium that can be played, and I'm not just talking about Fox News," Rich said. "So if you do something like 'Shock and Awe' (the massive bombing of Baghdad at the beginning of the U.S. invasion of Iraq), it's made for that maw of 24/7 cable. People watch it ... and yet no one really asked what was really going on, including the news anchors who were broadcasting it."

Rich views the development of Web sites such as YouTube as an interesting phenomenon.

"I can't overstress the (importance) of the George Allen 'Macaca' incident," he said, citing the case in which the Republican senator from Virginia, in what was viewed as an easy re-election campaign as a prelude to a probable presidential run, was videotaped calling a young American of Asian ancestry a derogatory racial term.

"George Allen is a masterful candidate, often likened to Bush or Reagan," Rich said. "That one amateur videotape of him making one mistake could bring down the whole George Allen campaign is a great sign. It showed that even the most monied, slickest campaign-message apparatus that you could get, a shoo-in incumbent, could be caught in a spontaneous moment and all be wrecked."

Rich believes that the attempt to manage and orchestrate is beginning to pervade events beyond politics that are supposed to be real and unplanned.

"Look at the Golden Globes," he said. "They used to be the fun, trashy awards show precisely because people behaved spontaneously. Basically, in the past two years that's been sucked out of the show. It now is just another version of the Oscars, even if they're sitting at tables and have glasses of wine.

"This also gets to the point that what we call 'reality television' is simply not reality," Rich continued. "The idea that these people on 'Survivor' are really fighting to survive when their makeup artists, producers and script writers are (all around) is preposterous."

The implications of all this scripting are large: "I think there's a real cultural component to this that's bigger than politics," he said. "And I think that's worrying. The Bush administration will go, but this culture remains, and we really have to look at it."

Frank Rich stepped down as the New York Times theater critic in 1994 to pursue a career on the editorial page.

IMPORTANT NOTICE FROM THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION

This week, the SGA will have elections for the positions of Student Government President, Student Trustee and Area Government Positions

Voting Will Take Place:
Wednesday 3/28 and Thursday 3/29
From 10am - 2pm and from 5pm - 8pm
In all Dining Commons & the Campus Center Concourse

Attend the Live Trustee and President Debates:
Tuesday, 3/27 at 8pm in Campus Center 168c

For More Information:
Contact SGA Chancellor of Elections, Sarah A Morgan at sga@stuaf.umass.edu or 413-545-0341

WMUA Top 30
3/21/07 -
1. Arcade Fire - "Neon Bible"
2. Tiny Hawks - "People W
3. One AM Radio - "This
4. EL-P - "I'll Sleep When
5. Various Artists - "Cloud Control"
6. LCD System - "Sound of Silver"
7. The Shins - "Wincing the Night Away"
8. Artichoke - "Nevermind the Bullocks Here's the Sex Pistols by Artichoke"
9. Bloc Party - "A Weekend In The City"
10. Deerhunter - "Cryptograms"
11. Modest Mouse - "We Were Dead Before the Ship Sank"
12. Various Artists - "Domestic Blend Vol. 1"
13. Bonobo - "Days to Come"
14. Kid Koala - "Your Mom's Favorite DJ"
15. Audionom - "Retrospektive"
16. Black Lips - "Los Valientes Del Mundo Nuevo"
17. Low - "Drums and Guns"
18. Kieran Hebden and Steve
19. Lily Allen - "Alright, Still"
20. Piebald - "Accidental Gentlemen"
21. Antelope - "Reflector"
22. Andrew Bird - "Armchair Apo
23. Fennesz - "Endless Summer"
24. International Noise Conspiracy - "Live at the Olso Jazz Festival"
25. Mochipet - "Girls Love Bre
26. My Brightest Diamond -
27. Stooges - "The Weirdness"
28. Son Volt - "The Search"
29. Winterpills - "The Light Di
30. Alkaline Trio - "Remains"

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Minuteman catcher Bryan Garrity has the task of handling a struggling pitching staff. UMass hurlers have allowed 134 hits this season in 96 innings of work. They'll try to better those numbers in today's home opener against Hartford.

Hartford struggles in many aspects

BASEBALL from page 12

(9.4 runs per game compared to 2.7) in their 13 games thus far. The team is hitting .210 collectively, while opponents are hitting at a .356 clip. Compounding the hitting problem is the fact that Hartford batters have only drew 28 walks – well less than double the 67 free passes issued by Hawks pitchers.

Pitching has been an even bigger issue, Hartford's 10.78 ERA is more than quadruple that of the opposition (2.64). In 97 ⅓ innings on the mound, Hawks pitchers have allowed 209 hits plus walks (2.14 WHIP). On the flip side, the opposition has thrown 109 innings, and has only allowed 110 hits plus walks (1.01 WHIP).

Compare all that to last season, where the Hawks went just 11-38 overall. Even then, Hartford's offense hit for a .255 average and the pitching staff finished with a 6.72 ERA.

Meanwhile, the Minutemen enter today's action on a much better note. UMass took two of three from conference opponent Temple over the weekend, and will be looking to keep up that momentum in preparation for a three-game road series against the Charlotte 49ers this weekend.

Eli Rosenswake can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all the UMass sports.

A season to remember in Amherst wasn't at the time because the Cardinals were struggling to get off of the ground, but Louisville emerged as one of the best teams in the nation come NCAA Tournament time and the UMass win looked better and better as the season wore on.

GREENFIELD from page 12

I know that UMass fans wanted to go the Dance this season, and it felt like somewhat of a letdown for the faithful to be in the NIT instead of the varsity tournament. But then the Alabama game happened.

For those unfortunate souls who didn't make it to Mullins for that game, it was one of the best college basketball games of the year, for any conference. Two buzzer beaters – one by 'Bama to send the game into overtime and one by Chris Lowe to win it in the extra session – made everyone forget that they were watching the NIT. It was just basketball – fast, hard, fun basketball.

The loss in the next round to West Virginia was expected, and it didn't matter in the big picture.

The 'L' to Saint Louis in the first round of the A-10 Tournament will sting for a while, and might be the first thing some UMass fans think about when the topic is the 2006-07 men's basketball team.

If the Minutemen won the winnable A-10 Tournament then I would be writing about UMass's first NCAA Tournament appearance in nine years, and Amherst would be abuzz with talk of this historic season.

But that first-round loss put those dreams on layaway and brought some fresh, near-miss disappointment for all UMass fans.

However, the hurt – if it hasn't worn off already – will eventually reveal the reality: this UMass season was an overwhelming success.

Travis Ford's hype machine sent everyone's expectations through the roof. In the age of instant everything, Ford demanded results at light speed and he got them. Sub-.500 seasons were not that long ago. Ford's first year yielded a 13-15 record.

To improve by 11 wins in one season is tremendous for any program, and fans who have been around long enough to remember the pre-Calipari years know that 24-win seasons (even in this inflated, cream-puff-schedule era of college basketball) don't come around too often.

So enjoy the memories from this season, UMass fans. I hope you reveled in checking Bracketology and Bubble Watch on ESPN.com every day, knowing that UMass was part of the discussion and not an irrelevancy reserved exclusively for obscure conservation.

There was genuine excitement about UMass basketball this year, even if the student body caught on a little late. While the Minutemen only stepped into a shred of the national spotlight, they demanded more exposure than the program has received in the last previous three seasons combined.

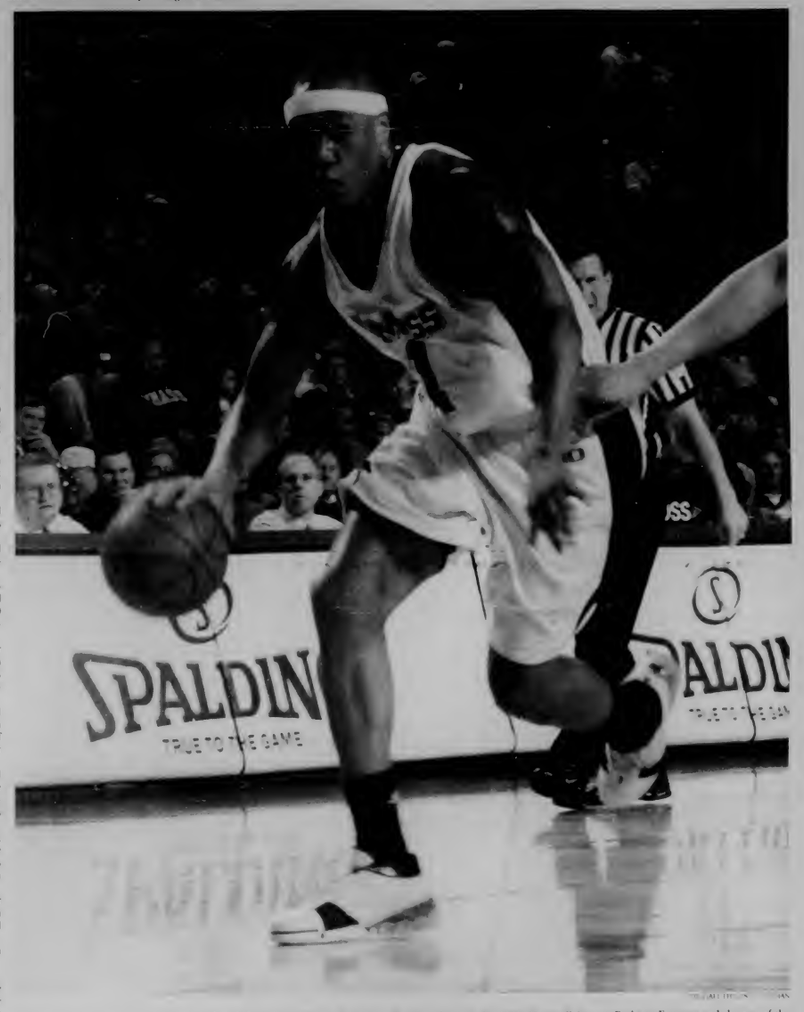
So when you look back at Freeman and Lasme's last run, and Ford's first winning season in the Pioneer Valley, picture Lowe's floater that dropped through the net with 1.8 seconds left in overtime versus Alabama, and forget about that team from Missouri.

The lights went out against West Virginia two days after the conquest over the Crimson Tide, and the 2006-07 season concluded on the road, away from the memories of a long and successful year.

It's goodbye to Lasme, Freeman, Life and Brandon Thomas.

Think fondly of these Minutemen.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.



Although the Minutemen didn't achieve their NCAA Tournament aspirations, that doesn't mean the 2006-07 was all for not. Rashaun Freeman and the rest of the team took advantage of the attention given to them to shed positive light on the UMass program.

UMass 'banged up' this week

W. LACROSSE from page 12

hope to make up those deficiencies with smart play.

"Were banged up a little bit, I think physically playing so many games in a week [is tiring]," Venechanos said. "Our mental focus has been pretty strong and that's what's going to be the big key for us."

Junior Kathleen Typadis leads the team with 33 points (28 goals and five assists). Yale's shutdown defender Jess Champion will try to hold Typadis in check. Earlier in the week against Dartmouth she and the Bulldog defense held preseason All-American Whitney Douthett scoreless. Champion earned Defensive Player of the Week in the Ivy League.

"They play pretty physical and we've played a bunch of teams that play similar," Venechanos said. "You just have to try to come out with some speed and try to do what we need to do and not worry about what they're going to do.

"They play a good team defense and they have [Jess Champion] shutting off the main scorer," she added. "Were not really sure what they're going to do, but we're going to be prepared."

But Typadis is not alone on the offensive attack. Drown is second on the team with 26 points (21 goals and five assists) and junior attack Melynda Wick has 24 points (16 goals and eight assists). This scoring trio has led the attack for UMass. Against BC, the three accounted for eight of the teams 10 goals. Junior midfielder Kristina Twichell leads the team in assists with 11. She ranks fourth in the A-10 in assists per game with 1.22.

"[Typadis has] had a great season, defenses are looking to close her down but I've been impressed with the attack, we've had great balance," Venechanos said.

Leading the Yale offense is junior midfielder Lauren Taylor. She earned Ivy League Offensive Player of the Week scoring seven goals last week. She scored the game-tying goal and game-winning goal against No. 8 Dartmouth.

"They have a tremendous attack, Lauren Taylor, who in my mind is one of the best players in the nation," Venechanos said. "Her team really feeds off her, so we are going to try the best we can to slow her down and get ourselves in the position to be in the thick of things at the end of the game."

Venechanos has watched a lot of video on Taylor and she thinks the best way to contain her is by limiting her touches.

"She's pretty talented, she has good size [5-foot-10] so she can see over the defense," she said. "We're just going to try to slow her down if we can, hopefully just try to contain her. You can't really stop a player like that, but you can always try to limit her touches."

Steve Gomes can be reached at sgomes@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

4TH ANNUAL MILLER LECTURE

BOSCH'S ENMITY

Exploring the paintings and drawings of the mysterious Heironymous Bosch (c. 1450–1516)

JOSEPH LEO KOERNER
Renowned scholar of Northern Renaissance art and currently a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow in Florence, Italy

WEDNESDAY APRIL 4 7PM
Weinstein Auditorium
Wright Hall, Smith College

Free and open to all
No reservations necessary

413 585 2760
www.smith.edu/artmuseum
Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA 01063

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Sortino still pleased with young pitchers

SOFTBALL from page 12

Nonetheless, aside, Sortino is not worried about her two young pitchers, sophomore Brandice Balschmiter and freshman Bailey Sanders, who are coming off very different outings against UMass following the tournament.

Balschmiter was dominant in a 1-0 defeat of UMass, going the distance while striking out three and walking just one. The game was similar to many of the 22-plus victories Balschmiter provided her team down the stretch last season.

"I thought she did a good job against [very good hitting team]," Sortino said.

Sanders struggled early on against the Owls, giving up a pair of runs in the first inning and six in the second, including three home runs. However, Sortino kept her young hurler in the game and she allowed just one more run over the next five innings.

"I figured for us to be able to go the distance, we need two people on the mound," Sortino said. "I figured we've got nothing to lose, and everything to gain. We needed to find a way to come back, which we did, and I figured she needed to be able to handle it."

Jeryan Rice can be reach at jerice@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Despite UMass' loss to Florida Atlantic, middle infielder Stacy Cullington had a successful game going 1-for-3 at the plate with a walk, run and RBI. Overall, she leads the team in both home runs and RBI with four and 21, respectively.

The No. 14 Richmond Spiders owe much of their success this season to Mandy Friend. The All-American is having another stellar season with 26 goals and three assists.

UR drops double OT thriller

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Correspondent

The Richmond Spiders lost to Towson, 10-9, in a double overtime game on March 25. This dropped the Spiders' record to 5-4 overall. Sophomore Allison Furstenburg scored a game-high four goals – good for her fourth hat trick of the season.

Duquesne beat Howard, 18-4, on March 24, bringing its season record to 4-3. Sophomore Kathleen McNish helped out the team by scoring four goals while freshman Meghan Frederick scored two goals and had two assists.

George Washington dropped a 14-8 decision to Drexel on March 25. The loss evened the Colonials' record at 3-3. Junior Laura Wunk was 3-for-3, taking three shots and scoring three goals.

The La Salle Explorers beat Lafayette, 22-13, on March 22, scoring 22 goals. That was a season high for the Explorers. Three days prior, La Salle lost to Longwood 9-8.

She scored 11 goals in two games with six against Lafayette and five goals against Longwood. Freshman Jillian Davis scored eight tallies in two games. Davis got her career-high six goals in the game against Lafayette.

St. Bonaventure challenged Delaware on March 21 but lost. Then the Bonnies lost to Ohio State a 15-14 overtime thriller. St. Bonaventure overcame a six-goal deficit in the first half of the game, forcing the extra period. Junior Brenna Houghton recorded a team-high six points, scoring two goals and four assists.

The Saint Joseph's Hawks had a 1-1 week, moving them to a 3-2 record. Saint Joseph's challenged Robert Morris on March 2, winning 10-6. The Hawks then lost to George Mason on March 25 with a score of 15-7. This week's team leaders were sophomore Jessica Westlake and freshman Jenna Martino. Westlake scored five goals and Martino scored four goals with two assists.

Temple now boasts a 2-5 record with two losses this week against No.14 Penn State on March 20 and Old Dominion on March 24. Senior Casey Cech scored a team-high five goals this week. Four of Cech's scores came in the last 15 minutes of play in the 10-7 loss to Old Dominion.

Players of the Week

La Salle Junior attack midfield Emily Bonczek and Massachusetts junior attack Kathleen Typadis were named A-10 Co-Players of the Week. Bonczek scored 11 goals this week, recording five of the Explorers' eight goals in their loss to Longwood. Bonczek scored a season-high six goals in the March 22 win over Lafayette.

Typadis scored nine goals, had five groundballs, six draw controls and two caused turnovers in three games. Typadis scored four goals in the 11-10 loss at New Hampshire on March 20. She also scored two goals in the loss to seventh-ranked Northwestern on March 23. Typadis got her 19th career hat trick in the 10-9 overtime win against Boston College on March 25.

This is Typadis' second Player of the Week honor this season.

Rookie of the Week

La Salle Freshman attack/midfield Jillian Davis was named Rookie of the Week. She had eight goals in two games this week. In La Salle's win over Lafayette on March 22, Davis scored a career-high six goals, including the game-winner. Davis scored two goals the Explorers' loss to Longwood with four draw controls and two caused turnovers.

This is Davis's second consecutive Rookie of the Week honor.

Upcoming Games

George Washington faces George Mason at home at 4 p.m. St. Bonaventure hopes to boost its 1-4 record with a home game against Canisius, also today at 4 p.m. On Thursday, the 5-4 Richmond Spiders play Old Dominion at home at 3 p.m.

Conference play will begin next week.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen play for more than a win

W LAX NOTEBOOK from page 12

Venechanos and the Minutewomen have overcome the value of heading into the A-10 schedule with a two-game winning streak from a playing perspective.

It would be huge and a great momentum builder going into the A-10 season," Venechanos said.

Offensive star

She's the most important player to the offense and is being recognized for it by the Atlantic 10. The league named junior attack Kathleen Typadis is Co-Player of the Week for the second time this season.

The junior played well in a win against Boston College (4-4) on Sunday, scoring a team-high three goals. She leads the team in nearly every offensive category and has a 33-game scoring streak. Her 28 goals are tied for best in the conference and second in goals per game.

Typadis could conceivably break the team's career scoring record if she continues her torrid pace. She currently ranks fifth with 107 career scores, trailing Pam Mory1 by 63 goals. Typadis averaged almost 4ft goals during her first two years and should exceed that mark this season. She only needs seven goals to move into fourth place on the list.

Minutewomen break record

Although the team lost to No. 2 Northwestern (5-1) by 14 goals, the contest was about more than just the game. Playing at a high school in Yorktown, N.Y., the game raised $38,500 for the Friends of Jaclyn Murphy Foundation.

The organization works with children afflicted by brain tumors to help defer the cost of their treatment. The charity is named after 12-year-old Jaclyn Murphy, who is a brain tumor patient that lives in the area. The game also attracted 3,075 fans – a new NCAA regular-season record.

"They bring a tremendous intensity to the game," Venechanos said, concerning that game against the Wildcats. "And that's something I thought we matched pretty well. They executed a lot better than us and had more shots on goal, but I was very happy with the way our team played – just being in that environment, having 3,000 people at the game and raising $30,000 for a great cause."

The game was even more special for Venechanos, as she faced many of the players she coached for the previous three seasons. Also, UMass assistant coaches Angela McMahon and Sarah Albrecht played at Northwestern. Albrecht helped the team win consecutive national titles in 2005 and 2006.

Michael King can be reached at mking a student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Although she missed two games this season, Julie Papaleo has registered 11 ground balls this season.

The UMass Student Union Gallery presents a lecture by internationally renowned artist
LAURIE ANDERSON
as part of their 50th Anniversary Celebration
APRIL 4, 2007 at 7PM
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
Laurie Anderson is ba
UMass Student Union Gallery 1975 2007
Lecture Costs: UMass ID: free, 5 College ID: $3, General Public: $5
413.545.0792 (TICKETS AVAILABLE AT TIX BOX OFFICE)
www.umass.edu/rso/suag
This event has been organized and sponsored by the Student Union Gallery. It has also been sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, UMass Alumni Association Center for Student Development, Office of Student Affairs and Campus-wide Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, SGA and GSS

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
831 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

the moan and dove
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
20 FANCY TAPS. 3 BUCKS. ALL WEEK.
WEEK AFTER SPRING BREAK. EVERY YEAR.
460 WEST ST. (116 SOUTH) 256-1710 3PM-1AM EVERYDAY

INOCCHIOS on the go
Specials of the Week
Buy 2 Calzones GET 1 FREE
5 FREE WINGS With Purchase of any Large Pizza
(413) 256-4110 Call Now!
Sun.-Wed. Open 'til 1am
Thur. Open 'til 2am
Fri.-Sat. Open 'til 3am

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

				9	4	7	2
							1
		8	1	7			9
	6		9	2		3
		5			8
		3		4	7		1
9				6	2	1
5
3	1	2	4

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Bad luck and terrible misfortune will infest your pathetic soul for all eternity."

-Filburt's fortune cookie in Rocko's Modern Life

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

SO I GET STARTING YOUR OWN BUSINESS, BUT WHY A DOG WALKING BUSINESS?
YOU HAVE NO EXPERIENCE TAKING CARE OF ANIMALS.
AND YOUR PARENTS DOG KINDA HATES YOU, DOESN'T HE?
NEVER MIND THAT YOU'RE NOT EXACTLY IN THE BEST SHAPE OF YOUR LIFE.
WORST CONGRATULATORY DINNER EVER.
I KNOW, I'M BAD AT THIS.
THIS IS WHY YOU'RE STILL SINGLE.
I KNOW!! I KNOW!!

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

CHECK IT OUT, DUDE! A HOROSCOPE SAYS SUNNY DAYS AND CLEAR SKIES. THAT SOUNDS UPLIFTING!
ARE YOU SURE THAT'S YOUR HOROSCOPE, DUDE? IT SOUNDS MORE LIKE THE WEATHER.
OH.
WELL, THAT WOULD EXPLAIN WHY I WAS SO MOIST AND DRIZZLY LAST WEEK.

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

WE PROBABLY SHOULD TALK ABOUT WHAT'S GOING ON BETWEEN US.
OKAY.
I MEAN, THIS IS YOUR LAST YEAR AND AFTER YOU GRADUATE, WHO KNOWS.
ACTUALLY, WHO KNOWS IF I'LL GRADUATE, BUT I APPRECIATE YOUR POSITIVE THINKING.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

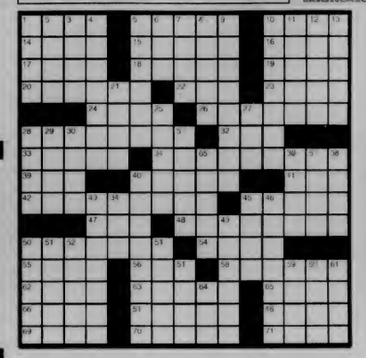
We live in an information overloaded society
Too many pictures, too many words.
Too many people talking over one another
I try to convey as much information as possible using as few words as I can
I try to be like a comic strip
And you want to be taken seriously?

ACROSS
1 Two squared
5 Desert spring
10 Revue part
14 Pond scum
15 Porcelain plates
16 Johnnycake
17 Drying oven
18 Kind of bore or wave
19 Places of refuge
20 Perplexing puzzle
22 Compass dir
23 Stagger
24 Charged particles
26 Enk of "CHiPs"
28 Financial aid recipients
32 Zedong
33 Rustic inn
34 Rivers and such
39 Pub drink
40 Hall University
41 Singer Reed
42 Climbed down
45 Bunch of bees on the go
47 Artie's Gardner
48 Some crackers
50 Croquet needs
54 Twelve months
55 P.D. James' Dalgleish
56 Ernesto Guevara
58 Memo takers
62 Scholarly volume
63 Trips in the woods
65 No-no
66 Flows out
67 Calendario starter
68 Mimicked
69 Remainder
70 Family car
71 Foots the bill

DOWN
1 Priory
2 Lena or Ken
3 Wrinkled citrus fruit
4 Varying within specified limits
5 Gas pump figure
6 Type of tuna
7 Lateral part
8 Sixty
9 Peddlers
10 Small songbird
11 Chosen: now
12 Signed, as a contract
13 Inventor Nikola
21 Minute spot
25 Used a needle
27 La Brea pit bit
28 Elated
29 Part to play
30 Summer coolers
31 Fills to excess
35 The present
36 Aida of "M.A.S.H."
37 Yesteryear
38 Bottom-line numbers
40 Serves illicitly
43 Most tranquil
44 Ms. Arden
45 RBI, e.g.
46 Bug
49 "A ___ from Aloes"
50 Alma
51 Baked brick
52 Gentle ones
53 Geoffrey Rush movie
57 ___ out a living (scraped by)
59 California valley
60 Comply
61 Lather
64 Period

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY • Covalence
PROMO • 'Gansett Pint Night!
SATURDAY: • Legal Lies
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
Last of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
DCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net



Continuing & Professional Education
UMASS AMHERST SUMMER 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
• New online GenEds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions:
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Registration begins: April 2
Plan now by visiting us @ www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Drink in the the sunlight, but don't drink too much, you might get sun poisoning.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Tell a stranger you have fleas and give them a big hug. Watch the face they make.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Darren the D.A.R.E lion is now beginning to realize he wasted his time on you.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You're really rawdogging it buddy. That's all I've got to say about that.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Purchase a monocle and start claiming that your name is Reginald Kiwi the Fourth.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
No matter what your parents told you, you are not that special.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your life is so amazing that if you wrote a memoir, it would probably outsell the Bible.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The average girl applies more lotion in a day than most men will apply in a lifetime.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Buy a raccoon hat and insist that you were born on a mountain top in Tennessee.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Bruce Springsteen and Tony Danza shoud fight so we can see who is really the boss.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Although lobsters and spiders are related, you'll find few people with lobsterphobia.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You spend more time in the bathroom than Cats spent on Broadway. That's a problem.

The universe is out of alignment and the only way to place it back on its axis is by submitting a meteor shower of comics.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Learn, Lead and Succeed Be and do something bigger than yourself. Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

CHILD CARE

Looking for Monday afternoon/ evening babysitter Beautiful 10 year old girl with mild cerebal palsy needs after school babysitter on Mondays. We will also need more babysitting help this summer and next school year. We are located in N. Amherst, 4 miles from UMass. $11.00 per hour. highpoint@comcast.net

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th. Now Hiring Atkins Farms Country Market 1150 West Street Amherst MA www.atkinsfarms.com (413) 253-9528 Sales Associates: Evenings and Weekends in the Bakery, Deli and Candy Departments. Cashiers: Days Evenings & weekends at the Front Register Area.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Fall 2007 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergradute credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Looking for a great summer job? Become an Academic Peer Advisor for the fall 2007 incoming students with Undergraduate Advising. Application deadline is April 4th. For more information or to print an application visit our website at www.umass.edu/advising/

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/ office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestry-health.com

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/ month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

please visit www.daily collegian .com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No place like home

Weather cancels previous attempt at UM home opener

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

After two previous postponements, the Massachusetts baseball team will play its first home game of the season today against the Hartford Hawks. The first pitch is scheduled for 3 p.m. at Earl Lorden Field.

Due to weather and field conditions, the Minutemen (4-7, 1-2 Atlantic 10) had to postpone home games against Boston College on March 14 and Sacred Heart yesterday. UMass coach Mike Stone already the all-time winningest coach in school history is on the cusp of registering his 500th win at his alma mater. Stone will be looking for win No. 499 as the coach of the Maroon and White against a familiar foe in the Hartford Hawks (1-12).

These teams met last year with the Hawks prevailing, 6-2, in Hartford's home opener. The game, played on March 29, was amidst a 17-game road trip for the Minutemen.

UMass fell behind early in that contest — and for good — after back-to-back homers by Hawks designated hitter Erik Price and first baseman Derek Lake off freshman starter Tom Cote in the second inning.

The Minutemen's bats came alive in the ninth inning, trailing 6-0, but they could only muster two runs after loading the bases with nobody out. Outfielder Travis Munsey hit into a double play and Derrick Durepo struck out looking to end the comeback attempt.

Even with Hartford's win in 2006, the Maroon and White still hold the edge, 16-8, in all-time meetings between the teams. Despite the edge in the series, Stone's last win over the Hawks was in 2003 in a 9-2 decision.

Losers of its last six games, Hartford is having a nightmare of a season in the early going. The Hawks have been outscored 122-35

See BASEBALL on page 9

COLLEGIAN / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

After having their original home opener cancelled due to inclement weather, the Minutemen and senior first baseman/pitcher Bryan Adamski play their first game in Amherst today against the Hartford Hawks.

After a season in which he recorded four triple-doubles, the AP named senior Stephane Lasme an honorable mention for its All-America Team.

AP honors Lasme after career year

Stephane Lasme, UMass' captain and blocked shots leader, was named an Associated Press Honorable Mention All-American. He is the first Minuteman to be honored by the Associated Press since Marcus Camby made the All-America First Team after the 1996 season.

Lasme was named the Atlantic 10's Player of the Year and Defensive Player of the Year for the 2006-07 season, and he finished second in the NCAA in blocks per game with 5.1, 13th in field goal percentage (61.1) and 17th in rebounding with 9.5 boards per game.

Lasme averaged 13.5 points per game for the Minutemen this season and became just the third player in NCAA history to record four triple-doubles in one season. He registered his triple-doubles against St. Francis on Nov. 22, George Washington on Jan. 10, Rhode Island on Feb. 8 and La Salle on Feb. 28.

Jason Kidd and Michael Anderson are the only two other players to record four triple-doubles in a collegiate season.

"We are very excited for Stephane," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "He is very much deserving of this type of national recognition. Stephane worked extremely hard this season to take his game to the next level and this accolade shows that people have taken notice of his game nationally."

Lasme passed Marcus Camby to take the lead on the UMass career blocks list. Lasme finished this season with 168 blocks in 33 games. His 13.5 points per game scoring average was second on the team behind fellow big man Rashaun Freeman, who tallied 14.7 points per game.

Lasme is a potential NBA prospect and has been scouted by numerous professional teams this season. Both the San Antonio Spurs and the New York Knicks have attended UMass games this season.

—Rob Greenfield

Home opener comes after long wait

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

After about two months and a few extra days wait, the Massachusetts softball team will finally take the field here in Amherst. The Minutewomen (11-12-1) host Dartmouth for a doubleheader at the UMass softball complex today at 2 and 4 p.m.

The original home opener, slated for Sunday, was cancelled due to poor field conditions. That doubleheader against Atlantic 10 rival St. Bonaventure will not be made up.

The Big Green (4-13) will be looking for better results this time around against the Minutewomen. They failed to score a single run while being swept by a total score of 28-0 last season.

UMass took the matinee, 8-0, before completely running away in the second game, 20-0. Both games were called after five innings.

After so much waiting, UMass coach Elaine Sortino says the team is happy to finally play on its own turf.

"It's great to finally play a home game after three months on the road," Sortino said. "It's nice to be home, and for us, the most important thing is to settle in and start to play. We need to get a rhythm."

That rhythm may have started to develop two weeks ago in the Minutewomen's final early-season tournament. At the Florida Atlantic University (FAU) Parent's Weekend Invitational, they went 2-3, but averaged over five runs per game. A week earlier, the team averaged about three runs per game at the Spring Break Invitational as the offense struggled uncharacteristically.

UMass has continued to work on its batting in the cages with the extra time off between games.

"It's just given us an opportunity to work on some things and make them better," Sortino said. "There's nothing we can do about the weather. There's no sense lamenting over it. You might as well take your time and use it valuably."

UMass has always been in the unique position of competing with teams that reside in climates much more conducive to softball at this time of year. But the program has always been able to adapt, and Sortino is happy with the progress the team is making this season.

"I think the team has really done a very good job of using this time to work on the things that will make us a better team come, hopefully, championship time," she said.

Now the Maroon and White jumps right back into action. Dartmouth visits today, and then the Minutewomen head to Dayton for their first A-10 games on Friday and Saturday.

"Opening day is the toughest day," Sortino said. "I think opening day at home is a tough day. Everybody wants to play well. It seem like you haven't played at all, and everyone gets a little

See SOFTBALL on page 10

COLLEGIAN / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Just like their male counterparts, the Minutewomen play their home opener today after having their first attempt postponed. First baseman Amanda Morin has batted .250 this season with no home runs and eight RBI.

Not all is lost after missing Big Dance

So now that you've had some time to digest the 2006-07 Massachusetts men's basketball season, what do you think?

Did UMass reach expectations? Exceed them? Fall short? It's all subject to interpretation.

UMass coach Travis Ford will tell you two things. As a coach of an up-and-coming program that hasn't been to the postseason in seven years, he'll say that it was an incredible season and it will serve as a launching point for recruiting on a national scale.

Rob Greenfield

But as the underrated and overly motivated point guard who played in the Southeastern Conference and went to the Final Four twice during his college career — and also coached one of the worst programs in Division I college basketball (Eastern Kentucky) into the NCAA Tournament — he'll tell you that it was a disappointment that UMass didn't make it to the NCAA Tournament.

The Minutemen had 24 wins and nine losses, went 13-3 in the Atlantic 10 and 12-2 at the Mullins Center. UMass had the A-10's Player of the Year, Defensive Player of the Year and an Associated Press Honorable Mention All-American in Stephane Lasme.

Lasme garnered all sorts of national press during the season, including being named Dick Vitale's National Player of the Week after he recorded two triple-doubles in points, rebounds and blocks.

Lasme finished the year with four triple-doubles, just the third player in college basketball history to register that many in one season.

Rashaun Freeman concluded his spectacular UMass career averaging 14.7 points and 8.3 rebounds per game in his final season.

James Life provided a steady hand from beyond the arc this season and hit some memorable shots in the dog days of the campaign, including a big 3-pointer in the final seconds of the regular season game against Saint Louis to give UMass the lead for good.

The win over Louisville was big. It

See GREENFIELD on page 9

Minutewomen finish lengthy road trip

UMass' matchup with Yale continues a grueling schedule

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will wrap up its fourth road game in eight days against No. 14 Yale this afternoon.

The Minutewomen are coming off a 10-9 overtime victory over Boston College. Sophomore midfielder Holly Drawn scored the game-winning goal win 12 seconds left in the extra period. The Minutewomen are 1-2 during the road trip.

UMass (5-4) is playing its last non-conference game when it travels to Johnson Field in New Haven, Conn., for a 3 p.m. start. Yale (6-3) has not played UMass since 1998 when the Minutewomen crushed the Bulldogs, 17-2. The Maroon and White leads the all-time series, 10-7.

Yale enters the contest on a two-game winning streak with impressive victories over Boston University and No. 8 Dartmouth.

Last Friday, UMass lost to No. 2 Northwestern, 18-4, but it has another opportunity to beat a ranked opponent in Yale. Early in the season the Minutewomen defeated BU when it was ranked No. 16 in the nation.

"It's great to play two ranked opponents, it will be a good indication of how were going to prepare for the Atlantic 10 conference play," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "This week is unrealistic with so many games but once we get to A-10s, we will have two games a week so it will get us prepared."

The past three games have taken a toll on the Minutewomen. Even if their muscles are sore and they can't run as fast, they

See W. LACROSSE on page 9

Junior Kristina Twichell and the Minutewomen continue a rapid succession of games today on the road against the Yale Bulldogs.

These games offer UM opportunities

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

It's the last chance to make a statement in non-conference play. But the task is not easy since the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team faces the No. 17 team in the nation, the Yale Bulldogs (6-3).

With wins over Harvard, Vermont, Albany, Boston University and Boston College, the Minutewomen can establish their first winning non-conference season since 2001. But they also suffered losses against Holy Cross, No. 8 Dartmouth, New Hampshire and No. 2 Northwestern so far this season.

However, UMass could have scheduled an entire slew of weak teams with the intention of padding its record, but chose to face stiff competition. For example, the team is playing Northwestern for the first time since 1989 and last faced Yale in the 1998 season. The Maroon and White inherited all of the other opponents on its schedule from the previous coaching staff.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos decided to schedule talented teams who would better prepare her team for conference play.

"The Northwestern [game] will help us throughout the season," Venechanos said. "Because we will be in some games where we will play a team like that. Having been there before, hopefully that will help us out."

Overall, UMass has fared well with the strong competition, getting off to its best start since the 2003 season with four wins and two losses in six games. Yet, the Minutewomen have only one win against a ranked opponent. They defeated BU (2-4) on Feb. 24 who was ranked 16th at the time.

A win against Yale validates the victory over BU and proves that UMass can be a force in the A-10.

The Minutewomen look to improve on their fourth-place finish last season. The biggest challenge will be dethroning Richmond (5-4), the defending A-10 champion. The league's coaches chose the Spiders to repeat their first-place finish this year.

See W. LAX NOTEBOOK on page 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY/WINDY : HI: 53 LO: 28 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 2007

PENN STATE INVADES GARBER PAGE 10

SEBADOH REUNITES AT PEARL ST. PAGE 6

New program to aid freshmen transition

Dorms to include themed-halls

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Many students enrolling in the class of 2011 at the University of Massachusetts will have more opportunities to be accommodated based on their needs and interests. Although some students have had this type of experience already, the "First-Year Experience" program is undergoing vast changes.

Next fall, the expansion of first-year halls, which started this past year with Van Meter in the Central Residential Area, will expand to Webster and Dickinson in Orchard Hill and Kennedy, James and Emerson in Southwest. However, instead of simply creating a first-year hall, Housing and Residence Life has added a themed twist to dormitory life.

The "First-Year Experience," replacing the name "Epoch," says on its Web site that it is intended to "facilitate and support your smooth transition into UMass Amherst." First-year halls provide an opportunity for residents to take classes together, interact with other students in their major and have resources and referrals to campus resources at their fingertips.

The new program comes with themes such as Living Learning Communities, Talent Advancement Programs, and Residential Advancement Programs.

First-Year Experience Specialist Kelly Gray, who supervises the Orchard Hill-Central First-Year Halls, said she believes the first-year program will benefit incoming students and start them off on the right track.

"Our first year halls focus on the needs of new students by providing programming and resources to help students with this transition," Gray said. "We have extra staff (Peer Mentors and First-Year Experience Specialists) who work to assist students with this transition and try to connect the students' living experience with the academic experience. These programs allow students to be part of a small cohort of peers that have similar academic interests," she continued. "Students can connect both in and out of the classroom to enhance their learning experience."

Although not every incoming freshman has an idea of what they want to major in or what they are specifically interested in, first-year, themed halls aim to solve uncertain-

See DORMS on page 4

Next year, some all-freshmen dormitories will have a themed-twist for students living in the dorms.

Painter dies following UM accident

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

A Springfield man died today, just two days after suffering severe injuries while working on the construction site of the new central heating plant at the University of Massachusetts, according to the UMass Office of News and Information.

Regean Chicome, 55, was spray painting beams on a scissors-aerial lift when he became lodged between a beam and the lift, police said. He was freed only after co-workers climbed up the lift to dislodge him and then lower the lift, according to Ed Blaguszewski, Director of the News and Information Office at UMass.

UMass Police Department received the call for assistance and responded to the site of the incident at 8:19 p.m. on Monday. CPR was performed on the scene, and Chicome was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital by the Amherst Fire Department ambulance, according to the UMPD.

According to Blaguszewski, the Northwestern District Attorney's Office, federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the Massachusetts State Police, and officials from the UMass Office of Environmental Health and Safety were on the scene Tuesday to begin an investigation of the incident.

Chicome works for Fine Painting, a subcontractor of O&G Industries of Torrington, Conn., general contractor for the $118 million central heating plant, which has been under construction since May 2006.

ISOM kicks off Dean search

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

Two candidates for the Dean of the Isenberg School of Management (ISOM) at the University of Massachusetts have visited campus this week to meet with faculty, staff, and students. The candidates, Glenn Pitman and Wayne Marr, are potential successors to the current Dean, Soren Bisgaard, who took the post on a temporary basis last May after former Dean Tom O'Brien retired after 19 years.

Pitman, a professor of business administration at the State University of New York at Binghamton and former Associate Dean of the Smeal College of Business Administration at Pennsylvania State University, met with the campus community on Monday in three different sessions: one for staff, one for students, and one for faculty.

See DEAN on page 4

The Isenberg School of Management (ISOM) hosted two candidates for the dean position.

Student accusations rock SGA trustee elections

Sophomores Shanell Saunders, a Kinesiology major, and Briana Thevenin, a Biology major, fill out Student Government Association ballot forms in the Campus Center yesterday. Today is the last day of voting, students can cast their votes from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. in all dining commons and the Campus Center.

By Alyssa Montalbano
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association officials are investigating recent Facebook comments made by a University of Massachusetts student regarding one of the student trustee candidates.

Varun Vuppala, a UMass junior and resident assistant at Gorman Hall, posted a Facebook note early Tuesday morning accusing trustee candidate Ruth Thompson of making offensive remarks.

The posting came less than 12 hours before voting began for next year's SGA positions, including student trustee.

"I've been tormented with a terrible knowledge recently. In a recent discussion that a group of us had in the SGA office, a friend of mine who is currently running for trustee, said some things that really unnerved me," wrote Vuppala.

Vuppala stated while other people were in the room when the comments were made, said he cannot produce anyone else who was witness to these claims, because he stated that "a lot of people that heard the comment are seated SGA officials and don't want to risk losing their position."

"I really should have come forward sooner. I suppose I was hoping that some of the other people in that room when those comments were made would have come out and said their two cents," said Vuppala.

Phone calls and e-mails to Thompson were not returned.

Vuppala has said he wasn't trying to hurt Thompson in any way, but only stated what he heard. He said he believes that voters should have this information before they decide who to vote for.

Chancellor of Elections at UMass, Ruth Morgan, wants to make clear that Vuppala has no particular tie to any of the candidates or the campaigns.

Yesterday, Morgan released a statement in response to the note stating, "The election commission and I are working together, and our number one priority is to run the election as cleanly, fairly and positively as possible. We are investigating these statements and taking any action necessary."

"We will make sure these statements do not impact the campaigns. Candidates themselves are not engaging in any of this. If we thought they were we would try our best to investigate it and make sure that all campaigns are upholding the bylaws to the SGA constitution," added Morgan.

In Vuppala's most recent Facebook note, he apologized for any controversy that he may have started.

"My goal wasn't to harm Ruth. It was just to make people aware of her comments," said Vuppala. "I am deeply sorry about the way this turned out."

Boredom the culprit of high school dropouts

By Lillie Fleuriel
Daily Mississippian (U. Mississippi)

OXFORD, Miss. — The rate of high school dropouts in the United States is increasing. According to Reuters, one out of five students in high school has considered dropping out due to boredom on a daily basis.

Eighty-one thousand students were administered a survey in 26 different states. Two-thirds of the high school students surveyed complained of boredom and thought the subjects discussed in class were irrelevant.

The study also found that students were bored because they thought their teachers did not also care about the subject matter.

The study revealed half of the students who were administered the survey said they had skipped school at least one time without a valid excuse. Out of the 81,000 students, 22 percent claimed that they have thought about dropping out of school. The participants in the survey said that they spend only an hour or less weekly studying and reading.

Although these statistics were found in the study, three out of four students surveyed said that they wished to earn a high school diploma and further their education by attending college.

Tiffany Dunn, a junior education major at the University of Mississippi, believes the consequences of dropping out of high school are significant.

"I think that dropping out at the high school level has a negative impact on students because most jobs that are in demand require a college degree," Dunn said. "Students that don't receive at least a high school diploma lower their opportunities to be successful in the job world."

Bush accuses Democrats of meddling

By Anne Flaherty
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congressional Democrats are showing no signs of backing down on their rebuke of the Iraq war, insisting President Bush will have to accept some sort of legislative timetable in exchange for the billions of dollars needed to fund the war.

"We would hope that the president understands how serious we are," said Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., after the Senate voted to uphold a proposal in a war spending bill calling for the troop withdrawal.

With the Senate resuming debate on the $122 billion bill Wednesday, President Bush reminded lawmakers their move will not prompt him to negotiate, but to veto any funding legislation that includes a deadline for withdrawal.

U.S. President George W. Bush yesterday again warned lawmakers that he would veto any firm timetable for withdrawing U.S. troops from Iraq as the Senate was poised to vote on the issue.

"Members of Congress need to stop making political statements, start providing vital funds for our troops and get a bill to my desk that I can sign into law," Bush was expected to say in a speech at the National Cattlemen's Beef Association meeting in Washington. Excerpts were released in advance by the White House. "If Congress fails to pass a bill to fund our troops on the front lines, the American people will know who to hold responsible."

But Reid and other Democrats say they won't back down.

"Rather than making all the threats that he has, let's work with

See IRAQ on page 4

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
issue 106

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherd Widnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stanton
Editorial Editor Tucker Mermick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Dannis Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Vallade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dollarnita
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the Collegian in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew O'Rourke

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

New Harry Potter book cover revealed

NEW YORK (AP) —What picture shows a dramatic gold and orange sky and a teenage boy in glasses reaching upward?

It's the cover to the seventh and final Harry Potter book, "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows," coming out July 21. As always, the cover was designed by illustrator Mary GrandPre, U.S. publisher Scholastic, Inc., announced Wednesday.

"The structures around Harry show evident destruction and in the shadows behind him, we see outlines of other people," David Saylor, Scholastic's art director, said in a statement.

"For the first time, the cover is a wrap-around. On the back cover spidery hands are outstretched toward Harry. Only when the book is opened does one see a powerful image of He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named, his glowing red eyes peering out from his hood."

J.K. Rowling's fantasy series has sold more than 325 million copies worldwide. "Deathly Hallows" has an announced first printing of 12 million in the United States alone.

AP

Publishers released the cover of the newest edition of the Harry Potter series.

The cover for the children's edition released by Bloomsbury Publishing PLC, Rowling's British publisher, shows an adult-looking Harry, Hermione and Ron. The adult edition has a photograph of a locket bearing a serpentine "S" — believed to be the "horcrux" in which Lord Voldemort keeps a fragment of his soul.

World's tallest man finds love at home

BEIJING (AP) — The world's tallest man, whose search for a bride covered the world, ended up marrying a woman from his home town nearly half his age and more than two feet shorter, Chinese media reported on Wednesday.

Bao Xishun, 56, a 2.36-metre (7-ft, 9-inch) herdsman listed by Guinness World Records as the tallest living man, married a 29-year-old saleswoman, the Beijing News said. Both come from Chifeng in Inner Mongolia.

"After sending out marriage advertisements across the world and going through a long selection process, the efforts have finally paid off," the newspaper said.

It was the first wedding for Bao and his bride, Xia Shujuan, a mere 1.68 metres (5 ft 6 inches) tall.

Bao reached his height in a seven-year spurt that began in his teens and which doctors have yet to explain, according to Guinness.

After a career in the army, where he was recruited for a basketball team, he returned to Inner Mongolia. He now herds livestock and hires himself out for publicity stunts.

AP

Bao Xishun, the world's tallest man, is now the world's tallest groom.

In December, Bao saved the lives of two dolphins by reaching deep into their stomachs with his 1.06-metre (42-inch) long arm to pull out pieces of plastic, according to Chinese media.

—Associated Press

Energy department fined $1M

RICHLAND, Wash. The Environmental Protection Agency on Tuesday fined the federal Energy Department $1.1 million over violations of an agreement to clean up the Hanford nuclear reservation, the nation's most polluted nuclear site.

The fine involved operations at a landfill that is the primary repository for contaminated soils, debris and other hazardous and radioactive waste from cleanup operations across the site.

After first shutting down operations upon discovery of the failures, the EPA has permitted the landfill to resume operations under strict oversight.

The EPA pointed out problems in a letter to the Energy Department on Tuesday, saying that workers did not perform weekly inspections that would reduce the risk of leaks in landfill liners and that operations did not comply with tests on compacted waste for structural stability.

The violations did not release any radioactive waste, said Nick Ceto, the EPA's Hanford Project Manager.

"Our cleanup agreement with the Department of Energy clearly defines what constitutes responsible, careful waste management practice," said Elin D. Miller, an EPA regional administrator. "Continued missteps at one of the country's most complex and difficult cleanup sites cannot, and will not, be tolerated."

Said Energy Department spokeswoman Colleen French: "We've said from the outset that we take these incidents at (the landfill) very seriously and are taking any and all actions necessary to make sure that nothing like this can happen again."

The federal government created Hanford in the 1940s as part of the top-secret Manhattan Project to build the atomic bomb. The site continued to produce plutonium for the nation's nuclear weapons arsenal through the Cold War.

Today, it is the nation's most contaminated nuclear site. Cleanup is expected to top $50 billion and continue through 2035.

—Associated Press

Scientists release new take on dinosaur extinction

By Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The big dinosaur extinction of 65 million years ago didn't produce a flurry of new species in the ancestry of modern mammals after all, says a huge study that challenges a long-standing theory.

Scientists who constructed a massive evolutionary family tree for mammals found no sign of such a burst of new species at that time among the ancestors of present-day animals.

Only mammals with no modern-day descendants showed that effect.

"I was flabbergasted," said study co-author Ross MacPhee, curator of vertebrate zoology at the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

At the time of the dinosaur demise, mammals were small, ranging in size between shrews and cats. The long-held view has been that once the dinosaurs were gone, mammals were suddenly free to exploit new food sources and habitats, and as a result they produced a burst of new species.

The new study says that happened to some extent, but that the new species led to evolutionary dead ends. In contrast, no such burst was found for the ancestors of modern-day mammals like rodents, cats, horses, elephants and people.

Instead, they showed an initial burst between 100 million about 85 million years ago, with another between about 55 million and 35 million year ago, researchers report in Thursday's issue of the journal Nature.

The timing of that first period of evolutionary development generally agrees with the conclusions of some previous studies of mammal DNA, which argue for a much earlier origin of some mammal lineages than the fossil record does.

The second burst had shown up in the fossil record, MacPhee said. But he said the new study explains why scientists have been unable to find relatively modern-looking ancestors of the creatures known from that time: without any evolutionary boost from the dinosaur demise, those ancestors were still relatively primitive.

Some experts praised the large scale of the new evolutionary tree, which used a controversial "supertree" method to combine data covering the vast majority of mammal species. It challenges paleontologists to find new fossils that can shed light on mammal history, said Greg Wilson, curator of vertebrate paleontology at the Denver Museum of Nature & Science.

William J. Murphy of Texas A&M University, who is working on a similar project, said no previous analysis had included so many mammal species.

But, "I don't think this is the final word," he said.

The study's approach for assigning dates was relatively crude, he said, and some dates it produced for particular lineages disagree with those obtained by more updated methods.

So as for its interpretation of what happened when the dinosaurs died off, "I'm not sure that conclusion is well-founded," Murphy said.

John Gittleman, a study co-author and director of the University of Georgia Institute of Ecology, said the researchers considered a range of previously reported dates for when various lineages split. They found the overall conclusions of the study were not significantly affected by which dates they chose, he said.

Researchers should now look at such things as the rise of flowering plants and a cooling of the worldwide climate to explain why ancestors of present-day mammals took off before the dinosaurs died out, Gittleman said. The cause of the later boom is also a mystery, he said.

The study's family tree includes 4,510 species, more than 99 percent of mammal species covered by an authoritative listing published in 1993. (Nearly 300 species have since been added to the listing, but the researchers said that doesn't affect their study's conclusions.) To construct it, the researchers combined previously published work that relied on analysis of DNA, fossils, anatomy and other information.

S. Blair Hedges, an evolutionary biologist at Pennsylvania State University, said the new work "pushes the envelope in the methods and data, and that's really important."

He said the demise of the dinosaurs may have affected mammal evolution by influencing characteristics like body size rather than boosting the number of new species created. Such changes wouldn't be picked up by the new study, he noted.

STUDY ABROAD OPPORTUNITIES THIS SUMMER!

Sicily • June 4-29, 2007
Program highlights: cost includes 6-academic undergraduate credits in art history, history, painting, Italian language & culture; housing; 2 meals daily while in Messina; excursions to Agrigento, Cefalú, Erice, Monriale, Piazza Armerina, Siracusa and Taormina. For more info: www.umassd/edu/sicily or contact Prof. Anthony Miraglia, amiriaglia@umassd.edu

Lisbon • June 3-July 1, 2007
Program highlights: cost includes 6-academic undergraduate credits in political science and/or international finance; housing, excursions to sites such as Coimbra, Evora, Setùbal, and the Portuguese National Assembly. For more info: www.umassd.edu/pce/lisbon or contact Nancy Vanasse, nvanasse@umassd.edu

UMass Dartmouth
PROFESSIONAL & CONTINUING EDUCATION
www.umassd.edu/pce/international/welcome.cfm

CHOOSE from over 600 courses
EXPERIENCE
Boston in the summer
EXPLORE your full potential

DISCOVER THE POWER OF SUMMER

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
SUMMER TERM

617-353-5124 | www.bu.edu/summer

A Special Acoustic Evening With

MATTHEWS & REYNOLDS

Mullins Center

The Official Dave Matthews Band Website:
www.davematthewsband.com

The Official Dave Matthews Band Fan Association:
www.warehouse.davematthewsband.com

TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY AT NOON

BUY AT LIVENATION.com
ticketmaster CHARGE BY PHONE: 413-733-2500 • TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE
All dates, acts and ticket prices subject to change without notice. A service charge may be added to each ticket
Produced by LIVE NATION

ISOM begins round of dean interviews

DEAN from page 1

Marr, the Dean of the School of Management at the University of Alaska in Fairbanks, and current founder and owner of the Social Science Research Network, did similarly on Wednesday afternoon.

Those who attended the open meetings were invited to participate, enjoy refreshments, and fill out evaluations, which are now available online. Evaluations asked participants to rate the strengths and weaknesses of the candidate provide comments. They can still be completed and passed into the Office of the Provost in 362 Whitmore by April 25.

"The meetings went well," said Marr. "I think the UMass students and community are great."

Starting last year, ISOM took applications for the position to be filled this July for the upcoming school year. In a position announcement letter from the School, the applicant "must possess a record of outstanding leadership; an ability to promote, encourage and facilitate excellence in research, teaching, and program development; and a record reflecting integrity and high ethical standards," among other requirements.

To guarantee full consideration, applicants were asked to include a current vita and a statement describing how the candidate's experiences and values highlight this position in their application. Both Pitman's and Marr's current vitae are available on the Office of the Provost Web site.

Other candidates for the position are scheduled to visit campus in the upcoming weeks on April 9th, 12th, and 19th. The candidates' names and possibly more dates will also be available on the Provost Web site as soon as possible.

New program to aid freshmen transition

DORMS from page 1

ties and guide students toward academic success. While Van Meter's theme this year was geared toward students who were undeclared, it made for inconsistencies, such as finding programs that catered to every student's needs and interests.

In Southwest, Kennedy Hall will integrate the theme of "Popular Culture," where students attracted to visual and/or performing arts and applied sciences can form a cohesive community. Programs are also geared toward those with the intention to pursue a health science field or majors in humanities and social sciences.

"Adding themes to the halls is an attempt to connect all the students in a particular residence hall around a common interest. That common interest assists the staff in providing programs, events and other resources to students that they will most likely relate to and need," Gray said.

Pierpont and Moore Halls, also in Southwest, combine to form the theme of "Global Perspectives," which is designated for students who are drawn to the study of people and society, encompassing majors and interests such as politics, sociology, psychology, anthropology, and business.

Unlike many of the upper-classman-filled dormitories on campus, first-year halls have further staff and student support to make the transition into UMass easier. In first-year halls, residents in these halls have access to peer mentors – live-in, academic advisors, who maintain office hours, facilitate programs and counsel students primarily on academic issues and helpful campus resources.

James and Emerson Halls, new additions to the First-Year Experience in Southwest will be converted into "Health and Wellness" dormitories. Residents will possess a recreation center with fitness equipment, and students will be encouraged through staff support to create and continue a balanced, overall healthy lifestyle.

Melville and Thoreau Halls are titled, "Enterprise & Action," where the community is geared toward the related themes of business, social justice, and economics. Programs in this area are for students interested in business, history, political science and anthropology. Dickinson Hall in Orchard Hill will become the "Science and Discovery" building where Commonwealth College and non-honors students interested in a range of sciences including engineering, biology, physics, chemistry pre-med topics can live.

Webster Hall, also in Orchard Hill, is titled, "Society and Leadership." Encouraged for students interested or already a part of Commonwealth College, Webster will also encompass those interested in social sciences and humanities, including philosophy, anthropology, psychology and political science.

Van Meter Hall in Central will turn into "Media, Culture & the Arts," where students interested in the performing arts are encouraged to live. In addition, the community will consist of those interested in communication, anthropology, history and sociology, language and general arts topics.

Butterfield Hall also in Central will remain the "Writing and Literature" dormitory for first-year students interested in all types of writing, from creative and expository writing to journalism and comparative literature. Residence Life along with Gray are optimistic about the institution of organized themes in first-year halls.

"Our hope is that students will live in buildings that they find academically and personally interesting. We hope that can build connections with peers around these topics and learn from each other both in and out of the classroom," said Gray.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu.

Ex-Gonzales aide regrets how firings handled

BY THOMAS FERRARO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The firings of eight U.S. prosecutors "were properly made, but poorly explained," U.S. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales' former chief of staff said in testimony prepared for delivery to Congress on Thursday.

Kyle Sampson said he conferred with the White House and Justice Department colleagues in a lengthy review that resulted in the dismissal last year of eight of the nation's 93 U.S. attorneys. But he said the matter was ultimately mishandled.

"For my part in allowing what should have been a routine process of assuring the Congress that nothing untoward occurred to become an ugly, undignified spectacle, I want to apologize," Sampson said in his prepared remarks, a copy of which was obtained by Reuters.

The disclosure of the dismissals has triggered a firestorm on Capitol Hill, fanned by charges that they were politically motivated and prompting calls that Gonzales step down.

President George W. Bush has said he maintains confidence in Gonzales, but a number of his fellow Republicans have joined Democrats in saying he should go.

Sampson, who recently resigned as a result of the flap, was to testify before the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is investigating the ousters.

The administration contends the firings were justified and largely performance-related or involved policy differences.

Critics charge the prosecutors seem to have been fired because they were too tough on Republicans, too easy on Democrats and inadequately loyal to the administration.

Sampson said U.S. attorneys are judged on more than their "professional skills, but also their management abilities, their relationship with law enforcement and other government leaders, and their support for the priorities of the president and attorney general."

Sampson added "The distinction between 'political' and 'performance-related' reasons for removing a U.S. attorney is, in my view, largely artificial."

The Justice Department said on Wednesday that a letter that Sampson helped draft and that was sent to congressional leaders last month contained inaccurate information.

The Feb.23. letter stated the Justice Department was not aware of White House aide Karl Rove playing any role in the decision to appoint his former aide, Tim Griffin, to replace one of the fired prosecutors in Arkansas.

However, documents released by the Justice Department earlier this month showed that Sampson wrote an e-mail in December stating that getting Griffin appointed was important to Rove.

Sampson, in his prepared testimony, said he and others at the Justice Department had mishandled questions from Congress about the dismissals.

"The truth of this affair as I see it is this: the decisions to seek the resignations of a handful of U.S. attorneys were properly made but poorly explained," Sampson said.

Sampson said he considered each of those ousted a "wonderful lawyer," but noted they all served at the pleasure of the president and that to his knowledge none were ousted for "an improper reason."

The Senate panel, along with one in the House of Representatives, last week authorized subpoenas for Rove and other White House aides if they refused to testify voluntarily as part of the congressional investigations.

Bush has vowed to oppose any attempt to compel aides to provide sworn testimony. He has offered instead that they talk with lawmakers behind closed doors, without a transcript and not under oath. Democrats have refused, and have sought a compromise.

United States Attorney General Alberto Gonzales speaks at the Houston Hispanic Chamber of Commerce annual luncheon in Houston March 28, 2007.

Smoking pot not 'Kosher'

JERUSALEM (AP) – Marijuana is not kosher for Passover, a pro-cannabis advocacy group says, advising Jews who observe the week-long holiday's special dietary laws to take a break from smoking the weed.

The Green Leaf Party announced Wednesday that products of the cannabis plant have been grouped by rabbis within a family of foods such as peas, beans and lentils that is off-limits to Jews of European descent during Passover.

The Green Leaf Party, which has made several unsuccessful attempts to win election to parliament on a platform urging marijuana's legalisation, said it was issuing its advisory as a service to Jews who don't want to break ritual law.

But it said the rabbinical ban for the holiday beginning at sunset Monday, during which many Jews eat matzos, or unleavened bread, could be a blessing in disguise.

"Logic dictates that if the rabbis say cannabis is non-kosher for Passover, it is apparently kosher during the rest of the year," Michelle Levin, a spokeswoman for the party, told the YNet news web site.

Wanted

A Cheaper Chancellor

UMASS Chancellor Lombardi's Salary

$347,499

His Pay Raise Over The Last Two Years: $97,500

Do You Have What It Takes To Be UMASS Chancellor? Are You Cheaper?

The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) is committed to finding lower-cost alternatives to the top administrators our university can no longer afford. If you want to help us fight outrageous & run-away compensation for UMASS administrators contact GEO at geo@external.umass.edu or 545-0705 today. Visit www.cheaperchancellor.com for details.

A graduate business degree.
Just the way you want it.

BENTLEY
PORTFOLIO 360
Comprehensive Graduate Business Programs

Presenting the new Bentley Portfolio 360 – Integrating business, technology, ethics and global understanding, focused through experiential learning.

Flexible. Customize your program around your career goals and academic background. Focus your degree with multiple concentrations and dual-degree options.

Personal. Participate in classes on campus and online. With courses offered primarily in the evening, our programs accommodate your schedule.

Powerful. Accelerate your career with a degree from one of the country's top-ranked business schools.

Business majors earn an MBA in as few as 12 courses.

Apply now for September enrollment.
Visit www.bentley.edu or call 1.800.442.GRAD

BENTLEY
McCALLUM GRADUATE SCHOOL of BUSINESS

The Bentley MBA • 8 MS programs • MBA & MS Dual Degrees

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The majority always rules

S.P. Sullivan

While perusing around Facebook.com in recent months, UMass students might have noticed their invite to join Gargano's Official Petition for a New Academic Calendar. Innocuous enough, the group sparked some interest among students who were pleasantly surprised that the administration had even asked their opinion, albeit via Facebook.

The proposed changes outlined by said Facebook group would put the UMass academic calendar on par with that of most other colleges and universities, citing student and parent concerns over summer internships and jobs, which may require students to begin working before the spring semester has ended, among other reasons.

The group itself was no more controversial than fellow Facebook groups "Save Darfur" and the "Bill Murray Fan Club" (of which I'm a member). But it did raise a few eyebrows – not from UMass students, however, who were for the most part glad to see the possibility of their academic calendar being made more congruous to that of their friends at other schools. The group raised the objections of professors, who, perhaps not having Facebook themselves, felt left out of the discourse.

Not to be ignored, the Faculty Senate sent out a press release on the matter. Dated March 14, 2007, the press release outlines several legitimate concerns raised by a Faculty Senate survey. Ranging from "disruption of Five College cooperative efforts" to complicating the process of teaching preparation for the second semester, the objections raised by the Faculty Senate and faculty members are not to be taken lightly. However, neither are they to be considered a final nail in the coffin of the proposed calendar change, as the Faculty Senate seems to think.

It seems pretty undemocratic to can the effort based on the opposition of the faculty, who are outnumbered by students 17 to one.

The press release, in addition to citing problems a calendar change would pose for faculty members, also gives examples of ways in which students would be affected. The Senate cites "disruption of Five College cooperative efforts" as a point of contention. But the schedules of the Five Colleges aren't even identical at present, and the release makes it unclear as to how changing the current schedule would make things any different.

The Senate also turns attention to Music and Dance students at the University who participate in "intensive and focused rehearsal periods" during the January term. Not to sound like a non-supporter of the arts, but I doubt that the Music and Dance department makes up a majority of the student population here at UMass, and to curtail changes that could possibly benefit the student body as a whole to accommodate them seems a little counter-productive.

University exchange programs in Western Europe might also be affected by the change, however, and a new calendar might force students going abroad in the fall to sit out the spring semester. Senate representatives declined to elaborate on the matter, so the claim must be taken at face value.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) is similarly none-too-keen on the idea, and president Max Page believes that faculty opposition should put an end to the discussion. A survey conducted by the MSP showed two-thirds of its faculty membership opposed to the changes, and the similar survey conducted by the Faculty Senate showed comparable results.

"To me, if any group felt so strongly," said Page in a February Collegian article, "I feel that they should kill it." I don't follow Page's logic in this respect though. It seems pretty undemocratic to can the effort based on the opposition of the faculty who are outnumbered by students 17 to 1. That's a little like UMass dining commons banning meat products because campus vegetarians have grown angry; it just doesn't reflect the needs of the rest of us.

It goes without saying that the University and its students value the faculty here at UMass, and likewise value their opinions. But to clamor against a proposed calendar change in the face of what seems to be unbridled support by most students is antithetic to the purpose of the University. UMass is a sprawling cultural center and research facility, but a university first and foremost. Complications that may arise from a calendar change should be considered, but they take a back seat to the needs of the tuition-paying students who number nearly 20,000 strong.

The faculty has made their opinions on the matter loud and clear. The responsibility now rests on UMass students to make their views on the matter – be they enthusiasm or non-support – heard by the administration. It is absurd that anyone suggest closing discussion on the matter before it has even been brought to full attention of the entire student body. I wouldn't recommend pulling the "Hey, I pay your salary" card in any disagreements you might have with professors in lecture, but in this respect that bell rings true. This is our decision.

S.P. Sullivan writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at spsulliv@student.umass.edu.

Sanctimonious supporters

Greg Collins

Claiming to support American troops while opposing the Iraq War is fashionable among anti-war critics and liberals, but it is much easier to assert one's loyalty rather than to belong it in reality. It is even easier to manipulate words like "honor" and "support" to solidify this declaration and hope that others overlook their deeper meanings.

The recent controversy at UMass Amherst, and ongoing throughout the United States, concerning whether you can express disapproval for the Iraq War but still support American troops highlights two ways of thinking about how to perceive U.S. soldiers.

Politically patronizing individuals portray our soldiers as a collective group of helpless victims guilty of actions reflecting the policies of the Bush Administration – nothing more and nothing less. This group focuses on the ubiquity of health problems and lackluster medical care of soldiers returning home from Iraq.

In contrast, a second bloc depicts American troops as individuals who face incredible hardships but also commit acts of bravery and heroism in the face of terrorism, regardless of whom commands them and with what policies or political party this person is associated.

Do not be fooled by these sanctimonious supporters working for The New York Times, Time Magazine, CNN, and the new Democrat-controlled Congress who say they honor the American military unabashedly. They do this only by drawing attention to the physical and mental injuries suffered by troops in Iraq, or to the inadequate medical care at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

In using "honor" to describe their sentiments of American soldiers, these political patronizers are essentially creating a superficial veneer to hide their personal opposition to the current administration. Disagreeing with President Bush in a constructive manner is commendable as long as people do not try to convey this message by denigrating American soldiers as if they are powerless and soulless chess pieces.

Genuine recognition of American soldiers would honor the courageous act of the Marine who jumped on a grenade to save the lives of his fellow soldiers. Genuine recognition of American soldiers would honor their efforts to hunt down and kill terrorists and stabilize Baghdad.

But do not expect the liberals who disrupted the recent "Support Military Recruiters" campus rally or politically correct news publications to do this, because their warped conception of honor is very distant from the truth of what honor really means.

"Honor" holds a deeper meaning rather than merely feeling bad about people who get hurt doing their job. We honor our fire fighters and police officers not by concentrating solely on ensuring appropriate medical care to remedy on-duty injuries. We honor them also by highlighting the firefighter who risked his life to enter a burning house to save a child, or a police officer who died but caught a murderer in the process.

The people who legitimately honor each and every single U.S. soldier respect his or her autonomous decision to join the military.

Sanctimonious supporters of American troops depict soldiers as if they were thrust into battle involuntarily, forced to fight with overwhelmingly inadequate military equipment, and then subjected to unexpected physical and mental health problems.

The people who legitimately honor each and every single U.S. soldier respect his or her autonomous decision to join the military and acknowledge the fact that this choice was made freely with careful consideration of its benefits and risks. They realize that while not all American military equipment is superior, our federal government treats its soldiers far better than any other government on this planet.

Why don't we ask our current soldiers explicitly whether portraying them only as victims truly honors their sacrifices and recognizes their efforts to work under circumstances most of us can only imagine?

Ultimately, to honor our troops we must ensure that their mental and physical injuries are cared for. But we also must recognize that these hardships were the result of heroic and courageous acts of our soldiers, who were aware that the brave actions undertaken could possibly lead to injuries.

Most assuredly there is a difference between opposing the war but supporting the troops. However, there is even a bigger difference between supporting our troops and depicting them as helpless victims to further a political agenda.

Portraying our best and brightest primarily as victims and sufferers directly undermines the purpose of their mission. More importantly, it shamefully condescends the noble essence of their souls, regardless of your sentiments on the war.

Real patriots of the United States acknowledge the valor of soldiers in and out of combat. Additionally, they recognize the irony that our troops' heroic sacrifices ensure the right for people to exploit them as victims through deceptive rhetoric.

Until they stop this exploitation our troops will continue to be tarnished. In essence, the issue isn't just merely whether there should be better health care or more armor. The issue is whether sanctimonious supporters will continue to proclaim their loyalty to our troops in words or rather support them in reality by acknowledging their bravery and selflessness. The latter is what honor really means.

Greg Collins writes on Thursdays. He can be reached a gcollins@student.umass.edu

Are our soldiers being honored only through pity?

The threat of conviction

Kaitlyn Silva

It seems people around me are losing their faith in the church, and they seem to be blaming politics. Surely, their reasons are veritable.

One might ask how anyone could blame politicians for their stance on organized religion since the United States believes in a separation of church and state. Yet if you really look into it, there's no real separation whatsoever. Just because the Pope himself is not lobbying for certain laws to be passed does not mean that religion is not having a serious effect on America's most popular debates.

For instance, what would the crusade against gay marriage be like if opposing politicians didn't argue that the Bible states marriage to be strictly between a man and a woman? Would they have much of an argument other than a few blips about how they think it will alter the economy? Perhaps they'll say that gay marriage is a degradation of traditional family structure, but here's the problem with that theory: tradition alters over time. Otherwise schools would still be segregated and women would still be barefoot and pregnant in the kitchen.

So, to represent their part in the large Christian population of America, many politicians fall back on the literal interpretation of the Bible. Some Christian groups disagree that the Bible needs to be strictly interpreted in most cases, but too many politicians seem to differ. Why blame your own bias when you can blame the Bible?

When religion...tries to force its beliefs upon others in a nation that is supposed to have freedom of religion, we have a problem.

However, there's a catch. We live in America. Our constitution advocates freedom of religion. Every person in America is equal despite their religious beliefs. Some of those people don't believe in God or the Bible. In fact, some of them don't believe in any higher power at all. These people deserve a better explanation for political movement and debate than, "Because God said so."

There are other gatherings, such as anti-abortion groups, that attack wielding the same message. In their faith, abortion is not an acceptable option – it's murder. There always seems to be politicians who are heavily involved in the church trying to ban abortion because they grew up in the church, and the church says it's immoral.

Are there men and women out there who oppose gay marriage and abortion without being members of an organized religion? Of course! However, because religious beliefs are backed by a religious community, their presence is much more potent.

Iraq, though more complicated than other issues, has religion at its roots. The United States is not dealing with regular old fascists after all. We're dealing with "Islamic fascists." Politicians accept this term, but it's likely that very few of them would approve of calling the white men who have ravaged countries in the past in order to spread their religion, "Christian fascists."

Not all of our political leaders go along with the Christian majority for the sake of support, but too many do. Those who come from a political family realize that Christianity has somehow become a sign of status needed to run a government that is supposed to support all religions. They must prove themselves to the people by spending half of their lifetime kneeling in a pew.

Consider the presidential race. People have questioned whether or not Mitt Romney is a viable candidate, not because of his political beliefs, but because he is Mormon. Barack Obama's connection to Islam as a child has been played up as a controversy, as if Islam was a plague that all Americans must avoid at all costs. Christian conservatives are openly tweaking because they do not have a candidate that is guaranteed to do their bidding. Where's the separation of church and state in this?

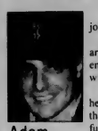
Religion itself is not a problem. There is nothing wrong with having faith and religious beliefs to stand by.

However, when religion forms itself into a community and tries to force its beliefs upon others in a nation where freedom of religion is supposed to exist, we have a problem. By allowing the beliefs of the most dominant religion to be the basis of our laws, we are destroying our own system of equality. We're excluding all who are not involved in that religion. The government acts as if religion is the basis of morality, thus the politicians are not giving non-Christians the respect and consideration they deserve.

Religious acceptance is only a distant dream at this point. Many of the wealthy, pious citizens in this nation must take a step back and realize that a person can be a decent, moral, and productive member of society while having beliefs other than institutionalized religion. The American people don't need a silver spoon in their mouth and a Bible in their hand in order to change the world for the better.

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at ksilva@student.umass.edu.

Returning to the truth



Adam McGillen

Why would anyone choose journalism as a major?

Go into management, the arts, something in the sciences. You know, something with a future.

In most majors, you will hear about promising careers that lay ahead, the wonderful paths you can pursue on your way to an early retirement. In my major, Journalism, you will constantly be reminded of the declining state of print journalism and how the media as a whole is in a downward spiral, pulling our democracy along with it.

I will admit it – being in the journalism major can be quite discouraging. A need for change drives me, but looking at the world around me, words grow more meaningless every day. The most powerful of articles and columns merely bounce off apathetic audiences.

Journalists used to be some of the most respected individuals in the United States. Their role in our democratic society was invaluable. They may not have been celebrities, but they got their hands dirty and produced stories that affected the lives of Americans.

Now, good journalists are scattered – few and far between. Their voices are so diluted by the garbage that amasses itself in our every day media that their stories go unheard.

The majority of "journalists" today, though they may not deserve such a title anymore, seek to entertain rather than inform. With the rise of television and the internet, print journalism is on its way out, and unfortunately, the journalistic qualities of objectivity and seeking the truth seem to be on their way out as well.

What many fail to see though, is that this decline in the media is not a result of Fox News or CNN setting precedents for the rest of the media world to follow. No, print journalism is disappearing and the television media is distorting reality because that is what Americans are demanding of them.

Why does Fox News lean so far to the right, bending their stories and using subtle graphics and images to push the Republican party? Because Americans tune in to watch.

Print journalism is disappearing and the television media is distorting reality because that is what Americans are demanding of them.

Why does the news constantly cover celebrities whose lives and deaths have literally no influence on the state of our nation? Because Americans tune in to watch.

How can the White House and the Attorney General fire nine District Attorneys simply for showing a lack of allegiance to the Bush Administration? Because it does not make for good television, and as a result, Americans just do not seem to care.

Americans, and America's youth especially (that means people like you and I), have grown apathetic to the truth. Reality is just too harsh, so we turn to "reality" television to get our fill of a distorted reality we can feel comfortable with.

It can become overwhelming, seeing the once grand profession of journalism degraded every day. Journalists are merely supplying what their audience wants, but not what they need – the truth in its rawest form.

The press and all its freedom is entirely reliant on the people. When valuable news stories fall on deaf, defiant and apathetic ears, the media must resort to a tabloid mentality in order to pull an audience in. As a result, journalism as a whole spirals further downward and can no longer properly serve the people.

Journalism has apparently passed a point of no return. Until the American public takes steps to decrease the demand for entertaining surrealism and instead cries out for honest facts and informative journalism, it is hard for me to see journalism ever surviving.

In today's world, the responsibilities of being objective and seeking the truth have been passed on to our generation. We must learn to pick our media carefully, sieve through the garbage and commend the gems of honest and powerful journalism that shine through all the muck. Be critical always, never stop doubting the media that is in your face.

As young college students, we have the gift of free and active minds. We must not let the corrupt media that exists today taint our thoughts, but instead, we must wage a war on the surrealism that bombards us daily. We must demand honest, critical, and relevant journalism. Only when we as the American people stop being apathetic and simply allowing the media to spoon-feed us stories loaded with appealing but grossly distorted details, will journalism ever find its footing and start the climb back towards legitimacy.

If we allow journalism to fail, ultimately we allow democracy to crumble. Saving journalism, restoring the once proud profession from the mockery it has become – it is up to you, the readers. Journalists live to serve the people, and when the public once again demands to know the truth about their world, journalists will be there to provide it.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Local band Sebadoh reunites at Pearl Street

After seven years the indie-sensation returns

BY COREY CHARRON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

SEBADOH

PEARL STREET BALLROOM

TONIGHT 8:30

ADV. $15, DOOR $18

Sebadoh, one of independent rock's forefathers, will swing through their hometown of Northampton, Mass. during their first tour accompanied by their original lineup in fourteen years. Founding members Lou Barlow, Eric Gaffney, and Jason Loewenstein will pay a visit to the Pearl Street Ballroom tonight.

Sebadoh began as a side project of Barlow's during his tenure as bassist in the equally influential and recently reunited band, Dinosaur Jr. Barlow initially worked with J Mascis in a hardcore band known as Deep Wound, which after its breakup in 1983, morphed into Dinosaur Jr. Classic albums such as "Dinosaur Jr.," and "Bug," caused Dinosaur Jr. to become cult heroes. Their distinct use of guitar distortion and feedback helped inspire Nirvana and the grunge era.

In 1986, Barlow, while still a member of Dinosaur Jr., started working with multiple instrumentalist Eric Gaffney on projects that included making sound collages on simple tape recorders and four-track machines. The title of "Sebadoh" came from a nonsense word Barlow would frequently utter during recording sessions. They released their first two collaborations, "Weed Forestin'," and "The Freed Man," in 1987 and 1988, with very little distribution, the former as a bonus with Dinosaur Jr.'s second album "You're Living All Over Me." The supplementary disc could only be found at a Northampton record store at the time.

During that period J Mascis and Barlow's relationship became strained, especially as Barlow spent more time working on his side project. He was eventually kicked out of the band in 1989 and began focusing his energies on Sebadoh.

Homestead Records soon heard "The Freed Man," and signed the band, re-releasing the album as an LP. Loewenstein joined the band at a gig at Smith College, and the trio started touring, visiting local destinations like Hampshire College, Hadley, and Northampton.

"Sebadoh III," which came out in 1991, was a more refined but still low-fidelity recording. Gaffney's psychedelic noise experiments and Barlow's romantic folk-rock combined to produce one of the first true landmark albums of the 1990s. Many took notice of Barlow's writing technique, which would encourage bands like The Mountain Goats and Casiotone for the Painfully Alone to record powerful love songs on simple devices. "Sebadoh III" became critically successful, and Sebadoh signed to independent record label Sub Pop.

See SEBADOH on page 7

Sebadoh which began in Northampton in the late 1980s is returning to the area with this tour for the first time since disbanding in 2000. They are playing tonight at Pearl Street Ballroom at 8:30 p.m.

Tensions between Barlow and Gaffney escalated in 1993, leading to Gaffney quitting the band and Bob Fay taking over as drummer. The band went on to release their most successful album in 1994, "Bakesale," that included their well known single, "Rebound." The 1996 album, "Harmacy," landed the number 126 spot on the U.S. charts. In 1999 the band fired Bob Fay and replaced him with Russ Pollard. The group went on hiatus in 2000, appearing again in 2003 with a very brief tour.

Sebadoh's current tour stems from the re-release of "Sebadoh III" on Domino Records, which includes liner notes written by each band member and an extras bonus disc. The group started their reunion in San Diego, Calif. on February 26 and will tour most of the country.

All three members of the band have side projects. Barlow plays in the band The Folk Implosion, who landed their surprise hit, "The Natural One," at number 29 on the American pop charts in 1995, from the soundtrack for the film Kids.

Fields of Gaffney is Gaffney's side project that he started in 1998. The Fiery Furnaces have had the pleasure of touring with Loewenstein since 2005. He also has a solo album called, "At Sixes and Sevens," which was released in 2002.

The Bent Moustache will open for Sebadoh Thursday night. The natives of Kronmenie, Netherlands released their debut album, "Forst," on Transformed Dreams Records on March 26. Ajay Saggar and Pim Heyne formed the band in 2004 and immediately starting recording. Wilf Plum soon joined to round out the trio of musicians, as all three knew each other from prior work in the band Donkey. The Bent Moustache soon began touring parts of Europe, including Manchester, England and Scotland.

Their music draws comparisons to bands such as Deerhoof, The Fall, Captain Beefheart, and Can, mixed with shoe-gazers My Bloody Valentine.

Tickets for the concert are $15 in advance and $18 at the door. Doors open at 7:30 p.m., and the show starts at 8:30 p.m.

Corey Charron can be reached at ccharron a student umass edu

Students serve affordable five course meals

For three days each week during spring semester, students in Hospitality and Tourism Management 355 prepare menus and meals and serve paying diners on the 11th floor of the Campus Center.

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

March 6 kicked off eight weeks of lunches and dinners that are prepared by students in Hospitality and Tourism Management. Meals are served on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, with lunch at 12 p.m. and dinner at 6 p.m., at the newly renovated 11th floor of Campus Center. The restaurant windows offer a clear view of the UMass campus on both sides of the room, as families, students and staff enjoy food freshly prepared by students of the course Hospitality and Tourism Management 355 titled, "Menu and Quantity Food."

Each week the restaurant features different managers and servers, all of whom are undergrads enrolled in the course, who meet for lecture once a week on Monday mornings. Each meal time on Tuesday through Thursday is actually considered class time – it's the student's production lab. Last night's manager, UMass senior Courtney Little, said that she's been prepping for her turn at managing the restaurant for weeks.

"We're very proud of ourselves," said Little, who's studying nutrition and exercise science. "The food's really good." According to Little, much of the food they serve is prepared by HT-MGT 355 students, many of whom have never cooked before. "We cook soup, chop vegetables, make bread – like the honey wheat rolls we're serving tonight."

Other menu items last night included garden vegetable soup, spinach salad with bacon vinaigrette, pan-fried pork cutlets, glazed turnips, garlic roasted red potatoes, and a sweet ending of carrot cake with cheese frosting. All dinners are five course meals.

On a typical Wednesday night, the restaurant is filled to a maximum capacity of approximately 60 people, which is why call-ahead reservations are necessary. Tickets cost $8 for lunch and $10 for dinner (a price which includes the salad course). Reservations can be made by calling 413-545-0877, or emailing kmann@ht.umass.edu. If calling to reserve tickets, the department asks that calls are made between 8 a.m. and 2 p.m. For more information, visit www.isenberg.umass.edu.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at mrousseau@student umass edu

Lunches and dinners offer wide variety, low prices on campus

MEAL 4: APRIL 3RD, 4TH, 5TH

Wild Rice Soup
Olive Bread
Garden Salad with Thousand Island Dressing (Dinner only)
Pan-Seared Salmon
Sauteed Spinach
Basmati Rice Pilaf
Chocolate Mousse

MEAL 5: APRIL 10TH, 11TH, 12TH

Potato & Leek Soup
Whole Wheat Rolls
Caesar Salad (Dinner only)
Chicken Breast with Parmesan Cream Sauce
Sauteed Green Beans with Almonds
Red Smashed Potatoes
Cream Puffs with Chocolate Ice Cream

MEAL 6: APRIL 24TH, 25TH, 26TH

Mushroom Barley Soup
Popovers
Romaine with Russian Dressing (Dinner only)
Beef Stroganoff
Buttered Carrots
Fettuccini
Angel Cake with Lemon Glaze

MEAL 7: MAY 1ST, 2ND, 3RD

Lentil Soup
Sun-dried Tomato Bread
Romaine with Mustard-Herb Vinaigrette (Dinner only)
Baked Scrod with Tarragon Beurre Blanc
Sauteed Peas
Roasted Sweet Potatoes
Poached Pears with White Chocolate and Raspberry Sauce

MEAL 8: MAY 8TH*, 9TH, 10TH

Cream of Broccoli Soup
Cheddar Muffins
Garden Salad with Blue Cheese Dressing (Dinner only)
Chicken Marsala
Mixed Vegetables
Mushroom Risotto
Apple Turnover

*May 8 is lunch only, no dinner will be served. These menus are courtesy of www.isenberg.umass.edu.

The students not only plan the menu for lunch and dinner, but they also prepare the food for up to 60 hungry diners. For some this is their first foray into cooking.

You can balance buds with beaus

BY JASMINE MONTEIRO
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Have you ever been in a relationship that you weren't too sure about, one that made you a little scared or nervous? Many people have been there in one way or another. Maybe you're afraid to ask or wonder where the relationship is headed. Aside from the "what ifs?" and "what now?," it's also possible that you're tackling a bigger question: what do your friends and family think about the girlfriend or boyfriend?

If you are big on your non-intimate relationships like I am, you are probably very concerned about what your friends and family think about your new beau. So what do you do when you're confused and their opinion seems to be a deciding factor? It will never be easy to maintain a relationship with someone that your friends are not fond of. While it may be flattering at first that they are willing to fight for your time, it'll soon become more of a burden than anything. If you can help it, don't let it get to that point.

The best thing to do to prevent hostility between the two is to keep them acquainted with one another. Let them get to know each other because the truth is, everyone has heard the saying, "love is blind." Sometimes your friends will be able to see something that you can't. People often get so caught up in infatuation that they don't see warning signs, which can sometimes practically be lit up and flashing on the other person's forehead. So give them time to warm up to each other. If your girl or guy is worth it then they will withstand the interrogations.

The worst thing that could happen is that your friends don't like your new girl or guy. If they think they're too needy, too distant, untrustworthy, or whatever the case may be, make sure you talk to your friends and get their honest opinions. Ask them why they feel a certain way and if you can do anything to help the situation or even prevent it entirely. If you're really close to your friends or family, they should always want what is best for you and be willing to talk to you about this new relationship.

Tell your friends to ask you questions about him or her. This can help reassure them that you know everything you need to know. Some important things to talk about can be what are his/her future plans, how long ago was his/her last serious relationship, whether he wears boxers or briefs. Well, you can keep it a little less personal.

Sometimes your friends just may think you could do better, or they're just simply not impressed by specific behavior. That's okay too – you can't win them all. Maybe there is something you see that they don't. And with time, they may see it too. My greatest advice to you, however, is if your friend brings up what could be a serious problem, always keep it in the back of your mind. You never want to disregard someone's feelings because their gut could be telling them something that yours managed to ignore.

If you're on the other end of the spectrum and if you find fault with your friend's new guy or girl, make sure you think about the importance of it. Ask yourself why you feel this way and what can your friend gain from knowing how you feel. You don't want your friend to be overwhelmed. You should always be aware of your feelings and their root causes before

See DATING on page 7

Abstracts grace A3 Gallery all March

BY AMANDA MITCHELL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Two very unique exhibitions are on display this month at the A3 Gallery here on campus. Both Tom Morton and Dorothy Osterman work in the realm of abstract art, and together, their work demonstrates the power that creativity has when it is allowed to exist unbridled and untamed.

Though the two artists display very different collections, their processes are similar in that they essentially allow the work to create itself. Neither artist claims to start with a definitive vision. Rather, their work develops on its own, as random ideas and inspirations come and go throughout the process.

Tom Morton has been involved with A3 Gallery since its opening in 2001. He said he enjoys working in the co-op environment. "I really appreciate the quality of the shows that we do," he said. "And the close interaction with the other artists too."

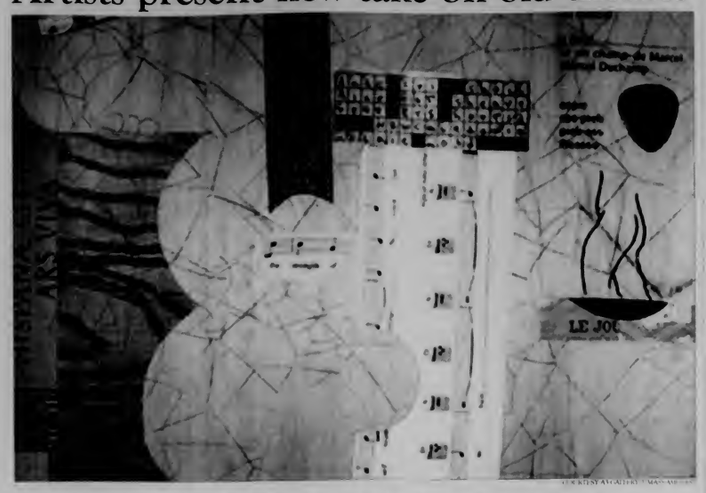
Morton is showing two series of work this month titled, "Color Fields." The first consists of papers and objects on wood board and was motivated from the aesthetic of Synthetic Cubism, a movement legitimizing collage as fine art that began in the early 1900s. The second series features translucent and transparent mixed-media collages done with wax on plexiglass.

His work features a whimsical quality; much of it contains puns and wordplay. The artist said he takes inspiration from Picasso who was one of the first artists during the Cubism movement to experiment with puns in artwork. One of his pieces is titled, "Stringfield Stratocaster." It is a wooden plank with guitar strings attached and includes a hidden homage to Picasso in the form of a cleverly placed collage.

Morton also uses household items such as a sugar cube, black pepper, and thyme in his other pieces. The unique double entendres hidden within all of his works make viewing the pieces an enlightening adventure.

See GALLERY on page 7

Artists present new take on old themes



"Stringfield Stratocaster," is a mixed-media collage by Tom Morton. His design philosophy draws from Cubism. He prides himself on letting the art flow freely, rather than forcing the artwork to conform to a preconceived idea.

GALLERY from page 6

Though his work appears to be well-planned and thought out, Morton claims to allow the art to create itself. "I just go with an idea until it's done, and then when another one comes to me, I go with that one," he said. "I'm still waiting for my next idea to come so I can start my next project."

Morton's installation also features a continuous video showing color studies and dance sequences by Dorothy Osterman and Alicia Morton. Morton has been studying video editing through the training program and video production facilities of the Amherst Community Television station.

Morton grew up with parents who were heavily involved in the art world and therefore felt that when he reached college, he did not need to further training to perfect his skills. He, instead, chose to study music and acting, all the while practicing visual art on his own. After college, he chose to pursue his Masters of Fine Arts degree in painting at UMass.

"My feeling about artwork is that it does come from inspiration and that it is then up to me to take that inspiration and turn it into something meaningful and important," he said as a way of summarizing his artistic philosophy.

Dorothy Osterman is also contributing to A3 Gallery's display this month. Like Morton, Osterman began painting and drawing as a young child. She grew up in Brooklyn, New York but has spent the past 40 years in Conway, Mass. living and painting the landscape. She studied art from a very young age, attending a special art high school in Manhattan and later, Parsons School of Design. She also spent two years in Paris after college independently studying art.

In a press release, Osterman is quoted as saying, "Here [in Conway] I am surrounded by nature. The land, sky, and water, together with my early impressions, unconsciously find their way into my paintings."

Her work is abstract – its only goal being to explore the relationship between space and color. Osterman prefers to say that she is not inspired by landscapes, but rather uses them as a visual reference for her work. She also emphasized that she finds freedom in experimenting with color and shapes without being concerned with form.

Osterman is a painter, and though she has been known to use oils in her work, all the pieces on display at A3 Gallery are gouache, a type of paint that is made up of pigments suspended in water. Generally speaking, gouache allows for an artist to more effectively experiment with the separate elements of paint, water, and the drying process of the paper.

The painter's work, which is rich in color, is now on display at A3 Gallery. Three of the six features lighter colors, while the remaining three feature deep reds, greens, blues, and yellows. One painting that Osterman called attention to during a private gallery viewing was a piece that she had completed in Paris during the 1960s. She recalled with a smile that the painting was done during some of the best years of her life – her early twenties. She said that she's noticed that her painting has changed as she has lived in different times and areas. "The painting has changed because my life has changed," she said.

The work of Morton and Osterman will be on display until the end of March. Regular hours of the gallery are Wednesday through Sunday from 12 p.m. to 6 p.m.

Amanda Mitchell can be reached at amitchel a student umass edu

Band comes home

SEBADOH from page 6

All three members of the band have side projects. Barlow plays in the band The Folk Implosion, who landed their surprise hit, "The Natural One," at number 29 on the American pop charts in 1995, from the soundtrack for the film Kids.

Fields of Gaffney is Gaffney's side project that he started in 1998. The Fiery Furnaces have had the pleasure of touring with Loewenstein since 2005. He also has a solo album called, "At Sixes and Sevens," which was released in 2002.

The Bent Moustache will open for Sebadoh Thursday night. The natives of Kronmenie, Netherlands released their debut album, "Forst," on Transformed Dreams Records on March 26. Ajay Saggar and Pim Heyne formed the band in 2004 and immediately starting recording. Wilf Plum soon joined to round out the trio of musicians, as all three knew each other from prior work in the band Donkey. The Bent Moustache soon began touring parts of Europe, including Manchester, England and Scotland.

Their music draws comparisons to bands such as Deerhoof, The Fall, Captain Beefheart, and Can, mixed with shoe-gazers My Bloody Valentine.

Tickets for the concert are $15 in advance and $18 at the door. Doors open at 7:30 p.m., and the show starts at 8:30 p.m.

Corey Charron can be reached at ccharron a student umass edu

Offer an open ear to calm anxieties

DATING from page 6

you relay them to your friend, especially when it could potentially cause a problem in their relationship.

Overall, it's more likely than not that your friends will be right about Mr. Emotionally Unavailable and Ms. Promiscuity. But don't let that discourage you from forming your own decisions. After all, it's true that we have to live and learn and (hopefully) love again on our own. Unless it's a potentially harmful situation, most of the time our friends will just let us make our mistakes and pick up our pieces when we break. So if a diss about your new relationship causes a riff in your friendship, make sure you ask yourself if your beau is worth it, and why are your friends fighting so hard. I know we like to give our new crushes the benefit of the doubt. After all they do buy us dinner, but don't forget what your friends and families tell you. If their heart is in the right place, then they won't steer you wrong.

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir a student umass.edu.

WHERE IMAGINATION MEETS INNOVATION

UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center Series Spring 2007

Trio Mediaeval
Thursday, March 29 at 7:30 pm
Bowker Auditorium
These three vibrant sopranos specialize in a diverse repertoire that juxtaposes early mediaeval music, new works composed for the ensemble, and traditional Norwegian ballads and songs.
Funded in part by the Expeditions program of the New England Foundation for the Arts

Vanguard Jazz Orchestra
Saturday, March 31 at 8 pm
Winning high school jazz band performs at 7:25 pm
Concert Hall
For over three decades, the Vanguard Jazz Orchestra has been committed to engaging audiences in jazz and to the original Thad Jones/Mel Lewis Orchestra precepts of sound.
This performance is part of a day-long high school jazz festival and competition sponsored by the Fine Arts Center and UMass Amherst Department of Music and Dance.
Sponsored by 106.3 The Valley Financial Services Group of United Bank

Stephen Petronio Dance Company
Thursday, April 12 at 7:30 pm
Concert Hall
Post-performance talk-back with the company
Petronio's dancers move with boundless energy and fearlessness. The company performs Bloom, with music by singer-songwriter Rufus Wainwright.
Funded in part by the National Dance Project of the New England Foundation for the Arts
Sponsored by Valley Advocate and Yale Gin Hotel

TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!
TICKETS ARE ONLY $7, $10, $15 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER www.fineartscenter.com
CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

2007 08 GO

BEN FOLDS
TALIB KWELI
OK GO!
Ed'F BARZELAY

HOSTED BY:
DENNIS HASKINS
aka: "Mr. Belding" from Saved by the Bell

Umass Students get in
FREE!
Five College $15
General Public $35

UMASS Spring Concert

Umass Student Presale Monday
April 2 at 10 AM
General Public / Five College sale
on April 7
Must have UCard for ticket and entry

SOUSA/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Jacovina and the Minutemen return home to host Penn State on Saturday at noon. UMass plays three of its next four games at home.

UMass hosts Penn State on Saturday

M. LAX from page 12

"I think we're close," Cannella said. "As they say, close doesn't count except in horseshoes and hand grenades. You fight, you fight, and you earn some respect but there's something missing there. There are mental errors at times and our Achilles has been not being able to finish the ball, particularly in the Loyola game.

"It is frustrating but you have to move on to the next game," he added. "It's ok to be disappointed when you lose, but you can't be discouraged, because you have to come out the following week or the next game and play well."

Cannella's job has morphed significantly over the last six months, from heading up a powerhouse team with two All-Americans last season to trying to keep an inexperienced 2007 team from falling apart at the seams.

He believes that stability comes from the top down and has remained on an even keel, despite the rough 2-5 first half of this year's campaign.

"[The players] will look to us," Cannella said. "The younger guys will look to the older guys. They're going to look to us to see how we react. For me, it's just about hard work. You have to go back to work and keep grinding it out."

UMass plays three of its next four games at home and hopes to use this stretch as a launching point to turn the season around. Cannella believes that the pieces are in place.

"We all need to execute on the same day," he said. "I think people understand their roles but they haven't played them to their fullest in any game together. We're still looking for that."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

UM looks for similar fate

Minutemen try to follow in the footsteps of 2003 Lions

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The 2003 version of the Massachusetts lacrosse team was in a much different state than the current Minutemen. At this point in the season, the team enjoyed the nation's longest winning streak and was undefeated to start the season.

Then, much like this weekend, Penn State came to Amherst for an ECAC contest with many predicting a UMass blowout. The Nittany Lions were on a much different track than the Minutemen. They were 1-5 to begin the year and looked as if they were going nowhere. Their poor start included four straight losses before traveling north.

But then the unexpected occurred. Penn State marched off Garber Field with its second win of the season, and it certainly wasn't its last. The game was tight. There were 10 ties and neither team led by more than a single goal. Then Penn State's Will Jones scored at 3:25 of the fourth, breaking a 10-10 tie. That proved to be the game-winner for the visiting team.

From there the Nittany Lions' season took off. The win over the Minutemen was the first of five in a row and six of Penn State's next seven games were posted in the win column (the only loss was to ACC powerhouse Virginia in Charlottesville, Va.).

The Lions rode that momentum all the way into the NCAA Tournament for the first time in program history, losing to Towson in the first round. They finished 7-7 after that dreadful start and the win over UMass was obviously the turning point.

The 2007 Minutemen may find it useful to learn from the Penn State squad of four years ago. Now could be the best time for that to happen with the Nittany Lions coming to Garber again this Saturday.

UMass currently sits at 2-5 (0-1 ECAC), a far cry from its Final Four appearance just one season ago.

It needs a breakout game similar to Penn State's victory in 2003 to turn a dismal season, which is spiraling faster by the week, in the right direction. This is something UMass coach Greg Cannella says he's been waiting for.

"I hope so," said Cannella when asked if his team is looking for a breakout win. "I've been waiting for it, sure. I think our guys are waiting for it and maybe that's the problem. Maybe they expect that to happen without going out there and actually doing it."

If the Minutemen learn anything from the 2003 Nittany Lions, it's that at this point in the season it still isn't too late to reel off victories and play well into May.

A couple of weeks ago it appeared the Minutemen salvaged a poor start with a gritty victory over Harvard, but couldn't sustain the momentum and lost two in a row to Albany and Brown, scoring just four goals in the loss to the Bears.

UMass has the talent to win lacrosse games, that certainly isn't the issue. What's plaguing the Minutemen is the ability to put it all together for a full 60-minute game.

According to Cannella, without mentioning anyone specifically, some players on the team are putting too much pressure on themselves to carry the team. He says while those players must perform for short stints, the team must play better as a whole for the entire contest.

"I think that we are close, we've been close," Cannella said about performing in all aspects. "You can still play well and not finish the ball. We outshot [Loyola last weekend] by 20 in that game."

For now it remains to be seen if a win Saturday will automatically fix the problem, but it certainly would be a step in the right direction.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Mass Attack's end of the year review quick feet and quicker hands, which allowed coach Don Cahoon to morph his team from a trap-only style offense to one that could wow the fans and stun a number of confused Hockey East netminders.

HOCKEY from page 12

PELLAND'S DEFENSIVE PLAYER: DAVID LEADERER

Earlier in the week I said David Leaderer was the most overlooked member of coach Don Cahoon blue liners, a statement that holds truth. Leaderer was just like a great play-by-play announcer this season, you didn't know he was there because he was doing his job the right way.

By no means is Leaderer the biggest defender out there – he's listed at 5-11, 190 lbs. – but he used superb awareness and stick skills to poke the puck away from opposing players skating into his zone.

RICE'S DEFENSIVE PLAYER: MIKE KOSTKA

With Matheson playing on the front line most of the year, it was up to Kostka to hold down the blue line, and he did just that. Last year's Most Improved Player recorded a plus-12 rating, good enough for second on the team, and best for defenders.

A likely candidate to replace senior Matt Anderson as captain next year, Kostka demonstrated that he can lead a team through his staunch defensive play. He made it easier on Quick in net whenever possible for a team that allowed just over two goals per contest.

He played in every phase of the game. From even strength, to the power play, penalty kill, and four-on-four situations, he was always on the ice.

PELLAND'S ROOKIE OF THE YEAR: WILL ORTIZ

Forward Will Ortiz broke onto the scoring scene early in the season and never let up. The Framingham native gave UMass offensive depth, as he pair with fellow winger, Jarman, to put form the team's No. 2 line.

Behind the Capraro, Quirk, Davis line, Jarman and Ortiz were the wingers on either side of Matheson for what became an imposing threat, and a tough matchup for opposing coaches.

RICE'S ROOKIE OF THE YEAR: JUSTIN BRAUN

The easy choice here might be Ortiz, but defenseman Justin Braun was one of the most consistent Minutemen in any class, and was the only Minuteman on the conference's Superskills Hockey All-Rookie Team.

Martin Nolet was the highly touted recruit as far as blue-liners were concerned, but Braun showed why he was a second-line defender all season, ahead of a pair of sophomores.

Braun was second only to Kostka for defenseman in scoring, with 14 points (four and 10) – and more of those assists would have been goals were it not for a handful of redirected slapshots.

PELLAND'S MOST IMPROVED PLAYER: MARK MATHESON

Last season Matheson was an average run-of-the-mill defenseman. That all changed this season with the new-and-improved Matheson making a positional switch full time.

Once he made the move to the pivot for good, the change was amazing, especially on offense. This season Matheson set career highs for goals and points in a season with 13 and 24, respectively. His 11 assists also match his career best.

RICE'S MOST IMPROVED PLAYER: KEVIN JARMAN

Last year, forward Kevin Jarman scored just seven points on one goal and six helpers. This year, he came out firing. Jarman finished fifth on the team, with 22 points (nine and 13), and was much more aggressive in the offensive zone.

Cahoon said several times during the season that Jarman looked more comfortable with the puck, and it certainly showed as he consistently crashed the net.

Jarman was aggressive with the puck, but also on his skates. He acted as an enforcer on the ice, and was often involved in some extra-curricular activity, letting his opponents know what he thought of them.

PELLAND'S BIGGEST DISAPPOINTMENT: TOPHER BEVIS

It is somewhat unfair to pin this label on the second-year defender because he missed time on two separate occasions, but even still, more was expected of Topher Bevis this season. After a good freshman season, Bevis just couldn't put it together this year.

Maybe it was the injuries or maybe it was a sophomore slump, but one assist and a -2 rating aren't very impressive this season. Bevis still played in 28 games despite those nagging shoulder injuries.

RICE'S BIGGEST DISAPPOINTMENT: MARTIN NOLET

The Quebec City native was probably the odds-on favorite at the beginning of the year to be the team's top rookie. The six-foot-three defenseman was a big catch for the program last offseason when it recruited Nolet, but he never panned out in his first season in Amherst.

He scored his first career goal in the season opener against Sacred Heart, but never found the back of the net again, and struggled with a string of injuries late in the season, when the Minutemen were at their best.

PELLAND'S TURNING POINT: JAN. 19-20 WEEKEND VS. NEW HAMPSHIRE

A 5-1 blowout loss to UNH on Jan. 19 (Quick was pulled in that affair after allowing his season-high goal count) made it look like UMass was relegated to the lower tier of the league for another season.

But then the next night both UMass and Quick rebounded to blank the Wildcats, 3-0, at the Mullins Center. It was the Minutemen's first-ever victory over a No. 2 ranked team and it was also Quick's first career shutout.

The Minutemen went 11-5-2 after the loss in Durham on Jan. 19. That includes the their season-high six-game winning streak, four straight over Maine, the tight double-overtime loss to UNH in the conference semis and the win over Clarkson in the NCAA Tournament.

RICE'S TURNING POINT: JAN. 27 VS. BOSTON UNIVERSITY

UMass was about to grab a rare win against the Terriers and were clinging to a 3-2 lead in the third frame. That's when Quick misplayed a routine dump-in, bouncing the puck into his own net.

He was visibly shaken after the goal, but once the puck dropped against at center ice, he became a man possessed. Arguably his best play came in the final 13-plus minutes of that game.

Instead of mentally collapsing, Quick got angry, and stayed angry the rest of the season, holding a 2.20 GAA over the final 15 games of the season.

RICE'S UNSUNG HERO: BRETT WATSON

The Mass Attack's other rookie, Brett Watson did everything but score for the Minutemen. The Maroon and White's best defensive forward, Cahoon also called Watson his best penalty killer, and the coach wasn't lying.

Watson blocked countless shots on the PK by laying in front of defensemen's sticks, breaking up passes, and getting the puck out of the zone. UMass was Hockey East's least-penalized team, but when they were, Watson was there to pick up the slack.

PELLAND'S UNSUNG HERO: DON CAHOON

He's the coach, you can't forget about him. Where would they be without Toot?

Jon Pelland and Jeremy Rice are Collegian columnists. They can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu and jeremyr@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Net yourself some points with the new Sports Blog
www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

Goten OF JAPAN STEAKHOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING CUISINE PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE
Early Bird Specials
Tues.-Thurs. 5-6 PM
Saturday 12-3 PM
Sunday 4-5 PM
Hours of Operation
Monday Closed
Tues.-Fri. 5-9 PM
Saturday 12-10 PM
Sunday 4-9 PM
104 Old Amherst Rd. Sunderland off Rt. 116
413-665-3628
www.gotenofjapan.com

Tired of the Dorms?
IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Gloss Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

...HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
...OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Where are YOU living next semester?
CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.puffton village.com

the moan and dove
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
20 FANCY TAPS. 3 BUCKS. ALL WEEK. WEEK AFTER SPRING BREAK. EVERY YEAR.
460 WEST ST. (116 SOUTH) 256-1710 3PM-1AM EVERYDAY

Senior outfielder Candice Molinari went 4-for-7 on Wednesday in the double-header against Dartmouth. Molinari is UMass' batting leader this season with a .417 batting average. The Minutewomen won both games against the Big Green yesterday.

Freshmen provide strong play

Minutewomen start freshmen in key spots for home opener

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Put on your general manager cap on for a few minutes. You're constructing a softball team, where do you start?

While talent sits at the top of your list, following that should be experience. All great teams possess an experienced core of players – especially up the middle. Coaches begin building their teams from the middle of the field and work their way out. Having experienced and talented players in these spots almost guarantees success.

When the Massachusetts softball team (13-12-1) took the field for its 2007 home opener on Wednesday against Dartmouth, the talent was there, but in several key spots, the experience wasn't. At both shortstop and catcher the Minutewomen started freshmen and in the second game of the double-header, a freshman hurler joined the other two on the field.

During last season's run to the NCAA Super Regional, a pair of freshmen spearheaded UMass attack – now-sophomores pitcher Brandice Balschmiter and third baseman Whitney Mollica. And this season, once again, first-year players must emerge for the Minutewomen to advance deep into the season.

In the second game of the afternoon, the Minutewomen boasted an all-rookie battery. Freshman Bailey Sanders improved to 4-4 on the season, allowing three earned runs and six hits over five innings. She struggled early on, mixed with some poor defense and some questionable calls from the umpire, Sanders' day looked grim at the onset.

"Bailey was struggling, but she held her own," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's not so easy to do. [The umpire] wasn't giving her any high strikes early on and that's her bread and butter as far as her rise-ball is concerned. It's tough for her to work from behind like that. We could've done a better job defensively behind her, too.

"I thought Bailey weathered the storm well. I think it was her poise that she handled well. I don't think anything physically or technically adjusted to her betterment during the game. I think she had to keep her poise knowing she had to be comfortable when nothing's working and you're a freshman. It's not easy to do."

Sanders is yet to look particularly sharp in an outing in her young career. Wednesday's performance should nudge her earned run average just over four for the season which isn't terrible considering she sits in the No. 2 spot on the UMass depth chart.

Although Sanders and Balschmiter fell victim to some poor team defense at times, freshman Whitney Williams was extraordinary defensively in her debut at the UMass Softball Complex.

Offensively, she went 3-for-6 in the two games, scoring one run from the nine spot in the UMass lineup.

During game two, with two out in the top of the second inning and the score tied at four, the Big Green had runners on second and third. Dartmouth freshman Alyssa Parker sat on a fastball from Sanders and ripped it toward the left-centerfield gap. Williams leapt, snagging the ball and putting an end to the Big Green rally.

Also, Williams showed off her arm a few times in the games, rifling throws from deep in the hole for easy put outs.

Williams most impressed Sortino by reading the game well and remaining alert at crucial moments of the game.

"She's a great defender. She's going to keep getting better and develop an even quicker release," Sortino said.

"That's all Whitney. I can't teach her the athleticism that she brings. She's on the ball and she always done the right thing. She does things sort of instinctively."

She's certainly no easy out at the plate either. Williams boasts a .343 batting average after her performance on Wednesday. With runners in scoring position, her average jumps to .385.

Freshman catcher Jessica Serio rounded out the trio of freshman to make an impact on the afternoon. Prior to Wednesday, she started just five games this season and struggled to get anything going offensively.

What Sortino looks for mostly out of her catchers is their ability to work with their pitchers. Serio and sophomore Emily Wehr split time behind the plate and neither of their bats have ignited to this point in the season but both possess steady gloves and a keen ability to fix a pitcher's mechanics on the fly.

No one could expect them to replace the power numbers of the departed K.J. Kelley – she graduated last season as the school's all-time leader in home runs with 41.

In the A-10, there's UMass and then there's everyone else. Considering the consistent contributions Sortino gets from her freshman classes, that really doesn't come as much of a surprise.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Junior infielder Stacy Cullington leads the Minutewomen in RBI with 22 on the season. She also leads the team in doubles with seven. UMass defeated Dartmouth in both games of Wednesday's double-header.

UMass takes charge in double-header fielder's choice, Acampora brought everyone home when she scorched a wall-ball triple to right.

SOFTBALL from page 12

The Minutewomen soon put an early lid on the day when Mollica and Cullington came around to score on a single by Proctor, ending the contest on a 14-6 run rule.

"The first game at home is always an exciting day. It's like the best feeling ever to play at home," Molinari said after the doubleheader. "It's good to come out with two wins."

The Minutewomen were able to tally the day's first win – thanks in large part – to the no-hit, shutout performance Balschmiter.

The sophomore sat down Dartmouth's first three batters in order, distributing K's to Autin and Yee and getting Chiffein to ground back to her.

In the bottom half of the first, Molinari reached first on a bunt to the pitcher. Stephanie Trudeau. After stealing second, she got to third when Cullington's ground ball was booted at shortstop by Ashley Gleason.

Both Molinari and Cullington scored on Dartmouth's next infield miscue, when Trudeau tossed a misguided throw over to first.

The game remained quiet until the bottom of the fourth when Proctor reached base on a bloop single to left. She got to second on a sac bunt by Mollica finally scored on a double by Salato.

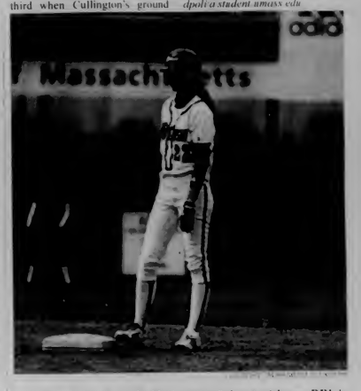
Immediately after that, Jessica Serio scored Proctor with a single up the middle.

Proctor was soon succeeded by Jackie Teman – who pinch ran for Salato – and Serio, both of whom reached home on a single to center by Morin.

In the bottom of the fifth, Davina Hernandez pinch ran for Acampora and crossed the plate for the Minutewomen's final run when Mollica reached base on an error.

The Maroon and White hit the road tomorrow for its next two games in Dayton on Friday and Saturday.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu



UMass senior Amanda Morin went 5-for-8 with two RBI in Wednesday's double-header victories against Dartmouth.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is hiring copy editors for the Fall 2007 semester
if interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center basement or contact Sheryl Wolnik at swolnik@student.umass.edu.

10 reasons why you'll love a Mac.

1. Run Microsoft Office. Flawlessly. On a Mac, Office gives you Word, Powerpoint and Excel with the same familiar features and shortcuts.
2. It just works. With a Mac, the OS, the applications and the computer are all made by the same folks, so they all work perfectly together.
3. 114,000 viruses? Not on a Mac. Mac OS X was designed with a superior UNIX foundation, a built-in firewall and security measures far surpassing what you'll find on PCs.
4. You can even run Windows. Parallels Desktop for Mac makes it possible to run Windows software on your Mac.
5. Tools to make amazing stuff. Find your creative voice with iLife '06, the award-winning suite of software found on every Mac.
6. You can use your existing printer or camera. Your Mac comes loaded with thousands of peripheral drivers, so just connect via USB, FireWire or Bluetooth.
7. Mac OS X keeps getting better. The world's most advanced operating system makes it easy to find, access and enjoy everything on your computer.
8. Instant video chats. The built-in iSight camera on iMac, MacBook and MacBook Pro make it easy to video chat with up to three friends or family members at once.
9. Use your Student Discount and SAVE on Apple products!
10. Buy your Mac right here, at your Campus Store. We're just steps away. Visit, call or shop us online today.

Authorized Campus Store
UMASS AMHERST
University Store
Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003-0000
413.545.2619
http://www.bkstore.com

Hobart standing tall in ECAC

Statesmen keeping up with the best teams in the nation

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

One unlikely team that could have an outside shot of winning the ECAC is the Statesmen of Hobart (3-5, 0-2 ECAC). Although the team has a losing record and is unranked in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Media Poll, it has played close games with some of the best teams in the nation.

The Statesmen opened the season on Feb. 28 against No. 12 Syracuse (3-3). Playing on the road in the large capacity Carrier Dome, Hobart had control of the game but allowed its lead to slip away during the final 12 minutes. Taking an 11-9 lead in the fourth quarter, Hobart let the Orange score the last four goals of the contest.

ECAC Lax

One week later, the school dropped another game this time an overtime loss to No. 18 Bucknell (7-2). The two teams played a very even match until the fourth quarter. With just 1:26 left, the Statesmen scored to take the lead but allowed a Bucknell goal 39 seconds later.

The Bison scored in the second minute of the extra time, overcoming strong performances from several Hobart players. Junior attack Jamie Kirk tallied eight points while paired with Daryl Veltman (six goals) on offense.

Hobart managed to briefly turn its season around against some of the weaker Division I teams. To begin March, the Statesmen rattled off three wins against Binghamton (1-4), Hartford (1-6) and Marist (0-6).

But when conference play began on Mar. 18, Hobart returned to its pattern of not finishing out games. Faced with the conference's best team, No. 9 Georgetown (4-2, 1-0 ECAC), Hobart fell 15-13, despite two five-goal individual performances from its attack.

The team's next game essentially summarizes its entire season up to this point. In their second overtime loss this season (in this cases, two OT's), the Statesmen fell to conference rival Rutgers (2-3, 1-1 ECAC), 12-11.

Similar to the Syracuse game, Hobart took a lead into the fourth quarter. The Statesmen doubled their lead before allowing two Scarlet Knight goals in the final four minutes of regulation. Then, only 3:37 into the second overtime, Rutgers' Colin Checcio tallied the game winner and his fifth of the contest. Checcio earned ECAC Offensive Player of the Week honors for his play in the game and also has a team-high 14 goals on the season.

An 0-2 record in conference play is a difficult situation to be in, but Hobart can still save its season especially when you consider that the Statesmen average the most goals per game in the conference and also have the second best scoring defense.

Yet acknowledging that Georgetown is one of the best teams in the country (and consequently should not lose very many ECAC games), Hobart will probably need to win their remaining games in order to challenge for first place and gain consideration for an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

The Statesmen will have their first opportunity to put themselves in the right direction this Saturday against No. 19 Fairfield (5-2, 1-1 ECAC). The team also has games against the four remaining ECAC schools and non-conference games against No. 1 Cornell (6-0) and Canisius (2-3) . . . Georgetown's tilt with No. 3 Navy (4-0) will give the Hoyas a chance to make a statement in college lacrosse. Although still ranked in the Top 10, GU hosted No. 6 Duke (6-2) last weekend, but lost in a low-scoring game, 6-4. This will be the Hoyas' third chance this season to knock off one of the nation's best teams. Georgetown lost to Syracuse in early March, 14-9 . . . Three ECAC teams are now ranked in the Top 20 of the Nike/IL Media Poll. Fairfield joins Georgetown and Loyola for the first time this year. Rutgers and Penn State are still on the outside while each receiving only a single vote . . . The league named sophomore goalkeeper Drew Adams of Penn State (2-4, 1-0 ECAC) its Defensive Player of the Week. Adams stopped 13 of 20 shots in the team's victory over Rutgers, though his goals-against average of 6.72 is second worst in the conference.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Junior attack Brendan Cannon and the No. 9 Georgetown Hoyas host No. 3 Navy on Saturday at 1 p.m. Cannon is tied for the team lead in scoring with 17 points on six goals and 11 assists.

Temple senior forward Kamesha Hairston (above) and George Washington junior point guard Kimberly Beck were named to the Associated Press All-America honorable mention team Wednesday.

Hairston and Beck honored

Pair of Atlantic 10 players named to honorable mention

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Correspondent

Temple senior forward Kamesha Hairston has certainly created a name for herself within the realm of NCAA women's basketball.

Not only has the Toledo native achieved such accolades as Atlantic 10 Player of the Year, A-10 First Team, A-10 All-Defensive Team and A-10 All-Tournament Team, Hairston can now boast the honor of being selected as an AP All-American Honorable Mention to her already impressive resume. She joins former Temple players Candice Dupree and Marilyn Stephens as the only women to represent Temple Basketball as All-Americans.

A-10 Basketball

Such an accolade can only help the Bowsher High School product in her efforts to join the ranks of the WNBA. In fact, Hairston has been invited to the WNBA Pre-Draft Camp that is set to take place at Cleveland State University this Friday and Saturday.

Leading the Owls this season in scoring (18.9 points per game), rebounding (8.6 per game) and steals (61 total), Hairston could stand a good chance at becoming the second player in as many years to be selected in the WNBA Draft. Candice Dupree was selected sixth overall by the Chicago Sky in 2006.

End of the Road

Despite finishing the season atop their conference (28-4 overall) and rolling past conference foes unscathed (14-0 A-10), the George Washington Colonials had their season abruptly ended by North Carolina, 70-56. The Tar Heels did an adequate job at discouraging the Colonials defensive powerhouse, Whitney Allen.

Whether it had been because Allen was working her defensive assignment too hard or North Carolina had her in its game plan, the 5-foot-11 junior had three fouls within the first seven minutes of play.

Inter Ivory Latta. The "always a bridesmaid never a bride" Tar Heels have been eliminated by eventual championship teams in each of the past two seasons, but seemed to handle the Colonials with ease, even going on a 22-5 run that would seemingly dictate the pace of the game.

Latta notched only nine points in the entire contest. However, her teammates more than picked her up. Senior center LaToya Pringle led the Tar Heels in scoring with 16 points, including a pivotal 10-of-12 from the free-throw line to go along with 14 rebounds and four blocks.

By the Numbers

The downfall of the Colonials seemed to revolve around two numbers – 14 and 16. Sixteen was the number of turnovers that George Washington committed which quite possibly could have lead to a momentary 22-5 run by North Carolina that the Colonials never seemed to bounce back from.

Fourteen was the point differential that North Carolina maintained at the end of the first half and ultimately, the number that GW would lose by. One reason that the Colonials could have been so futile in stopping the offensive onslaught put on by the Tar Heels was because defensive stopper Allen was benched for most of the first half due to early foul trouble, but not for a lack of effort.

Devilishly Good

Not even WNBA hopeful Kamesha Hairston or the nation's top point guard Kimberly Beck could stop the No. 1 ranked Duke Blue Devils from advancing to the semi-finals of the NCAA Tournament. Senior guard Fatima Maddox led all scorers with 18 points to go along with six turnovers and a perfect 6-for-6 from the charity stripe.

Hairston proved that she is deserving of all of her accolades by notching a double-double (16 points, 10 rebounds) in the biggest game of her career, but it was all in vain.

Missing easy shots and committing 19 turnovers proved to be too much for the Owls to handle. Duke would go on to play and eventually lose to Rutgers.

Michael Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
"LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD"
Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"
WANTED: HIP YOUNG PROMOTERS/HOSTS • Earn $$$$
Calling all DJ's
Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us
18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass
10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 2/8/07 2/14/07
Beer
Beck's 24 pk btl $19.99*
Milwaukee's Best 30 pk cans $12.99*
Magic Hat 12 pk btl $11.99*
Guinness Draught Stout 8 pk cans $10.99*
Miller Lite 30 pk cans $18.49*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 30 pk cans $12.99*
Red Stripe Lager 12 pk btl $10.99*
Sol Cerveza 12 pk btl $9.99*
Rolling Rock 24 pk btl $18.89*
Sierra Nevada Pale Ale 12 pk btl $11.99*
Corona & Corona Light 12 pk btl $10.99*
Ithaca Cascazilla 6 pk btl $6.99*
Liquor
Wine
10% off 6 bottles* of wine EVERYDAY MIX & MATCH
*Regular priced 750ml bottles of varietal wines.
SALE 3/29-4/04
Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm Sunday 12pm - 11pm

NEW Abbsolute SALON AND DAY SPA
Your One Stop Beauty Salon
Hair, Nails, Tanning, Massage, and Skin Care
10% off any tanning package
10% off any service or product
good through April 27, 2007
413-397-9988
267 Amherst Rd.
Sunderland, MA
(across from Cliffside Apts)
all major credit cards accepted

4TH ANNUAL MILLER LECTURE
BOSCH'S ENMITY
Exploring the paintings and drawings of the mysterious Heironymous Bosch (c. 1450–1516)
JOSEPH LEO KOERNER
Renowned scholar of Northern Renaissance art and currently a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow in Florence, Italy
WEDNESDAY APRIL 4 7PM
Weinstein Auditorium
Wright Hall, Smith College
Free and open to all
No reservations necessary
413.585.2760
www.smith.edu/artmuseum
Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA 01063
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
FRIDAY, MARCH 30TH, 2007:
3 BLIND MOOSE
SATURDAY, MARCH 31ST, 2007:
COTTON WOOD
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY?
COME TO SEVEN O's!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD
SUNDERLAND, MA 01375
(413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		8	4	6			5
9				5			8
5					2	9
4					1		7
	1						4
	7		9					1
		2	1					3
	9			2				6
	6			9	3	8

QUOTE OF THE DAY

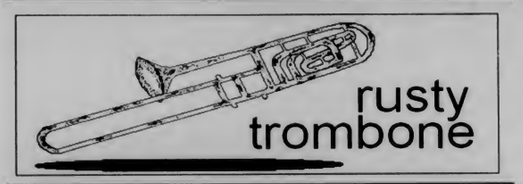
"Sometimes there's so much beauty in the world I feel like I can't take it, like my heart's going to cave in."

-Wes Bentley in "American Beauty"

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

HOW COME YOU'RE NOT WALKING YOUR DOGS?
HA, I KNEW THIS DOG-WALKING BUSINESS THING WAS A PHASE.
IN FACT, I JUST GOT MY FIRST EMPLOYEE. I WORK THE BOOKS AND GET CLIENTS, SHE DOES THE DOG-WALKING. WE THEN SPLIT THE PROFITS.
WHOA. YOU'RE LIKE A REAL BUSINESSMAN NOW!
EH, NO NEED.
SHOWS WHAT YOU KNOW THEN—I.E. NOTHING.
YEP. CHECK OUT THIS SWEET STOCK CERTIFICATE I MADE IN PHOTOSHOP. AND THIS TR, WHICH I ALSO MADE IN PHOTOSHOP.
STOCK

MS PAINT By Matt Audette



A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

A College Girl Named Joe
THINGS YOU NEVER WANT TO HEAR IN COLLEGE:
JUST THOUGHT I'D TELL YOU THAT I'VE NOTICED LATELY YOUR LECTURES HAVE BEEN TOO SHORT AND WITHOUT ENOUGH NOTES.
by Aaron Warner

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

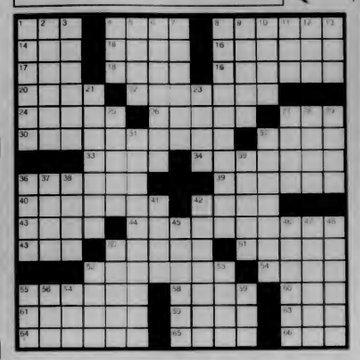
Working at the Park keeps me away from the sterile office environment
One summer I worked at an office. A co-worker used to say "Every day is a little miracle."
It was a miracle I didn't strangle her.
I have a way to deal with rage. Watch what I do to these deer

ACROSS
1 Family ride
4 Camp beds
8 Respectful deference
14 Anger
15 Wormy
16 Humiliated
17 Xenon or neon
18 View as
19 Persons in charge
20 Aid a criminal
22 Hits the books
24 Stirs to anger
26 Qualifying races
27 Post-graduate pursuit
30 Bacteria causing food poisoning
32 Young kangaroo
33 Good points
34 Gasohol ingredient
36 Taken without permission
39 Common antiseptic
40 Roman comedy writer
42 Fragrant bloom
43 Time periods
44 Basics
49 Take first place
50 Swings of the bat
51 Leather band
52 Searched high and low
54 Oscar-winner Thompson
55 Milwaukee beer
58 Aphrodite's boy
60 "Peter"
61 More or less
62 Eternally
63 Irritate
64 Stovetops
65 Guadalajara money
66 Attempt

DOWN
1 Cuban export
2 Saudi
3 Deal in used goods
4 Scoundrel
5 Raw minerals
6 Grows choppers
7 Playwright Beckett
8 Residence
9 Hausboys
10 Larger unspecified number
11 Nincompoop
12 "...whiz!"
13 Begley and Meese
21 Pilots of worship
23 Valley
25 Philosopher Kierkegaard
27 Actress Anderson
28 Long period
29 Noah's craft
31 Invented phrases
32 Green gem
35 Emcees
36 Fricassee
37 Hatcher or Garr
38 Algerian city
41 Jacobs twin
42 Reticence
45 "Silkwood" star
46 Axilla
47 Actress Hedy
48 McFarland of "Our Gang"
50 Setting
52 Garden pest
53 Female rabbits
55 Bestnitch
56 Writer Levin
57 Actor Chaney
59 Sign of a hit

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Moan and Dove
4 nites left.
all beers 3 bucks.
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte.116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day



Submit your comics!
collegiatecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If you ask politely and flash a smile you may be able to get a free blueberry scone.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You were conceived at a KISS concert which explains why your tongue is so long.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Never attempt to unscrew your bellybutton. It will cause your butt to fall off.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your college career will soon be coming to an end. You're basically an old person now.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You whine more than Dashboard Confessional and you're not as melodic.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Remember, he who controls the toilet paper has the power.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Do you think the gingerbread man was just Sonic the Hedgehog in a cookie suit?

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Like an Altoid, your odor is curiously strong and should be sold in a tin box.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If a car is about to run you over, start screaming and do gut-busting barrel roll.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It is almost prom season...say goodbye to that V-card.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are destined to make killer American Civil War websites for the rest of your life.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Tell Pimp My Ride you're insanely religious. They might make you a Pope-mobile.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/ part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARMENT FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

Now Hiring Atkins Farms Country Market 1150 West Street Amherst MA www.atkinsfarms.com (413) 253-9528 Sales Associates: Evenings and Weekends in the Bakery, Deli and Candy Departments. Cashiers: Days Evenings & weekends at the Front Register Area.

EMPLOYMENT

Fall 2007 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing. Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Nittany Lions invade Garber

UMass tries to get back on track vs. Penn State

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's a game saddled with a lot of history. The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team faces the Penn State Nittany Lions on Saturday for a 12 noon matchup at Garber Field.

Last season, the Nittany Lions stole one from the Minutemen with a 7-5 win that moved at a snail's pace. Penn State tried to slow down the Minutemen's prolific attackers, Sean Morris, Clay Stabert and Jim Connolly.

UMass coach Greg Cannella believes that he will see a similar strategy from PSU on Saturday, but is careful to typecast the Nittany Lions into one offensive style this season.

"There really hadn't been [a contrast in playing styles] until last year when they really slowed it down on us," Cannella said. "They really slowed it down against us last year. I would expect a little bit of the same but once they get on their roll and scoring, maybe they'll want to pick it up."

Penn State began its season with four straight losses but has won two straight leading into Saturday's game – wins over Colgate, 7-4, and Fairfield, 10-7.

"I think they feel they are kind of hitting their groove now," Cannella said of Penn State. "They played very good teams early on. They're up in all of their games and in a couple of those games those teams came back on them.

"I think our two seasons are paralleled other than that they're coming off of two wins," he added. "We haven't been able to put two wins together."

The Minutemen sandwiched their last win – over Sacred Heart during Spring Break – between losses to Brown and Loyola, who the Minutemen battled to a two-goal loss on the road.

The Minutemen's losses this season have come by way of the near-miss. All five of UMass' losses were by three goals or less, including losses to two ranked teams – Loyola and Albany – by a combined three goals.

See M. LAX on page 8

Senior midfielder Brian Jacovina ranks sixth on the Minutemen in scoring this season with eight points on two goals and six assists. UMass hosts Penn State on Saturday.

UMASS SPORTS LOG

UMASS FOOTBALL

• Sean Spencer, who served as the Massachusetts football team's defensive line coach from 2001-03, is returning to the UMass coaching staff as the defensive line special teams coach. Spencer spent last season with the Hofstra football team as the defensive line coach. He has coached football in the Atlantic 10 for five of the last six years. He also served as Villanova's linebacker coach in 2005.

• UMass coach Don Brown announced at the beginning of this month that Justin Halas, a freshman junior college transfer at the linebacker position, will join the Minutemen for the 2007 season. Halas was the Victor Valley Junior College Player of the Year last season and recorded 112 tackles, 12 sacks and four forced fumbles. He made the First Team Junior College All-State and was a Gridwire All-American. At Serrano High School, Halas was the captain of a 14-0 state championship squad while earning the CIF Division 8 Defensive Player of the Year honor.

• Eight players from the 2006 UMass football team were named to Don Hansen's Football Gazette NCAA Division I FCS All-America Team. Safety James Ihedigbo, running back Steve Baylark, linebacker Jason Hatchell, offensive lineman Alex Miller, defensive end Matt Austin, kicker Chris Koepplin, linebacker Brad Anderson and cornerback Tracy Belton are the eight honorees. Baylark was named to the Second Team after finishing his career with four 1,000-yard rushing seasons in a row. Ihedigbo made First Team Defense after registering 72 tackles, five sacks and three interceptions during the 2006 season. Miller was named to Third Team Offense after starting every game during his time at UMass. Hatchell made Second Team Defense and led the Minutemen with 134 tackles with 18 coming at New Hampshire on Nov. 4.

UMASS BASKETBALL

• UMass' Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme are going to play in the 55th annual Portsmouth Invitational Tournament from April 4-7 in Portsmouth, Virginia. It is the only tournament for college seniors to play in with NBA scouts on hand prior to the pre-draft camp in Orlando.

• Freeman and Lasme are the first Minutemen to play in the PIT since Charlton Clarke in 1999. The PIT is the older amateur basketball tournament and is a worthy event for NBA and European scouts to find new talent. Dave Cowens, Rick Barry, Ben Wallace, John Stockton and Scottie Pippen, among others, have participated in the PIT after finishing their college careers.

-Rob Greenfield

Reviewing the Mass Attack's 2007 season

The Mass Attack's long season has come to close. It was a banner year for the Minutemen both figuratively and literally (they will raise their first NCAA Tournament banner next season). Here's what the Daily Collegian's beat writers feel about who amazed, and who didn't in 2006-07.

Jon Pelland

Jeremy Rice

PELLAND'S MVP: JON QUICK

One rule that never changes in the game of hockey is this: you simply can't win games without good goaltending. It's as easy as that. If you can't stop the puck from hitting the netting behind you, there will be a lot of "Ls" in your loss column.

Last season everybody wanted to know if in fact the kid from Avon Old Farms could live up the hype of being dubbed the No. 3 goalie prospect, but Gabe Winer didn't allow that to happen.

Quick was nothing short of spectacular in his first season as the Minutemen's No. 1 goaltender. There are just too many diving, sprawling, splitting saves Quick made to list here. Hands down the sophomore was the most valuable Minuteman in '06-'07.

RICE'S MVP: MARK MATHESON

Quick was definitely indispensable in net for the Mass Attack, but senior Mark Matheson was so many things for the Minutemen every time they needed him to be. Originally a defenseman, Matheson made the switch to center last season and stayed there for the majority of this season.

However, when defenders Martin Soltl and Topher Ilevis went down, Matheson went back to defense. Down the stretch, Matheson was playing both positions through the Minutemen's longest winning streak of the season and finished tied for third (P.J. Fenton) on the team in scoring with 24 points on 13 goals (a team high) and 11 assists, while playing center, defense, and quarterbacking the power play from the point.

Matheson was one of the team's best offensive threats and he helped get UMass farther than ever before, and none of it would have been accomplished without him.

PELLAND'S OFFENSIVE PLAYER: CHRIS CAPRARO

You could see Chris Capraro finding his scoring touch at the tail end of UMass' disappointing season a year ago. Then he showed the ability to carry the offense in his first game after a suspension sidelined him to start the season, going 1-2-3.

With his scoring touch, playmaking ability and the best hands on the team – definitely some of the quickest in Hockey East – it's too bad for UMass fans that Capraro's breakout year came during his last in Amherst.

RICE'S OFFENSIVE PLAYER: CORY QUIRK

Last year's Co-Rookie of the Year, Cory Quirk showed marked improvement in his sophomore year as the team's second-leading scorer (behind Capraro) with 31 points on 13 goals and 18 assists. He tied Matheson for the team-lead in goals.

Last season, the Brockton native logged 13 points (eight and five), but had a minus-three rating. This year he showed how strong an all-around player he is, registering a club-best plus-16 rating.

The team's top-line center brought a flash to the UMass offense with his

See HOCKEY on page 8

Balschmiter throws second no-hitter

UM sweeps double-header over Dartmouth in home opener

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team (13-12-1) played host to the Ivy League yesterday in it handed Dartmouth (4-15) two losses in UMass' home opener.

The Minutewomen braved heavy winds at the softball complex to capture both ends of a doubleheader, squashing the Big Green by run rule in the 14-6 afternoon game after winning 6-0 on a Brandice Balschmiter's no-hitter in the earlier contest.

UMass	6
Dart.	0
UMass	14
Dart.	6

UMass coach Elaine Sortino said it was great for her players to finally lace up their cleats on the home turf.

"It's great to be out here and play. I mean, we desperately needed to play," she said.

Starter Bailey Sanders battled through some early rough patches to gather her poise and secure her fourth win. The freshman is now 4-4 on the year.

Sanders gave five innings of work, surrendering six hits and three earned runs while fanning eight Dartmouth batters.

She walked three of the 29 batters she faced before gaining victory when her team scored three runs in the bottom of the fifth to seal the early win.

The 18-year-old could not seem to find her target in the game's initial frames – giving up four runs in the first two innings.

Sanders walked the game's leadoff batter, Christy Autin, without finding the strike zone. She then gave up a single to right off the bat of Nikki Yee and plunked Katie Chifetan to load the bases with no outs.

Cleanup hitter Alyssa Parker then flew out to left, scoring Autin on the sacrifice. Starting pitcher Ashley Gleason then sent Yee to the plate with a rope up the middle. Next, Kelly Fry sent the inning's second sacrifice fly to the outfield, which brought home Chifetan.

Sanders managed to clot the bleeding after that, getting Leigha Clarkson to strike out looking.

The Minutewomen were able to answer with a strong half-inning of their own.

Amanda Morin led things off with single into center that was followed by an infield single to shortstop by captain Candice Molinari.

The team's big bat, Whitney Mollica, moved the runners over with a sacrifice bunt and an error by the third baseman on a ground-ball by Stacy Cullington scored Morin for the Maroon and White's first run.

A Lauren Proctor single to left scored Molinari and another Dartmouth error – on a ball hit to second base by co-captain Amanda Acampora – tied the game at 3-all.

Sortino then pinch ran Michea Holness for Acampora at first.

UMass took the lead when Dartmouth's catcher, Kalli Lenke, put a ball into centerfield trying to gun down Holness, who was trying to steal second. The errant throw scored Proctor, making it 4-3.

Dartmouth then tied the game when a Cullington error off a ball hit by Yee brought Megan Smiley through the backdoor.

The Minutewomen ran wild after that, scoring an additional four runs in the bottom of the second.

A third consecutive UMass single – a bloop by Molinari – scored Whitney Williams to make it 5-4.

After Proctor reached on a fielder's choice, Mollica grounded out to the pitcher. Cullington earned a base on balls and was subbed out of the basepaths for Jill Andrews.

After Proctor reached on a

See SOFTBALL on page 9

Sophomore Brandice Balschmiter threw her second career no-hitter in UMass' 6-0 win in the first game of Wednesday's double-header.

Minutewomen's comeback falls short

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The No. 14 Yale Bulldogs (7-3) entered Wednesday having limited opponents to just 31 goals in their first four contests. You can now add the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team to the list of squads, who have struggled to crack Yale's stifling defense as of late.

Despite rebounding from an embarrassing first half where it fell behind 7-1 and was out-shot 26-7, UMass (5-5) dropped its 1-3 on its five-game road trip with a 13-9 loss to Yale at Johnson Field in New Haven, Conn. Wednesday. A win yesterday would have marked the first time since the 2002 season that the Minutewomen finished with a winning non-conference record.

The Minutewomen can look forward to a much-needed eight days off before they close out their season-long road trip when they commence the conference portion of their schedule in Philadelphia against the Temple Owls next Friday. Game time is slated for 3 p.m.

UMass	9
Yale	13

Yale's Lauren Taylor and Jenn Warden had three goals to lead the Bulldog's offensive attack while sophomore midfielder Holly Drown led UMass with a hat trick of her own. Junior attackers Kathleen Typaldis and Melynda Zwick each contributed a pair of goals in the losing effort. The Minutewomen were outshot 37-19 at day's end.

Be it a decisive win or even a decisive defeat, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos is always proud of her team's performance. While still being proud following the team's second half wake-up call yesterday, Venechanos wasn't singing the same tune she does after most games.

"We just gave them way too many opportunities in the first half," a disappointed Venechanos said. "We're not going to win a game playing just one half. Our mental focus wasn't there and that's something we talked about prior to the game."

After averaging close to 12 goals a game in its first six contests, the Maroon and White has been in offensive purgatory as of late, managing only eight goals a game in its last four tilts.

"Some teams are picking up on things we're doing offensively and we're going to have to adjust," Venechanos said.

The Bulldogs jumped out to a 4-0 lead before junior attack Kathleen Typaldis removed UMass' goose egg from the scoreboard at the 12:25 mark of the first half with her team-leading 29th goal of the season. It was UMass' lone goal of the first half, as Yale came right back with three more goals to extend its lead to 7-1 heading into intermission.

In what was a reversal of the norm in 2007, it was the Minutewomen, and not their opponent, which started the second half with a fury, scoring four of the first six goals in the second stanza, cutting the lead to 9-5 at the 18:24 mark. A scrum-filled battle ensued the rest of the way, as the two schools traded goals for the remainder of the second half.

Senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy finished with 15 saves.

The Minutewomen are now 11-7 all-time against the Bulldogs. Wednesday's affair was the first time the two New England schools had tangled since the 1998 season when UMass defeated Yale, 17-2.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu

Hartford Hawks Vs. UMass Minutemen

Score by Innings

	R	H	E
HARTFORD	102 100 112	8	9	2
UMASS	000 001 001	2	7	2

HARTFORD 8 (2-13)

Player	AB	R	H	PO	A	LOB
Brady Stauffer ss	4	2	2	0	1	1
Adam Bowser cf	4	1	3	1	0	0
Ben Sobanski 2bp	5	2	1	2	0	4
Bill Perry 3b	3	1	1	0	0	0
Ryan Crowley c	4	1	2	1	0	1
Erik Pyser rf	4	0	0	0	0	1
Chris Hebert dh	5	0	0	1	0	2
Jon Risso 2b	0	0	0	0	0	0
David Grossman 3b	4	0	0	0	1	3
Matt O'Connell lf	3	0	0	0	0	0
Andrew Dorman lf	0	1	0	0	0	0
C.J. Browne p	0	0	0	0	0	0
Totals	36	8	9	5	1	6

UMASS 2 (4-8)

Player	AB	R	H	RBI	BB	SO	LOB
Proctor ss	3	1	1	0	1	2	0
Tempesta 2b	4	0	1	1	0	0	5
Franczek 3b	4	1	1	0	0	1	1
Adamski 1b	4	0	1	3	0	1	9
Parkin cf	4	0	1	0	0	1	0
McDonald dh	3	0	0	0	0	0	0
MacDonald dh	4	0	1	0	0	1	0
Cassidy rf	3	0	0	1	0	1	0
Dingee lf	4	0	1	0	0	0	2
McPherson c	2	0	0	0	2	0	4
Bauduner ph	1	0	0	0	0	0	0
Kennel c	0	0	0	0	0	1	0
Walczak p	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
Erlenberg p	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
DiCaro p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Smith p	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Totals	33	2	7	2	3	7	23

Walczak (L, 0-1)

MINUTEMEN TAKE ON CHARLOTTE PAGE 10 | RYAN MONTBLEAU VISITS NOHO PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 61 LO: 28 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 2007

Old Chapel Revisited

The Old Chapel is one of the best-known structures on the University of Massachusetts campus. Built between 1884 and 1886, it was originally designed as a library, assembly space, and museum for the natural history collection. See story on Page 3.

SGA election stirred by accusations

Candidate reacts to controversy

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ruth Thompson, candidate for the trustee position of the Student Government Association (SGA), claims that offensive remarks she is accused of making were taken out of context.

Varun Vuppala, a University of Massachusetts junior and reported friend of Thompson, wrote a Facebook.com note regarding Thompson's remarks.

"1) Black people cannot be racist. 2) To be homophobic means you want to kill gay people. 3) I would not feel comfortable sitting next to a lesbian, for fear that she would hit on me," the Facebook note paraphrased Thompson as saying.

"The statements that I made in the SGA office were taken vastly out of context," Thompson said in a written statement yesterday. She continued by saying that focusing on internalized oppressions in society was the main point during the discussion in which these comments took place.

"I like most everyone have internalized racism (internal racism that exists WITHIN the Black community), internalized homophobia, and internalized sexism," Thompson said. "It is clear to people who know me that there is nothing that I care about more than challenging these oppressions."

"I fully understand that this conversation [took place] just after a recent hate crime on February 28 this assault was inspired by an extremely violent form of homophobia, and in fact, one of my misconstrued comments was that homophobia means 'killing gay people.'" Thompson continued by saying that she used this example

See SGA on page 2

Web site aids in internship search

BY EDEN UNVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts sophomore Alfred Megally has started a Web site for students to review and search for internships. The Web site, www.RateInternships.com, allows students to add a review of their internship experiences and search for internships that they may be interested in.

To add a review of an internship, a student can fill out a page asking about the intern's daily responsibilities, if they had a mentor or supervisor, the positive and negative aspects of their experience, and more. This is followed by general information about the student such as name (which is optional), e-mail, and major.

The student then rates aspects of the internship on a scale regarding the overall internship, including how challenging it was and compensation.

Finally, the student fills out basic information about the internship itself. One can also search for reviews by career field, the company name, and locations.

Students looking for an internship can check them out before applying, hence the Web site's slogan "Know Before You Go."

This was the case for Megally, who was looking for a summer internship, but did not know how to go about looking for one.

"As I was trying to find a summer internship I was overwhelmed by all the available options," said Megally. "I didn't have a particular preference, but knew that I wanted to be working somewhere where I would be busy learning new things rather than doing the brainless work which is, unfortunately at times, handed to interns. I began to search for student reviews of the programs that I was interested in, realizing that these would be helpful in discovering what the internship was really like, but did not find this resource. That is when I decided to make RateInternships.com."

According to Megally, an actual student's opinion of an internship may be different than how the internship is advertised and can help students make more informed decisions.

"When searching for an internship, it can be difficult to translate job descriptions into what your work experience might be like," said Megally. "A student perspective is unique, in that it can offer you a more realistic expectation of what it might be like to work at a company on a day-to-day basis."

The Web site is designed to be simple, but cover the basic information that a student would be interested to know or share about an internship experience.

See INTERNSHIP on page 2

Sorority to host fundraiser for breast cancer research

BY CARA GRANNEMANN AND EDEN UNVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tonight, the sisters of the University of Massachusetts sorority Kappa Kappa Gamma will host a "Pink Party" to raise money for breast cancer research.

The event will take place from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. inside the Fine Arts Center and will feature food, music, and the testimony of breast cancer survivors.

Admission is $5 and proceeds will be donated to the American Cancer Society.

"Breast cancer is a disease that is hurting women across the country. Being in a sorority, it's our duty to look out for women around the planet and raise funds to find a cure," said Emily Nichols, the Public Relations Chair of Kappa Kappa Gamma.

According to the American Cancer Society (ACS), breast cancer is the most common cancer among women. One in eight women will develop invasive breast cancer in their life time and the chance that breast cancer will be responsible for a woman's death is about 1 in 33 (3 percent). The ACS estimates that 178,480 new cases of invasive breast cancer will be diagnosed in 2007.

ACS states that while breast cancer is less common at a young age, younger women tend to have more aggressive breast cancers than older women.

Student buys bus, organizes cross-country trip

BY CARA GRANNEMANN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As students across America grow older and gain more responsibilities, their childhood dreams are often ignored and replaced with practicality and obligation. John Huston is not one of these people.

This proactive redheaded sophomore has planned to travel across the country on a regulation, yellow school bus shortly after the 2007 spring semester ends.

"Ever since I was a kid and played Oregon Trail, in between my massive hunts, in which I killed many buffalo and only took back 223 lbs. of meat, I had the dream to take a covered wagon across the country, but I couldn't find a covered wagon on eBay, so I bought a school bus," Huston said.

Sarcasm aside, Huston has been preparing for this trip for a long time.

"I had this idea about two months into my second semester freshmen year, and at this time I was getting my bus license because I got a job as a UMass bus driver," he said.

As the end of the semester draws near, Huston has become more confident in his summer plans.

"Now is the time where I have nothing to do. No commitments, I just want to leave my mark on the world," he said.

This journey will begin at UMass, bringing along 15 or so strangers from the area. The group will include mostly students who will be chosen through a process of interviews.

UMass student John Huston purchased a yellow school bus on eBay for $2,500, which he plans to drive across the United States this summer with about 15 other students.

John's idea for the cross-country trek began much to the displeasure of his family and friends.

"As I started to tell my friends about the idea, they all said 'you'll never do it, that's crazy,' and I didn't have much support from my parents either," said Huston.

After his $2,500 purchase of the school bus, however, his dream began to take shape. The expected three-week-long journey will travel all the way to the California coast, hitting the Great Plains, Iconi and Sundance along the way. Formal plans for the destinations, however, will not be decided until the group of approximately 15, forms.

During the overnights the travelers will be staying at campgrounds.

"As we're traveling across the vast countryside and deer are drinking from America's silver streams, we will be camping outdoors in tents, or if you prefer, on the bus in campground facilities," said Huston.

See BUS on page 2

Woman volunteers at local homeless shelter

BY MELISSA D'AMICO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As 28-year-old University of Massachusetts graduate student Molly Fenn waits outside a Springfield area family shelter to be let in by one of the shelter's staff members, a group of young children gather near the windows to look out at their friend.

This is simply the beginning of one of her weekly visits to the shelter. Fenn is not only their friend, but their Playspace Activity Leader (PAL), and volunteer for Horizons for Homeless Children (HHC), an organization established to improve the lives of homeless children and their families through early education and care programs.

HHC's Playspace Programs "collaborate with residents and staff of family shelters to design and build age-appropriate spaces," said Communications Specialist for Horizons for Homeless Children Colette O'Neill. "These areas are equipped with libraries, building blocks, art supplies, and more to challenge children physically and creatively and allow them to have a place to play and use their imaginations."

Donating two hours a week of her time, from 4-6 p.m. on Mondays, Fenn plays with a small group of children ranging from one to five years old.

"You don't have to worry about anything else, you just have to play," said Fenn. "We draw, play with play dough, read, and sing. There is no strict structure to what we have to do."

Fenn began working with HHC about six months ago, after seeing an advertisement for the organization.

"I was looking for something to do besides math, and this seemed perfect for me," Fenn said. "I got to work with kids and do something worth while at the same time."

Although she has done some volunteering in the past, Fenn had never been in a shelter before. The shelter in which she volunteers is small housing eight to nine families, in a large house.

"The shelter really feels like a home. There are women and children throughout the house, in the kitchen, talking with one another," Fenn said.

The Horizons for Homeless Children (HHC) organization offers early education and care programs for children.

See HOMELESS on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 107

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Scaion
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATING Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Delianis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING IN ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1918 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHING DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCAST LIVE SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING, RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Mass. homeless shelters create opportunities for children

HOMELESS from page 1

"Being a student, you don't really experience the feeling of home, and that is such a great thing to have."

As a PAL, Fenn spends her time interacting and teaching the young children through playing. Since she first began working with these children, Fenn has seen great improvement and progress from all of them.

"Most of these children don't get enough time playing, being talked to, and are not as trusting or verbally developed as I would have expected children this age to be," said Fenn.

"I have been able to see many of the children make progress and are now talking more and better than before. Children who would engage with me but kept their distance now run right over to me and are much more chit chatty with me."

Coming into this new experience, Fenn had some initial worries. With kids moving in and out of the Playspace area, she felt that she needed to know where the children were at all times. Knowing that the children's mothers are nearby adds a greater comfort to being with the children.

"We are not in charge of any type of discipline, and the children know that. We are a completely positive experience, and the children are always very excited to see us," Fenn said.

Fenn also had worries, when she first began, that she would not be able to fill the two-hour period with activities for the children. She soon realized, however, that this was not difficult at all. "The children love to and know how to play and they know what they like to do and what they do not," said Fenn.

The Playspace, designed by HHC, within this shelter, is well-stocked with puzzles, blocks, books, dress-up clothing, and a closet filled with arts and crafts supplies.

"It is filled with just about any kind of supply you'd want, and [HHC] is great about continually restocking the supplies," Fenn said. "It is really a great place to be in. There are a ton of books, and the toys are all simple, basic, easy for all children to use, and nothing too loud or battery operated."

Coming from a family with three siblings, Fenn is a family oriented person. "My younger brother is fourteen years younger than me, and so I've been around kids before. But, I think that [understanding how to act with children] comes naturally for most people," Fenn said.

Volunteering with HHC has become one of Fenn's most enjoyable experiences, and she wonders how she will be able to replace it once she leaves Massachusetts.

"Getting to see kids again is huge. Once children believe that you like them, they throw love at you. I've really missed that. And where else would I get to go and play with play dough for two hours a week?" Fenn said. "It's the best part of my entire week, and I would volunteer a lot more if I had even more time."

Horizons for Homeless Children was established in 1988 in "response to the unmet needs of the alarming number of children living in Boston-area homeless shelters," said O'Neill. "HHC's mission and focus is to improve the lives of homeless children and their families. HHC accomplishes this mission by providing homeless children in Massachusetts with the nurturing, stimulation, and opportunities for early education and play that all children need to learn and grow in healthy ways. HHC also connects the parents of the children served with the tools they need to achieve social and economic self-sufficiency."

HHC works toward their goals through the organization's four core programs. These programs are the Community Children's Centers, full-time childcare and early education centers; the Playspace Programs, shelter-based volunteer programs; Training and Technical Assistance program, and their Policy and Advocacy Initiative.

Melissa D'Amico can be reached at mdamico@student.umass.edu.

Amherst Police log

Patients fight at Mental Health Center

Tuesday
March 27

10:08 a.m.

A UMass student reported to police when she realized her wallet had been missing after getting off a Peter Pan bus. The wallet contained a $750 check to the Isenberg School of Management, a $100 bill, and two passports.

2:41 p.m.

Residents of East Hadley Road reported to police that Daniel Cyr, a neighbor, was missing. Cyr allegedly has a history of bi-polar disorder and has been off his medications. Police arrived and found no one at the residence.

9:15 p.m.

Police pulled over a White Toyota Corolla for failing to stop at the red light intersection of North and South Pleasant Streets. Police also found the headlight had been out and could smell marijuana from the vehicle. A small amount of marijuana, a pipe with residue, and rolling papers were confiscated.

10:01 p.m.

Jae H. Choi, 34, of the Boulders residence on East Hadley Road, was arrested for destruction of property. Choi allegedly smashed the victim's Gateway laptop worth $600.

Wednesday
March 28

12:05 a.m.

Tiffany Lyn Chappel, 22, of Amherst was arrested for assault with a dangerous weapon while staying in the Franklin Hampshire Community Mental Health Center. Chappel and another patient were fighting when she began to smash dishes and started to hit the victim with them. Chappel was later transported to the Amherst Police Department.

2:20 a.m.

A breaking and entering occurred on North East Street. The reporting party left her residence and later returned to find the screen of the front window ripped down and the 27-inch Sony TV and a stack of about 15 DVDs missing.

–Compiled by Holly Seabury

Trip planner asks MTV, Xhibit to 'pimp his ride'

BUS from page 1

This bus, however, won't be like the lumpy leathery seats of childhood.

"I'm putting couches and carpeting down [in the bus]. A place where people can hang out..."

Huston is hoping that MTV will be able to aid in this part of the adventure.

He said, "I wrote a long and earnest letter to Xhibit about pimpin' my bus out, but he never wrote me back. I think he's going to surprise me."

According to Huston, the open interview process will begin soon, and fliers will be posted around the campus. Huston's ideal rag-tag group of travelers will include, "...anyone who wants to make a lot of friends, have lots of fun, and have an experience that they will never have again."

However, his mission statement is mostly about experience rather than personal growth.

"The idea is just to experience the outdoors, be spontaneous, and see something we haven't seen before. We are not trying to 'find ourselves'; if you haven't found yourself yet, then you can't come on the trip," said Huston.

SGA members address allegations to help show the different levels of homophobic behavior.

SGA from page 1

"I know that to say that 'homophobia means only to kill someone you think is gay' is like saying 'you can only be racist if you kill or want to kill someone because of their race.' Both of these statements are quite obviously absurd and if anyone interpreted my comments in that way that is a matter of their interpretation, not my beliefs," she said in the statement.

"Oppression is oppression and it should not separate [the different groups on campus]," Thompson stated. "We as marginalized groups should be addressing the issues of oppression as a whole, but this takes hard work and dialog, which is exactly what I am and have been committed to, and this is exactly why I was participating in the discussion in the SGA in the first place."

Thompson's comments were "insulting and frustrating," said Jaimie Corliss, SGA Secretary of the Registry. "Ruth genuinely tries to work on many social issues, but has some work to do herself, much like the rest of us."

The note, published on Facebook early Tuesday morning, was made to "allow the voters to see some of the things that Ruth has said and allow them to decide," Vuppala wrote.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu

Eden Univer can be reached at EUniver@student.umass.edu.

Site helps students find jobs

INTERNSHIP from page 1

Megally said, "I decided to give the Web site a minimalist style, making it easy to navigate and user-friendly, as to not take away from the content of the site. It takes minutes to submit a review and seconds to search a database."

So far, the site is directed at UMass students in any major, but he hopes to expand to other colleges. He emphasizes that the most important part of the site is the student reviews.

2007 ok go

BEN FOLDS
TALIB KWELI
Ok GO!
EeF BARZELAY

HOSTED BY:
DENNIS HASKINS
aka: "Mr. Belding" from Saved by the Bell
Umass Students get in
FREE!
Five College $15
General Public $35

UMAS Spring Concert

Umass Student Presale Monday
April 2 at 10 AM
General Public / Five College sale
on April 7
Must have UCard for ticket and entry

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is hiring Copy Editors for the Fall 2007 semester.

Interested?

Pick up an application at the Daily Collegian, located in the campus center basement or contact Sheryl Wolnik at swolnik@student.umass.edu

4TH ANNUAL MILLER LECTURE

BOSCH'S ENMITY

Exploring the paintings and drawings of the mysterious Heironymous Bosch (c. 1450–1516)

JOSEPH LEO KOERNER
Renowned scholar of Northern Renaissance art and currently a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow in Florence, Italy

WEDNESDAY APRIL 4 7PM
Weinstein Auditorium
Wright Hall, Smith College
Free and open to all
No reservations necessary

413.585.2760
www.smith.edu/artmuseum
Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA 01063

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

UMass' Old Chapel remains empty after 11 years

By Melissa Toulouse
Collegian Correspondent

On a campus where the vast majority of the buildings are made of various shades of mundane gray concrete and desert-dusty brown brick and whose shapes seem to have been inspired by quadrilaterals, any beauty is a welcoming sight. Built from local Pelham granite and accented with beautifully hued brown stone quoins from Longmeadow, the Old Chapel is a visual oasis in a barren desert of concrete squares.

The Old Chapel is one of the best known structures on the University of Massachusetts campus. Countless students pass by it each day as they pass through the center of campus. As one of the more visually pleasing sights on campus, the Old Chapel has come to be equated with UMass, its image is splashed all over the UMass Web site and brochures. This hallmark of the University, however has not been open to the public for 11 years. Why has such a gem of the University been left unused for so long?

"It should be a jewel box," UMass Capital Project manager Richard Nathhorst said. "It should be the Faneuil Hall of the campus."

Faneuil Hall has played an integral role for the residents of Boston. Serving as a marketplace and meeting hall since 1742, it is still used today. Nathhorst wants the Old Chapel to be as much a part of the University as Faneuil Hall is a part of Boston.

Nathhorst was here when the building was first closed in 1996 because of structural instability, and it has not been open to the public since. The steeple has since been repaired and restored and the bells can still be heard chiming throughout the campus, but the doors remain closed.

The original bell, Old Aggie, that chimed for the first time in 1892, found itself replaced by new Carillon Bells 42 bells to be exact.

However, Nathhorst added that that steeple was not the only thing that needs to be repaired. "Substantial restructuring needs to be done," Nathhorst said.

The cost for completely renovating the building was set by Nathhorst at roughly $15 million. However, the administration has yet to authorize fund raising, Nathhorst says. The money raised would be used for the historic preservation and restoration of the Old Chapel as part of an Alumni Capital Campaign, according to Nathhorst.

Even if the $15 million was acquired, what would the Old Chapel be used for? It would certainly not return to its function as a chapel. Why? Because it never was a chapel.

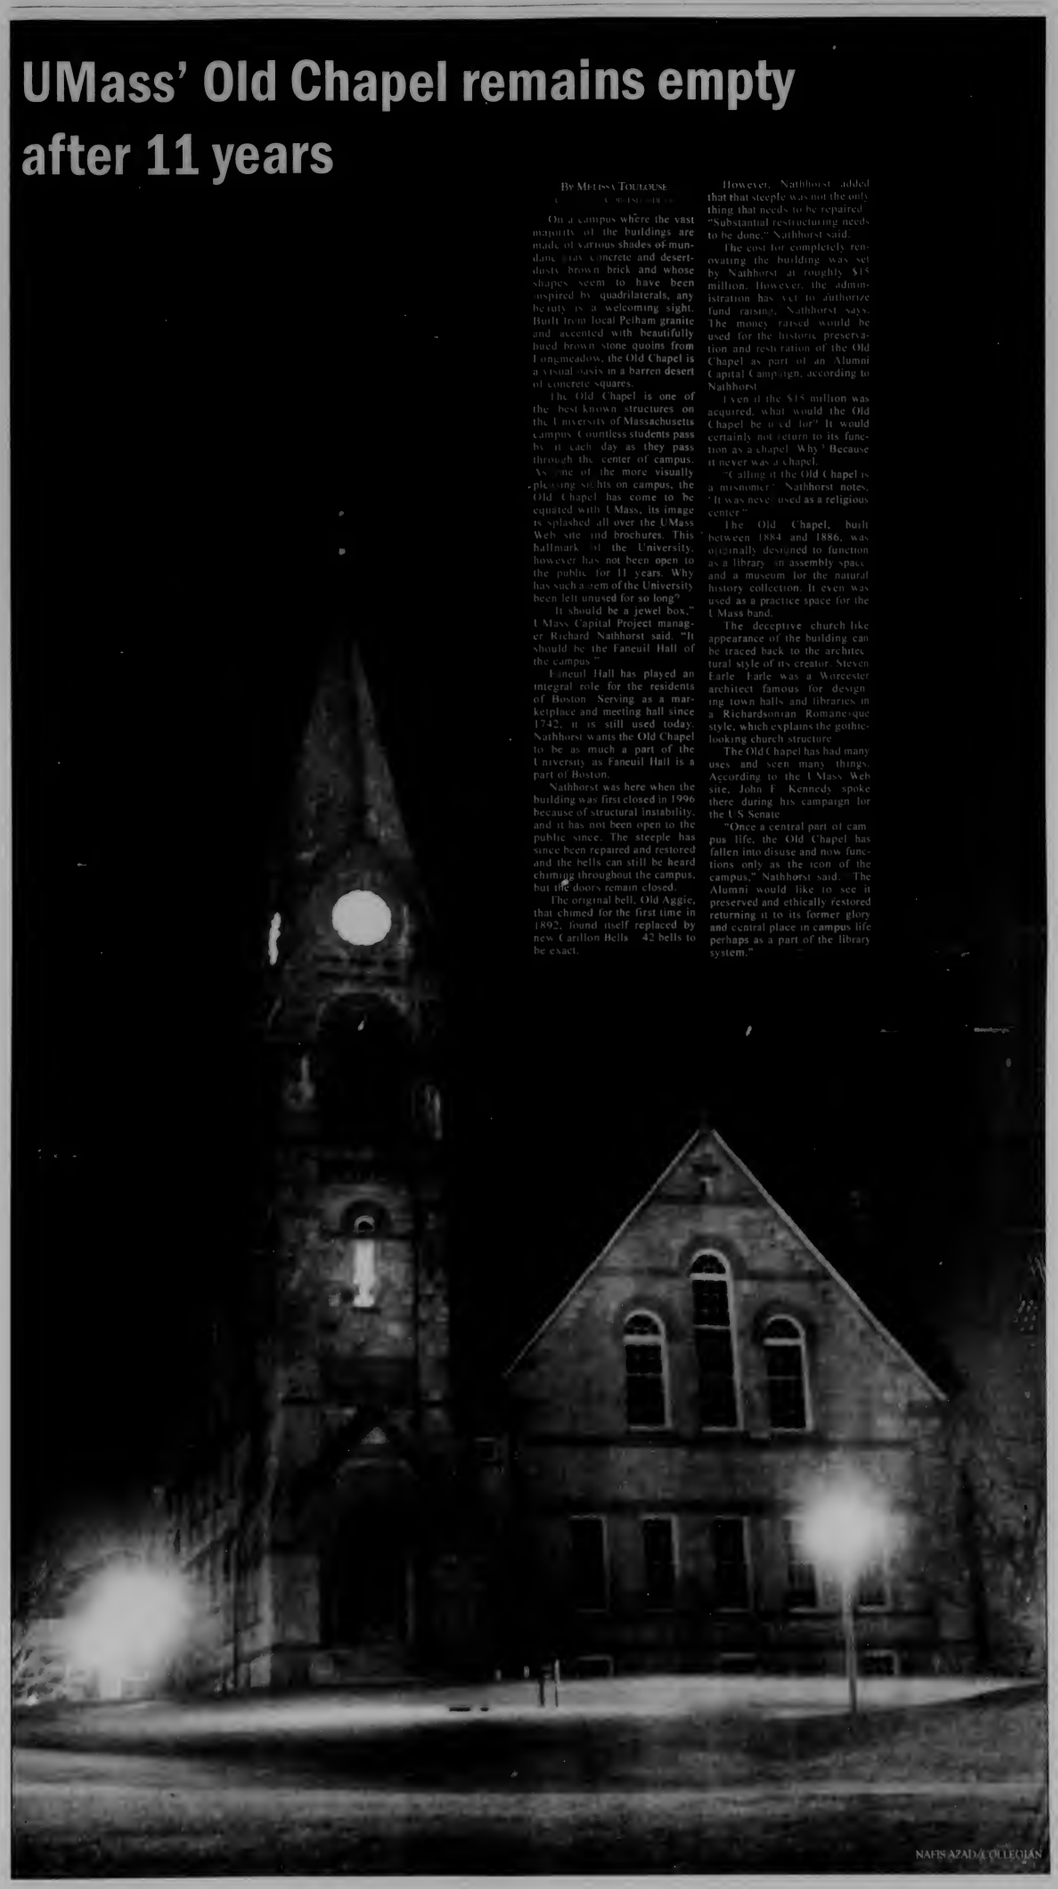
"Calling it the Old Chapel is a misnomer," Nathhorst notes. "It was never used as a religious center."

The Old Chapel, built between 1884 and 1886, was originally designed to function as a library, an assembly space and a museum for the natural history collection. It even was used as a practice space for the UMass band.

The deceptive church like appearance of the building can be traced back to the architectural style of its creator. Steven Earle. Earle was a Worcester architect famous for designing town halls and libraries in a Richardsonian Romanesque style, which explains the gothic-looking church structure.

The Old Chapel has had many uses and seen many things. According to the UMass Web site, John F. Kennedy spoke there during his campaign for the U.S. Senate.

"Once a central part of campus life, the Old Chapel has fallen into disuse and now functions only as the icon of the campus," Nathhorst said. The Alumni would like to see it preserved and ethically restored returning it to its former glory and central place in campus life perhaps as a part of the library system."



NAFIS AZAD/COLLEGIAN

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

You and the UMPD

Katy Bruck

Like most people, I am very familiar with the kind of fear that arises from seeing flashing blue lights in your rearview mirror. Fortunately for me, I've had the opportunity to experience being on the other end of this, lending me to learn that most of these intimidating figures really are good guys. In fact, they are guys that genuinely just want to help people, regardless of age or association.

But since coming to college, particularly UMass where the concentration of potential trouble-makers is unrivaled on the entire East coast, I've seen a different side of the cop-laymen dynamic. Maybe it's just me, but I tend to live my life on the principle that it's never okay to be rude – to anyone, for any reason. But, I've noticed some pretty shocking rudeness in the last few years, on behalf of both cops and students.

Now, it doesn't take a rocket scientist to know that you just should not mouth off to a police officer. Not only is it disrespectful, but it is pretty much guaranteed to get you the most severe punishment for whatever offense you're suspected of. There are a lot of practical reasons to be civil to figures of authority (even if you're not in trouble), but it's also good to remember that they're people too.

I recently had a lengthy conversation with a young guy whose father is a police officer in Danvers, Mass. and has ambitions to follow in his dad's footsteps. It was interesting to hear a perspective on law enforcement from someone who is familiar with police officers being people before cops. Despite their superhuman ability to instill fear, these guys were teenagers once, and they probably have families now. It takes a lot of guts to be a cop, even a small town one. It takes a special kind of person to want to deal with other people's problems for a living, which is essentially what cops do. Clean up other peoples' messes for as little as $30,000 a year.

In the same vein that students need to remember that cops are people, I think there is often a lack of this thinking on the part of police officers, particularly some of the UMass officers. I'm probably making my life harder by having this printed in the campus newspaper, but we're people too, dammit!

A friend and I recently chose to temporarily park in the paved courtyard in front of Leach dorm. Though this area is (apparently) intended for pedestrian use, many people park their cars here when unloading after break. After a few trips, we came outside to see a cruiser idling next to his car. Naturally, fearing for his driving record and not wanting to have to pay a ticket, my friend (a male, wearing a baseball cap) walked over to the cruiser and politely asked if it was okay that we were parked there. The officer in the front seat replied, "Well, it is a sidewalk" in a tone implying that my friend must be a total moron, and allowed the dog in the back of the cruiser to bark and snarl while my friend obligingly moved his car.

Assuming that every individual under a certain age is an idiot and potential criminal isn't exactly practical either.

This seems like a minor incident of rudeness, and it was. But it serves as one of many examples of the lack of something I like to call respect. It's not the first time I've witnessed a UMass police officer talk to a student as if they were mentally impaired. I have no doubt in my mind that there are jackasses out there for police to deal with, and at UMass we probably house a fair share of them. But just as assuming every cop out there is a jerk (and treating them that way) will make a civilian's life harder, assuming that every individual under a certain age is an idiot and potential criminal isn't exactly practical either. Not only does it create a general attitude of dissent, but I can imagine it makes one's job pretty depressing.

I don't blame any exasperation that the UMPD may feel towards the student body, particularly with last semester's rioting, but that relatively small group of individuals is coming to represent the entire UMass campus as being rowdy, disrespectful and in need of discipline. Now, there seems to be an attitude among the UMPD that this is warranted.

Maybe it is, who knows. All I know is that the relationship between students on this campus, and the officers that are supposed to protect them (sometimes from themselves) has turned from a potentially positive, respectful relationship, into a mix of fear and condescension. Not every student on this campus is a binge drinking, swearing, spoiled little brat that doesn't understand personal accountability.

Some of the most successful small-town cops that I've met have been the ones who understand that not every kid is out to make their job more difficult. Despite our occasional mistakes, we deserve to be treated with respect, and if we're shown that respect, we're more likely to reciprocate it. I'm certainly not making excuses for anyone, but for practicality's sake, there really is no reason to be rude or pass premature judgment on anyone – cop or student.

Katy Bruck can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS FOR NEXT SEMESTER!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Send it e-mail to editorial@dailycollegian.com

It's about time to tune in

Joe Hughes

Most likely when you turn on your radio, whether it be in the morning or afternoon, in the car or at home, you will hear the same music you've been hearing for the past four months – repetitive, homogenous, annoying and simply put, just plain bad music. It's unfortunate that the music that's being aired on the radio is composed with business rather than art in mind, a formulaic tool designed to make money rather than inspire. I won't name any specific artists or songs, but more often than not, the best music out there are on the tracks that are never aired.

That's where stations such as WMUA come in.

WMUA is located in the basement of the Campus Center. The station was opened in 1949 and has been playing 24 hours a day, seven days a week ever since. It is run by UMass students, and the DJs are all volunteers who play whatever music they want to air. Utilizing a studio with thousands of records and CDs, innovative artists such as RJ D2, Pinback, Michael Franti and Jedi Mind Tricks can be heard by the masses. 91.1 is a refuge on the radio waves for anyone who wants to hear music they've never heard before.

Part of the beauty of the station is not knowing what will be on when you tune in. With a wide diversity of backgrounds and ages, music ranges from any style at any time. When you switch to the frequency, you could hear Minneapolis underground rapper Brother Ali, or it could be a drum solo in Brazil. It could be Celtic, or it could be some local rock group no one's ever heard of.

Not only is unknown and unheard music allowed to be aired, but students and Amherst residents now have a voice.

Most importantly, it is music that is finally heard. However, this is only the beginning.

With the prospect of an FCC permitted uncensored period of airing music after 10 p.m. on week nights in the works at WMUA, the music possibilities may soon be endless. A whole plethora of censored music that before has seldom been aired may soon be heard in its entirety, pending a vote among the members of WMUA. The easing of censorship rules on non-commercial stations at certain times has already come into effect at studios nationwide.

Yet not only is unknown and unheard music allowed to be aired, but students and Amherst residents now have a voice. In a country that was built on the premise of the public sharing of ideas and opinions, general media is restricted to a very modest few. With the advent of local and listener funded stations, everyone has the ability to speak their minds.

In an age where the Internet provides an outlet for public announcements and discourse, where no one leaves their homes without a cell phone, and e-mail and instant messaging enables immediate worldwide contact, public interpersonal communication has reached a renaissance. It is incontestable that the public sharing of information and ideas is key to bettering ourselves as a whole and as a society. Digital shared video databases such as YouTube, as well as podcasts have commenced the ability of anybody to broadcast what they want to express, whether that means showing a debate on social issues or a monkey drinking urine.

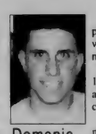
Nowadays, towns have both a local television and radio station – yet for the most part they are largely ignored by the mass public. It is unfortunate, because much of this has to do with their deficiency in advertising and lack of broad marketing due to insufficient funding. Due to the nature of the station – that plays whatever it would like and airs whomever wants to be heard – is a crippling catch-22 that will remain. For stations such as these cannot also be appealing to the general public without the restrictive regulations of their big-name brothers.

It is still, however, up to each one of us to give local, non-commercial stations a chance anyway, not only for the sake of it keeping this important outlet alive, but mostly for ourselves. We are missing out on a means of new ideas and thinking, undiscovered music that never had a chance to be played, and a whole world that has yet to be opened. The music is for anyone who once walked into a small record store looking for something special and unique, and saw the masses of unknown artists and labels, the has-beens and the never-beens, and wondered what those records sound like.

You probably thought about buying one of their records, but never gave them a chance because you reasoned that they could not be good, or there's simply too many of them. However, because of local radio stations, they are on the radio waves right in front of our ears. We just need to listen.

Joe Hughes can be reached at jhughes@student.umass.edu.

Out of the closet and into the trenches



Domenic Poli

There was once a time when black people could not join the military. There was also once a time when women could not join the military.

But legislation passed in 1866 and 1942, respectively, changed all of that and got the ball rolling on fighting discrimination in America.

Since the very beginning of our nation's history, certain Americans have been chipping away at the foundation of prejudice and inequality in order to make a more democratic and equal United States – and we've come a long way.

Despite our progress over the years, however, there remains a group of people who still can't choose one of the most honorable acts possible – to serve their country in battle.

The people I am referring to here are homosexuals.

For years, young men and women looking to join the military had to identify their sexual orientation on their enlistment form. And if they admitted to being gay, they were rejected.

Then in 1993 President Bill Clinton took the biggest leap in history for gay rights in the military when he signed the 'Don't Ask, Don't Tell' policy. Basically, the bill said the government wouldn't ask an enlisting private if he/she were gay as long as he/she didn't say they were gay.

It was a compromise between banning homosexuals entirely and allowing them to serve while being open about their sexuality. But the policy is not exactly justice, for as soon as a soldier admits to his/her sexual orientation, he/she is discharged. In actuality, this is simply one of the better examples of the lack of acceptance that has plagued this country since its earlier hour.

Whether or not a soldier is gay is nobody's business. A soldier enlists in the military because he/she wants to serve the country and rejecting an aspiring private simply because of what he/she does under the covers is as discriminatory as anything I've ever heard.

But, good news might be on the horizon for homosexual patriots.

Representative Marty Meehan (D-Mass) has reintroduced a bill that would repeal the military's policy on barring gays. It would allow gay and lesbian soldiers to serve while open about their homosexuality.

Meehan proposed the bill last year with 122 co-sponsors, but it got squashed in the Republican-lead Congress. But this year the Dems have control and, thus, the bill has a better chance of passing.

According to Meehan, the bill now has more than 100 co-sponsors and seven freshmen. It even has the support of three Republicans – one of which is Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen of Florida.

She says she is in favor of the bill because her husband, Dexter, was cared for by a lesbian nurse when he was wounded in combat in Vietnam. But even with the increasing support, this whole debate is still pretty embarrassing.

Every member of the US Congress should be trying to get this bill passed. That is, at least, if they consider themselves real Americans.

The United States is supposed to be the land of equality and freedom. Whites, blacks, Orientals, gays/lesbians, fat people, short people, tall people should all be treated equal by the law. Every time someone is treated differently because of who they are, it spits in the face of everything America is meant to stand for.

The U.S. is supposed to be the 'home of the free' and whenever a group of people that are a little different than the norm are discriminated against it is like someone wiping their mouth with the American flag.

Since the policy was signed into law, 11,000 soldiers – almost the amount as one army division – have been kicked out of the armed forces simply for coming out of the closet. Of those 11,000, 38 have been Arabic translators – a group in short commodity.

Any citizen that is willing to take up arms to defend his/her country should be praised – not discriminated against...

The people who sent us into Iraq and are now scrounging for more military recruits are the same people booting soldiers out because of what they like to do in the privacy of their own homes.

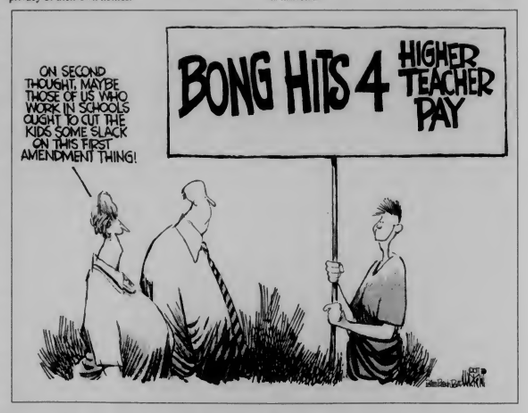
Attention politicians: If you want to keep gays and lesbians out of the armed services, you are not real Americans. You are pseudo-American bigots and a disgrace to this nation.

Any citizen that is willing to take up arms to defend his/her country should be praised – not discriminated against for what they like to do in the privacy of their own homes. Period.

So don't even try suggesting those pinheads that are opposed to gays and lesbians being in the military are trying to keep the best interest of the troops in mind. The soldiers say they're on the level. It is merely a bunch of idiotic, homophobic numbskulls that want to discriminate against people to keep their own 'ideal' America intact.

Well, morons, enough is enough.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu



ON SECOND THOUGHT, MAYBE THOSE OF US WHO WORK IN SCHOOLS OUGHT TO CUT THE KIDS SOME SLACK ON THIS FIRST AMENDMENT THING!
BONG HITS 4 HIGHER TEACHER PAY

Follow the Golden Rule

Kevin Pascucci

Last week, thousands of students from the University of Massachusetts traveled to different parts of the world to enjoy their spring vacation. I myself traveled down to Orlando, Fl. with some friends. While I was in one of the area's major theme parks one night, I decided to catch dinner at one of the popular restaurants there. During my meal, I watched as a waiter repeatedly brought out cups of milk for a kid sitting near us. Every time the waiter brought out a new cup, the kid would throw it on the ground as his parents laughed at him. Rather than reprimanding their son, these people thought it was funny that this guy had to repeatedly clean up after their bratty kid. This reminded me of our tendency as tourists to treat other people like lesser beings.

For some reason, many people expect something of the residents of the area they are vacationing in. People go on vacation to have a good time, and therefore they expect the people who live there to do everything in their power to help them achieve their picture perfect vacation. It's this attitude that transforms perfectly nice people into jerks.

Living in the Berkshire Mountains, I dealt with my fair share of tourists and visitors growing up. People would travel from all over to come and visit what was normally my home. For these people though, my home was their vacationland, and therefore I was a part of their vacation. I had no idea that I was under the employment of visiting tourists, but apparently I was.

While I was working at the local grocery store, I constantly dealt with out-of-towners who were less than friendly with me. On one occasion, a guy who was obviously not from around my hometown made fun of me to my face merely to get a laugh out of his girlfriend. I'm sure that guy went home and told all of his friends about how clever he was when he made fun of one of the locals on his vacation. Unfortunately, his story was at my expense.

Our morals and decision-making processes seem to change when we journey far from home.

I'm not sure what it is about being on vacation, but our morals and decision-making processes seem to change when we journey far from home. I don't know about other people, but when I go on a trip, I tend to spend my money a little more loosely than I would at home. Something like this doesn't necessarily affect others, but is still something that happens sub-consciously. When someone on vacation behaves differently towards strangers than they normally would, I don't believe that they necessarily realize they are doing it.

If you traveled somewhere over spring break, think of all the people you came into contact with. Every one of those people has a life, and believe it or not, their lives do not revolve around making sure that you have your dream vacation. Long after you go home, those people will still be there just trying to get by and provide for themselves and their families.

Think of it this way: if you were a guest in someone's home, would you walk into their house and begin making demands of that person while treating them rudely? I didn't think so. Granted, when someone takes a job at an amusement park or at a popular restaurant, I'm sure they are well aware of the type of people they are going to be dealing with. That doesn't necessarily mean that we as tourists have to live up to the standard though.

According to the Travel Industry Association, travel and tourism is a $1.3 trillion industry in the United States. You don't need to do the math to understand that that's a lot of people who decide to venture from home each year, whether it is for leisure or business. Either way, we are all constantly interacting with people from all over the country. Rather than acting like an invading conqueror, why not just take the time to step back and think about others for once. You never know, it might make that person's day.

The next time you are on vacation, just try to think about the ways your actions affect others. While I was in Florida, my friends and I decided to go on the Back to the Future Ride, which they are shutting down for good at the end of March. When we got there, there was a massive line of people waiting to get on. My friends and I were friendly to the kid who was guarding the express-pass line, and without us asking, he let us into the shorter line, and we only had to wait about five minutes. You're nice to somebody, and you end up getting something in return. Imagine that.

Kevin Pascucci can be reached at kpascucci@student.umass.edu.

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS FOR NEXT SEMESTER!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Send it e-mail to editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Boston-based band ventures back to Noho

Ryan Montbleau Band set to rock tonight at Iron Horse

By Morgan-ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

Tonight the Ryan Montbleau Band will play at the Iron Horse Music Hall at 20 Center St. in Northampton. The show is set to start at 11 p.m., with soul musician Jesse Dee opening at 10 p.m. If tonight's show is anything like the last few times Ryan Montbleau and his band have come through the Iron Horse, their set is sure to be a crowd pleaser.

Hailing from Boston, the music of Montbleau's band is best described as folk-blues Americana, infusing a strong grass-root sound. Performing an average of over 200 shows each year, the band has managed to gain more and more momentum.

Their fan base is growing along with their prolificacy. So far front man Ryan has three albums under his belt; two solo albums, "Begin" (2002) and "Stages" (2003) and one official full-band release, "One Fine Color" (2006). But according to the band, the best is yet to come. The indie-quintet is currently in the studio finishing up the recording of their second full-band release album, which at the moment is untitled. Montbleau bassist, Matt Gianarros, says that their new creation will be different than their last.

"It's not as 'rootsy.' It's still a singer/songwriter album, and it still has the Ryan Montbleau Band sound, but its definitely got more of a modern flair," said Gianarros.

The album, which is tentatively scheduled to come out in October of this year, is in response to Montbleau band fans who've been craving new material.

"With our last album, we'd been playing the song for one and a half years. It was seasoned, and all our fans knew those songs very well," said Gianarros, who also mentioned that tonight's set will only feature one or two songs from the new album. The band's reluctance about exposing too much of their new material is because they want fans to appreciate the fresh sounds at the time of the album's fall release.

While there's still touching up that needs to be done, mainly mixing string and horn arrangements, the album's recording is finished. "We went in for about ten days. Everything's pretty much done. It's been great; the sounds we were getting were beautiful," said Gianarros.

While not a concept album, Gianarros said it does have a lot of themes that continuously occur, such as losing a loved one.

"A friend of ours passed away not so long ago, the end of December…a lot of themes have to do with him," said Gianarros. Some other "loss" type songs touch on the subject of romance, consequential pain resulting from the end of relationships, and rebirth – what Gianarros calls "looking to the future."

The band's tour will continue in Syracuse, N.Y. tomorrow night, and from there the band will travel to Baltimore, Md. on April 5, Vienna, Va. on April 6, and Plains, Pa. on April 7. The band will be returning to New England on April 11, with a show at The Gorge in Poultney, Vt. The band will finally bring it home to Boston on April 14, playing a show at the Paradise Rock Club.

Tonight's show at the Iron Horse is all ages, and costs $14 at the door, or $11 ahead of time.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at mrousseau@student.umass.edu.

Ryan Montbleau, above, has put together two solo albums in addition to his work with the band.

The Ryan Montbleau Band, who originate from Boston, released one album in 2006 and one is in the works that is set to drop this fall. They plan on only playing a few songs from the new album at tonight's show.

Not Ready for Bedtime Players bring show to Southwest

Skits discuss health, sex issues at UMass with wit and humor

By Katherine Nocera
Collegian Correspondent

Becca Keohane and Erin Callahan decided to become Not Ready for Bedtime Players after seeing the troop perform. They feel that this is a fun way to make a difference on the UMass campus.

The Patterson Lounge in the Southwest Residential Area was packed with students this past Wednesday night, all anticipating the first on-campus performance from the Not Ready for Bedtime Players. The audience was a combination of Southwest residents, interested students, friends of the players, and those who were required to attend for class. These individual reasons didn't matter, because by the end of the show people were cheering, rolling with laughter, and feeling very positive about the educational experience they had just witnessed.

The Not Ready for Bedtime Players is an on-campus troop of students sponsored by University of Health Services' Health Education department, who perform shows during both the fall and spring semesters. The goal of each of these shows is to educate, make people laugh, and open up dialogue about the important issues surrounding safer sex, sexuality, binge drinking, homophobia, and AIDS awareness. While the troop is directed by Diane Fedorchak, the Players are all students who write their own skits, and bring with them their individual experiences of what it's actually like to deal with these issues at the University of Massachusetts.

Becca Keohane, a freshman, said she saw the troop during orientation. "What struck me about them was that they swore, and they were real. They were all students and not a bunch of health educators trying to lecture. I wanted to be a part of it."

This sentiment is echoed by the other members of the troop.

Malcolm Pradia, also a freshman, said it wasn't a choice. "I will be a part of this," he said. Pradia said that he sees the troop as a tribe where each member has a voice and they all contribute to make the show what it is.

The show opened with cast members coming forward and introducing themselves. The

See BEDTIME on page 6

Knitting wraps up a new generation

By Allison Edes
Collegian Correspondent

Gone are the days of little old ladies sitting in rocking chairs wearing heavy, draping shawls and Coke-bottle glasses, knitting a sweater for an unsuspecting grandchild. There are still grandmothers that do just that, but now that scene is changing. The woolen shawls have been replaced with chic, vibrantly colored knit messenger bags. The sweaters are now pastel pink iPod holders made from alpaca yarn. The rocking chairs are now classroom desks. The grandmothers are now college students getting a few rows of knitting in before class starts.

"For Christmas of 2002, my mom gave my sister and myself a pair of needles and yarn, in the hopes that one of us would pick up the hobby," said Bethany Sherwood, a comparative literature major at University of Massachusetts. "In the end, it was me, the child who never wanted to cook or fold laundry, who gave it a try."

The knitting trend is growing among college-aged people. According to a Craft Yarn Council of America 2004 tracking study, 50 percent of the knitting industry is made up of 18 to 34 year olds. Aside from knitting trade magazines, major magazine titles are now coming out with sister knitting publications. Better Homes and Gardens of the Meredith Corporation teamed up with Lion Brand Yarn to publish Knit It!, a needlework magazine, which printed its first issue on Dec. 26, 2001. Vogue magazine, which also teamed up with Lion Brand Yarn, published the premier of their knitting magazine, Knit.1, in the fall of 2004, which targets knitters ages 18 to 35.

"Younger people started getting into knitting about five years ago," said Linda Daniels, owner of Northampton Wools for 25 years. "The trend is a combination of a lot of different things. Knit wear began to be shown on a lot of runways and in fashion. Also, part of the hands-on appeal is in response to the high tech world. The manufacture of yarn really took off. Fiber is more appealing. The different dyes and ways to combine fibers are amazing. Everything is so improved."

Yarn is no longer limited in colors or fabrics, as can be seen by looking around The Creative Needle, a knitting store in Amherst owned for the past 24 years by Elaine Barker. Sitting behind the counter of her cramped but cozy store she gives off a comforting vibe. On the left side of the store, there are balls of different yarns squished into cubby holes. On the right side, a wall of knitting books, magazines, and patterns dominates. Above, embroidery patterns hang from the ceiling, while a few feet below, a rack of sweaters, afghans, and scarves sit lined up with homemade price tags on them.

"There's been a lot of bling bling in yarns," said Barker as she piled up different skeins of yarn on a cluttered white table. And she was certainly right. She displayed a ball of yarn that didn't look like yarn at all, but neon-colored feathers with bits of metallic streamers interspersed throughout the fiber. This is definitely not your grandma's yarn.

In an effort to fight the "grandma" stigma, in addition to magazines, authors are now coming out with books geared specifically toward a younger, hipper knitting generation.

"Unconsciously, I did attach the 'It's only for grandmas!' stigma to knitting," said Sherwood. "But because of Debbie Stoller's vocal

See KNITTING on page 6

Debbie Stoller, author of "Stitch 'n Bitch," introduced knitting to an entirely new generation of women.

Jump into erotica with 2007's best sexy short stories

By Jennifer O'Brien
Collegian Columnist

Real sex is elusive and underground, or so says Susie Bright, who put together this year's edition of "The Best American Erotica." One only has to glance at the latest Cosmo, where commercialized sex runs rapid, to see that her claim is not unfounded. "The Best American Erotica 2007" may offer an alternative.

The fact that this is the fourteenth edition of the book speaks for itself. These books, which are collections of short stories and excerpts from novels, boasts something for every taste and preference.

Bright declares in her introduction that she will not "publish pulp about Mr. and Mrs. HappyPants waltzing down the shore to an ending you can see a mile away," nor will she publish prose whose objective is mere titillation.

And some of these stories do live up to this high standard of intelligently provocative prose. Take, for instance, Vanesa Baggott's "On the Eighth Day," which reimagines the creation story as a sexualized power struggle between God, Mother Earth, and Mother Nature. There is also an excerpt from Dennis Cooper's novel "The Sluts," an experimental piece told through a series of online customer reviews of a mysterious young hustler. Peggy Munson's "The Rock Wall," is a poetic exploration of a lesbian with an Electra complex. Lastly, an excerpt from Alicia Erian's "Towelhead," which details an above average tale of high school sex, is also included.

But some of the stories were disappointing and trashy in comparison to that handful of thoughtful gems. The excerpt from Octavia Butler's novel "Fledgling" might best be described as a sci-fi mystery thriller. The storyline includes a man picking up an unidentified, flesh-eating, blood-sucking child from the side of the road and secretly keeping it stored away in his house for his own pleasure. Unfortunately, Butler's flat and boring writing style makes this one difficult to finish reading.

The same could be said for Jessica Cutler's except from "The Washingtonienne," an account of a group of rich girls from Washington spending their Wednesday nights clubbing and exchanging sex acts for money. Void of irony, statements like, "it never hurts to make friends with someone who has a lot of drugs" are meant to be sexy, but are really degrading and distasteful.

The greatest aspect of the book, namely its diversity and the range that provides something for every reader, may just be its downfall. While the collection is perfect for curious erotica first-timers who are feeling out their own tastes or even connoisseurs who are searching for that new, exciting author, it's inevitable that every reader, as much as they enjoy certain stories, will ultimately find the bulk of the book dissatisfying. The average college student, for instance, wouldn't get much out of Shanna Germain's "Entry Point," a story about how a married couple kindles the old flame while on a camping trip with their college-age daughter.

For those who have never purchased erotica before, you may want to skip the big name stores like Barnes and Noble. After weeding through the Karma Sutra books there really isn't much of a selection, and the checkout counter could potentially be awkward for the shy-at-heart. Food For Thought Books in the center of Amherst has a great little erotica section, and a staff that you'll feel free to ask for recommendations.

Not ready to take the plunge into erotica? Satisfy your intellectual appetite with Vladimir Nabokov's "Lolita." The genius of this classic, yet still deliciously scandalous novel, is that Nobokov artfully leads the reader to feel sympathy for poor Humbert Humbert, an aged professor who is in love with the 12-year-old Dolores Haze.

The weather is warming, love is in the air, and there is no better time to try something new. Whether it's opening the pages of erotica for the first time or falling in love with a new writer, "The Best American Erotica" is an experience worth looking into.

Jennifer O'Brien can be reached at jfobrien@student.umass.edu.

Joan Tringali/Collegian

STPEC gathers varied professors

The Social Thought Political Economy Major is hosting a series of lectures around the theme "Decolonizing the Academy." The latest lecture, held Wednesday night in Memorial Hall, focused on "Indigenous Influences in Re-shaping Academia" and featured Sociology Professor Augustin Lao, STPEC Professor Kathleen Clifford, Archaeology Professor H. Martin Wobst, all from UMass, and Anthropology Professor Nancy Mithlo from Smith College.

College students knit in social settings support of the hobby and the publication of her "Stitch 'n Bitch" book, knitting was becoming more and more cool. Suddenly, girls and guys of my age, hipsters or jocks, were picking up the hobby."

KNITTING from page 5

Stoller, who is the founder and editor of BUST magazine, supported a "stitch 'n bitch" generation with her four knitting and crocheting publications focused on the college-aged demographic of up and coming knitters. "I think that Stoller's interest in knitting helped propel the hobby's new popularity," said Sherwood. "(At BUST magazine), she was in a unique position to promote knitting as part of the (do it yourself) ethic that's so integral to third wave feminism."

Magazines and books are not the only source of inspiration for this popular and growing trend among twenty-somethings. The social environments that knitting allows have created several knitting groups at colleges all across the country. For Kim Adams, a former student at Wellesley College, her interest in knitting came about after attending her dormitory's house council meetings.

"I started knitting in freshman year, when everyone at my house council meetings was doing it too," said Adams. She soon discovered that doing something with her hands would get her through the boring meetings. "I taught myself, and now I like it as more of a social thing."

The social atmosphere created by knitting groups is appealing to college-aged knitters, just like any other extracurricular group on a college campus. "What knitting does among young people," explained Barker, "is that it's a way to sit and talk. Fiber makes you feel good."

The Knitting Group, a group for UMass students that meets on campus, which averages about 10 people, is just one of the many different outlets for social interaction among knitting students in the Five College area. Sherwood inherited the group from Jenn McRobbie, who graduated from UMass. Following Spring Break, the group will resume its normal meetings at 7 p.m. on Wednesday nights outside Sweets & More in Field Hall in Orchard Hill Residential Area.

For those living in the Five College area who are interested in knitting, check out The Creative Needle in Amherst, Northampton Wools in Northampton, and WEBS, a knitting service store also located in Northampton. In addition to supplies, each of these locations offers knitting classes for all different experience levels.

Allison Edles can be reached at aedles@student.umass.edu.

Think knitting's not quite your thing? Here are some projects that show there's more to knitting than just fuzzy sweaters and scarves.

iPod Case:

Commonly called an iPod cozy, this knit case offers a basic design that can be jazzed up and stylized for each individual iPod user. A standard silicone or acrylic case for your iPod can run anywhere from $25 to $35 dollars on apple.com. The fabric has three buttons on the bottom for easy removal and has a piece of inexpensive sheet protector sewn in to protect the screen from scratches.

Messenger Bag:

Now you won't have to worry about cramming all your books into the one-size-fits-all satchels at the mall. Perfect for traveling or going to class, a customized messenger bag can be outfitted with as many different pockets as needed. Like to carry a bottle of water on you? Knit a side pocket. This basic bag outline can host unlimited possibilities for personal styles.

Key Chain:

Always losing your keys? With a specially-knit brightly colored key chain, you'll easily be able to identify your keys at the bottom of your bag, in your room, or wherever. Generally small in size, these models allow for you to make them in any shape, color, or pattern that you'd like. Also, because they're so small, they don't take long to construct, and additionally make perfect presents for birthdays or holidays.

RAs bring Bedtime Players to dorms to share messages

BEDTIME from page 5

introductions varied between the hilarious, "My name is Kenny and just because I'm into the World of Warcraft, doesn't mean all of my friends are wizards and elves," to the very serious, "My name is Chris and just because I'm a guy doesn't mean I don't have an eating disorder."

The skits that followed each had a message though some of the skits put the audience into fits of laughter and others compelled in silence. The skit "Green Eggs and Ham" was about a girl looking for the perfect guy to spend the night with, but each guy she encountered could not properly put on a condom. She finally finds her perfect mate in the end. The entire skit is read in the style of Dr. Seuss.

"I'm worried about AIDS because..." was a skit where a student says she has HIV and each cast member came out to discuss different reasons why they are worried about AIDS. There were skits focused on masturbation and included ridiculous lines like "In the morning I'm not at half-mast, I'm there!" Others were about homophobia, and date rape. One skit discussed HPV and emergency contraceptive. The players borrowed from Will Ferrell and Cheri Oteri's famous cheerleader skit on SNL, and did some amazing cheers. Some might even say they did "the perfect cheer."

Sophomore Erin Callahan said she felt like she's made a difference. "People will come up to me in the dining halls, and say they learned something new, or they got tested after they saw the show. It makes me feel like I'm really doing something good."

Lilli Scheiber, a senior, said that she loves what she does with the Players. She had extra time this semester and this was the only thing she wanted to do with this time.

The Players began in 1988 and were then called "The AIDS Follies," as a response to the AIDS crises. Gina Franco is a graduate student advisor for the troop. She said for the time it was an extraordinarily progressive thing to do. Since then the group has evolved to include a great deal of other important issues. Franco's face shows just how proud she is of the troop. "The students do this mostly themselves; we are just here to help," she said.

Leah Mara and Tasha Edwards were two of the RA's responsible for bringing the group to Southwest on Wednesday. "Part of the residential experience is to have educational programs in the residence halls. There was a massive turnout for the show," Mara said. "I had to call in September to book them now! We are so happy to get them here." She has seen the troop perform every year she has been an RA and believes they are an important part of the community and make a significant contribution to sexual awareness on campus.

The Not Ready for Bedtime Players will be performing all over campus in the coming months. Check them out for what is sure to be a good time and, of course, for the free condoms. Their calendar is available online at www.umass.edu or by calling 577-5181.

Katherine Nocera can be reached at kate.nocera@gmail.com.

Have a question? Want advice?

Email Veronica Garrett, Collegian Advice Columnist

at vgarrett@student.umass.edu

On the Rocks School of Bartending®

- Get certified in one weekend
- Anyone 18+ may bartend
- The course is held on campus
- Great paying & fun job!

Sat. & Sun. March, 31st & April 1st
or
Sat. & Sun. April 28th & 29th

1-800-MIX-0094

www.OnTheRocksBartending.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 3/30/07 - Thurs 4/05/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Dead Silence (R) 4:45 10:05
Wild Hogs (PG-13) 1:05 4:40 7:10 9:40
Premonition (PG-13)* 1:10 4:25 7:20 9:50
Premonition (PG-13)* 1:10 4:25 7:20 9:50
300 (R)* 1:40 4:50 7:35 10:20
Pride (PG) 1:30 7:30
Blades of Glory (PG-13) 1:35 4:35 7:40 10:00
Reign Over Me (R) 12:50 4:05 7:00 9:55
Meet the Robinsons (PG-13) 1:00 4:00 7:15 10:15
Shooter (R) 12:55 4:10 7:10 10:10
Peaceful Warrior (PG-13) 1:20 4:15 7:15 10:15
The Hills Have Eyes II (R) 1:45 4:55 7:50 10:25
Dead Silence (R) 4:45 10:05
The Last Mimzy (PG) 1:25 4:35 9:55 9:20
TMNT (PG) 1:15 4:30 7:25 9:30
* no passes or supersaver
NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVER
Tickets & Showtimes cinemark.com

Write for THE DAILY COLLEGIAN Arts!

Email collegianarts@gmail.com

Second baseman Adam Tempesta is currently fourth on the team with a .333 batting average with eight runs scored and six RBIs. He has committed just one error in the field this season.

Minutemen face Charlotte in crucial Atlantic 10 series they've allowed (86 runs or 3.6 per game).

BASEBALL from page 10

Charlotte has out-hit its opponents 282 to 181, and have raked 91 extra-base hits — which is 60 more than it's allowed. The lineup also has a keen eye at the plate, drawing an additional 38 more walks (98 total) than it's issued.

The pitching staff has been just as impressive. Charlotte's staff has maintained a stellar 2.66 ERA, and when it gets that type of effort on the mound – coupled with the 6.90 opponents ERA – it becomes a tall task to take down the 49ers.

Stone tries not to get too caught up in the numbers, though, but rather focusing on his team and what they need to do to improve as a group.

"We can't be concerned with what they've done, or what kind of ball club they have too much," he said. "We just need to focus on our team, get good pitching on the mound and throw strikes. We need to play solid defense and be aggressive on the basepaths. It's just a matter of playing good baseball."

After taking two out of three against Temple in their first conference series of the season last weekend, the Minutemen dropped Wednesday's matchup, 8-2, against Hartford. UMass has lost four of its last six games heading into the weekend.

"I think we're heading in the right direction," Stone said. "Last week we played pretty well in Florida, beating a couple of teams that were probably better than we were. Then we had a good series against Temple, although I thought we should have won that third game, and gotten the sweep.

"But [on Wednesday] we took a step backwards and I wasn't impressed with our efforts against Hartford," he added. "We just didn't pitch, hit or play defense well, so when you don't do those things you're not going to win, and it doesn't matter who you're playing."

The success of the UMass pitching staff against the strong lineup of the 49ers will be pivotal. The Minutemen will throw a freshman and a sophomore against the likes of Kris Rochelle (.471 batting average) and Brad McElroy (.409) in the deep Charlotte batting order.

"It's an important series, and we're going to find out what type of ball club we have," Stone said. "We're also going to find out what kind of competitors we have, and it's going to be a good challenge for us. It will be interesting to see how we react this weekend."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

UMass opens A-10 play against Flyers

SOFTBALL from page 10

gling in the first few innings, Sanders settled down nicely against Dartmouth. Although the Big Green put up six runs, three were unearned.

"I think we could've fielded a little better than we did," Morin said. "We got better but we need to get a lot better."

Last season, the Minutewomen faired well against the Flyers, sweeping a double-header in Amherst at the end of April.

Balschmiter spun a three-hit, complete-game shutout in the first game, a 3-0 victory for the Minutewomen. Offensively, Stacy Cullington led the way for UMass – driving in two runs.

In the second game, departed seniors did most of the damage. But Grozenski pitched 2.1 innings against the Minutewomen allowing two runs. Having already faced her, the Minutewomen should know what to expect from the Flyer ace.

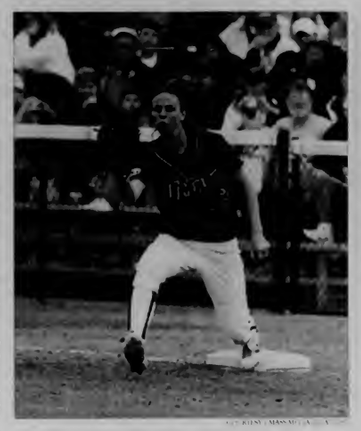
Although the Dayton offense had struggled as a whole, junior first baseman Christine Eggers has started the year off well. Her .333 average leads the team and her .444 on-base percentage is the highest among regulars.

The Flyers have hit just one home run on the season. It belongs to sophomore third baseman Blair Crabtree. She appears as the most legitimate threat in the Flyers lineup. She also leads the team in runs batted in with eight.

As a team, the Flyers excel in the running game as well. They stole 20 bases on the year and have been caught just once. Three players sit atop the team with three.

The Minutewomen hope to kickoff A-10 play with a win and shouldn't have much trouble against the Flyers.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu. Long onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.



Senior Amanda Morin is fifth on the team with a .281 batting average and 10 RBIs as the Minutewomen's leadoff hitter.

Maroon and White happy to be home

NOTEBOOK from page 10

Pitch after pitch would come in on a batter closing in on the 70 mile-per-hour mark. Then, on the eighth or ninth pitch of a long duel between pitcher and batter, Balschmiter unleashed her off-speed pitch, causing the batter to come fully around in her swing before the ball crossed the plate.

"She had drop-ball and changeup strikeouts, which is really nice to see," Sortino said.

Home Sweet Home

UMass finally had a chance to play on its own turf, and everyone on the team was relieved to play in the comfort of their own field and in front of their home fans.

"It was great to be out here," Sortino said. "We so desperately needed to play [at home]. We can't be inside too much longer.

Although it wasn't designed that way, the Minutewomen played the same team in its home opener this year as last year. UMass outclasses the Big Green in last year's home opener, winning easily, 8-0 and 20-0.

When last Sunday's doubleheader against the Bonnies was cancelled, Dartmouth came up next on the schedule, and the Minutewomen once again ended up with a pair of convincing wins on its first day in front of the home crowd.

Finally some dry land

Despite the fact that the field was covered in snow just days before and then rained on for a day and a half after that – the turf at the UMass softball complex held up surprisingly well.

So well, in fact, that Sortino had the team out practicing on the field yesterday before leaving for this weekend's games in Dayton.

"We're going to be outside [Thursday], and that's going to really help us do some things to improve," Sortino said Wednesday after the double-header.

Soggy field conditions and cold temperatures have kept the team confined inside Boyden Gymnasium for much of the early part of the season, which has frustrated Sortino because of the limitations on what the team can work as far as in-game situations are concerned...Freshman Whitney Williams had an impressive day at shortstop Wednesday, both at the plate and in the field. Williams went three-for-six with a run scored, and made a pair of great defensive plays in the first game to help preserve Balschmiter's no-hitter...A confusing call at the plate early in the first game had everyone on the Maroon and White's side looking to the umpires for answers. A Whitney Mollica double to left-center had sent pinch-runner Jill Andrews around third and headed home. The throw beat her to the plate, but after the tag was applied, Dartmouth catcher Leigha Clarkson dropped the ball while bringing it up to show the umpire she still had it. Andrews was originally called safe, but after a short conference, she was ruled out, ending the inning and perplexing Sortino and the fans.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jcrenmr@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Fordham ahead early in tight league race

Rams, Billikens undefeated in A-10 as conference play begins

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

Fordham has proven to be the dominant force in the Atlantic 10, having gone 18-12 overall and a perfect 4-0 in conference play so far.

Jessica Weckenman has had the hot hand for her team this season, leading the Rams in batting average (.386) and doubles (11). The sophomore is also second in hits (32), second in runs batted in (17) and third in total bases (45).

Fordham has three other players batting above .300 in junior Allison Twarowski, sophomore Melissa Andrews and junior Allison Storc, who have averages of .362, .352, .312, respectively.

The Rams are enjoying a nine-game winning streak, during which they have outscored their opponents 56-15.

The Minutewomen must start trying to catch Fordham in the win column if they want to bring home the crown from the A-10's 19th conference championship tournament, scheduled for May 9-12.

The Maroon and White match up against the Rams a few days prior to the tourney on the 4th and 5th.

Saint Louis has an 'ace' in the hole

Ashley Levan – with an ERA of 2.52 – is Saint Louis' top gun in the circle. The junior is 7-3 on the season and has faced 301 batters at this point. With 77.2 innings of work to her credit – by far the most on the team – her .219 opponent's batting average is also a team best.

A-10 Softball

Senior Jill Pursell's .418 batting average is tops for the Billikens, 34 points better than runner-up Christy Ernst.

The outfielder is also at the head of the class in hits (41), runs scored (26), home runs (4) and total bases (60) and tied for second in RBIs (15).

She also has a slugging percentage of .612.

And Pursell's ability is not limited to what she can do with a bat. With a 1.000 fielding percentage, she also flashes the leather better than anyone else on the team.

As for Ernst, she maintains a batting average of .384. The senior fails to rank first in any substantial offensive category, but puts up numbers that make her a crucial component to the lineup.

She is second on the team in hits (28) and fourth in both total bases (33) and runs scored (14).

She is also tied for second in RBIs, with 15.

Saint Louis sits below the .500-line with a record of 15-17. But its conference record of 2-0 is good enough to put it second-highest in the A-10 standings after Fordham.

The Billikens started off the season on a rocky road, losing their first seven games. Things started to turn around in Northern Iowa, however, when the Minutewomen defeated the Panthers 2-0 on Feb. 24.

Having won 12 of its last 20 games, Saint Louis has since been riding a better wave.

Though they lost their most recent game – a 9-3 contest to Eastern Illinois in the second game of a doubleheader – the Billikens hope to get back on the winning track when they play a doubleheader against St. Bonaventure on Mar. 31.

La Salle climbing the ladder

The Explorers are the only other team that has engaged in conference play in the A-10 standings right now. But its 2-2 record makes it an inferior being in comparison to the picture-perfect A-10 records of Fordham and Saint Louis.

La Salle is 8-10 overall on the year and will need to do well in its games (two each) against Temple and Saint Joseph's this weekend if it wants to remain a contender in the A-10 standings.

Freshman Mary Pat Conville and junior Michelle Sullivan are the two Explorers with batting averages above .300, registering .321 and .308, respectively.

Conville, a third baseman, leads her team in hits and on-base percentage, with numbers of 17 and .390, respectively. She is also second in runs (9) and third in total bases (21) and hit the squad's only dinger on the year.

Sullivan, a catcher, graces the top of two offensive categories – RBIs and doubles – with 14 and six, respectively.

Her 16 hits and 22 total bases are good enough for second on the team's stat sheet and she is tied with Conville for second place in runs scored, with nine.

Game cancellation has been a menace to the Explorers as they have had five games – the entire Bash at the Beach tournament – called off.

Having won its last game – a 7-5 victory over Monmouth on the 27th – La Salle hopes that adding to the 'W' column might just sponsor a flight into the A-10 tourney.

Dominic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Junior Stacy Cullington leads UMass with four home runs this season. Her .535 slugging percentage is second on the team.

SUMMER JOBS

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful natural environment working with children ages 5-13? YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton, is now hiring Counselors, Lifeguards, and Instructors for Nature Study, Arts & Crafts, Athletics, Boating, Wood Working, Ceramics, and Music.

Call the Camp Registrar or stop by the HRYMCA for a camp brochure and camp staff application.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
286 Prospect Street
Northampton, MA 01060
413-584-7086 • www.hrymca.org

UM returning top runners from 2006

TRACK from page 10

Championships at Princeton on May 13.

The men's track team returns several of its top performers from last year who will set the pace for the rest of the team.

Junior Nathan Barksdale was the team's top 400-meter sprinter in both indoor and outdoor track and is considered the most consistent sprinter on the team.

Senior Erik Hoagland was the only member to win at last year's A-10 Championships, winning the triple jump and setting a new UMass record in the process. Although he is a senior, this will only be his second year on the track team, having managed to make the team last year as a walk-on.

Junior Nils Fischer was the Minutemen's top 5,000-meter runner. He came in second place in that event at the New England Outdoor Championships.

The women's track team will be led by their talented core of throwers who are expected to give the team a huge boost in scoring throughout the season.

The star of the women's throwers is Jordan Veney, the school-record holder for shot put. Joining her will be newcomer Lisa Wilson who potentially could give the Minutewomen two of the best throwers in the A-10. Wilson was the Massachusetts State Champion discus thrower during her high school career, so her arrival brings high expectations.

The woman's track team also added Mary Serdakowski the Ivy League champion in the indoor 60 meter hurdles. Her first event at UMass will be this Saturday and she will run in the 100 meter hurdles.

Scott Feldman can be reached at Sfeldman a student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

COURTESY OF UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior sprinter Kendra Leighton finished third for the Minutewomen in the 400 meter at the Boston University Quad Meet with a time of one minute, 1.18 seconds. She is expected to continue to lead the women's team in the 2007 spring events as one of the top points-earners.

Breaking down the field for the Maroon and White

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Men's and Women's track and field teams will be competing at home for the first time in over ten years. Their first meet of the season is tomorrow at 11:30 a.m. Here is how the 2007 roster breaks down.

Men's track and field

The Minutemen return for a spring season with versatile athletes. The team has hopes of consistent performances, leadership and a lot of enthusiasm from returning leaders and younger athletes

Men's sprints

In the 2006 outdoor season junior sprinter Nathan Barksdale finished eighth in the A-10 Championships in the 400-meter dash at 49.73 seconds, which was a team season-best time, along with his personal best. Barksdale took 11th at the New England Championships on May 13 in the 400 meters at a time of 50.58 seconds. He was also a member of the 4x400 relay team that took fifth at both the A-10 Championships and the New England Championships.

Senior sprinter jumper Manny Harris-Lopes was a member of the 4x400 meter relay team that earned fifth place at the 2006 New England Championships. Harris-Lopes took 11th in the 400 meters (50.41 seconds) at the A-10 Championships on May 7.

Expected leaders in men's distance

Zach Przysiecki, Kevin Murphy, David Lopes, and Peter Fortunato are expected to lead the mid-distance groups.

In the 2006 season Senior Zach Przysiecki earned Second-Team All-Conference honors as a member of the indoor distance medley relay team. Przysiecki placed 17th in the 800-meters (1:57.96) at the A-10 Championships on May 7. He was also a member of the 4x400 meter relay that took fourth place at the 2006 New England Championships.

Junior Kevin Murphy took seventh place at the A-10 Championships in May 2006 in the 800 meters (1:54.92). Murphy ran the first branch of the 4x800 meter relay at the New England Championships last May. The team took fourth place.

Sophomore David Lopes was a member of the fifth-place 4x400 meter relay teams at both the 2006 A-10 Championships and the 2006 New England Championships.

Sophomore mid-distance runner Peter Fortunato earned Second-Team All-Conference honors as a member of the second-place distance medley relay team during the 2005-2006 indoor season. He was a member of the 2006 A-10 Commissioner's Spring Honor Roll. At the 2006 A-10 Championships on May 7 Fortunato placed 17th in the 1500 meters at 4 minutes, 7.06 seconds.

Men's hurdles

Sophomore hurdler jumper Mark Anderson is expected to excel this season. In his freshman indoor track season he placed sixth in the 55-meter hurdles at 8.24 seconds at the New Hampshire Invitational on Jan. 21. At the 2006 Boston Indoor Games on Jan. 27 he placed sixth in the high jump at 6-2.

Sophomore hurdler jumper Kevin Ianetta is a likely leader in this outdoor season. Ianetta was the top hurdler in the 110 high hurdles and the 400 intermediate hurdles during his freshman outdoor season. At the 2006 New England Championships Ianetta had a season-best and team's top time in the 400-meter hurdles (55.82 seconds).

Men's jump

Team leader and senior Erik Hoagland, won five long jump competitions at the NCAA East Regional meet on Feb. 26, 2006. Hoagland also won the triple jump at the A-10 Championships last May.

Sophomore sprinter and jumper Steve Gerome placed eighth in the long jump (21-9) and helped the 4x400 meter relay squad to a fifth-place finish at the 2006 A-10 Championships. At the New England Championships last year, Gerome took 13th in the long jump at 21 feet, 3.5 inches. He was also a member of the 4x400 meter relay team which finished fifth.

Women's track

The Minutewomen have several returning runners for the spring season. This fall there were several new competitors that joined the team where they are expected to make an impact in individual events and relays.

Women's sprinters

Junior Kendra Leighton competed in the Southern Connecticut Invitational last April where she ran 1:00.73 time in the 400 meters. Her personal-best and team-best gave her eighth place in the Invitational.

Sophomore sprinter and jumper Stacy Ossinger returns for her sophomore year. During Ossinger's freshman fall and spring season she was named to the A-10 Commissioner's Honor Roll.

Junior Jennifer Rippel returns for her second outdoor season. Rippel mainly competes in the 200- and 400-meter dashes. In the 2006 outdoor season Rippel placed 17th with her best time of the season (1:0089) in the 400 meters at the 2006 A-10 Championships.

Senior sprinter-jumper Troyanah Evans finished eighth in the 200-meters, running her top time, (27.80 seconds) and 10th in the 100-meters (13.48 seconds) at the UConn Invitational last April.

Veney to lead women's throwers

Sophomore Jordan Veney returns for her second outdoor track season. Veney competes in the shot put, discus, weight throw and hammer throw. Veney holds the outdoor and indoor UMass shot put records. She is ranked third all-time at UMass in the discus. In 2006 Veney qualified for the outdoor ECAC Championships.

Women's jumpers

Junior pole vault/sprinter Kristen Bakanowski won the A-10 Indoor and Outdoor pole vault championships in the 2005-2006 season. Bakanowski finished her sophomore outdoor season ranked 105th nationally.

Senior high jumper Katelyn O'Toole placed 15th at the A-10 Championships last May clearing a 5-feet, 1-inch bar. At the April 2006 New Hampshire Invitational O'Toole had her season-best height of 5-feet, 1.75 inches to place second.

Sophomore pole vault Krista Sideri cleared her season-best height of 8-feet, 11.75 inches at the UNH Wildcat Invitational in April 2006 where she finished seventh.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at Mturtine a student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Spiess goes for 64th win against ODU

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Tennis team will be in action this weekend when it travels to Old Dominion today and then to Atlantic 10 contender Richmond.

The Minutewomen are coming off a 5-2 win against Florida Atlantic University and their first-ever victory again Lynn University last weekend. The team is looking to keep the momentum going into this weekend against the Lady Monarchs of Old Dominion. ODU is coming off a 5-2 loss to Pennsylvania which could play to UMass' favor. The women will try to keep their streak going against ODU and they'll try to carry that energy into the match against Richmond.

The Minutewomen might have a tougher time against the Spiders. Richmond, which has a four-match win streak going were picked earlier in the season to win the A-10 Women's Championships. The team certainly hasn't forgotten what happened at last year's A-10 Championships. Forced to play their second match in five hours, the Minutewomen were swept by the Spiders, 4-0. That match will definitely be on the team's mind as it looks to avenge that loss on Saturday against Richmond.

In addition to a two match win streak, senior Michele Spiess is looking to make her mark on UMass tennis history. In her first singles match, she beat her opponent 6-0, 6-0 to tie the record for most wins by a single player in UMass history. The current record is held by Jackie Braunstein at 63 career wins. The victory put her singles record for the spring season to ten wins and only three losses.

What's even more impressive is her new doubles partner, sophomore Laura Murillo. The team now has three wins and zero losses since being paired up at the Harvard match. They will be paired up again when they take on Old Dominion and Richmond.

Spiess isn't the only one doing well for the women. Junior Masha Pozar is having a solid season with a 16-10 record and freshman stand out Ellen de Jong is having a great first year with a record of 11-8. Coach Dixon keeps mixing up the doubles combinations, but is picking winners. Last week she paired Ellen de Jong and Stephanie Giminez together and they won their first match together.

The A-10 Championship Tournament is coming up quickly and will be held in mid April. With only three matches left, after this weekend, every victory becomes critical to making the post-season. Last season, the team had a dramatic comeback victory over Xavier after being down 3-0 and ultimately winning 4-3 to take third place overall in the A-10 standings.

The post-season is approaching fast and the Minutewomen are hoping to have a strong weekend to make a run at the A-10 Championship. Victories over Old Dominion and Richmond could be the start of a playoff run that could take the team all the way to the finals.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jpmcgrai a student.umass.edu Log on to the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Senior Michele Spiess can break the UMass singles record for career victories today. She sits tied with Jackie Braunstein with 63 career wins.

Crew opens season with Yankee Cup

By Michael Gillmeister
Collegian Correspondent

Coming into the 2007 season, coach Jim Dietz and the Massachusetts rowing team are looking to put another trophy in the case to add to their 11-consecutive Atlantic 10 titles. The Minutewomen will kickoff their spring campaign at the Yankee Cup, a four-team regatta on Saturday against Connecticut, New Hampshire, and rival Rhode Island who is hosting the event in Kingston, R.I.

The event will start at 9 a.m. and will go on throughout the day. The Minutewomen will look to repeat last season's performance as they dominated the competition to take home the Yankee Cup.

There will be no rest for the weary because UMass will leave Rhode Island and travel to Orchard Beach, N.Y. on Sunday to compete in a three-team regatta against Colgate and Holy Cross.

"It's a second chance for athletes" said Dietz, when referring to his athletes and the success that the program has accrued during Dietz's 13-year tenure as headman of the Maroon and White. He is joined by third-year assistant coach Alex Binkowski and first-year assistant coach, Conny Kirsch.

The 45 returning members from last year's conference championship team is a testament to the dedication that Dietz's group of women have shown him, and they will look to put that dedication to good use in the upcoming season. Also, the success that the returning members of the team have tasted will only help the 50 walk-on novices that have joined the team.

After completing a rigorous training regimen in January, the UMass crew team is set to backup their hefty credentials. The 2006 season set quite the tone for this year's group with UMass emerging victorious in four of their seven total regattas, including taking home an unprecedented 11th straight conference title, a feat that has never been duplicated since the inception of the A-10 Conference. The team also captured the title at the ECAC Collegiate Championship.

The Maroon and White recently won their first competition of the spring on their home-turf, the Connecticut River, as they defeated New Hampshire and Coast Guard in a scrimmage last Saturday.

Coxswain Dana Pulda and the first varsity eight won all of its races. Coast Guard's first varsity eight grabbed second place in all three of its races.

Led by coxswain Molly Morgan, the second varsity eight were not quite as dominant as the first squad, but still pulled out two of its three races, with the other race won by UNH.

The third varsity eight, led by coxswain Maria Arcari won one of its four races.

The UMass novice eight certainly carried its weight as the young squad won all three of its races, led by coxswain Melissa D'Amico.

Led by senior co-captains Gabrielle Papineau and Tara Guinan, the Minutewomen are poised for another strong season.

Michael Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei a student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

the moan and dove
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
3 DOLLAR DRAFT WEEK
20 FANCY TAPS. 3 BUCKS. ALL WEEK. WEEK AFTER SPRING BREAK. EVERY YEAR.
460 WEST ST. (116 SOUTH) 256-1710 3PM 1AM EVERYDAY

Natural. Gentle. Safe. Effective.
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC Car insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

FACTORY DIRECT
DISCOUNT MATTRESS
LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY!!
FORMERLY SLEEPY HOLLOW
VOTED # 1
Futons
Mattresses
Platform Beds
(413) 253-BEDS (2337) RT. 9 Amherst
SUN-MON: 12-4 TUES-SAT: 10:30-6

NOW SHOWING
MAR. 30 - APR. 5
amherst cinema
AN unreasonable MAN
Sunday April 1
THE LOOKOUT
Fri-Sat 1:00 3:15 5:30, 7:45, 10:00
Sun 1:00 3:15 5:30 7:45
Mon-Wed 3:15 5:30 7:45
Thurs 2:00 4:00, 8:00
THE LIVES OF OTHERS
Fri-Sat 1:00, 3:30, 6:00, 8:30, 10:05
Sun-Wed 1:00, 3:30, 6:00
JANUS FILMS Now 35mm Prints!
THE EARRINGS OF MADAME DE... Mon-Oct 4/3 7p
THE CRANES ARE FLYING Mikhail Kalatozov THUR 4/5 7p SUN 4/8 2p watch for our upcoming documentary series!
28 AMITY STREET (413) 253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	7		2			3
9				8
	6	3		9		7
	1	6				5
	2		5		9		1
		4				6	7
		5		7		2	4
				5				7
		9			8		5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Clammy
5 Goons
10 Obi-Wan, for one
14 Object of devotion
15 Food or Clay
16 WWII losers
17 Writer Ephron
18 Shady bower
19 Pocket-sized
20 Cheesy crust
22 Decomposes
24 Spectator
26 Jackie's second
27 Cameo stone
28 Horse with a horn
32 Denver or Ireland
35 Make the first bid
37 Machine shop machine
38 Raw mineral
39 Spat
41 Country singer Williams
42 Destiny, in Delhi
44 Catch dead to rights
45 Gravy holder
46 Put in office
48 Destitute
50 Bobbsey twin
51 Has need of
55 Indian prince
59 Nodding last attention
60 Skator's jump
61 Dull surface
63 Alan of "The West Wing"
64 Gusto
65 Nickel add-on?
66 Amateurish painting
67 Small vortex
68 Remote button
69 Alimony recipients

DOWN
1 Wild dog of Australia
2 Beautify
3 Lesson from Aesop
4 Oliver Stone Oscar-winner
5 Words of gratitude
6 Of a female
7 Lift the latch
8 Sailor's rum drink
9 Damascus resident
10 West Indies republic
11 Way out
12 Enjoy a repast
13 Nile goddess
21 Charged atom
23 Vocal quaver
25 Spread out
28 Still green
29 Milanese eight
30 Pedman of "Cheers"
31 Audition call
32 Punch line antecedent
33 For the mouth
34 Roll-call call
36 Time period
39 Doha's land
40 Silver-tongued
43 Playwright Terrence
45 Military unit
47 Fill with love
49 Town
51 Hotel charges
52 Take five
53 Provide with a quality
54 Knifes
55 Labyrinth
56 Chopped down
57 Beer formation
58 Nightmp
62 Com location

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
COLD WAR KIDS
plus
Tokyo Police Club, Delta Spirit
SATURDAY, MARCH 31 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
CLIPSE
plus Supreeme
TUESDAY, APRIL 3 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

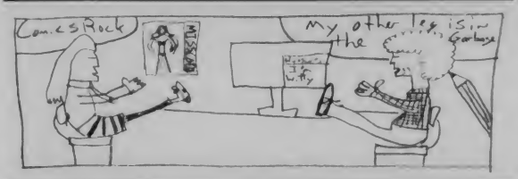
"I saw a wino; he was eating grapes. I was like, "Dude - you have to wait!"

-Mitch Hedberg

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

SO...HERMAN TOLD ME YOU HIRED AN EMPLOYEE FOR YOUR DOG-WALKING BUSINESS? AND YOU'RE PRETTY PROFITABLE?
AND IT'S NOT SOME APRIL FOOL'S JOKE?
YEP.
NOPE. I'M A SUCCESS.
WOW. I'M IMPRESSED!
HA! GOT HIM.
NOW THAT -
WAIT, IT'S NOT OVER.
DOINK!
I'LL BET YOU BOOED-OH GOD!

SZAJGIN'S SAGA By Ashley Miami

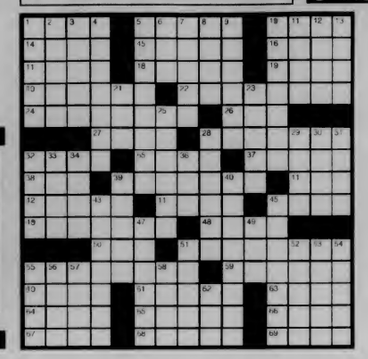


HARD KNOCKS By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
PACK YOUR BAGS! WE HAVE TO LEAVE, NOW! BRIDGET IS EVICTING US, AND SHE CALLED THE POLICE!
YOU GOT US EVICTED?
SHE SAID SHE'S GOING TO TURN US OVER TO A DEBT COLLECTOR FOR OUR RENT AND RUIN MY CREDIT.
SHE DIDN'T KNOW I ALREADY HAVE BAD CREDIT.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

FOOOOOOOO
Why do airplanes make such horrid sounds?
They could sound like a Purina cat, or raindrops on leaves
I guess not everything can be aesthetically pleasing.
Right now I am aesthetically distracted



Continuing & Professional Education
UMASS AMHERST SUMMER 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
• New online Genteds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Registration begins April 2
Plan now by visiting us at www.UMassLearn.net/ls

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are destined to discover and chronicle the uselessness of vocal inflection.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Lose the crazy hat! You'll attract more attention acting like Ryu from Street Fighter.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Invent a way to simultaneously catalog your CD's alphabetically and chronologically.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Stepping in a puddle with mismatched socks can initiate a squishy fun-fest.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Ouyr ilef si lal scmralbde pu.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you never had a barn raising, you could never have a barn raising party.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
When numbers replace names, you will be number "1" with a pretty star next to it.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Easy there big fellow, plumber's crack is not simply for pipe savy wrench turners.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Buy some of those huge, lip shaped lollipops and give out large, sticky kisses today.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Like a clown at a 15-year-old's birthday party, you are severely out of place.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Supergluing a nomad's gonads to the ground will majorly impede his lifestyle.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You need to seriously calm down when you speak, you expectorate more than a clam.

One fine day, you'll write to me and you will see, that your comics were MEANT TO BE! One fine day, you're gonna want me for your girl.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod Rent & tilities paid in exchange for providing transportation for teen. Easy walking distance to downtown & beaches, awenkozma@aol.com

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $9.50/hour Applications available at 235 Whitmore and are due April 13th.

EMPLOYMENT

Now Hiring Atkins Farms Country Market 1150 West Street Amherst MA www.atkinsfarms.com (413) 253-9528 Sales Associates: Evenings and Weekends in the Bakery, Deli and Candy Departments. Cashiers: Days Evenings & weekends at the Front Register Area.

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Fall 2007 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center!

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Nantucket Island this summer! Secretarial/ office assistant with good telephone and computer skills. Housing available plus salary. 508-228-3942

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/ month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass heads to Charlotte

A-10 newcomers have quickly become class of the conference

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team (4-8, 2-1 A-10) will test its mettle against one of the elite in the Atlantic 10 when it faces the Charlotte 49ers (19-5, 2-1 A-10) for a three-game set this weekend.

Senior Chris Lloyd will start for UMass on Friday, and freshman Jared Freni and sophomore Tim Comiskey get the nod for the weekend games.

The 49ers remain relatively unknown to the Minutemen, having transferred from Conference-USA and into the A-10 just last season. In only one season in the conference, Charlotte has already established itself as one of the preeminent teams in the A-10. The 49ers were tabbed to win the conference — in a vote by league head coaches — prior to the 2007 season.

Friday's contest will mark the first time these teams have ever played each other, but in despite of that, UMass coach Mike Stone knows what his team is up against this weekend.

"Charlotte's a real good ball club," he said. "They're solid all the way through, and their pitching is impressive. They will be as good as many of the teams we play this season. It's a real big challenge for us."

Although technically 12-1 at home this season, the 49ers will play its first true home game of the year when they unveil the brand new Robert and Mariam Hayes Stadium. Those in attendance will get to see a Charlotte team off to its best start in school history.

The 49ers concluded its first go-round in the A-10 at 38-20-1 last year, and have picked up right where they left off in 2007. Charlotte has been terrific in all facets of the game, crushing opponents both on the mound and at the plate. The numbers tell it all.

Charlotte has simply dominated the opposition in the batters box. The 49ers are hitting .327 as a team, compared to the meager .232 average by the opposition. In 24 games, the 49ers have scored 197 runs (8.2 runs per game), which is more than double what

See BASEBALL on page 7

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior right-hander Chris Lloyd will take the mound today for the Minutemen in Charlotte against the first-place 49ers.

Pair of Minutemen headed to the pros

For two of the Massachusetts hockey team's leaders during the historic 2006-07 season, hockey season isn't over quite yet.

Seniors Matt Anderson and Mark Matheson signed amateur tryout contracts this week with American Hockey League teams just a week after leading the Mass Attack to its first-ever NCAA Tournament appearance.

Anderson, the team's captain for the past two years, signed on with the Chicago Wolves, the minor league affiliate of the Atlanta Thrashers of the National Hockey League. And Matheson, an assistant captain in 06-07, is joining the Milwaukee Admirals, affiliated with the NHL's Nashville Predators.

One of the faces of UMass hockey of the past few years, Anderson reignited his career this year after struggling with various injuries over the three previous seasons. The center finished his final campaign with the Minutemen with 20 points on 10 goals and the same number of assists (including the postseason).

He scored the final goal of the season for the Minutemen in the 3-1 loss to Maine in the NCAA East Regional Final in Rochester, N.Y. Even when he was not as his best on the ice, Anderson was crucial to the team's success through his indispensable leadership. He was on the ice for every phase of the game and was especially efficient on the power play, sending seven pucks past the opposing goalie with the man-advantage, which was good enough for third in Hockey East.

Matheson proved his overall ability to play the game of hockey by becoming one of the team's best players at both the center and defense positions. He tied Cory Quirk for the team-lead in goals with 13 and tied for third in scoring with a total of 24 points.

The converted forward returned to his original position at the blue line to help his team deal with a number of injuries, though he played the point on the power play through the entire season, even when lined up at center in five-on-five situations.

It will be difficult for the Minutemen to replace two of their most valuable players of the past few years in the coming season, but UMass coach Don Cahoon said he was extremely proud of both players throughout the season, both on and off the ice.

-Jeremy Rice

Balschmiter not yet satisfied with no-no

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

A dose of home-cooking turned out to be just the thing the Massachusetts softball team needed to get back above .500 this season.

After an extended wait (the original home opener against St. Bonaventure was cancelled due to the weather), the Minutewomen turned in a pair of dominant performances Wednesday against Dayton.

One player for the Maroon and White, sophomore pitcher Brandice Balschmiter, picked up right where she left off last spring, the last time she stepped into the circle at the University of Massachusetts softball complex.

The Minutewomen's ace held an opponent hitless for the second time in her career in the matinee game Wednesday, a 6-0 shutout of the Big Green. She finished the day with 11 strikeouts and just three walks while facing 23 batters.

The last time the team failed to register a hit against Balschmiter was in last year's NCAA Regional Tournament, hosted by the Maroon and White.

In the opening round of the double-elimination tourney, Balschmiter shut down the Albany offense, striking out three batters while walking four. However, she faced just 18 batters in that game.

Despite the milestone, Balschmiter was very impressed with the performance.

